HONI SOIT QUI MAL Y PENSE
KING CHARLES THE I.st

THE LIFE AND REIGN OF King Charles the Firſt.

MANY Writers have divided the Reign of a Prince from his Life, and ſo have given the Actions without the Man; the Political Occurrences without the Genius, that gave a Riſe and a Turn to them. It ſhall be the preſent Deſign, to write the Life as well as the Reign of this unfortunate Prince, and give all the true Characters of his Perſon along with a Relation of all the Affairs of his Government: To which purpoſe, it will be proper to give ſome Account of his Birth, Childhood, Youth, and Education; to view him from his Cradle to his Crown.

Born Nov. 19. 1600. Charles, a younger Son of James VI, King of Scotland, and of Anne his Wife Daughter of the King of Denmark, was born at Dunfermling on November 19. 1600, ſo weak an Infant, that upon apprehenſion of his ſhort Life, they haſtned on his Baptiſm, without a more decent Delay, and thoſe ſuitable Ceremonies that would have otherwiſe attended his Admiſſion into the Church: Born and Baptiz'd in ſomewhat of Surprize and Confuſion; as it were beginning the World in a kind of Preſage how he was to end it.

Titles conferred on him, 1601. In the ſecond Year of his Age, 1601, he was created Duke of Albany, Marqueſs of Ormond, Earl of Roſs, and Baron of Ardmanock, Titles much greater than the Revenues to ſupport them: A ſecond Son of the Royal Blood in Scotland muſt have been, as in leſs Noble Families, a ſort of Dependent on the elder Brother.

His Succeſſion foretold in 1603. In 1603, there was ſuch an Augury made of his future Greatneſs, as deſerves to be here related. When his Royal Father King James was preparing for his Remove to the Throne of England, a certain old Laird of the Highlands came to take his ſolemn Leave of the Court, and was for that purpoſe admitted into the Bed-chamber, where he found himſelf in the Preſence of his Majeſty, the Queen, and Royal Children. He addreſs'd himſelf to the King with a long deal of ſage Advice and affectionate Wiſhes. He then, overlooking Prince Henry, applied himſelf directly to Duke Charles, and kiſs'd his Hand with ſo much Ardency and Devoutneſs, as if he meant to pay ſome extraordinary Honours to him. The King, to correct his ſuppoſed Miſtake, ſeem'd to take him off, and to direct him toward his elder Son, who, as Heir of the Crown, had a Title to his firſt and greateſt Reſpect and Obſervance. But the antient Laird would not be guided, nor diverted from his earneſt Applications to the little Duke; and ſaid, He was not miſtaken; he knew to whom he addreſs'd himſelf: This Child whom he now ſaw in the Nurſe's Arms, ſhould be greater than his elder Brother, and ſhould convey his Father's Name and Titles to ſucceeding Generations. An Hiſtorian obſerves, that "This then was conceived to be Dotage; but the Event gave it the Credit of a Prophecy, and confirmed that Opinion, that ſome long-experienced Souls in the World, before their diſlodging, arrive to the height of Prophetick Spirits." It is commonly ſaid, there be more of theſe Inſtances of Foreſight or Second-ſight, and moſt extraordinary Preſages, in Scotland than in any other Country. One Example of the like nature, in foretelling the Fortune of Infants, is credibly given in the Life of Archbiſhop Spotſwood, born in Scotland in the Year 1565. "When he was no ſooner brought into the World, but this remarkable Paſſage did accompany his Birth: For among the reſt that were preſent (not ordinary Goſſippers, but Women of good note) there was one among them, who in a ſober tho' in a prophetick Fit, taking the Child in her Arms, called aloud to the reſt in theſe or the like terms; You may all very well rejoyce at the Birth of this Child, for he will become Perinchief.

" the Prop and Pillar of this Church, and the main and " chief Inſtrument in the defending of it."

Committed to the Governance of the Lady Cary.

To return to our young Duke Charles: When the King had given Orders for his Journey toward England; He appointed the Queen to follow him about twenty Days after, and in the mean time left his Commands, that the Prince ſhould remain at Striveling, the Princeſs Elizabeth with Alexander Earl of Linlithgow, and our Duke of Albany with the Lord Fyvie, Preſident of the Seſſion. Soon after he was committed to the Care and Governance of the Lady Cary, as a Reſpect and Reward to her Husband Sir Robert Cary, who had been ſent from the Engliſh Council with the firſt News of Queen Elizabeth's Death.

Brought into England, and made Knight of the Bath and Duke of York, in 1604.

In the next Year 1604, he fell into ſome Indiſpoſition, and was hardly fit for change of Air till toward October; when, by eaſie Stages, he was brought to the Engliſh Court at Windſor: and there, to give him the more Princely Figure, he was created Knight of the Bath on January the 5th, and the Day after was inveſted with the Title of Duke of York, to naturalize him in Engliſh Honours.

Committed to the Tuition of Mr. Murray in 1606.

In 1606, it ſeem'd to be now time to take him from his Governeſs; and from the treating him as a Child, to put him into a Manly way of Education. He was now therefore committed to the Tuition of Mr. Thomas Murray, a Scot, a Man of Learning and Prudence, tho' a Favourer of Presbytery; which yet he could never inſtill into his Pupil, who paid him all juſt Reſpect, made him afterwards his Secretary, and beſtow'd on him the Provoſtſhip of Eaton in 1621, where at 59 Years of Age he was buried in April 1623, and left behind him many valuable Papers, which after a long Darkneſs were lately brought to Light, and are now in the Hands of a moſt Reverend Prelate of this Church. (a)

A forward Scholar.

Under this Tutor he was diligent and ſtudious; and the more ſo, becauſe ſome Imperfections of his Body diſpos'd him to the better Improvements of his Mind: for he was a weakly Boy, with his Legs growing crooked, that made his Gate ſlow and ungraceful: this made him leſs inclin'd to Sports and Exerciſes of Activity, and ſo more at leiſure for his Book and his Pen. A Writer of his Life tells us, " His Proficiency in Letters was ſo eminent, that " Prince Henry taking notice of it, to put a Jeſt " upon him, one day put the Cap of Archbiſhop " Abbot (who was then with the Prince, the Duke, " and other of the Nobility, waiting in the Privy " Chamber for the King's coming out) on his Bro- " ther's Head; adding, That if he continued a good " Boy, and follow'd his Book, he would make him one " day Archbiſhop of Canterbury. Which the Child " took in ſuch Diſdain, that he threw the Cap upon " the Ground, and trampled it under his Feet with " ſo much Eagerneſs, that he could hardly be re- " ſtrained." Among thoſe People now, who delight to draw Predictions from every Humour, or little Frolick of a Child, ſome would make this Action to be a Preſage of the Ruin of Epiſcopacy under his Adminiſtration: Others would have it not ominous to the Order, but to the Perſon of the Archbiſhop, who fell under his Diſpleaſure, and the Conſequence of it, a long Suſpenſion from his Office. But wiſer Folks were content to take it only for a Sign of Bigneſs of Spirit, and a Humour that did not love Jeſting or Levity. The ſame Writer, Dr. Perinchief, obſerves, " That his Childhood was blemiſhed with a " ſuppoſed Obſtinacy; for the Weakneſs of his Bo- " dy inclining him to Retirements, and the Imper- " fections of his Speech rendring Diſcourſe tedious " and unpleaſant, he was ſuſpected to be ſome- " what perverſe: But more Age and Strength fit- " ting him for Manlike Exerciſes, and the publick " Hopes inviting him from his Privacies, he deli- " vered the World of ſuch Fears."

Made Knight of the Garter in 1611.

In 1611 he was made Knight of the Garter, being now advanc'd into a more hopeful Youth, and labouring under little Imperfection, except that of ſome natural Impediment in his Speech, which made him heſitate and a little ſtammer, and made Converſation leſs agreeable to him. An Hiſtorian ſays, L'eſtrange. that " though this vocal Impediment accompanied " him till the fatal Stroke, yet was it to wiſe Men " an Index of his Wiſdom: therefore Obloquy never " play'd the Fool ſo much, as in imputing Folly " to him; ſince there was never, or very rarely, " known, a Fool that ſtammered."

Duke of Cornwal on the Death of his Elder Brother.

A new Proſpect open'd to him upon the Death of Prince Henry, who had made himſelf Gracious and Popular, and therefore left his ſucceeding Brother under a leſs Advantage of the People's Eſteem and Favour. He died on November 6, 1612. His Brother Charles was immediately honour'd with the Dukedom of Cornwall, and the Regalities of it; and attended his Funeral as chief Mourner, December 7. On the 14th of February following, he performed the Office of Brideman to the Princeſs Elizabeth his Siſter, who on that Day was married to Frederick V, Prince Elector Palatine; a Match which tho' unfortunate in the firſt Conſequences of it, yet extremely happy in laying in a Foundation for a Proteſtant Line of Succeſſion to the Crown of England.

Prince of Wales in 1616.

In 1616, being now of a manly Age and Inclination, he was upon Novemb. 3, created Prince of Wales, Earl of Cheſter and Flint, the Revenues thereof being aſſigned to maintain a Court for him as apparent Heir of the Crown. He had now worn off the Love of Retirement, and a ſedentary Life, and had outgrown many of the firſt Infirmities of Conſtitution. So that he had now Strength and Genius to apply himſelf to Action, and (as Tradition and Writers agree) " He grew ſo perfect in Vaulting, Riding " the great Horſe, Running at the Ring, Shooting " in Croſs-bows, Muskets, and ſometimes in great " Pieces of Ordnance, that if Principality had been " to be the Reward of Excellency in thoſe Arts, he " would have had a Title to the Crown this way " alſo; being thought the beſt Markſman, and moſt " graceful Manager of the great Horſe, in the three " Kingdoms."

The Prince choſe rather to divert himſelf in theſe Martial Exerciſes, than to be at the Head of any Political Meaſures. He enjoy'd his Privacies in the very Court, and left the Miniſtry of State-Affairs entirely to his Father and his Favourite Council. Some thought he did this to avoid the Jealouſies of the old King, who had conceiv'd ſome ill Reſentments of the Popularity of Prince Henry, and would be the more kind and eaſie to Prince Charles, if he ſaw leſs reaſon to ſuſpect his Ambition and forward Humour. Others would more enviouſly aſcribe it to a Narrowneſs of Mind, and an Incapacity of Greatneſs. But thoſe had moſt Charity and Truth in their Conjectures, who ſuppos'd it the Effect of Modeſty and filial Duty that reſtrain'd him from being officious in meddling with thoſe Matters, which were not yet come to be his immediate Concern.

Chief Mourner at the Queen's Funeral in 1618.

The Queen his Mother died on March 2, 1618. Upon this Loſs, he is ſaid to have diſcovered a great Evenneſs of Spirit, bewailing it only with a juſt meaſure of Grief, without any affected Sorrows: A true inward Concern, that Nature and Gratitude rais'd in him; for ſhe was obſerv'd to be moſt tender and affectionate to this Son above all her other Children. Under theſe Impreſſions of a deep unfeigned Sorrow, he choſe to be chief Mourner at her Funeral, when her Corps was carried from Denmark-Houſe to the Chappel of Henry VII, at Weſtminſter, and there interr'd with great and due Solemnity.

The King put in mind of his better Education.

The Death of the Queen was, not long after, followed with a ſharp Sickneſs of the King. On which occaſion, we are told that many of the King's Friends were apprehenſive of his Death, and began to lament the Proſpect of thoſe Dangers that might enſue upon it: In particular, Dr. Andrews, then Biſhop of Ely, as a Confeſſor to His Majeſty, took an opportunity of expreſſing to him "the ſad Condi-"tion of the Church, if God ſhould at that Time "determine his Royal Life; the Prince having been "only converſant with Scotchmen, who made up "the greateſt part of his Family, and were ill-affe-"cted to the Government and Worſhip of the Church "of England." Of this the King is ſaid to have become ſo very ſenſible, that he made a ſolemn Vow, If God ſhould pleaſe to reſtore his Health, he would ſo inſtruct the Prince in the Controverſies of Religion, as ſhould ſecure his Affections to the preſent Eſtabliſhment. Which he did with ſo much Succeſs, that when he was giving Inſtructions to the Chaplains that were to wait upon the Prince into Spain, he charged them to decline, as far as poſſible, all Diſputations in the Points of Religion: "But, ſays he, if any emergent Diſ-"putes ſhould happen, my Son is able to moderate "in them:" At which the Divines could not contain their Smiles: The King taking notice of their ſeeming to queſtion his Judgment of the Prince's Abilities, added, with ſome Vehemence, CHARLES ſhall manage a Point in Controverſie with the beſt-ſtudied Divine of you all. And indeed, this was a Talent in him, that did afterward appear in a moſt eminent Degree; though many believed, that the Want of this Accompliſhment would have been more happy; and that he would have been better able to Protect the Church, if he had not pleaſed himſelf with contending and diſputing for it.

In Feats of Chivalry 1620. In the twentieth Year of his Age, on March 24, 1620, which was the Anniverſary of King James's coming to the Crown of England, he performed a Juſting at Whitehall, together with ſeveral of the Nobility; wherein he is ſaid to have acquitted himſelf with a ſingular Air and Spirit of Bravery and Honour. Some believed, that the Reputation he thus gain'd in Martial Exploits, would drive him too much upon the Love of Arms, unleſs he ſhould have foreign Campaigns ſufficient to divert the Heroick Humour.

Goes into Spain in 1623. In 1623, the Prince was ſent into Spain to make his Addreſſes to the Infanta, and thereby to procure the Reſtitution of the Palatinate to his Brother-in-law, the Prince Elector. The Hiſtory of this Affair has been at large delivered in the preceeding Reign: And therefore it need here only be obſerved, that after an in-effectual negotiating Love and Intereſt in Spain, he arrived at Portſmouth on the 5th of October with his whole Retinue, and went next Day to the King at Royſton; and ſoon after making his Entrance into London, he was received by the People with all poſſible Demonſtrations of Joy: and publick Thanks were given in all Churches throughout England and Scotland for his ſafe Return (a). The Subjects were the better pleas'd, that he came home without his Errand; for, in general, they had no good Opinion of a Spaniſh Match. And the King was ſatisfied with the Diſappointment, becauſe he found the Spaniſh Councils averſe to his main Deſign, which was Reſtoring the Palatinate; and therefore he ſoon ſent Orders to diſſolve the Treaty of Marriage, ſpeaking it in publick, That he would never marry his Son with a Portion of his only Siſter's Tears.

Attends upon the King in his laſt Agonies. The King falling into an Ague and Fever, was very apprehenſive of approaching Death, and deſiring on Thurſday, March 24, to have the Sacrament adminiſtred to him, he received it with great Devotion, profeſſing to the Prince his Son, who ſtood by him, that He had received a ſingular Comfort thereby, and therefore wiſhed that he and all his Friends would partake of that Comfort whenever they came to lie under a like proſpect of Death. The King departed this Life on Sunday, March 27, 1625 (b).

The Privy Council immediately met, and drew up the Form of a Proclamation to proclaim the new King; which was publiſhed at Theobalds (where the King died) that Evening, and the next Day at Weſtminſter and London, with uſual Ceremonies, and very hearty Acclamations (c). In the Evening of this Monday, March 28, the King came to the Palace of St. James: On the Day following, all the Privy Counſellors of the late King were ſworn into his preſent Majeſty's Council; by whoſe Advice, a Commiſſion was granted to authorize the Great Seal, Privy Seal, and Signet, till new ones could be prepared: And other Commiſſions were iſſued out for continuing the Powers of the Judges, Juſtices of Peace, Sheriffs, and all other Civil Officers, whoſe Truſt did by Law determine with the King. It is beſt to give the Orders of the Council as they were formally paſt. Succeeds his Father in 1625. 1625.

The Council, when they roſe, immediately attended the King at St. James's, where the Lord Keeper, in the Name of the reſt, gave Thanks to His Majeſty for putting a Confidence in them, who had before ſerved his Royal Father; and then preſented the ſaid Orders or Reſolves for his Majeſty's Approbation: Who did accordingly approve them, and commanded the Execution of them by ſeveral Proclamations. Funeral of K. James.

The Council at the ſame time moved the King, that his Father's Funeral might be ſolemnized, and his own Nuptials in France confirmed, before the Sitting of the Parliament: To both which the King agreed. Accordingly, on the 23d of April, the Body of King James was conducted by the Nobility and great Officers of State, from Theobalds to Denmark-houſe in the Strand, from whence it was carried with a very pompous Solemnity, on May 17, to the Abbey-Church at Weſtminſter; the Herſe was followed by the King himſelf as chief Mourner, ſupported by the Earls of Arundel and Pembroke, with his Train carried up by twelve Peers of the Realm. After an elegant Sermon, preached by John Lord Biſhop of Lincoln, the Corps was interred in Henry VII's Chapel, built for the Dormitory of our Engliſh Princes.

Forces rais'd for Recovery of the Palatinate.

The King thought himſelf in Honour obliged to be early in his Preparations for a War toward the Recovery of the Palatinate. To purſue this good Deſign (which might have been more happily reſerved for the Counſels of the Parliament) general Muſters were made in ſeveral Counties, and twelve thouſand Men were rais'd, of which, eight thouſand were to rendezvouz at Plymouth: Coat and Conduct Money were ordered to be paid by the Country, and they to be re-imburſed at the King's Exchequer. And becauſe Complaint was made of theſe Forces being diſorderly in their March, a Proclamation was firſt iſſued for their good and quiet Behaviour: and ſoon after a Commiſſion was granted, to execute a ſtrict Diſcipline by Martial Law. Theſe Methods gave occaſion to ſome Debates among the Judges, and to ſome Diſcontents among the Common People.

Concluſion of the Match with France.

The King's next and chiefeſt Care, was to conclude his own Match with Henrietta Maria a Daughter of France. The Articles of Marriage had been ſigned by K. James on the 11th of May, and by the French King on the 14th of Auguſt following; and in March the ſaid Articles were ſigned at Paris by the Engliſh Embaſſadors, the Earls of Carliſle and Holland. So that after a needleſs Diſpenſation from Rome, nothing now remained but the Ceremony of Eſpouſals; for which the King ſent over his Procuratorial Letters for the Duke of Chevreux to act in his Name: and on May 11, the Solemnity was performed by Cardinal Richlieu, upon a Theatre erected for that Purpoſe before the Altar in the Church of Noſtre Dame in Paris, the Lady being given by her two Brothers, the King, and Monſieur (a). The D. of Buckingham was ſent over to conduct Her Majeſty into England: He came to Paris May 24, from whence he attended the Queen on June 2, towards Amiens, and forward to Bulloign, where the Royal Navy lying ready for Her, ſhe embarked June 12. and was brought ſafe, though a little ſick, to Dover. Where the King met her in the Morning June 13, and taking Coach the ſame Day for Canterbury, the Marriage was that Night conſummated. On June 16, their Majeſties entred London, where great Preparations had been made to receive them; but moſt of the Shew and Appearance was omitted, becauſe the Plague was now encreaſed in the City and Suburbs. The Queen ſettled with her Family in Denmark, or Somerſet-Houſe, which had been fitted up for her Reception, with a Chapel for Popiſh Service, according to the Articles of Marriage; and a Convent for Capuchin Friers. (b)

1625. Great Plague.

Some People reflecting on the latter end of King Charles's Reign, have look'd on it as a very inauſpicious Omen, that it began thus with a raging Peſtilence. As if this firſt Calamity did portend all the other publick Evils which followed after: But Cauſes and Events are known only to the wiſe God. The Reign of King James began with a like ſpreading Contagion, which was not then a Prognoſtick of ſucceeding Miſeries; for Peace and Plenty were the peculiar Bleſſing of all his Reign. An Hiſtorian makes it farther remarkable, "That theſe two "Plagues, that of the Father, this of the Son, were "Natives both of one Pariſh, White Chapel, yea un-"der the ſame Roof, and iſſued forth on the ſame "Day of the Month: Such Correſpondence was "there in their Entrance, &c." It is leſs to be admired that the Plague ſhould often begin in that Part of the Suburbs where the Butchers have their Shambles ſo cloſe and unclean: And it was more common for the Plague to reign in London, when the Streets and Lanes were ſo very narrow, and the Houſes for the moſt part ſo very ſordid, that Air and Sweetneſs were the only Strangers. Whereas ſince the Rebuilding of the City, the Streets are open, the Paſſages clear, the Windows large, the Cottages of the Poor are removed farther into the Fields, and many other Obſtructions of breathing are taken away: So as ſince the Fire, the Plague has never broke out in this populous City. God long avert the Judgment! L'eſtrange.

Conjectures on the Match with France.

Others have thought, that this Reign began with a greater Judgment in the King's Marriage with Popery and France: Two Evils with which the Intereſt of this Church and Nation could bear no Alliance. The young King indeed was in this excuſable, that he did not meerly follow his own Inclinations, but ſubmitted to the Judgment of his Father and the Parliament, who had jointly concerted this Match, and had carried it ſo far, as not to leave Room for an honourable Retreat. But however, conſidering the Malignity of Popiſh Religion, the Imperiouſneſs of French Government, the Influence of a ſtately Queen upon an affectionate Huſband, and the Share ſhe muſt have in the Education of her Children; it was even then eaſie to foreſee, that this unequal Match might prove very fatal to our Engliſh Prince and People, and lay-in a Vengeance to future Generations. (c)

The firſt Parliament June 18.

On June 18th, according to Summons, the Parliament began at Weſtminſter; where the Lords being habited in their Robes, and the Commons attending, his Majeſty, ſeated in his Royal Throne, ſpoke thus:

King's Speech.

"I Thank God, that the Buſineſs to be treated on "at this Time is of ſuch a Nature, that it needs "no Eloquence to ſet it forth; for, I am neither "able to do it, neither doth it ſtand with my Na-"ture to ſpend much Time in Words. "My Lords and Gentlemen,

"I hope you do remember, that you were pleaſed "to employ me to adviſe my Father to break off "thoſe two Treaties that were on foot: ſo that I "cannot ſay, that I came hither a free unengaged "Man. It's true, I came into this Buſineſs wil- "lingly and freely, like a young Man, and conſe- "quently raſhly; but it was by your Intereſt, your "Engagement: So that though it were done like a "young Man, yet I cannot repent me of it; and I "think none can blame me for it, knowing the "Love and Fidelity you have borne to your King, "having my ſelf likewiſe ſome little Experience of "your Affections. I pray you remember, that this "being my firſt Action, and begun by your Advice "and Intreaty, what a great Diſhonour it were to "you and me, if this Action ſo begun ſhould fail "for that Aſſiſtance you are able to give me. Yet "knowing the Conſtancy of your Love both to me "and this Buſineſs, I needed not to have ſaid this, "but only to ſhew what Care and Senſe I have of "your Honours and mine own. I muſt intreat you "likewiſe to conſider of the Times we are in, how "that I muſt adventure your Lives (which I ſhould "be loth to do) ſhould I continue you here long; "and you muſt venture the Buſineſs, if you be ſlow "in your Reſolutions: Wherefore I hope you will "take ſuch grave Counſel, as you will expedite what "you have in hand to do; which will do me and "your ſelves an infinite deal of Honour; you in "ſhewing your Love to me, and me that I may per- "fect that Work which my Father hath ſo happily "begun.

"Laſt of all, Becauſe ſome malicious Men may, "and, as I hear, have given out, that I am not ſo "true a Keeper and Maintainer of the true Religion "that I profeſs; I aſſure you, that I may with S. Paul "ſay, that I have been trained up at Gamaliel's "Feet; and although I ſhall never be ſo arrogant "as to aſſume unto my ſelf the reſt, I ſhall ſo far "ſhew the End of it, that all the World may ſee, "that none hath been, nor ever ſhall be, more de- "ſirous to maintain the Religion I profeſs, than I "ſhall be.

"Now becauſe I am unfit for much ſpeaking, I "mean to bring up the Faſhion of my Predeceſſors, "to have my Lord Keeper ſpeak for me in moſt "things: therefore I have commanded him to ſpeak "ſomething to you at this time; which is more for "Formality, than any great Matter he hath to ſay "unto you.

Then the Lord Keeper declared,

Lord Keeper's Speech.

"That the King's main Reaſon of calling the Par- "liament, beſides the beholding of his Subject's "Faces, was to mind them of the great Engage- "ments for the Recovery of the Palatinate, impoſed "on his Majeſty by the late King his Father, and "by themſelves who brake off the two Treaties with "Spain; alſo to let them underſtand, that the ſuc- "ceeding Treaties and Alliances, the Armies ſent "into the Low Countries, the Repairing of the Forts, "and the Fortifying of Ireland, do all meet in one "Centre, the Palatinate; and, that the Subſidies "granted the laſt Parliament are herein already "ſpent, whereof the Accompt is ready, together "with as much more of the King's own Revenue.

1625. His Lordſhip farther recommended three Cir- cumſtances.

"Firſt, the Time. All Europe being at this Day "at the Pool of Betheſda, the firſt ſtirring of the "Waters muſt be laid hold on; wherefore his Ma- "jeſty deſires them to beſtow this Meeting on him, "or rather on their Actions, and the next ſhall be "theirs, as ſoon and as long as they pleaſe, for do- "meſtick Buſineſs. Secondly, Supply. If Subſidies "be thought too long and backward, his Majeſty "deſires to hear, and not to propound the way. "Thirdly, the Iſſue of Action; which being the firſt, "doth highly concern his Majeſty's Honour and Re- "putation, for which he relies upon their Loves "with the greateſt Confidence that ever King had "in his Subjects; witneſs his Royal Poſie, Amor "Civium Regis Munimentum: And he doubts not, "but as ſoon as he ſhall be known in Europe to be "their King, ſo ſoon ſhall they be known to be a "Loving and Loyal Nation to him."

Opening of this Parlia- ment did promiſe Joy and Satisfacti- on.

There were many Reaſons to diſpoſe the Hearts of the People to be fill'd with Content and Joy at this Opening of the Parliament. 1. The very Call of it ſo immediately after the King's Acceſſion to the Throne, was grateful to the People of England, who always think themſelves moſt ſafe under a Sitting Parlia- ment. 2. His Speech to the Lords and Commons was more cloſe and pertinent, as well as more ten- der and affectionate than the like Applications of his Royal Father, who had uſed himſelf to Ha- rangues, rather than to the natural Propriety of Thoughts and Words. 3. He wiſely reſolv'd the War into the Advice of the laſt Parliament, and made himſelf their Agent and Inſtrument only in perſuading his Father to break off the Treaties. 4. He remov'd the Jealouſies which had been unhap- pily rais'd of his Inclinations to Popery, upon ac- count of his Treaty with Spain, and his Match with France; Popular Jealouſies, which indeed he could never perfectly remove, though he gave this ſolemn Aſſurance, and liv'd and died a Proof of it. 5. He ask'd for Supplies upon the right Bottom of letting the Subjects know, that the Money granted in laſt Parliament was already ſpent in the Uſes aſſign'd for it; and that the Account of thoſe Expences was ready to be laid before them. In a word, Here were All the wiſe and juſt Meaſures that a new Prince could take to render himſelf Acceptable to his Peo- ple, and Conſiderable to all the World. The more Wonder and Pity, that this happy Beginning of a Reign ſhould proceed unfortunately, and conclude moſt miſerably.

Speaker choſen and pre- ſented.

June 21, the Commons preſented Sir Tho. Crew, Kt. and Serjeant at Law for their Speaker, and his Ma- jeſty approv'd the Choice; which was thought the more agreeable, becauſe he had been Speaker in the laſt Parliament of King James, and was the better acquainted with Affairs now depending. The Houſe began with various Debates: Some inſiſted, "That "the Grievances mentioned, but not redreſſed, in "laſt Parliament, ſhould be now conſider'd: Others "call'd for an immediate Account of the laſt Subſi- "ſidies granted for Recovery of the Palatinate: O- "thers for putting the Laws in Execution againſt "Prieſts and Jeſuits, and ſuch Papiſts as reſorted "to the Houſes and Chapels of foreign Ambaſſa- "dors: Others declaim'd againſt the Dangers of "Arminianiſm, and the ſpreading of thoſe Tenets "by ſome late Writers, eſpecially Mr. Montague. (a) On the other hand, it was dutifully urg'd by the King's Friends in that Houſe, "That they had rea- "ſon to thank his Majeſty for calling a Parliament "upon his firſt coming to the Crown, as the ſureſt

" way to keep up a right Underſtanding between him and his People: That ſince he began to reign, the Grievances were none, or ſo few and inconſiderable, that they were not yet worth a Complaint; That they could not but remember, how his Majeſty, when Prince, had been very inſtrumental in ſolliciting the Cauſe of Parliament and People with his Royal Father, and had yet done nothing but in purſuance of the Meaſures taken in that former Reign; that therefore it would be the Wiſdom of this Houſe to ſweeten all things between the King and his People, and to expreſs their Duty by an effectual Supply, and therewith to offer nothing but a humble Petition for the Honour and Safety of Religion."

A publick Faſt.

The Plague encreaſing, the Commons mov'd the Lords to join in a Petition to the King for a publick Faſt, whereunto their Lordſhips readily concurr'd; and the King as freely conſenting, a Proclamation was iſſued forth for a Day of Faſting and Humiliation thro'out the Kingdom; (a) and the King commanded the Archbiſhop, and ſix other Biſhops, to draw up a Form of Prayer to implore the Divine Mercy to ſtop the raging Peſtilence, and to avert the Famine that ſeem'd to be now threatned by the extraordinary wet Weather; and to beg God's Bleſſing upon the Fleet now ready to put to Sea. This Faſt was ſolemnly kept by both Houſes of Parliament on Saturday Jul. 2. and throughout all England on Wedneſday July 20.

Grant of two Subſidies.

After ſome Diſguſt between the King and the Commons, in relation to Mr. Montague, they unanimouſly preſented two Subſidies; which being confirm'd by the Lords, were offer'd to his Majeſty, with the uſual Deſire of his gracious Acceptance. The Lord Conway, Secretary of State, ſignified to the Lords and Commons together, That his Majeſty did kindly accept the Bill for two Subſidies, but, that the Neceſſities of our preſent Affairs were ſo urgent, as to require their farther Advice and Aſſiſtance; and ſo opened the Grounds and Reaſons of the War, and the Expences requiſite for a Support of it. Then the Lord Keeper deliver'd a ſhort Meſſage from the King to both Houſes, That as to the Petition of the Lords and Commons touching Religion, his Majeſty was pleaſed at firſt to give them a gracious Aſſurance, and had now ſent them a fuller Anſwer, to give them Satisfaction in every Particular.

Other Bills depending.

The Houſes were preparing ſeveral Acts; as, "againſt Giving and Taking of Bribes for Places of Judicature; To reſtrain the arbitrary Preſſing of Soldiers; To grant the Tonnage and Poundage for one Year only;" and ſome other Bills in Agitation: But, by reaſon of the great Increaſe of the Plague, (b) the two Houſes moved his Majeſty for a ſhort Receſs; and accordingly on Monday July 11. they adjourn'd to Oxford, to re-aſſemble there on the firſt day of Auguſt.

The fatal Policy in aſſiſting the French King.

In the time of this Receſs, there happen'd an Action at Sea that made the King ſuffer very much in the Affections of his People, and in the Eſteem of foreign Proteſtants. King James, in his laſt Treaty with France, had promiſ'd the lending of ſome Ships to the French King upon reaſonable Conditions, ſuppoſing them to be employed only againſt the King of Spain, or his Allies, in Italy. To perform this Engagement, Captain John Pennington was ſent in the Vantguard, a principal Man of War, with ſeven Merchant Ships of great Burden and Strength, to ride upon the Coaſts of France for the Service of that King; who, inſtead of employing them againſt a common Enemy, had now reſolv'd to make another uſe of them againſt his own Proteſtant Subjects, to block up the Harbour of Rochel, and ſo reduce the Town to his abſolute Subjection. Captain Pennington was ſenſible of this ill Deſign, and therefore ſent back a Memorial to the Duke of Buckingham, Lord High Admiral, to decline the Service, and to bring home the Ships in Safety and Honour (c); but he ſoon received Letters from the Duke, and a Warrant from Secretary Conway, in the King's Name, to command him to deliver up the Ships to the hands of ſuch French-men as his Chriſtian Majeſty ſhould appoint, but not to deſert his own Charge over them. Theſe Orders were deliver'd to him by the hands of the French Ambaſſadour, together with a Letter from the French King, requiring him to receive aboard a certain Number of French Soldiers, and his Admiral the Duke of Montmorance, and ſo to join againſt the Rochellers. Pennington very bravely refuſed; upon which a Diſpute ariſing, the French Ambaſſadour's Secretary came two ſeveral times to the Captain's Ship, to Proteſt againſt him as a Rebel to his King and Country: But at the making of the laſt Proteſt, enforced with Challenges and Threats, the Soldiers and Mariners grew into ſuch a Fury and Tumult, that they got up their Anchors and ſet Sail for England, ſaying, like true Engliſh Sea-men, that they would rather be hang'd at home, than be Slaves to the French, and fight againſt the Proteſtant Religion. When they came to anchor in the Downs, Captain Pennington ſent an Expreſs to the Duke of Buckingham, to inform him of what had happen'd; and to aſſure him, that All his Men would ſooner be hang'd than return again into France (d). But the King, upon importunity of the Queen, ſent an expreſs and ſtrict Order to Pennington, to put his former Inſtructions, without delay, in execution; to reſign his Ship called the Vantguard, with all her Furniture, into the hands of the Marquis D'effiat; and, to require the ſeven Merchant Ships to put themſelves into the Service of the French King, under the utmoſt Penalty. Upon this Pennington ſail'd back to Diep, and put the Vantguard into the abſolute Power of the French King, and delivered up the other Ships for the ſame purpoſe; who were weighing Anchor, and making away, but upon a Shot from Pennington they came in again; only Sir Ferdinando George ſtoutly brought off his Ship called the Neptune. The Companies in the reſt unanimouſly declar'd againſt ſerving the French, and quitted their Ships all but one Man; and Pennington himſelf came away for England. This Expedition was fatal to the King's Intereſt, brought on a Jealouſie of the new Queen, and rais'd a general Odium againſt the Duke of Buckingham.

My Lords, and you of the Commons,

King's Speech.

"WE all remember, that from your Deſires "and Advice my Father, now with God, "brake off thoſe two Treaties with Spain, that were "then in hand. Well you then foreſaw, that as "well for regaining my diſpoſſeſs'd Brother's Inhe-"ritance, as Home Defence, a War was likely to "ſucceed: And that as your Counſels had led my "Father into it, ſo your Aſſiſtance in a Parliamen-"tary way to purſue it, ſhould not be wanting. "That Aid you gave him by Advice was for Suc-"cour of his Allies, the Guarding of Ireland; and "the Home-part, Supply of Munition, preparing "and ſetting forth of his Navy. A Council you "thought of and appointed for the War, and Trea-"ſurers for iſſuing of the Monies: And to begin "this Work of your Advice, you gave three Subſi-"dies and as many Fifteens, which with ſpeed were "levied, and by Direction of that Council of War "(in which the Preparation of this Navy was not "the leaſt) diſburſed.

"It pleaſed God at the Entrance of this Prepara-"tion (by your Advice begun) to call my Father "to his Mercy, whereby I enter'd as well to the "Care of your Deſign as his Crown. I did not then "as Princes do of Cuſtom and Formality, re-aſſemble "you, but that by your farther Advice and Aid I "might be able to proceed in that which by your "Counſels my Father was engaged in. Your Love "to me, and Forwardneſs to further thoſe Affairs, "you expreſſed by a Grant of two Subſidies yet un-"gathered; although I muſt aſſure you by my ſelf "and others, upon Credit taken up, and aforehand "diſburſed, and far ſhort as yet to ſet forth that "Navy now preparing; as I have lately the Eſti-"mate of thoſe of Care, and who are ſtill employed "about it, whoſe Particular of all Expences about "this Preparation ſhall be given you, when you "pleaſe to take an Account of it."

The preſent Poſture of Affairs declared by the Secretaries of State.

His Majeſty having ended his Speech, comman-ded his Secretaries, the Lord Conway and Sir John Cook, more particularly to declare the preſent State of Affairs; which they did, with reference to Germany, France, the Low Countries, Denmark, Sweden, and Italy: and then returning to our Condition at home; a Fleet ready to put to Sea, and an Army lying at Plymouth; and ſo preſſing for proportion-able Aid.

And the King's Debts by the Lord Treaſurer.

Then the Lord Treaſurer added, "That the late "King, when he died, was indebted to the City of "London one hundred and twenty thouſand Pounds, "beſides Intereſt; indebted for Denmark and the "Palatinate one hundred and fifty thouſand Pounds; "indebted for his Wardrobe, forty thouſand Pounds. "Theſe Debts lie upon his preſent Majeſty, who "is indebted to London ſeventy thouſand Pounds, "that he has laid out; for his Navy twenty thou-"ſand Pounds, and twenty thouſand Pounds for "Count Mansfield; for Mourning and Funeral Ex-"pences for his Father, forty two thouſand Pounds; "for Expences concerning the Queen, forty thouſand "Pounds; and that, beſides all this, the Navy would "require, for the intended Expedition, three hun-"dred thouſand Pounds."

The H. of Commons are diſpleaſed.

Theſe great Occaſions of Supply made ſome Mem-bers of the Houſe of Commons take Advantage of the King's Neceſſities, and improve the popular Diſ-contents; which the King might eaſily have allay'd by ſoft Words, and Reformation of ſome few Abu-ſes: But finding the King not much diſpos'd to pleaſe them, they flew into higher Pretenſions, com-plaining, "That the Treaſury was miſemployed; "that evil Counſels guided the King's Deſigns; that "all our Neceſſities were owing to a wrong Ma-"nagement; that they ought to Petition the King "to take a more faithful Council; that it was not "ſafe to grant more Money, till Grievances were "redreſs'd; that it ſhould be declared, againſt what "Enemy the Fleet and Army were intended; that "Court Offices were ſold; that the King had not "yet given a full Anſwer to their Petition concern-"ing Religion; nor about the Impoſition upon "Wines; that all Miſcarriages were in greateſt mea-"ſure owing to the Potency of the Duke of Buck-"ingham, upon whom they reflected with great Se-"verity, that he had broke the Match with Spain, "to make that with France upon much harder terms; "that Papiſts were openly encourag'd, and ſome "Prieſts and Jeſuits had obtain'd Warrants of Par-"don diſpenſing with expreſs Statutes."

Conference between Lords and Commons.

A Conference was held between the Lords and Commons upon the Subject of theſe Debates, and more eſpecially upon the Eſtabliſh'd Religion. When the Conference was over, both Houſes were ordered to meet at Chriſt-Church, to receive an An-ſwer to their Petition concerning Religion: To eve-ry Clauſe whereof his Majeſty anſwered in a Parlia-mentary way, upon Aug. 7. And becauſe the Foundation of all the enſuing Troubles was laid in theſe Apprehenſions of the Growth of Popery; it will be proper to give the Petitions and Anſwers in their Order at large.

Petition of Parliament, and his Majeſty's Anſwer.

To the King's moſt Excellent Majeſty.

"Moſt Gracious Sovereign,

"IT being infallibly true, that Nothing can more "eſtabliſh the Throne, and aſſure the Peace and "Proſperity of the People, than the Unity and "Sincerity of Religion; We your moſt humble and "loyal Subjects, the Lords Spiritual and Tempo-"ral, and Commons of this preſent Parliament aſ-"ſembled, hold our ſelves bound, in Conſcience "and Duty, to repreſent the ſame to your Sacred "Majeſty, together with the dangerous Conſequen-"ces of the Increaſe of Popery in this Land, and "what we conceive to be the principal Cauſes "thereof, and what may be the Remedies.

Chriſtopherſons and Jeſuits, that have too too much abuſed the Ignorant of the Tongue. III. That the Indices Expurga-tory may be likewiſe peruſed, &c. And he immediately after, publiſh'd his Reaſons for ſupporting the good Intention of ſo ſtriking at the Foundations of Popery, in a Tract, Intituled, "An Explanation or Enlarging of the ten Articles, in the "Supplication of Dr. James, lately exhibited to the Clergy "of England: Or a manifeſt Proof that they are both reaſona-"ble and faiſible within the Time mentioned." Oxford 1625. 4to. But in this uſeful Project, the very Learned Honeſt Man could have no Succeſs, and could afterward get no great Prefer-ment, of which he tenderly complained in his Manuduction, Printed in this ſame Year, 1625. The Matter hath been mo-tioned in Convocation. Oh! let it not be ſaid, as was once ſpoken of our Convocations and Congregations here in Oxford, that they were Cauſe of much Evil, becauſe they were inuti-les ſine fructu.

Yet the Majority of the Lower Houſe of Convocation were heartily againſt Popery, and the Arminian Faction, for which Zeal the Leaders of them were diſcountenanced, and mark'd out for the Diſpleaſure of Superiours, as is plain from the Account given by one Member of another; Dr. William Leo, Preacher at Wandſworth in Surrey, in his Funeral Sermon on Dr. Daniel Featley at Lambeth, April. 21. 1645. ſpoke thus.——We ſerved together in three Convocations, to wit, the laſt two of King James, to whom we had the Honour to be Chaplains in Ordinary, and the firſt of King Charles, kept at Oxford; all which time he ſtrongly ſet himſelf againſt all that had any ſmack of Rome, or Romiſh Superſtition. In which Convoca-tion, five and forty of us, whereof he was chief, made a ſo-lemn Covenant among our ſelves, to oppoſe every Thing that did but ſavour or ſcent never ſo little of Pelagianiſme, or Se-mi-Pelagianiſme.——But how harſhly and hardly he was uſed by a great Man in the Church, that ſhall be nameleſs. Ani-mus meminiſſe horret, luctuq; refugit. For in a manner, he was driven thence, and we were conſtrained to get him an Horſe, and two poor Men travelled with him, the one on the one Side, and the other on the other Side, did ſupport and ſtay him up all the Way, and ſo brought him home to Lam-beth, travelling on Foot-pace. When we took our leave of him at Bullington-Green, he ſaid, Valete amici nunc tem-poris: Ego, ut olim Bucerus, ſum pila fortunæ, quæ non eſt omnibus una. Orate pro me, pro Rege, Lege, Grege, ite-rum valete in Domino Ieſu, and ſo went on.

"The

1625. “ The Dangers appear in theſe Particulars:

I. “ In their deſperate Ends, being both the Subverſion of Church and State; and the Reſtleſneſs of their Spirits to attain theſe Ends, the Doctrine of their Teachers and Leaders perſuading them, that therein they do God good Service.

II. “ Their evident and ſtrict Dependence upon ſuch Foreign Princes, as no way affect the Good of your Majeſty and this State.

III. “ The opening a way of Popularity to the Ambition of any who ſhall adventure to make himſelf Head of ſo great a Party.

The principal Cauſes of the Increaſe of Papiſts; are,

I. “ The want of the due Execution of Laws againſt Jeſuits, Seminary Prieſts, and Popiſh Recuſants; occaſioned partly by the Connivency of the State, partly by Defects in the Laws themſelves, and partly by the manifold Abuſe of Officers.

II. “ The interpoſing of Foreign Princes, by their Ambaſſadors and Agents, in favour of them.

III. “ Their great Concourſe to the City, and frequent Conferences and Conventicles there.

IV. “ The open and uſual Reſort to the Houſes and Chapels of Foreign Ambaſſadors.

V. “ The Education of their Children in Seminaries and Houſes of their Religion in Foreign Parts, which of late have been greatly multiplied and enlarged for entertaining of the Engliſh.

VI. “ That in ſome Places of your Realm, your People be not ſufficiently inſtructed in the Knowledge of true Religion.

VII. “ The licentious Printing and Diſperſing of Popiſh and Seditious Books.

VIII. “ The Employment of Men ill-affected in Religion, in Places of Government, who do, may, or ſhall countenance the Popiſh Party.

The Remedies againſt this outragious and dangerous Diſeaſe, we conceive to be theſe enſuing.

I. “ That the Youth of this Realm be carefully educated by able and religious Schoolmaſters, and they to be injoined to Catechize, and inſtruct their Scholars in the Grounds and Principles of true Religion. And whereas, by many Complaints from divers Parts of the Kingdom, it doth plainly appear, That ſundry Popiſh Scholars, diſſembling their Religion, have craftily crept in, and obtained the Places of Teaching in divers Counties, and thereby infected and perverted their Scholars, and ſo fitted them to be tranſported to the Popiſh Seminaries beyond the Seas; That therefore there be great care in Choice and Admitting of Schoolmaſters, and that the Ordinaries make diligent Enquiries of their Demeanours, and proceed to the removing of ſuch as ſhall be faulty, or juſtly ſuſpected.

His Majeſty's Anſwer.

This is well allowed of: And, for the better Performance of what is deſired, Letters ſhall be written to the two Archbiſhops, and from them Letters to go to all the Ordinaries of their ſeveral Provinces to ſee this done; the ſeveral Ordinaries to give Account of their Doings herein to the Archbiſhops reſpectively, and they to give Account to his Majeſty of their Proceedings herein.

II. “ That the ancient Diſcipline of the Univerſities be reſtored, being the famous Nurſeries of Literature and Vertue.

Anſw. This is approved by his Majeſty, and the Chancellour of each Univerſity ſhall be required to cauſe due execution of it. 1625.

III. “ That ſpecial Care be taken to enlarge the Word of God throughout all the Parts of your Majeſty's Dominions, as being the moſt powerful Means for planting of true Religion, and rooting out of the contrary. To which end, among other things, to adviſe your Biſhops, by Fatherly Entreaty and tender Uſage, to reduce to the peaceable and orderly Service of the Church ſuch able Miniſters as have been formerly ſilenced, that there may be a profitable Uſe of their Miniſtry in theſe needful and dangerous Times; and, that Non-Reſidency, Pluralities, and Commendams, may be moderated: Where we cannot forbear moſt humbly to thank your Majeſty for diminiſhing the Number of your own Chaplains, not doubting of the like Princely Care for the well-beſtowing of the reſt of your Benefices, both to the Comfort of the People, and the Encouragement of the Univerſities, being full of grave and able Miniſters unfurniſh'd of Livings.

Anſw. This his Majeſty likes well, ſo as it be applied to ſuch Miniſters as are peaceable, orderly, and conformable to the Church-Government: For Pluralities and Non-reſidencies they are now ſo moderated, that the Archbiſhops affirm, there be now no Diſpenſations for Pluralities granted; nor no Man now is allowed above two Benefices, and thoſe not above thirty Miles diſtant: And for avoiding Non-reſidence, the Canon in that caſe provided ſhall be duly put in execution. For Commendams, they ſhall be ſparingly granted, only in ſuch caſes where the Exility and Smallneſs of the Biſhoprick requireth. Alſo his Majeſty will cauſe that the Benefices belonging to him ſhall be well beſtowed. And, for the better propagating of Religion, his Majeſty recommendeth to the Parliament, that Care may be taken, and Proviſion made, that every Pariſh ſhall allow a competent Maintenance for an able Miniſter; and, that the Owners of Parſonages Impropriate would allow to the Vicars, Curates, and Miniſters, in Villages and Places belonging to their Parſonage, ſufficient Stipend and Allowance for Preaching Miniſters.

IV. “ That there may be ſtrict Proviſion againſt Tranſporting of Engliſh Children to the Seminaries beyond the Seas, and for the recalling of them who are already there placed; and for the Puniſhment of ſuch your Subjects as are Maintainers of thoſe Seminaries, or of the Scholars; conſidering, that beſides the ſeducing of your People, great Sums of Money are yearly expended upon them, to the impoveriſhing of this Kingdom.

Anſw. The Law in this caſe ſhall be put in execution: And farther, there ſhall be Letters written to the Lord Treaſurer, and alſo to the Lord Admiral, that all the Ports of this Realm, and the Creeks and Members thereof, be ſtrictly kept, and ſtrait Searches made to this end: A Proclamation ſhall be to recall both the Children of

Noble-

1625. Noblemen, and the Children of any other Men, and they to return by a Day: Alſo Maintainers of Seminaries, or Scholars there, ſhall be puniſhed according to Law.

V. "That no Popiſh Recuſant be permitted to come within the Court, unleſs your Majeſty be pleaſed to call him upon ſpecial Occaſion, agreeable to the Statute of 3 Jacobi. And whereas your Majeſty, for preventing of apparent Miſchiefs both to your Majeſty and the State, hath in your Princely Wiſdom taken Order, that none of your natural-born Subjects not profeſſing the true Religion as by Law eſtabliſhed, be admitted into the Service of your Royal Conſort the Queen; we give your Majeſty moſt humble Thanks, and deſire that your Order herein may be obſerved."

Anſw. If his Majeſty ſhall find or be inform'd of any Concourſe of Recuſants to the Court, the Law ſhall be ſtrictly followed: And his Majeſty is pleaſed that by Proclamation the Britiſh and the Iriſh Subjects ſhall be put in the ſame caſe. And as his Majeſty hath provided in his Treaty with France, ſo his Purpoſe is to keep it, that none of his Subjects ſhall be admitted into his Service, or into the Service of his Royal Conſort the Queen, that are Popiſh Recuſants.

VI. "That all the Laws now ſtanding in force againſt Jeſuits, Seminary Prieſts, and others, having taken Orders by Authority derived from the See of Rome, be put in due execution. And to the Intent they may not pretend to be ſurpriſed, that a ſpeedy and certain Day be prefixed by your Majeſty's Proclamation for their Departure out of this Realm, and all other your Dominions, and not to return upon the ſevereſt Penalties of the Law now in force againſt them; And that all your Majeſty's Subjects may be thereby admoniſhed not to receive, comfort, entertain, or conceal any of them, upon the Penalties which may be lawfully inflicted. And that all ſuch Papiſts, Jeſuits, and Recuſants, who are and ſhall be impriſoned for Recuſancy or any other cauſe, may be ſo ſtrictly reſtrained, as that none ſhall have Conference with them, thereby to avoid the Contagion of their corrupt Religion. And that no Man who ſhall be ſuſpected of Popery be ſuffered to be a Keeper of any of your Majeſty's Priſons."

Anſw. The Law in this caſe ſhall be put in execution, and a Proclamation ſhall be to the effect deſired: And ſuch Reſtraint ſhall be made as is deſired: And no Man that is juſtly ſuſpected of Popery ſhall be ſuffered to be Keeper of any of his Majeſty's Priſons.

VII. "That your Majeſty be pleaſed to take ſuch Order as to your Princely Wiſdom ſhall be expedient, that no natural-born Subject, or ſtrange Biſhops, nor any other, by Authority from the See of Rome, confer any Eccleſiaſtical Orders to exerciſe any Eccleſiaſtical Function whatſoever toward or upon your Majeſty's natural Subjects within your Dominions."

Anſw. This is fit to be ordered according as is provided; and it ſhall be ſo publiſhed by Proclamation.

VIII. "That your Majeſty's Learned Council may receive Order and Commandment to conſider of all former Grants of Recuſants Lands, that ſuch of them may be avoided as are made to the Recuſants Uſe or Intereſt, out of which the Recuſant receiveth any Benefit, which are either void or voidable by the Law." 1625.

Anſw. The King will give Order to his learned Council to conſider of the Grants; and will do according as is deſired.

IX. "That your Majeſty will be likewiſe pleaſed ſtrictly to command all your Judges and Miniſters of Juſtice, Eccleſiaſtical and Temporal, to ſee the Laws of this Realm againſt Popiſh Recuſants to be duly executed: And namely, That the Cenſure of Excommunication be declared and certified againſt them, and that they be not abſolved but upon publick Satisfaction, by yielding to Conformity."

Anſw. His Majeſty leaves the Laws to their courſe, and will order in the point of Excommunication as is deſired.

X. "That your Majeſty will be pleaſed to remove from Places of Authority and Government all ſuch Perſons as are either Popiſh Recuſants, or according to Direction of former Acts of State to be juſtly ſuſpected."

Anſw. This his Majeſty thinks fit, and will give Order for it.

XI. "That preſent Order be taken for diſarming all Popiſh Recuſants legally convicted or juſtly ſuſpected according to the Laws in that behalf, and the Orders taken by his late Majeſty's Privy Council upon Reaſon of State."

Anſw. The Laws and Acts in this caſe ſhall be followed, and put in due execution.

XII. "That your Majeſty be alſo pleaſed, in reſpect of the great Reſort of Recuſants to and about London, to command forthwith, upon pain of your Indignation and ſevere Execution of the Laws, that they retire themſelves to their ſeveral Countries, there to remain confined within five Miles of their Places."

Anſw. For this the Laws in force ſhall be forthwith executed.

XIII. "And whereas your Majeſty hath ſtrictly commanded and taken Order, that none of the natural-born Subjects repair to the hearing of Maſſes, or other ſuperſtitious Service, at the Chapels or Houſes of foreign Ambaſſadors, or in any other Places whatſoever; We give your Majeſty moſt humble Thanks, and deſire that your Order and Commandment therein may be continued and obſerved, and that the Offenders herein may be puniſhed according to the Laws."

Anſw. The King gives Aſſent thereto, and will ſee that obſerved which herein hath been commanded by him.

XIV. "That all ſuch Inſolencies as any that are Popiſhly affected have lately committed, or ſhall hereafter commit, to the Diſhonour of our Religion, or to the Wrong of the true Profeſſors thereof, be exemplarily puniſhed."

Anſw. This ſhall be done as is deſired.

1625. XV. "That the Statute of 1 Eliz. for the payment of Twelve-pence every Sunday by ſuch as "ſhall be abſent from Divine Service in the Church, "without a lawful Excuſe, may be put in due execution, the rather for that the Penalty by Law "is given to the Poor, and therefore not to be diſpenſed withal."

Anſw. It is fit that this Statute be executed, and the Penalties ſhall not be diſpenſed withal.

XVI. "Laſtly, That your Majeſty would be pleaſed to extend your Princely Care alſo over the "Kingdom of Ireland, that the like Courſes may be "there taken for the reſtoring and eſtabliſhing of "true Religion there."

Anſw. His Majeſty's Cares are and ſhall be extended over the Kingdom of Ireland, and he will do all that a Religious King ſhould do for the reſtoring and eſtabliſhing true Religion there.

"And thus (moſt gracious Sovereign) according "to our Duty and Zeal to God and Religion, to "your Majeſty and your Safety, to the Church and "Commonwealth, and their Peace and Proſperity, "we have made a faithful Declaration of the preſent Eſtate, the Cauſes and Remedies of this increaſing Diſeaſe of Popery; humbly offering the "ſame to your Princely Care and Wiſdom. The "Anſwer of your Majeſty's Father, our late Sovereign, of famous Memory, upon the like Petition, "did give us great Comfort of Reformation; but "your Majeſty's moſt gracious Promiſes made in "that kind, do give us Confidence and Aſſurance "of the continual Performance thereof. In which "Comfort and Confidence repoſing our ſelves, we "moſt humbly pray for your Majeſty's long Continuance in all Princely Felicity."

The Petition and Anſwer were wiſe and moderate.

It is plain, that as nothing could more become the Wiſdom and Honour of the Parliament, than to make ſuch a Petition; ſo nothing could better aſſert the Zeal and Affection of the King, than to give ſuch an Anſwer. The Petition ſhews, that the Jealouſies of Popery were then very high; and the Anſwer aſſures them, that the King will effectually ſuppreſs thoſe Fears and Jealouſies. But indeed Political Jealouſies are like the Conjugal, when they are once raiſed, it is hard to extinguiſh 'em. Promiſes of Fidelity are not believ'd; Reconciling Favours are ſuſpected; and the ſtricteſt Guard upon Innocence will be thought Guilty. There is no Reaſon to doubt, but that his Majeſty was Sincere in theſe Royal Aſſurances he gave his People: And for a more full Conviction, at the time of Reading the Petition and Anſwer, it was farther intimated to the Commons, "That as his Majeſty took well "their minding him of the Care of Religion, ſo he "would have done and granted the ſame things if "they had not petitioned for them. That he did "not place this Anſwer to their Petition as a Wheel "to draw on other Affairs and Deſigns, but he "leaves them to move in their own Spheres; and "what he hath done in this Particular comes from "theſe two Fountains, Conſcience and Duty to his "Father, who in his laſt Speech recommended unto him the Perſon, but not the Religion, of his "Queen."

The Duke of Buckingham, a potent Favourite, fatal to his Maſter.

Next to the Dangers of Popery, the greateſt Grievance of the Commons was, to ſee the Duke of Buckingham in the exceſſive Favours of the King, the prime Miniſter, the higheſt Officer, and in effect the ſole Mover of the Court. The Favourites of every Prince were always odious to the Engliſh People, and were frequently ſet upon by Engliſh Parliaments. Not only Self-love, Envy, Ambition, Diſguſt, Revenge, and ſuch like Paſſions, do naturally create an Averſion to any one Subject who ſeems to engroſs and appropriate to himſelf the common Father of the People; but the laudable Affections that prompt to Equity and Impartiality, Tenderneſs to our Prince, and Love to our Country, all conſpire to make every indifferent Perſon an Enemy to the one powerful Fellow-member, that commands the Head, and uſurps over the whole Body. This Reſentment had been very loud in the preſent Seſſion; Speeches and Replies had been very ſevere: And therefore the Duke thought it proper to make ſome Apology and Defence for himſelf. He took an Opportunity of doing this when both Houſes were thus together to receive his Majeſty's Anſwer as before related. "He began with acquainting the Lords "and Commons, that by the King's Command he "was to give an Account of the Fleet, and the Preparations thereof. He ſaid, that the firſt and the "laſt time he had the Happineſs to ſpeak in that "Auditory, it was of the Spaniſh Treaty, and then "he was ſo happy as to be honoured and applauded "by both Houſes of Parliament; and he made no "queſtion but ſpeaking now with the ſame Heart, "he ſhould be no leſs acceptable to them. He requeſted the Houſe of Commons to believe, that "if any Member had, in Diſcharge of his Conſcience, or in his Zeal for Reformation, ſpoke any "thing which might ſeem to reflect upon ſome particular Perſons; He ſhould be the laſt Man that "would apply this to himſelf, becauſe he was confidently aſſured of two things; firſt, that they "would be juſt not to fall upon him without cauſe; "and ſecondly, that he himſelf ſhould do nothing "unſuitable to the Character of a faithful Engliſhman." Then he proceeded to ſum up the Objections rais'd againſt him, and to give particular Anſwers to them. The Objections were by way of Quære; 1. By what Counſel thoſe Deſigns and Actions of War were carried on and enterpriſed? Anſ. By the Counſel of the Parliament, appointed according to the Act of both Houſes, March 23. 1623. &c. 2. Why did not his Majeſty declare the Enemy preſently upon granting thoſe three Subſidies? Anſ. His Majeſty conſidered the ſtate of Chriſtendom at that Seaſon, and found it full of Danger to declare the Enemy, for three Reaſons, &c. 3. Whether a conſiderable Sum of Money be yet required? Anſ. Forty thouſand Pounds is yet neceſſary, &c. 4. Why was not this Want of Money foreſeen, but now only thought upon unexpectedly and dangerouſly, conſidering the Sickneſs? Anſ. It was foreſeen before, but interrupted by unfortunate Accidents, &c. 5. Who gave Counſel to his Majeſty ſo ſuddenly, when the Sickneſs was ſo dangerouſly ſpread, to conveen this Parliament? Anſ. His Majeſty commanded him to ſay, that it was the Buſineſs it ſelf that gave this Counſel, and the Neceſſity of it, &c. 6. Is not the time of the Year too far ſpent for the Navy to go forth? Anſ. The King anſwered this formerly; Better half the Navy periſh, than the going thereof ſhould be ſtayed. 7. Whether thoſe eight Ships lent to the French King, which were employed againſt the Rochellers, were not paid with the Subſidy Money? Anſ. Thoſe eight Ships were employed at the Charge of the French King, &c. 8. Whether the Duke, having been our Servant to break the Match with Spain, made not a worſe Match with France, and upon harſher Terms? Anſ. I hope the contrary will appear by the Anſwer to your Petition. 9. Did not the Duke ſerve us in breaking the two Treaties with Spain, out of Spleen and Malice to Conde Olivares? Anſ. There was no Reaſon to hate Olivares, who was the Means to make him happy in obliging this Nation with Papers received from his Hands, &c. 10. Why ſhould the Duke ſpeak of immenſe Charges which the Kingdom is not able to bear; as, to aſſiſt the King of Denmark with thirty thouſand Pounds per Month, Count Mansfield with twenty thouſand Pounds a Month, the Low Countries with eight thouſand Pounds a Month, and two thouſand ſix hundred Pounds a Month for Ireland? Debates of the Commons upon his Majeſty's Anſwer, and the Duke's Plea.

After the Commons were returned from the Upper Houſe on this Tueſday, Auguſt 9. a Report was made of his Majeſty's Anſwer, and of the Duke's Defence: Upon which the Members differ'd. Some were for preſent Supply in Gratitude to his Majeſty's gracious Anſwer; and urg'd, that this Supply was not for the King's own particular Wants, but for the Honour and Defence of the Kingdom; and, that it might prove dangerous not to comply with the King in ſuch a modeſt and juſt Deſire. Others were of a contrary Mind, and ſaid, It was rather their Duty to preſent to the King, how he might live glorious at home, and be feared abroad, by having his Deſigns better managed, and an Enemy declared: that we ought to be more ſecured from Domeſtick Foes, before we engage againſt any foreign Enemy: that the great Sums given for Honours and Offices would go far in ſetting out the Fleet, &c. After warm Debates, they agreed to conſider farther of the Matter to morrow. (a)

Meſſage from the King to the H. of Commons.

Accordingly, on Wedneſday, Auguſt 10. while the Commons were going to re-aſſume the Debate, they receiv'd a Meſſage from the King, wherein his Majeſty took notice, "That he perceived the Houſe intended to enter into conſideration of divers Heads "concerning the King and the Commonwealth; that "he was pleaſed with their good Intentions, but "deſired them to conſider his Affairs, which require'd a ſpeedy Diſpatch, and indeed a quick Supply. He offer'd the Parliament ſhould meet again "in Winter, at what time they pleaſe, upon his "Royal Word, and then ſit till they had perfected "all things for the common Good: and, in concluſion, deſired them to conſider, that this was the "firſt Requeſt he had ever made to them."

The Influence of this Meſſage upon the Houſe of Commons.

Upon this Meſſage ſome Members earneſtly preſſed the giving of two Subſidies, and two Fifteens, in regard to his Majeſty's Honour, and the Neceſſity of Publick Affairs. But others replied, That Neceſſity was a dangerous Counſellor, and might be a continual Argument of Supplies in all Parliaments: that thoſe Miniſters who had put the King and Kingdom into ſuch Neceſſity, ought to anſwer for it: that there was as much Neceſſity for Redreſs of Grievances as for Grant of more Subſidies, &c. The Houſe at laſt agreed upon a Declaration, drawn up in this Form:

They draw up a Declaration.

"WE the Knights, Citizens, and Burgeſſes, of "the Commons Houſe of Parliament, being "the Repreſentative Body of the whole Commons "of this Realm, abundantly comforted in his Majeſty's late gracious Anſwer touching Religion, "and his Meſſage for the care of our Health; do "ſolemnly proteſt and vow, before God and the "World, with one Heart and Voice, That we are "all reſolved, and do hereby declare, that we will "ever continue moſt Loyal and Obedient Subjects "to our moſt gracious Soveraign Lord K. Charles; "and that we will be ready, in convenient time, "and in a Parliamentary way, freely and dutifully "to do our utmoſt Endeavours to diſcover and reform the Abuſes and Grievances of the Realm and "State, and in like ſort to afford all neceſſary Supply to his moſt excellent Majeſty upon his preſent, "and all other his juſt Occaſions and Deſigns; "moſt humbly beſeeching our ſaid dear and dread "Soveraign, in his Princely Wiſdom and Goodneſs, "to reſt aſſured of the true and hearty Affections of "his poor Commons, and to eſteem the ſame to be "(as we conceive it is indeed) the greateſt worldly Reputation and Security that a juſt King can "have; and to account all ſuch as Slanderers of the "Peoples Affections, and Enemies to the Commonwealth, that ſhall dare to ſay the contrary." 1625.

The King offended at it.

This Declaration was ſent to the King by ſuch of the Privy Council as were Members of the Houſe: and if his Majeſty would have ſeem'd pleas'd with it, and would have commanded Buckingham to make his Peace with the Commons, and would have promis'd a Redreſs of Civil Grievances as graciouſly as he had anſwer'd the Complaints about Religion, and have ſo comply'd with the Genius of the Nation; he might then have made himſelf ſafe at home, and very conſiderable abroad. But it ſo happen'd, that he thought the Duke a neceſſary Inſtrument by no means to be laid aſide; and apprehended, that the Grievances of a ſix Month's Reign ought not to be objected to him; and, that nothing elſe ought to interrupt an immediate Supply. Upon theſe Thoughts, on Friday, Auguſt 12. the King ſent a Commiſſion directed to ſeveral Lords for the Diſſolution of the Parliament. Whereupon the Uſher of the Black Rod was ſent to call up the Commons to the Lords Houſe: But they being reſolv'd into a Grand Committee, and knowing the Deſign of the Meſſage, refuſed to admit the Meſſenger, or to let the Speaker take the Chair, till Mr. Glanvil, Chairman of the Committee, had made a Report in a kind of Proteſtation. Then the Houſe went up, and having heard his Majeſty's Commiſſion read, it was accordingly executed, and the Parliament diſſolved.

Diſſolves the Parliament by Commiſſion.

To the general Diſcontent of the People.

This abrupt Diſſolution, tho' founded upon ſome weighty Reaſons, was a great Unhappineſs to King and Kingdom: It left a deep Impreſſion of Diſcontent upon the Minds of the People, and created a Diffidence and Jealouſie between the King and all ſucceeding Parliaments.

Acts paſſed in this Parliament.

At this Parliament, begun and holden by Prorogation at Weſtminſter the 13th Day of June, Anno Regis Caroli primo, 1625, theſe Acts were paſs'd.

I. "An Act for the Puniſhing of divers Abuſes "committed on the Lord's-day, commonly called "Sunday.

II. "An Act to enable the King to make Leaſes "of Lands, Parcel of the Dutchy of Cornwal.

III. "An Act for the Eaſe of obtaining Licenſes "of Alienation, and in the pleading of Alienations "with Licenſe, or of Pardons of Alienation without Licenſe, in the Court of Exchequer or elſewhere.

IV. "An Act to reſtrain Tippling in Inns and "Ale-houſes.

V. "An Act for the Subſidy of the Clergy.

VI. "An Act for two Subſidies of the Temporalty.

VII. "An Act that this Seſſion of Parliament "ſhall not determine by his Majeſty's Aſſent to this "and ſome other Acts.

VIII. "An Act to confirm an Agreement between "the King and the Copyholders of Macclesfield in "the County of Cheſter.

IX. "An Act for the Settlement of an Agreement "of the Tenants of Chelvenham and Aſhby alias "Charleton, between the King and Sir Charles Grival, Knight."

The King proceeds to a War.

The Parliament being diſſolved, the King purſued his Deſigns of War, and order'd the Fleet to be ſpeedily put to Sea. He made a League with the United Provinces againſt the Emperour and King of Spain, for reſtoring the Liberties of Germany. The States, by their Ambaſſadors, deſir'd to enter into this League: upon which the Duke of Buckingham and the Earl of Holland were ſent to the Hague to

A Proclamation againſt the Papiſts.

To gratifie the Deſires of the late Parliament, and to keep his Royal Word, the King wiſely iſſued out his Proclamation to command the Return, within a time limited, of all Engliſh Youth bred up in foreign Schools and Seminaries: That no Biſhop, Prieſt, or other Perſon in Orders by Authority of the See of Rome, ſhould preſume to confer Eccleſiaſtical Orders, or exerciſe his Function or Juriſdiction towards any of his natural Subjects: and, That all Statutes in force againſt Jeſuits, &c. be put in due execution. (a)

But want of Money to carry on the War, muſt drive the King upon ſome Meaſures of Supply that were extraordinary, and therefore thought illegal. That of Borrowing from the Subjects by their own Conſent was firſt tried, as the moſt inoffenſive: To which purpoſe, the King directed his Letters to the Lords Lieutenants in the ſeverall Counties, in manner following.

The King's Letters for a Loan.

" Right Truſty and Well-beloved,

" IT hath been ſo uſual a thing for Kings and Princes of this Realm to make uſe of their Subject's good Affections, by borrowing ſome ſuch competent Sums of Money of Perſons able to lend, as might ſupply thoſe preſent Occaſions for publick Service, which cannot attend that length of time wherein it can be raiſed by Contribution by the generality of our Subjects. As we have not only preſent occaſion to make the like Trial, by borrowing from ſome private Gentlemen and others; but alſo of your Sincerity and Endeavours in furtherance of the Service; that is to ſay, in taking ſome courſe either out of your own Knowledge and Experience, or by any other Means and Inſtruments which you like beſt, to make collection of as many Perſons Names within the County wherein you are Lieutenant, as may be of Ability to furniſh us with ſeveral Sums at this time; and therefore to return in a Book, both the Names of the Perſons, their Dwellings, and what Sums you think they may ſpare; that we may thereupon direct our Privy Seals unto them, according to the Form of this encloſ'd. And for your farther Inſtruction in this Caſe, on whoſe Truſt we do ſo much repoſe, we wiſh you to adviſe herein with your Deputy-Lieutenants, as thoſe from whom we have ſpecial Cauſe to promiſe our ſelves all good Offices of Duty and Affection. To which we muſt add thus much farther, That we do not at this time intend to deal with any Noblemen, neither are you to deal with any of the Clergy, becauſe we have reſerved that Direction to the Metropolitans of the ſeveral Provinces; to proceed only with ſome ſpecial Perſons, that are known to be Men of Wealth and Ability, and not meerly ſubſiſting upon thoſe Livings which in moſt Places are far inferiour to that Maintenance we could wiſh them. By which Courſe and Conſideration of ours, tho' you may perceive how much we deſire to procure this Loan without Inconveniency to any, which is only intended for the Service of the Publick; yet muſt we aſſure you, that we had no greater Cauſe at any time than now to make uſe of your Integrity and Induſtry in reſpect of your Election of the Lenders, and of your conſtant Demonſtration both of Diligence and Affection to the Service. Having now delivered unto you as much as for the preſent can be expected from us, we will refer you for any farther Direction unto our Privy Council, as hereafter occaſion ſhall require: To whom our Pleaſure is, you do return you Certificates in Manner and Form as is aforeſaid, at the moſt within twenty Days after the Receipt of theſe our Letters. Given, &c. 1625.

Letters of the Comptroller under the Privy Seal.

Accordingly, in purſuance of this Method, the Comptroller of the King's Houſhold, by Order of the Council, iſſued forth Letters in the King's Name, under the Privy Seal, to the ſeveral Perſons return'd by the Lord Lieutenants, with a Preamble of Grounds and Reaſons, and then concluding, "The Sum which we require of you by theſe Preſents is .... which we do promiſe in the Name of Us, our Heirs and Succeſſors, to repay to you, or your Aſſigns, within eighteen Months after the Payment thereof unto the Collector. The Perſon we have appointed to collect it is .... to whoſe Hands we do require you to ſend it within twelve Days after you have received this Privy Seal; which, together with the Collector's Acquittance, ſhall be ſufficient warrant unto the Officers of our Receipt for the Re-payment hereof at the time limited." Given at, &c.

The Collectors of this Loan were appointed to pay into the Exchequer the Sums received, and to return the Names of ſuch as diſcovered a Diſpoſition to delay or excuſe the Payment of the Sums required of them.

An ill Project.

This Project did not ſo much anſwer the King's Occaſions, as it treaſured up the Peoples Murmurs and Complaints: For, the King's Borrowing what the Parliament deny'd to give, was to arraign the Judgment of the Commons; and for Subjects to have their Abilities valued by the Lieutenants, was a Way of Taxing without Precedent; and to have the particular Sum demanded, took away all appearance of a voluntary Loan; and to have the Names returned of thoſe who ſhould refuſe or delay, as well as of thoſe who ſhould freely lend, was to regiſter the King's Subjects in different Columns of Enemies and Friends: Beſides, the Lenders could hardly expect to be repaid without a Parliamentary Fund; and yet a following Parliament might be ſo far from thinking it a juſt Debt, that they would rather refuſe the Diſcharge, for fear it ſhould encourage the like Practice in other Intervals of Parliament.

Warrants from Privy Council againſt the Papiſts.

To help to allay theſe popular Diſcontents, the Privy Council iſſued out Warrants for the Diſarming of Popiſh Recuſants; and directed expreſs Letters to the Principal Lords of that Communion, requiring them to render their Arms and Furniture thereunto belonging, together with all their Habiliments of War, to be removed into Places convenient, and to remain there during the King's Pleaſure. Inſtructions were likewiſe ſent to the Lord Lieutenants, to examine into the Truth and Reaſon of a prevailing Report, That there was a great and unaccuſtomed Reſort to the Houſes of Papiſts, that there were frequent Aſſemblies, ſolemn Entertainments, and a ſpecial Intercourſe of Letters between them; and to enquire and ſearch if there were any Preparation of Men or Arms, or Practice of Arms, or Endeavours of Alteration among Perſons diſcontented with the preſent Government. (b)

The Fleet ready to Sail.

The Fleet was now ready, and ten brave Regiments were deſigned for this Expedition. The Duke, Lord Admiral, declined to go in Perſon; which rais'd a greater Prejudice againſt him, that he ſhould be ſo forward in his Counſels for the War, and yet recede from an actual Service in it. To ſupply his Place, Sir Edward Cecil was created Lord Viſcount Wimbleton, and had the Command of the whole Fleet, the Earl of Eſſex being Vice-Admiral under him. This Sir Edward Cecil was a third Son of Lord Wimbleton General at Sea and Land.

1625. Thomas Earl of Exeter, train'd up a Soldier in the Netherlands upon continual Service for thirty five Years, being firſt Colonel of Foot, and at the Battle of Newport Commander of the Engliſh Horſe; General of the Forces ſent by King James againſt the Spaniards and Imperialiſts. So that he came with the Reputation of a Land Soldier, not of a Seaman; and ſeemed not ſo fit for the Voyage, as for the Deſcent upon Spain. His being a Stranger to the Navy was the worſe reſented, becauſe in the Choice of Officers for this Service, Sir Robert Manſel, a true old Sea Commander, was neglected; which much diſguſted the common Seamen, who naturally love a Fellow-Sailor.

The Expedition at Sea unfortunate.

In the Beginning of October (too late a Seaſon) the Fleet, conſiſting of eighty Ships, the Ann Royal, a Ship of twelve hundred Tun, being Admiral, put forth from Plymouth for the Coaſts of Spain; and after four Days Sail met with a furious Storm, which ſo diſperſed the Ships, that fifty of 'em were miſſing for ſeven Days: but they join'd again upon the Coaſts of Spain, where they found a Prize put into their Hands, the Spaniſh Shipping in the Bay of Cadiz, weak and eaſie to be taken; but in Negligence and ill Conduct, they ſuffer'd 'em to eſcape. To regain ſome Honour, the Forces landed, and Sir John Boroughs took a ſmall Fort; but the Soldiers finding good ſtore of the rich Wines, took a liberty in them, and had expoſed themſelves to the Enemy, if they had not been commanded Aboard again: when the General putting to Sea, intended to wait for the Plate-Fleet, which was daily expected from the Weſt-Indies: But the ill Condition of his Men, by reaſon of a general Contagion, obliged him to return home with Diſhonour in November following.

Return of the Fleet

This unfortunate Expedition encreas'd the Jealouſies and hard Apprehenſions of the People. Some little Enquiries were made into the Miſcarriage. The General and other Officers were examined before the Council, where they threw the blame upon one another, and only proved it to be among them a very ill-managed Deſign. When the Forces were landed at Plymouth in December, a Proclamation iſſued forth, to command that no Soldiers of the Fleet ſhould depart from their Colours, or be diſcharged of their Service, till the King ſhould ſignifie his Pleaſure: So the Companies were diſperſed into ſeveral Parts of the Kingdom. Orders were likewiſe ſent for the better exercising of the Train'd-Bands, and for aſſigning old Officers, experienced in the Low Country Wars, to take their Poſts in the ſeveral Counties, there to muſter and diſcipline the Militia, and make them ready for the publick Service. But the People did not like theſe Appearances of War without the Countenance of a Parliament.

A Parliament to be ſummoned.

And therefore the King wiſely determined to call a Parliament to meet in February following: And to prepare for their more amicable Meeting, his Majeſty enjoined the Archbiſhops and Biſhops to proceed againſt Popiſh Recuſants by Excommunication, and other Cenſures of the Church; and to uſe all lawful Means of bringing them to publick Juſtice. Eſpecially he recommended to their vigilant Care, the unmasking and repreſſing of thoſe who were not profeſſed Papiſts, yet diſaffected to the true Religion, and kept cloſe their evil Inclinations, and ſo by ſecret Means and Slights did encourage and advance the Growth of Popery (a). This Command was ſeconded by a Proclamation, requiring that all convicted Papiſts ſhould according to the Laws of this Realm, remain confined to their Dwelling-places, or within five Miles thereof, unleſs upon ſpecial Licenſe firſt obtained in neceſſary Caſes. (b)

This Method was prudent and popular; but ſome other Courſes were taken very diſagreeable. The Duke of Buckingham was allowed to throw his Marks of Diſpleaſure upon thoſe Members who had oppos'd him in the laſt Parliament: of which, one of the chief was the Lord Biſhop of Lincoln, Lord Keeper, whom the Duke had openly reproved at Chriſt-Church in Oxford, for ſiding againſt him; the Biſhop ſtoutly anſwered, That he was indeed engaged with William Earl of Pembroke, and other worthy Patriots, to labour the Redreſs of the Peoples Grievances, and in ſo good a Cauſe he was reſolved to ſtand upon his own Legs. If that be your Reſolution (ſaid the Duke) look you ſtand faſt: and ſo they parted never to be reconciled; for ſhortly after the Biſhop was ſequeſtred from the Council-Table, from the Seal, and from the Preſence of the King, tho' he retained the Name of Lord Keeper, till now, upon October the 30th, the Seal was given to Sir Thomas Coventry at Hampton-Court, who was that Day ſworn of the Privy Council, with the Stile and Dignity of Lord Keeper of the Great Seal of England. Other Tokens of Prejudice were ſhewn againſt ſome of the leading Members in the laſt Houſe of Commons, who were now made Sheriffs, that they might be incapable of being elected within their ſeveral Counties: Among theſe Gentlemen were Sir Edward Coke, who had been Lord Chief Juſtice of the King's-Bench, and therefore reſented it as the greater Indignity to have this Office put upon him. To avoid it, if poſſible, he drew up Exceptions againſt the Oath of a Sheriff, and ſent them to the Attorney-General, who by Order of Council did attend the Judges, and received their Opinion, that of the four Articles objected by Sir Edward Coke, they found no reaſonable Cauſe to make any Alteration, only in one of the ſaid Articles, viz. You ſhall do all your Pain and Diligence to deſtroy and make to ceaſe all manner of Hereſies and Errors, commonly called Lollaries, within your Bailywick from time to time, to all your Power, and be helping to all Ordinaries and Commiſſioners of the Holy Church, and favour and maintain them as oftentimes as you ſhall be required: Which Part of the Oath, as obſelete and irreligious, they did agree ſhould be left out of the Oath to be adminiſtred to Sir Edward Coke, and all other Sheriffs for the future. And an Order of Council was accordingly made to that Effect: which reformed the Oath, but did not excuſe the Perſons. (c) Another Practice diſpleaſing to the Country, was the King's directing his Precepts to all Sheriffs, commanding them to make Proclamation, That all ſuch as had Forty Pounds a Year, or more, of Lands or Revenues, in their own Hands or the Hands of Feoffees, and are not yet Knights, do at their Perils prepare to preſent themſelves in his Majeſty's Preſence by the 31*ſt* of January, to receive the Order of Knighthood. This indeed was old Law and Cuſtom; but, to reinforce it now, when the Value of Eſtates was ſo much diſproportioned to the Quality of Knights, was thought at beſt to be but a legal Oppreſſion. The faireſt Pretence for it was to do Honour to the King's Coronation.

Some Courſes taken that diſobliged the People.

Sir Edw. Coke High Sheriff.

Perſons compell'd to take the Honour of Knighthood.

For the King had declared his Intentions to be ſolemnly crown'd upon Candlemas-day; and required all Perſons, who by reaſon of their Offices and Tenures were bound to perform any Duties at that Solemnity, to pay their Attendance, and perform their reſpective Service: and gave Orders to the Earl Marſhal, and Lord Chamberlain, to prepare for the Coronation appointed.

Thankſgiving for the Plague ceaſing. By this time the Plague abating, the King ordain'd a General Thankſgiving to be celebrated on Sunday the 29th of January in the Cities of London and Weſtminſter and Places adjacent, and on February the 19th in all other Places of the Kingdom: For which purpoſe, by the King's Command, a (a) Form of Prayer and Thankſgiving was drawn up by the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, the Biſhops of London, Durham, Rocheſter, and St. Davids. The Number of thoſe that died this Year within and without the Walls of the City of London, and in the Liberties and nine out-Pariſhes, from the 16th of December 1624, to the 15th of December 1625, was in total, Fifty four thouſand two hundred ſixty and five; whereof there died of the Plague, Thirty five thouſand four hundred and ſeventeen.

Ceremonial for Coronation. To prepare for the Coronation, ſeveral Biſhops (among whom Biſhop Laud) were appointed to meet at White-hall upon Wedneſday, Jan. the 4th to conſult and draw up a Form of the Service and Ceremonies to be then uſed. (b) And becauſe the Biſhop of Lincoln as Dean of Weſtminſter, was to have a chief Part of thoſe Ceremonies, the King offended with him, order'd that he ſhould not appear, but his Place ſhould be ſupply'd by Biſhop Laud. A double Grief to Biſhop Williams, to be himſelf kept abſent, and to have his Office executed by one for whom he had the leaſt Affection.

The Form of Coronation. On Thurſday, Feb. 2. the King began his Proceſſion from Weſtminſter-hall, and entred the Abbey-Church a little before Ten in the Morning, attended by the Aldermen of London, eighty Knights of the Bath in their Robes, the King's Serjeants at Law, Sollicitor and Attorney Generals, the Judges, Barons, Biſhops, Viſcounts, and Earls, in their Parliament Robes, going before the King two and two uncovered. After them followed the Officers of State, being eight Earls and one Marqueſs, according to their reſpective Places, bearing the Swords, the Globe, the Sceptre, the Crown, the Lord-Mayor of London carrying the ſhort Sceptre, two Biſhops carrying, one the Golden Cup, the other the Communion Plate. Next before his Majeſty went the Earl of Arundel as Earl Marſhal of England, and the Duke of Buckingham as Lord High Conſtable for that Day. The King, habited in white Sattin, went under a rich Canopy, ſupported by the Barons of the Cinque-Ports, the King having on each hand a Biſhop, and his Train of Purple-Velvet carried up by the Maſter of the Robes, and the Maſter of the Wardrobe. At the entring into the Church, Biſhop Laud delivered into the King's Hands the Staff of King Edward the Confeſſor, with which the King walked up to the Throne. Then the Archbiſhop of Canterbury preſented his Majeſty to the Lords, and Commons, and People there preſent, Eaſt, Weſt, North and South, who gave their Aſſent and joyful Approbation. After Sermon the King went to the Altar, and took the Coronation Oath in this manner.

Coronation Oath.

Archbiſhop. Sir, Will you grant and keep, and by your Oath confirm to the People of England, the Laws and Cuſtoms to them granted by the Kings of England your lawful and religious Predeceſſors, and namely the Laws, Cuſtoms, and Franchiſes, granted to the Clergy by the glorious King St. Edward your Predeceſſor, according to the Laws of God, the true Profeſſion of the Goſpel eſtabliſh'd in this Kingdom, agreeable to the Prerogative of the Kings thereof, and the ancient Cuſtoms of the Realm?

King. I grant and promiſe to keep them.

Archb. Sir, Will you keep Peace and godly Agreement (according to your Power) both to God, the Holy Church, the Clergy, and the People? 1625.

King. I will keep it.

Archb. Sir, Will you, to your Power, cauſe Law, Juſtice, and Diſcretion, to Mercy and Truth, to be executed to your Judgment?

King. I will.

Archb. Sir, Will you grant to hold and keep the Laws and rightful Cuſtoms which the Commonalty of this your Kingdom have? And will you defend and uphold them to the Honour of God, ſo much as in you lieth?

King. I grant and promiſe ſo to do.

One of the Biſhops. Our Lord and King, We beſeech you to pardon, and to grant and to preſerve unto us, and to the Churches committed to your Charge, all Canonical Privileges, and do Law and Juſtice: and that you would protect and defend us, as every good King to his Kingdoms ought to be Protector and Defender of the Biſhops and the Churches under their Government.

King. With a willing and devout Heart I promiſe and grant my Pardon, and that I will preſerve and maintain to you, and the Churches committed to your Charge, all Canonical Privileges, and due Law and Juſtice; and that I will be your Protector and Defender to my Power, by the aſſiſtance of God, as every good King in his Kingdom in Right ought to protect and defend the Biſhops and Churches under their Government.

Then the King aroſe, and was led to the Communion-Table, where he took a ſolemn Oath in ſight of all the People, to obſerve all the Premiſes; and laying his hand upon the Bible, ſaid,

The things which I have here promiſed I ſhall perform and keep. So help me God, and the Contents of this Book.

After the Oath, the King was placed in the Chair of Coronation, and was anointed by the Archbiſhop, and inveſted with the Robes of King Edward the Confeſſor, and had the Crown of King Edward put on his Head, and his Sword girt about him. He offer'd this Sword, with two others, and ſome Pieces of Gold and Silver at the Communion Table. He was afterwards conducted by the Nobility to the Throne; where this Exhortation was read to his Majeſty.

Stand and hold faſt from henceforth the Place to which you have been Heir by the Succeſſion of your Forefathers, being now deliver'd to you by the Authority of Almighty God, and by the hands of us and all the Biſhops and Servants of God. And as you ſee the Clergy to come nearer to the Altar than others; ſo remember, that in all Places convenient you give them greater honour, that the Mediator of God and Man may eſtabliſh you in the Kingly Throne to be a Mediator betwixt the Clergy and the Laity, and that you may reign for ever with Jeſus Chriſt the King of Kings and Lord of Lords.

It is a Juſtice to the World to give theſe Particulars of the Coronation, becauſe ſome Offence and

A Reſtraint upon the Members a great Prejudice in the enſuing Parliament.

The Opening of the Parliament drew near: but before their Meeting, there appear'd ſome perſonal Grudges in the Duke of Buckingham that ſtruck at the Honour and Freedom of both Houſes. Some Members of the late Houſe of Commons, the Duke's Opponents, were made incapable of ſerving their Counties by having the Sheriffalties obtruded on them; as, Sir Edw. Coke made Sheriff of the County of Bucks, Sir Rob. Philips of Somerſet, and Sir Tho. Wentworth of Yorkſhire. The like Hardſhip was now uſed toward ſome Members of the Upper Houſe, as the Earl of Briſtol and the Biſhop of Lincoln, both under the Duke's Diſpleaſure. The Earl of Briſtol had fell out with the Duke in the Court of Spain, upon Principles of Integrity and Open-dealing; for this little Diſſention the Duke repreſented him to King James under ſuch a Character of being diſaffected to the King's Intereſt, that the Earl, upon his Return to England, was firſt diſgracefully ſtopt at Calais; and when he came to Dover, the Duke uſed all poſſible Inſtigations that he might be immediately committed to the Tower: when the Marqueſs of Hamilton and the Earl of Hartford oppos'd this arbitrary Deſign; The Duke however prevail'd, that a Letter ſhould be wrote to him by the Lord Conway, not to come to Court, nor to the King's Preſence, till he had anſwer'd to ſome Queries which his Majeſty ſhould appoint the Council to put to him. After the Death of King James, the Duke had Power to proſecute the ſame Reſentments; and not only kept him at a diſtance from Court, but had him remov'd from all his Offices and Employments: nor could he be ſuffer'd to come to an Account for the Monies expended in the King's Service, nor permitted to come to the Parliament which was diſſolv'd at Oxford. Upon iſſuing out the Writs for this new Parliament, the Earl's Call was wilfully omitted. Senſible of this Injury to his Right of Peerage, he petition'd the King to have the uſual Writ of Summons, as a Privilege never denied to any Peer of the Realm, to aſſiſt in the great Council of the Nation: He only received Anſwer by the Lord Conway, That the King was no ways ſatisfied, and therefore he muſt propound to him, Whether he would rather ſit ſtill and enjoy the Benefit of the late King's Pardon in Parliament, or to wave it, and put himſelf upon Tryal for his Negotiation in Spain; and that to one of theſe he muſt truſt to, and give a direct Anſwer. The Earl did directly anſwer, That he had been already queſtion'd upon twenty Articles by a Commiſſion of the Lords, and had given, as he preſum'd, full Satisfaction: That he did not wave the Pardon granted by King James in Parliament; nor would he wave any Privilege of being duly call'd to the preſent Seſſion. But ſtill receiving no Writ, when the Parliament ſat, he petition'd the Houſe of Lords, ſhewing, "That he being a Peer of the "Realm, had not receiv'd a Summons to Parlia-"ment; and deſires their Lordſhips to mediate "with his Majeſty, that he may enjoy the Liberty "of a Subject, and the Privilege of his Peerage, &c." This Matter being referred to a Committee of Privileges, the Earl of Hartford reported, That it was neceſſary their Lordſhips ſhould beſeech his Majeſty, that a Writ of Summons may be ſent to the Earl of Briſtol, as alſo to ſuch other Lords whoſe Writs are ſtopped, except ſuch as are made incapable to ſit in Parliament by Judgment of Parliament, or other legal Judgment. Upon this a Writ was directed to him; but the Lord Keeper ſent a Letter with it, commanding him, in his Majeſty's Name, to forbear his perſonal Attendance: which indeed made the Writ a formal Mockery; and therefore the Earl firſt anſwered the Lord Keeper by Letter dated from Dorſet-Court, March 31. 1626. and then again petition'd the Houſe of Lords for their wiſe Conſideration how far this might intrench upon the Liberty and Safety of the Peers, and the Authority of their Letters Patents, to be in this ſort diſcharged by a Letter miſſive of any Subject without the King's hand.

As on 3 Commoners and 2 Lords.

Earl of Briſtol not called by Writ of Summons.

Biſhop of Lincoln not ſummon'd to Parliament.

The like Affront was given to the Lord Biſhop of Lincoln, late Lord Keeper; who falling under the imperious Duke's Diſpleaſure, had not only the Seal taken from him, but was denied to do his Homage to the King with the reſt of the ſpiritual Lords at the Coronation, or to do his Office as Dean of Weſtminſter in aſſiſting at that Solemnity; and had now no Parliamentary Summons ſent to him. This Omiſſion he repreſented to the King in a reſpectful Letter, as the withdrawing of a Favour which had not been denied to any Priſoners or condemned Peers in his Father's Reign; beſeeching that he might have leave to make his Proxy, if his perſonal Attendance muſt not be permitted. When upon a Motion in Parliament he did receive his Writ, he had likewiſe a particular Charge from the Keeper not to appear in Perſon, and had ſome difficulty to get his Proxy left with the Biſhop of Wincheſter. (b)

Theſe Reſtraints upon the Members of both Houſes muſt be acknowledg'd to have been the paſſionate Efforts of the Duke of Buckingham, which founded ill, and were enough to prejudice the Parliament before their Meeting.

Opening of the Second Parliament.

On Monday the 6th of February this ſecond Parliament began. If his Majeſty had choſe the later gracious Cuſtom of ſpeaking himſelf to the two Houſes, it might have left the better Impreſſions of Duty and Affection. But the King being placed in his Royal Throne, the Lords in their Robes, and the Commons below the Bar, it pleaſed his Majeſty to refer them wholly to the Lord Keeper? who ſpoke thus:

"My Lords, and you the Knights, Citizens, and Bur-

And it behoveth us to magnifie and to " bleſs God, that hath put the Power of Aſſembling Parliaments in the hands of him, the Virtue " of whoſe Perſon doth ſtrive with the Greatneſs of " his Princely Lineage and Deſcent, whether he " ſhould be accounted major or melior, a greater " King, or a better Man; and of whom you have " had ſo much Trial and Experience, that he doth " as affectionately love, as he doth exactly know " and underſtand the true Uſe of Parliaments; witneſs his daily and unwearied Acceſs to this Houſe " before his Acceſs to the Crown; his gracious Readineſs to all Conferences of Importance; his frequent and effectual Interceſſion to his bleſſed Father of never-dying Memory for the Good of the " Kingdom, with ſo happy Succeſs, that both this " and future Generations ſhall feel it, and have " cauſe to rejoyce at the Succeſs of his Majeſty's " Interceſſion. And when the Royal Diadem deſcended upon himſelf, preſently, in the midſt of " his Tears and Sighs for the Departure of his moſt " dear and Royal Father, in the very firſt Conſultation with his Privy Council, was reſolved to " meet his People in Parliament: And no ſooner " did the heavy Hand of that deſtroying Angel " forbear thoſe deadly Strokes which for ſome time " did make this Place inacceſſible, but his Majeſty " preſently reſolved to recall it, and hath now " brought you together, and in a happy Time, I " truſt, to treat and conſult with uniform Deſires " and united Affections, of thoſe Things that concern the general Good.

" And now being thus aſſembled, his Majeſty " hath commanded me to let you know, that his " Love and Affection to the Publick moved him to " call this Parliament; and looking into the Danger " and ſpreading of that late Mortality, and weighing the multitude of his Majeſty's preſſing Occaſions and urging Affairs of State, both at home " and abroad, much importing the Safety and State " of this Kingdom; the ſame Affection that moved " him to call it, doth forbid him to prolong the " Sitting of this Parliament. And therefore his " Majeſty reſolving to confine this Meeting to a " ſhort time, hath confined me to a ſhort Errand; " and that is, that as a thing moſt agreeable to the " Kingly Office, to the Example of the beſt Times, " and to the Frame of modern Affairs, his Majeſty " hath called you together to conſult and to adviſe " of provident and good Laws, profitable for the " Publick, and fitting for the preſent Times and " Actions: for upon ſuch depends the Aſſurance of " Religion and of Juſtice, which are the ſureſt Pillars and Buttreſſes of all good Government in a " Kingdom: For his Majeſty doth conſider, that " the Royal Throne on which God out of his Mercy " to us hath ſet him, is the Fountain of all Juſtice; " and that good Laws are the Streams and Quills " by which the Benefit and Uſe of this Fountain is " diſperſed to his People. And it is his Majeſty's " Care and Study, that his People may ſee with " Comfort and Joy of Heart, that this Fountain is " not dry, but they and their Poſterity may reſt " aſſured and confident in his time to receive as " ample Benefit from this Fountain by his Majeſty's Mercy and Juſtice, as ever Subjects did in " the time of the moſt eminent Princes amongſt his " noble Progenitors; wherein as his Majeſty ſhews " himſelf moſt ſenſible of the Good of the Publick, ſo were it an Injury to this great and honourable Aſſembly, if it ſhould be but doubted " that they ſhall not be as ſenſible of any thing that " may add to his Majeſty's Honour; which cannot but receive a high degree of Love and Affection, if his Majeſty ſucceeding ſo many Religious, Wiſe, and Renowned Princes, ſhould begin " his Reign with ſome Additions unto thoſe good " Laws which their happy and glorious Times have " afforded. And this his Majeſty hath cauſed me " to deſire at this time eſpecially above others: for " his Majeſty having at his Royal Coronation lately ſolemnized the ſacred Rites of that bleſſed " Marriage between his People and him, and therein by a moſt holy Oath vowed the Protection " of the Laws, and Maintenance of Peace both to " Church and People; no time can be ſo fit for his " Majeſty to adviſe and conſult at large with his " People as this preſent time, wherein ſo lately " his Majeſty hath vowed Protection to his People, " and they have proteſted their Allegiance and Service to him.

" This is the Sum of that Charge which I have " received from his Majeſty to deliver unto you, " wherein you ſee his Majeſty's Intent to the Publick: And therefore his Deſire is, that according " to that conveniency of Time which his Affairs " may afford, you will apply your ſelves to diſpatch " the Buſineſs of this Parliament."

The Speech not grateful.

This Speech was the leſs acceptable becauſe the King was himſelf ſilent, which ſome ſuſpicious Tempers did not fail to repreſent as an Indication that the King was out of Humour with his People. Beſides, the Matter of this Speech, and the Dreſſing of it, had a peculiar Air of Greatneſs, which would have ſomewhat better become the King than his Miniſter.

Sir Heneage Finch Speaker.

On Wedneſday Februar. 8. the Commons preſented Sir Heneage Finch, Kt. Serjeant at Law and Recorder of London, for their Speaker; who having made the accuſtomed Excuſes, and received his Majeſty's Command to ſerve, he made a very flouriſhing Speech, with ſome extraordinary Flights and Figures, that were a peculiar Infirmity of that Age, and more eſpecially of that Perſon. He concludes more ſedately thus: " But I may weary your Majeſty, and loſe " my ſelf, and forget for whom I am a Speaker. " Cuſtom gives me the Privilege, as an humble Suitor on the Behalf of the Houſe, to preſent their " few Petitions unto your Majeſty. That when Occaſions of Moment " ſhall require, your Majeſty upon our humble " Suit, and at ſuch times as may beſt ſort with your " Occaſions, will vouchſafe us Acceſs to your Royal " Perſon. 4. That the Proceedings of the Houſe " may receive a favourable Interpretation at your " gracious Hands, and be free from Miſconſtructions."

His Speech to the King.

Good Beginning in the Houſe of Commons.

The Commons began with very dutiful Reſpects, in thanking the King for his late gracious Anſwer to their late Petition for Religion. Then a Bill was brought in, to adminiſter an Oath for rendring a true Account of all general and publick Taxes, Rates, and Collections. Another againſt ſcandalous Miniſters. A Committee for Grievances, and another for ſecret Affairs, to ſit every Friday and Wedneſday during Parliament. They complained of the Miſcarriage of the Fleet to Cadiz, of evil Counſellors about the King; of the Miſemployment of the Publick Revenue; and other Political Diſorders. A Committee was likewiſe named for Religion, to reſtrain the Growth of Popery.

The King's Meſſage for Supply.

While theſe Matters were debating, Mr. Secretary Cook delivered a Meſſage from the King to the Commons, declaring his Majeſty's Occaſions for Supply: And the Neceſſity and Expedition of this

The Commons expect Redreſs of Grievances.

Supply were farther urg'd by William Earl of Pembroke in a Conference which the Lords deſired with the Commons. But the Commons, before they would enter into Conſideration of Money Bills, called for a Report from the Committee of Grievances, and found theſe Reſolutions agreed upon.

Reſolutions of the Committee of Grievances.

1. Reſolved, That the Diminution of the Kingdom in Strength and Honour is a general Evil which we ſuffer under. As 2. The Increaſe and Countenancing of Papiſts. 3. The not guarding of the narrow Seas. 4. Plurality of Offices in one Hand. 5. Sales of Honour and Places of Judicature. 6. Delivery up of Ships to the French. 7. Miſemployment of three Subſidies and three Fifteens, &c. And they ordered, that the Duke of Buckingham, who was more particularly concerned in the Occaſions of theſe Grievances, ſhould have Notice given, that the Houſe intend ſuddenly to reſume the Debate of theſe Matters. In theſe Speeches upon this Subject, Mr. Clement Cook let fall this warm Expreſſion, It is better to die by a foreign Enemy, than to be deſtroyed at home.

The Lords more inclined to immediate Supply.

The Lords ſeem'd more complying with the King's Deſires, and appointed a Committee to conſider of the common Safety and Defence; who reported their Opinion, that one Fleet ſhould be preſently ſet to Sea to prevent the Invaſion of our Coaſts, and to annoy the King of Spain; that another be ſet out to defend our Channel, and ſecure our Ships from Pirates; and that due Conſideration ſhould be had of maintaining the Armies under the King of Denmark and Count Mansfield. The Lords deſired a Conference with the Commons upon this Subject-matter:

But the Commons reſolve to have the publick Grievances firſt conſidered.

But the Commons not reliſhing a Supply without Redreſs of Grievances, returned Anſwer, That they did deſire to have a good Correſpondency with their Lordſhips, and would be ever careful of the Safety and Defence of the Kingdom, and maintain their own Privileges; and, that for this Reaſon they would immediately proceed againſt the Duke.

Upon Notice of this Ferment in the Houſe of Commons, the King wrote this Letter to the Speaker, to be communicated to the Houſe.

King's Letter to the Speaker.

" Truſty and Well-beloved.

" HAving aſſembled the Parliament early in the " beginning of the Year, for the more timely " Help and Advice of our People in our great and " important Affairs; and having of late not only " by Meſſage but alſo of our ſelf put our Houſe of " Commons in mind of our preſſing Occaſions, and " of the preſent Eſtate of Chriſtendom, wherein " they have equal Intereſt with us, as well in re" ſpect of their own former Engagements, as of " the common Cauſe; we ſhall not need to tell " them with what Care and Patience we have, in " the midſt of our Neceſſities, attended their Re" ſolutions: But becauſe their unſeaſonable Slow" neſs may produce at home as ill Effects as a De" nial, and hazard the whole Eſtate of Things a" broad; we have thought fit, by you the Speaker, " to let them know, that without more loſs of time " we look for a full and perfect Anſwer of what they " will give for our Supply, according to our Expe" ctation and their Promiſes. Wherein as we preſs " for nothing beyond the preſent State and Conditi" on of our Subjects, ſo we accept no leſs than is " proportionable to the Greatneſs and Goodneſs of " the Cauſe: Neither do we preſs them to a pre" ſent Reſolution in this, with a purpoſe to preci" pitate their Counſels, much leſs to enter upon " their Privileges; but to ſhew that it is unfit to " depend any longer upon Uncertainties, whereby " the whole Weight of the Affairs of Chriſtendom " may break in upon us on the ſudden, to our Diſ" honour and the Shame of this Nation. And for " the Buſineſs at home, we command you to pro" miſe them in our Name, that after they have ſa" tisfied us in this our reaſonable Demand, we ſhall " not only continue them together at this time ſo " long as this Seaſon will permit, but call them " ſhortly again to perfect thoſe neceſſary Buſineſſes " which ſhall be now left undone: And now we " ſhall willingly apply fit and reaſonable Remedies " to ſuch juſt Grievances which they ſhall preſent " unto us in a dutiful and mannerly way, without " throwing an ill Odour upon our preſent Govern" ment, or upon the Government of our late bleſſed " Father: And if there be yet who deſire to find fault, " we ſhall think him the wiſeſt Reprehender of " Things paſt, who, without reflecting backward, " can give us Council how to ſettle the preſent " Eſtate of things, and to provide for the future " Safety and Honour of the Kingdom."

The Letter not acceptable.

This Letter pleaſed the leſs, becauſe it was an expreſs Demand of Supply, which had been ſooner given upon a Deſire of it; and becauſe it inſiſted upon that Supply before the Redreſs of Grievances, which uſually preceeded or at leaſt attended upon all former Aids.

A Meſſage to the ſame effect.

The King's Occaſions were ſo importunate, that, beſides the Letter, he ſent a Meſſage to the Houſe by Sir Richard Weſton, to ſollicit their more ſpeedy Aſſiſtance for theſe Reaſons:

1. That his Majeſty's Fleet being returned, and the Victuals ſpent, the Men muſt of neceſſity be diſcharged, and their Wages paid, or elſe an aſſured Mutiny will follow, which may be many ways dangerous at this time.

2. That his Majeſty hath made ready about forty Ships to be ſet forth on a ſecond Voyage to hinder the Enemy, which want only Victuals and ſome Men, which without preſent Supply of Money cannot be ſet forth and kept together.

3. That the Army which is appointed in every Coaſt muſt be preſently disbanded, if they be not preſently ſupplied with Victuals and Cloaths.

4. That if the Companies of Ireland lately ſent thither be not provided for, inſtead of defending that Country, they will prove the Authors of Rebellion.

5. That the Seaſon of providing healthful Victuals will be paſt if this Month be neglected.

" And therefore his Majeſty commanded me to " tell you, That he deſired to know, without far" ther delaying of Time, what Supply you will give " him for theſe his preſent Occaſions, that he may " accordingly frame his Courſe and Counſel."

The Commons returned this Anſwer.

Anſwer of the Commons to the K.'s Meſſage.

" Moſt Gracious Soveraign,

" YOur Majeſty's Dutiful and Loyal Subjects, " the Commons now aſſembled in Parliament, " in all Humility preſent unto your Royal Wiſdom " this their Loyal Anſwer to the Meſſage which " your Majeſty was pleaſed, by the Chancellor of " your Exchequer to ſend unto them; deſiring to " know, without any further deferring of Time, " what Supply they would give to your Majeſty " for your preſent and extraordinary Occaſions; " that you might accordingly frame your Courſes " and Counſels. Firſt of all, they moſt humbly " beſeech your Majeſty to know, and reſt aſſured, " that no King was ever dearer to his People than " your Majeſty; no People more zealous to main" tain and advance the Honour and Greatneſs of " their King than they; which, as upon all Occa" ſions, they ſhall be ready to expreſs, ſo eſpe" cially in the ſupport of that Cauſe wherein your " Majeſty and your Allies are now juſtly engaged. " And becauſe they cannot doubt but your Majeſty, " in your great Wiſdom, even out of Juſtice, and ac" cording to the Example of your moſt famous Pre" deceſſors, will be pleaſed graciouſly to accept the " faithful and neceſſary Information and Advice of " your Parliament; which can have no End but the " Service of your Majeſty and Safety of your Realm, " in diſcovering the Cauſes and propoſing the Re" medies of theſe great Evils, which have occaſion" ed your Majeſty's Wants, and your People's Grief.

“ They therefore in Confidence and full Aſſu-
“ rance of Redreſs therein, do with one conſent “ propoſe (though in former time ſuch Courſe hath “ been unuſed) that they really intend to aſſiſt
“ and ſupply your Majeſty in ſuch a way, and in “ ſo ample a Meaſure, as may make you ſafe at “ home and feared abroad. For the diſpatch “ whereof they will uſe ſuch Diligence as your “ Majeſty's preſſing and preſent Occaſions ſhall “ require.”

This Anſwer ſeemed to be very reſpectful and ſincere, and if his Majeſty could have taken it in that obliging Senſe, and have made a ſoft and eaſie Return of Confidence in them, the Seſſions might have been happy, and the Aid ſufficient. But his Majeſty was pleaſed to be impatient of Delays; and either mov'd by his own Diſpoſition to be reſolute, or prevailed upon by the Duke of Buckingham to ſkreen him from all danger, he thought fit to ſend this Reply in a Letter to the Speaker.

“ Mr. Speaker,

The K.'s Reply in a Letter to the Speaker.

“ THE Anſwer of the Commons delivered by
“ you, I like well of, and do take it for a “ full and ſatisfactory Anſwer, and I thank them
“ for it; and I hope you will with all expedition “ take a Courſe for performance thereof, the which “ will turn to your own Good as well as mine.
“ But for your Clauſe therein of preſenting of Grie“ vances, I take that but for a Parenthesis in your “ Speech, and not a Condition: And yet for An“ ſwer of that Part I will tell you; I will be as “ willing to hear your Grievances as my Predeceſ-“ ſors have been, ſo that you will apply your “ ſelves to redreſs Grievances, and not to enquire af- “ ter Grievances. I muſt let you know, that I will “ not allow any of my Servants to be queſtioned “ amongſt you; much leſs ſuch as are of eminent “ Place and near unto me. The old Queſtion was,
“ What ſhall be done to the Man whom the King
“ will Honour? But now it hath been the Labour
“ of ſome, to ſeek what may be done againſt him
“ whom the King thinks fit to Honour. I ſee
“ you ſpecially aim at the Duke of Buckingham;
“ I wonder what hath ſo altered your Affections “ towards him: I do well remember, that in the “ laſt Parliament in my Father's Time, when he “ was an Inſtrument to break the Treaties, all of “ you (and yet I cannot ſay all, for I know ſome
“ of you are changed; but yet the Houſe of Com“ mons is always the ſame) did ſo much Honour
“ and Reſpect him, that all the Honour conferred
“ on him was too little; and what he hath done
“ ſince to alter or change your Minds I wot not:
“ but can aſſure you, he hath not meddled or done
“ any Thing concerning the Publick or Common“ wealth, but by ſpecial Directions and Appoint“ ment, and as my Servant; and is ſo far from “ gaining or improving his Eſtate thereby, that I “ verily think he hath rather impaired the ſame.
“ I would you would haſten my Supply, or “ elſe it will be worſe for your ſelves: for if any “ Ill happen, I think I ſhall be the laſt ſhall feel

This Reply had no good effect.

If his Majeſty had gone no further in this Reply than the firſt Paragraph of it, Things and Men had been eaſily reconciled. But to inhibit their Enquiry into Grievances, and declare a Protection to that Miniſter who was thought the Cauſe of 'em, and to urge a Supply with a ſort of Menace of their ſuffering by the denial of it; this was ſoon improved into higher Jealouſies and Fears: And that Part of the Houſe which under a Freedom of venting their Diſpleaſure would have been the ſooner ſatisfied, began now to gain a greater Reputation to their Complaints, and to gather Strength upon the Royal Oppoſition. For indeed all popular Diſcontents have ſomewhat of the Nature of Torrents; give them a little room to run and they quickly draw off themſelves: but if you offer preſently to obſtruct their Courſe, they ſwell and ſpread the more.

The Majority of the Houſe fell now directly on the Duke, as the chief Cauſe of all publick Miſcarriages. And Dr. Turner, a Phyſician, propoſed theſe Queries to the Houſe as grounded upon Common Fame.

Queries of Dr. Turner againſt the Duke of Buckingham.

1. Whether the Duke being Admiral be not the Cauſe of the Loſs of the King's Royalty in the Narrow Seas?

2. Whether the unreaſonable, exorbitant and immenſe Gifts of Money and Land beſtowed on the Duke and his Kindred, be not the Cauſe of impairing the King's Revenues, and impoveriſhing of the Crown?

3. Whether the Multiplicity of Offices, conferred upon the Duke and others depending upon him (whereof they were not capable) be not the Cauſe of the Evil Government of this Kingdom?

4. Whether Recuſants in general, by a kind of Connivency, be not born out and encreaſed by reaſon of the Duke's Mother and Father-in-Law being known Papiſts?

5. Whether the Sale of Honours, Offices and Places of Judicature, and Eccleſiaſtical Livings and Promotions (a ſcandal and hurt to the Kingdom) be not through the Duke?

6. Whether the Duke's ſtaying at home, being Admiral and General in the Fleet of the Sea and Land Army, were not the Cauſe of the bad Succeſs and Overthrow of that Action? And whether he did give good direction for that Deſign?

All theſe are famed to be ſo.

Two Queſtions on the Queries of Dr. Turner.

Hereupon two Queſtions were debated in the Houſe.

1. Whether the ſix Heads, delivered by Dr. Turner, to be the Cauſe of the Evils, that were grounded upon common Fame, be to be debated in Parliament?

2. Whether an Accuſation upon common Fame, by a Member of this Houſe, be a Parliamentary way?

Some Members diſtinguiſhed between Common Fame and Rumour; this latter they ſaid was rather the Murmurs of private People, but the former was a Vox Populi, or general Voice of the Nation, which muſt be admitted as a Ground of Enquiry; which Common Fame tho' it was no Argument for a definitive Sentence, yet was a it proper Reaſon for previous Inquiſition. So the Houſe came to this Reſolution:

Reſolution of the Houſe of Commons.

That Common Fame is a good Ground of Proceeding for this Houſe, either by Enquiry or preſenting the Complaint (if the Houſe finds cauſe) to the King or Lords.

The next Day the Commons were re-aſſuming the Debate, when Sir Richard Weſton delivered to the Houſe this ſecond Meſſage from his Majeſty.

A ſecond Meſſage from the King.

“ His Majeſty hath taken notice of a ſeditious “ Speech uttered in the Houſe by Mr. Clement Cook;
“ the Words are ſaid to be to this effect: That it were “ better to die by an Enemy than to ſuffer at home: Yet
“ his Majeſty in Wiſdom hath forborn to take any “ courſe therein, or to ſend to the Houſe about
“ it, not doubting but the Houſe would in due
“ time correct ſuch an Inſolence. But his Maje-“ ſty hath found that his Patience hath wrought
“ to an ill effect, and hath emboldened one ſince
“ to do a ſtrange Act, in a ſtrange way and un-
“ uſual; that is, Dr. Turner, who on Saturday laſt, “ without any Ground of Knowledge in himſelf, or “ Proof tendered to the Houſe, made an Enquiry
“ of ſundry Articles againſt the Duke of Bucking- “ ham as he pretended, but indeed againſt the “ Honour and Government of the King and his “ late Father. This, his Majeſty ſaith, is ſuch an “ Example that he can by no means ſuffer, though
“ it were to make enquiry of the meaneſt of his “ Servants, much leſs againſt one ſo near unto “ himſelf; and doth wonder at the fooliſh Im-
“ pudency of any Man, that can think he ſhould
“ be drawn out of any End to offer ſuch a Sa“ crifice

1625. "crifice, much unworthy the Greatneſs of a King "and Maſter of ſuch a Servant. And therefore "his Majeſty can no longer uſe his wonted Pa-"tience, but deſireth the Juſtice of the Houſe a-"gainſt the Delinquents; not doubting but ſuch "courſe will be taken, that he ſhall not be con-"ſtrained to uſe his Regal Authority to right "himſelf againſt theſe two Perſons."

Dr. Turner explains and juſtifies himſelf. Upon Delivery of this Meſſage, Dr. Turner ſtood up and explain'd himſelf, and juſtified his late Propoſals to the Houſe. The Debate upon it being put off to another Day, Dr. Turner being then indiſpos'd, wrote a Letter to the Speaker in his further Vindication. This Reſentment of the King did but encreaſe the Ferment againſt the Duke: So, as on the Monday following, Sir William Walter repreſented to the Houſe, that he thought the cauſe of all Grievances was that which happen'd in the Court of King Lewis XI. of France; i. e. All the King's Council rode upon one Horſe: And therefore the Parliament ought to adviſe his Majeſty as Jethro did Moſes, to take Aſſiſtants rightly qualified, &c. Sir John Elliot made another bold and ſharp Speech upon the Subject of ill-Management and Grievances. But to qualifie theſe Heats with all reſpect to the King, and with a deference to the neceſſity of publick Affairs, the Commons on March 27. voted three Subſidies and three Fifteens, and an Act thereupon to be brought in as ſoon as Grievances were preſented to his Majeſty and anſwered by him. And then they proceeded to receive Informations againſt the Duke; and ordered he ſhould have notice of it.

Houſe of Commons vote three Subſidies and two Fifteens.

This ſo affected the King, who had reſolved to defend the Duke, that on March 23. he ſent a Meſſage to the Houſe of Commons, that they ſhould attend his Majeſty to Morrow at Nine-a-Clock in the Morning in the Hall of his Palace at White-hall; and that in the mean time all Proceedings in the Houſe and Committee ſhould ceaſe.

Accordingly, on March 29. the Lords and Commons attending, the King made this Speech to them.

King's Speech to both Houſes.

"My Lords and Gentlemen,

"I Have call'd you hither to Day, I mean both "Houſes of Parliament, but it is for ſeveral "and diſtinct Reaſons: My Lords, you of the "Upper Houſe, to give You thanks for the Care of "the State of the Kingdom now; and not only for "the Care of your own Proceedings, but for inciting your fellow Houſe of the Commons to take "that into their Conſideration. Therefore, my "Lords, I muſt not only give you thanks, but I "muſt alſo avow, that if this Parliament do not "redound to the good of this Kingdom (which I "pray God it may) it is not Your Faults. And "you, Gentlemen of the Houſe of Commons, I am "ſorry that I may not juſtly give the ſame "thanks to You; but that I muſt tell you, that I "am come here to ſhew you your Errors, and, as I "may call it, unparliamentary Proceedings in this "Parliament. But I do not deſpair, becauſe you "ſhall ſee your Faults ſo clearly by the Lord "Keeper, that you may ſo amend your Proceedings that this Parliament ſhall end comfortably "and happily, though at the beginning it hath had "ſome Rubs."

Then the Lord Keeper, by the King's Command, ſpake to this effect:

The K.'s Mind more fully expreſt by the Lord Keeper.

"That they were here aſſembled, by his Maje-"ſty's Commandment, to receive a Declaration of "his Royal Pleaſure; intended only to the Houſe "of Commons, tho' delivered in the preſence of "both Houſes. That no King was ever more loving to his People, or better affectioned to the "right Uſe of Parliaments. That when his Maje-"ſty hath received Satisfaction of his reaſonable "Demands, he will hear and anſwer their juſt "Grievances. That never King was more jealous "of his Honour, nor more ſenſible of the Neglect "and Contempt of his Royal Rights. That there "be ſome particular Proceedings wherein his Ma-"jeſty is aggrieved. 1. That a ſeditious Speech "had been utter'd by Mr. Cook; for which the "Houſe had not duly cenſur'd him. 2. That Dr. "Turner had adviſed the Houſe to enquire upon "ſundry Articles againſt the Duke of Buckingham "without Knowledge or Proof: And yet the Houſe "had been ſo far from correcting his Inſolency, "that Committees walked in the ſame ſteps, and "proceeded in a like unparliamentary Inquiſition. "That as to the Duke, his Majeſty knew the Sin-"cerity of his Proceedings; and muſt believe that "their aim at him is directly to wound the Honour "and Judgment of himſelf and his Father. That "as to the Supply voted for him, it was dilatory "and ſcanty; for the Meaſure of it, ſo far from "making him ſafe at Home and feared Abroad, as "contrariwiſe to expoſe him both to Danger and "Diſeſteem: and for the Manner of granting it, "it was in it ſelf very Diſhonourable and full of "Diſtruſt. That therefore his Majeſty commands "them to go together, and by Saturday next re-"turn their final Anſwer. That his Majeſty "doubteth not, but after his gracious Admoniti-"on, they will in due time obſerve and follow the "better ſort of Members; which if they ſhall do, "his Majeſty is moſt ready to forget whatſoever is "paſt."

Then his Majeſty thus further expreſſed himſelf.

The King reſumes his Speech.

"I muſt withall put you in mind a little of times "paſt. You muſt remember, that in the time of "my bleſſed Father, you did with your Counſel "and Perſwaſion perſwade both my Father and "Me to break off the Treaties: I confeſs I "was your Inſtrument for two Reaſons; one was "the fitneſs of Time; the other, becauſe I was ſe-"conded by ſo great and worthy a Body as the "whole Body of Parliament. Then there was no "Body in ſo great Favour with you as this Man "whom you ſeem now to touch, but indeed my "Father's Government and mine. Now that you "have all things according to your Wiſhes, and "that I am ſo far engaged that you think there is "no retreat; now you begin to ſet the Dice and "make your own Game. But I pray you be not "deceived: it is not a Parliamentary way, nor is it "a way to deal with a King. Mr. Cook told you, "It was better to be eaten up by a Foreign Enemy than "to be deſtroyed at Home. Indeed I think it is more "Honour for a King to be invaded, and almoſt de-"ſtroyed by a Foreign Enemy, than to be deſpi-"ſed by his own Subjects.

"Remember that Parliaments are altogether in my "Power for their Calling, Sitting and Diſſolution; "therefore as I find the Fruits of them good or e-"vil, they are to continue, or not to be. And re-"member that if in this time, inſtead of mending "your Errors, by delay you perſiſt in your Errors, "you make them greater and irreconcileable: where-"as, on the other ſide, if you do go on cheerfully "to mend them, and look to the diſtreſſed Eſtate of "Chriſtendom, and the Affairs of the Kingdom, as "it lieth now by this great Engagement, you will "do your ſelves Honour; you ſhall encourage me "to go on with Parliaments, and I hope all Chri-"ſtendom ſhall feel the good of it."

A ſevere way of ſpeaking to an Engliſh Parliament.

It muſt be acknowledged this was a Severity of ſpeaking; that from whatever Spirit of Honour it might proceed, and how agreeable ſoever it was to the later Notions of Majeſty, yet it had not been the uſual Language of an Engliſh Prince to an Engliſh Parliament. King Henry VIII. who had moſt of the Arbitrary Monarch in him, took the Members apart when 1626. when he had a mind to fright them; and ſpoke always with an artificial Temper to a whole Houſe, or the whole Body together. The preſent King might poſſibly have carried his Point by a like Art of ſoft ſpeaking; but to throw by all Inſinuation and Court Addreſs, and receive the Commons in ſo blunt a manner, as they thought to be Upbraiding and Menacing; This reliſhed ill with moſt of them, and alienated them from his Majeſty's Perſon and Intereſt more and more.

That did not reliſh well. For when they returned to their Houſe and fell upon debating of the Speeches delivered by the King and the Lord Keeper, they reſolved themſelves into a grand Committee, and order'd the Doors to be lock'd, and no Member to go forth; and all other Proceedings to ceaſe till the Houſe ſhould come to a Reſolution in this Matter.

The King being informed of the great Exceptions taken at his late Speech, and the explanatory Charge given by the Lord Keeper, commanded the Duke to give Satisfaction at a Conference of both Houſes in the Painted Chamber, held for that purpoſe, on March 29.

The Duke was to excuſe the King's Speech. He laboured to excuſe the King's preſcribing a ſhort Day for their granting a Supply; and aſſured them his Majeſty would give a longer time if the Buſineſs did require their further Conſideration. He let them underſtand, that the King's inſiſting upon a larger Aid than they had yet voted, was owing to the great Neceſſity of his Affairs, and the benefit of being enabled to carry the War to the Enemies Door. That his Majeſty did not mean to interrupt their Proceeding upon Grievances; but only hop'd, that they would not ſo much ſeek Faults as the Means to redreſs them.

Which made the Diſguſt greater. But as this Apology was made by an unacceptable Man, ſo perhaps the very making of it did but obſtruct the King's Buſineſs; becauſe it confeſt the doing ſomewhat that wanted an Apology.

The Duke addreſſes himſelf to both Houſes. At the ſame time the Duke made an Addreſs to both Houſes in his own behalf; and gave them an Account of his Negotiation in the Low Countries, and of the Management of the Fleet; and concluded with intreating their charitable Opinion of him and his Actions. Then the Lord Conway ſtood up and endeavour'd to vindicate the Duke from the ſeveral Jealouſies rais'd againſt him; and laid before them an Account of the Sums of Money disburs'd for the War. But all this could not divert the Commons from proceeding in their Enquiries into publick Grievances, and from preparing a humble Remonſtrance to the King in this Form.

" Moſt Gracious Sovereign,

Remonſtrance of the Commons. " WHereas your Majeſty hath been pleaſed of " late, at ſundry times and by ſeveral means, " to impart unto us your Royal Pleaſure touching " ſome Paſſages and Proceedings in this preſent Par- " liament: We do firſt, with unſpeakable Joy and " Comfort, acknowledge your Majeſty's Grace and " Favour, in that it hath pleaſed you to cauſe it to " be delivered unto us by the Lord Keeper of your " Great Seal in your own Royal Preſence, and be- " fore both Houſes of Parliament, That never King " was more loving to his People, nor better affected to the " right Uſe of Parliaments; withall profeſſing your " moſt gracious Reſolution, To Hear and Redreſs our " juſt Grievances. And with like comfort we acknow- " ledge your Majeſty's Goodneſs ſhining at the very " Entrance of your glorious Reign, in commanding " the Execution of the Laws eſtabliſhed to preſerve " the true Religion of Almighty God; in whoſe " Service conſiſteth the Happineſs of all Kings and " Kingdoms.

" Yet let it not diſpleaſe your Majeſty, that we " alſo expreſs ſome ſenſe of juſt Grief intermix'd " with that great Joy, to ſee the careful Proceed- " ings of our ſincere Intentions ſo miſreported, as " to have wrought Effects unexpected, and we hope " undeſerved.

" Firſt, Touching the Charge againſt us in the 1626. " Matter concerning Mr. Cook, we all ſincerely pro- " teſt, that neither the Words mentioned in your " Majeſty's Meſſage, nor any other of ſeditious ef- " fect were ſpoken by him, as hath been reſolved " by the Houſe without one negative Voice. How- " ſoever, in a Speech occaſionally utter'd, he let " fall ſome few Words which might admit an " ill Conſtruction; whereat the Houſe being diſ- " pleaſed at the delivery of them, as was expreſſed " by a general and inſtant check, he forthwith ſo " explained himſelf and his Intention, that for the " preſent we did forbear to take them into Conſi- " deration, which ſince we have done; and the ef- " fect thereof had before this appeared, if by im- " portant Buſineſſes of your Majeſty's Service we " had not been interrupted.

" The like Interruption did alſo befall us in the " Caſe of Dr. Turner; wherein the Queſtion being " formerly ſtated, was ordered to be taken that ve- " ry Day on which we received your Majeſty's " Command to attend you.

" But for our own Proceedings, we humbly be- " ſeech your Majeſty to be truly informed, that be- " fore that Overture from Dr. Turner (out of our " great and neceſſary care for your Honour and the " Welfare of your Realm) we had taken into ſe- " rious Conſideration the Evils which now afflict " your People, and the Cauſes of them, that we " might apply ourſelves unto the fitteſt Remedies: In " the purſuit whereof, our Committees (whatſoever " they might have done) have in no particular pro- " ceeded otherwiſe, than either upon ground of " Knowledge in themſelves, or Proof by examinati- " on of Witneſſes or other Evidence. In which " courſe of Service for the Publick Good, as we " have not ſwerved from the Parliamentary ways " of our Predeceſſors, ſo we conceive that the diſ- " covery and reforming of Errors is ſo far from lay- " ing an Aſperſion upon the preſent Time and " Government, that it is rather a great Honour " and Happineſs to both: yielding Matter to great " Princes wherein to exerciſe and illuſtrate their " nobleſt Virtues.

" And altho' the grievous Complaints of the " Merchants from all Parts, together with the " common Service of the Subjects well affected to " thoſe who profeſs our Religion, gave us occaſion " to debate ſome Buſineſſes that were partly Fo- " reign, and had relation to Affairs of State; yet " we beſeech your Majeſty to reſt aſſured, it was " exceeding far from our Intention either to tra- " duce your Counſellors or diſadvantage your Ne- " gotiations.

" And though ſome Examples of great and po- " tent Miniſters of Princes, heretofore queſtion'd in " Parliament have been alledg'd, yet was it with- " out paralleling your Majeſty's Government or " Councils to any Times at all, much leſs to Times " of exception.

" Touching the Letter of your Majeſty's Secre- " tary, it was firſt alledged by your Advocate " for his own Juſtification, and after, by direction " of the Committee, produced to make good his " Allegation.

" And for the Search at the Signet Office, the " Copy of a Letter being divulged, as in your Ma- " jeſty's Name, with pregnant cauſe of Suſpicion, " both in the Body and Direction thereof, to be " ſuppoſititious; the Committee out of deſire to be " cleared therein, did by their Order ſend ſome of " themſelves to the Signet-Office, to ſearch whether " there were any Records of Letters of that Nature, " without Warrant to the Officer for any, much " leſs for a general Search.

" But touching Publick Records, we have not for- " born as often as our Buſineſſes have required to " make ſearch into them; wherein we have done " nothing unwarranted by the Laws of your Realm, " and the conſtant Uſage of Parliaments. And if 1626. "for the eaſe of their Labours, any of our Committees have deſired the help of the Officers, Repertories, or Breviats of Direction, we conceive it is no more than any Subject in his own Affairs might have obtained for ordinary Fees.

"Now concerning your Majeſty's Servants, and namely the Duke of Buckingham, we humbly beſeech your Majeſty, to be informed by us your faithful Commons, who can have no private End but your Majeſty's Service and the Good of our Country; that it hath been the ancient, conſtant, and undoubted Right and Uſage of Parliaments, to queſtion and complain of all Perſons of what Degree ſoever found grievous to the Common-wealth, in abuſing the Power and Truſt committed to them by their Soveraign. A Courſe approved not only by the Example in your Father's Days of famous Memory, but by frequent Precedents in the beſt and moſt glorious Reigns of your noble Progenitors, appearing both in Records and Hiſtories; without which Liberty in Parliament, no private Man, no Servant to a King, perhaps no Counſellor, without expoſing himſelf to the hazard of great Enmity and Prejudice, can be a means to call great Officers into queſtion for their Miſdemeanours; but the Common-wealth might languiſh under their Preſſures without Redreſs. And whatſoever we ſhall do accordingly in this Parliament, we doubt not but it ſhall redound to the Honour of the Crown and Welfare of your Subjects.

"Laſtly, We moſt humbly beſeech your Majeſty graciouſly to conceive, that though it hath been the long Cuſtom of Parliaments to handle the Matter of Supply with the laſt of their Buſineſſes; yet at this time, out of extraordinary Reſpect to your Perſon and Care of your Affairs, we have taken the ſame into more ſpeedy Conſideration, and moſt happily on the very Day of your Majeſty's Inauguration, with great Alacrity and unanimous Conſent: After a ſhort Debate we grew to the Reſolution for a preſent Supply, well known to your Majeſty.

"To which, if addition may be made of other great Things for your Service, yet in conſultation amongſt us, we doubt not but it will appear that we have not receeded from the Truth of our firſt Intention, ſo to ſupply you as may make you ſafe at Home and feared Abroad; eſpecially if your Majeſty ſhall be pleaſed to look upon the way intended in our Promiſe, as well as to the meaſure of the Gift agreed.

"With like Humility we beſeech your Majeſty not to give ear to the officious Reports of private Perſons for their own Ends, which hath occaſioned ſo much Loſs of Time, nor to judge our Proceedings whilſt they are in Agitation; but to be pleaſed to expect the Iſſue and Concluſion of our Labours, which when we are concluded will manifeſt and juſtify to your Majeſty the Sincerity and Loyalty of our Hearts; who ſhall ever place in a high degree of Happineſs the performing of that Duty and Service, which may moſt tend to your Majeſty's Honour and the Good of your Kingdom."

The King not pleaſed with the Remonſtrance.

Upon delivery of this Remonſtrance, a fair and affable Return from his Majeſty might have been well accepted, and had poſſibly reſtor'd a good Underſtanding. But the King either conſcious of his own Integrity and the Fidelity of the Duke, or being reſolutely bent upon a War, and perfectly averſe to all Meaſures that might ſeem to retard it, only told them; that he could give no preſent Anſwer; but deſired the Houſe to Adjourn for a Week, as the Lords had done: and they Adjourn'd accordingly.

Some Diſcontents even in the Houſe of Lords.

As to the Houſe of Lords, though his Majeſty in his Speech of March 29. had diſtinguiſh'd them from the Commons by his particular Thanks and Approbation: yet ſome occaſions of Offence did ſoon offer, that raiſed ſome unhappy Jealouſies among them. 1626. They thought it was ſome Intrenchment on the Liberties of Peerage, that Writs were not iſſued to ſome of their Fellow-Peers; and when by importunity iſſued, were yet attended with expreſs Orders that they ſhould not appear in Perſon.

Another Grievance to them was, that ſome of the Scotch and Iriſh Nobility pretended to claim a Precedency of the Engliſh Lords; which they reſented as an Indignity and Affront to their Quality and Honour; and preſented a Petition to the King in the Names of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament aſſembled, repreſenting, that whereas the Peers and Nobility of England had heretofore in Civility yielded, as to Strangers, Precedency to ſuch Nobles of Scotland and Ireland as, being in Titles above them, had reſorted hither: Now divers of the Natural-born Subjects of thoſe Kingdoms reſident here do, by reaſon of ſome late created Dignities in thoſe Kingdoms of Scotland and Ireland, claim Precedency of the Peers of this Realm, which tended to the Diſſervice of his Majeſty, and to the great Diſparagement of the Engliſh Nobility; which they ſhew by ſeveral Reaſons; and they humbly beſeech his Majeſty that the Prejudice and Diſparagement of the Peers and Nobility of this Kingdom be redreſſed. To which Petition his Majeſty gave a favourable Anſwer; that he would take Order therein. Another offence was taken at the infringing of their Liberties, by the King's committing in time of Parliament the E. of Arundel to the Tower, without expreſſing the Cauſe of his Commitment. It was conceiv'd to be about the Marriage of the Lord Maltravers, the Earl's eldeſt Son, to the Siſter of the young Duke of Lenox. The Earl of Arundel having been committed in March laſt, the Lords were immediately ſenſible of their Honours and Privileges being concerned in this Matter; and were entring into Debates upon it, when the Lord Keeper ſignified to the Houſe, that he was commanded to deliver this Meſſage from his Majeſty unto their Lordſhips, viz. That the Earl of Arundel was reſtrained for a Miſdemeanour that was perſonal to his Majeſty, and lay in the proper knowledge of his Majeſty, and had no relation to Matters of Parliament. But the Lords appointing Committees to ſearch for Precedents, did upon their Report come to this unanimous Reſolution: That the Privilege of this Houſe is, that no Lord of Parliament, the Parliament ſitting, or within the uſual times of Privileges of Parliament, is to be Impriſoned or Reſtrained without Sentence or Decree of the Houſe, unleſs it be for Treaſon, or Felony, or refuſing to give Surety of the Peace. Upon which, they ordered a Remonſtrance or Petition of the Peers, concerning the Claim of their Privileges from Arreſts and Impriſonments during the Parliament; which the whole Houſe preſented to his Majeſty on April 19. and next Day the Lord Preſident delivered this Anſwer from the King; That their Lordſhips having ſpent ſome time about this Buſineſs, and it being of ſome conſequence, his Majeſty ſhould be thought raſh, if he ſhould give a ſudden Anſwer thereto, and therefore will adviſe of it, and give them a full Anſwer in convenient time. This Anſwer being for ſeveral Days deferred, on the 2d of May their Lordſhips order'd, that the Lord Keeper ſhould move his Majeſty for a ſpeedy and gracious Anſwer to their Petition. On the 4th of May, his Lordſhip reported this farther Anſwer from the King. It is a Cauſe wherein he hath had a great deal of Care, and is willing to give their Lordſhips Satisfaction, and hath it in his Conſideration how to do it; and hath been interrupted by other Buſineſs, wherein Mr. Attorny hath had occaſion of much Conference with him (as their Lordſhips are acquainted) but will with all Conveniency give their Lordſhips Satisfaction, and return them an Anſwer. On the 9th of May, the Lords ſuſpecting the Delay to be a Denial of Juſtice, drew up this other Petition to the King.

The Earl of Arundel's Impriſonment in time of Parliament another Grievance to the Lords.

Reſolution of the Rights of Peerage.

Petition to the King.

Not favourably anſwer'd.

"May it pleaſe your Majeſty,

Another Petition of the Lords

"WHereas the whole Body of the Peers, now aſſembled in Parliament, did on the 19th Day of April, exhibit to your Majeſty an humble "Re-

1626. " Remonſtrance and Petition, concerning the Privilege of Peers in Parliament, and in particular " touching the Earl of Arundel; whereupon we received a gracious Anſwer, That in convenient " time we ſhould receive a fuller Anſwer, which " we have long and dutifully attended: And now " at this time ſo great a Buſineſs being in handling " in the Houſe, we are preſſed by that Buſineſs to " be humble Suiters to your Majeſty for a gracious " and preſent Anſwer."

The King offended with the Lords. On May 11, the Lord Preſident reported this Anſwer from his Majeſty: That he did little look for ſuch a Meſſage from the Houſe; that himſelf had been of the Houſe, and did never know ſuch a Meſſage from the one Houſe unto the other. Therefore when he received a Meſſage fit to come from them to their Soveraign, they ſhall receive an Anſwer. When the Lords deſired to know at what part of the Petition his Majeſty took Exception, the Lord Preſident further reported to them; The Exception the King taketh is at the Peremptorineſs of the Term, to have a preſent Anſwer. And the King wonders at your Impatience, ſince he hath promiſed an Anſwer in convenient time. It is very plain that King Charles had little of the King-craft which was profeſſed by his Father: and therefore he made moſt of his Anſwers in Parliament ſo blunt and rough, that a direct denial of Requeſts had been often more Gracious than his way of promiſing Satisfaction to them.

The Earl at laſt ſet at Liberty. Their Lordſhips ſtill purſued their Petitions, till about the beginning of June the Earl of Arundel was at laſt reſtored to his Liberty; and coming to the Houſe rendred his humble Thanks unto his Majeſty for this gracious Favour to him, and gave their Lordſhips alſo moſt hearty Thanks for their frequent Interceſſions to the King for him: proteſting Loyalty and all faithful Service to his Majeſty.

The greateſt diſturbance in the Houſe of Lords was the Quarrel between the Duke of Buckingham and E. of Briſtol. But that which moſt occaſioned, and continually improved the Diſcontents in the Houſe of Lords, was the Conteſt between the D. of Buckingham and the Earl of Briſtol.(a) They had begun their Emulation in the Court of Spain, where the Duke had been moſt officious to pleaſe the Prince, and the Earl had thought himſelf more ſerviceable to the Honour of the Nation. The Earl at his return, upon the Suggeſtions of the Duke, was debarred acceſs to his Majeſty, was examined by a Committee of Lords at the King's appointment, was kept under Reſtraint, and was denied his Writ to Parliament; and when upon Interceſſion of the Lords he had the uſual Summons, yet he received it with an Order not to make his Perſonal Appearance: Upon which he ſent a Petition to the Houſe, ſetting forth the Wrong done to him; and deſiring to be heard in the Houſe, that he might there clear himſelf, and prefer his Accuſation againſt the Duke of Buckingham. This ſo highly offended the King, that he ſent this Meſſage by the Lord Keeper to the Houſe of Lords.

"His Majeſty hath heard of a Petition preferred " unto this Houſe by the Earl of Briſtol, ſo void of " Duty and Reſpects to his Majeſty, that he hath " great Cauſe to puniſh him. He hath alſo heard " with what Duty and Reſpectfulneſs to his Majeſty " your Lordſhips have proceeded therein, which, " his Majeſty conceiveth to have been upon the " Knowledge you have, that he hath been reſtrained " for Matters of State; and his Majeſty doth therefore give your Lordſhips Thanks for the ſame, and " is reſolved to put the Cauſe upon the Honour and " Juſtice of your Lordſhips and this Houſe. And " therefore his Majeſty commands me to ſignifie to " your Lordſhips his Royal Pleaſure, that the Earl " of Briſtol be ſent for as a Delinquent, to anſwer " in this Houſe his Offences committed in his Negotiations before his Majeſty's being in Spain, and " his Offences ſince his Majeſty's coming from Spain, " and his ſcandalizing the Duke of Buckingham immediately, and his Majeſty by Reflection: With 1626. " whoſe Privity, and by whoſe Directions the Duke " did guide his Actions, and without which he did " nothing. All which his Majeſty will cauſe to be " charged againſt him before your Lordſhips in this " Houſe."

Earl of Briſtol brought to the Bar and charged with High-Treaſon. Upon this Meſſage the Lords made an Order, that the Earl of Briſtol ſhould be brought to the Bar of their Houſe on Monday May 1. When he ſtood there the Lord Keeper acquainted him, " That the Attorney General, in his Majeſty's Name, was there " ready to charge him with High-Treaſon, and other Offences and Miſdemeanours of a very high " Nature." The Articles againſt him were then exhibited by Sir Robert Heath Attorney General, upon the ſeveral Heads of 1. Offences done and committed by the Earl of Briſtol before his Majeſty's going into Spain, when he was Prince. 2. Offences done and committed by the ſaid Earl during the Time of the Prince's being in Spain. 3. Offences done and committed by the ſaid Earl after the Prince's coming from Spain.

The Earl's Anſwer. The Earl anſwered; " That he had already lodged a Petition in the Houſe, April 19. to be heard " in his Accuſation of the Duke of Buckingham; and " therefore deſired that their Lordſhips would in " order firſt receive his Charge againſt the ſaid Duke " and the Lord Conway, and not ſuffer his Teſtimony to be invalidated by an Impeachment till his " Charge was firſt heard." So he tendered to the Houſe his Articles againſt the Duke; which the Clerk received, and he withdrew. And his Petition exhibited the 19th of April was read over; and the Lords reſolved upon the Queſtion: That the ſaid Earl's Charge againſt the Duke of Buckingham and the Lord Conway ſhould be preſently read. His Charge againſt the Duke of Buckingham.

The Earl being ſhortly after called in again to the Bar of the Lord's Houſe, made a long and elegant Speech, defending his own Innocence and Honour, and charging the Duke with very many ill Counſels and arbitrary Actions. After which, upon a Promiſe to anſwer the Attorney General's Charge as ſoon as might be, he was remitted to Mr. Maxwel the Gentleman Uſher, in whoſe Houſe and Cuſtody he remained.

Then were read the Articles of the Earl of Briſtol againſt the Duke of Buckingham, dated May 1. 1626. to this Effect:

Articles againſt the Duke of Buckingham. I. " That the Duke of Bucks did ſecretly combine " with Count Gondamor to carry the Prince into " Spain, to be inſtructed in the Roman Religion; and " thereby to ſubvert the true Religion here Eſtabliſhed.

II. " That Mr. Porter was firſt ſent into Spain " upon this Deſign; and at his Return impoſed upon the King and Prince to obtain what the Duke " had before plotted.

III. " That the Duke at his arrival in Spain ſhewed himſelf popiſhly affected, by abſenting from " the Proteſtant Service conſtantly uſed in the Earl " of Briſtol's Houſe, and even by kneeling and adoring the Sacrament of the Maſs; which gave the " Spaniards ſuch hopes of the Prince's Converſion, " that they propoſed harder Conditions for Religion than what had been before agreed to.

IV. " That the Duke had many times, in preſence " of the Earl, mov'd the Prince to write a Letter to " the Pope, which the Earl vigorouſly oppoſed, and " hinder'd the writing during his ſtay in that Court; " but after he the Earl was come away, the Duke " did extort ſuch a Letter to the Pope.

V. " That the Pope being inform'd of the Duke's " Inclination in point of Religion, ſent the Duke a " Bull in Parchment, to perſwade and encourage " him to pervert the Prince.

(a) See a Letter from the King to the Earl of Briſtol, charging him with Miſbehaviour in Spain, and zealouſly eſpouſing the Quarrel of the Duke of Buckingham, dat. Jan. xxi. 1625. in Cabala. Fol. p. 203.

VI.

VI. “That the Duke had ſo behaved himſelf in “ Spain as to be odious to that King and Court; and “ therefore he broke off the Match upon his own “ Indignation, not out of Service to this Nation.

VII. “That ſo intending to croſs the Marriage, “ he made uſe of indirect means, and concealed many Things from his late Majeſty to advance his “ own Ends.

VIII. “ That for the ſame Purpoſe he had abus’d “ both Houſes of Parliament by a falſe Relation of “ thoſe Affairs.

IX. “ That he gave great Scandal by his perſonal “ Behaviour in the Court of Spain; and left there a “ blemiſh upon the Engliſh Nation.

X. “ That he had been in great part the Cauſe of “ the Ruin of the Prince Palatine.

XI. “ That in his Reports to the two Houſes he “ had wronged him the Earl in point of his Honour “ and of his Liberty.

XII. “ That he the Earl had revealed theſe Miſ- “ carriages of the Duke to the late King, who had “ promiſed to hear him at large four Days before “ his Sickneſs; upon which the King was much “ preſſed and vexed by the Duke, and ſhortly after “ died.”

The Articles of the ſaid Earl againſt the Lord Conway, delivered and read at the ſame time were 11 in Number; to the purpoſe of proving the ſaid Lord Conway to be the Duke’s Servant and Creature, and a Promoter and Abetter of all Miſcarriages committed by the Duke.

After reading the ſaid Articles, the Lords order’d that the King’s Charge againſt the Earl of Briſtol ſhould be firſt heard, and then the Charge of the ſaid Earl againſt the Duke; yet ſo that the Earl’s Teſtimony againſt the Duke ſhould not be prevented, prejudiced or impeached. On the Day following, the Lord Keeper delivered to the Houſe a Meſſage from the King to this Effect, “ That the Articles exhibited againſt the Duke of Buckingham are ſuch, “ as the King of his own Knowledge can teſtifie the “ Duke’s ſincere Carriage in them; that they had “ been cloſed in the Earl’s own Breaſt for two Years “ contrary to his Duty, and were now vented by “ way of Recrimination; and that therefore they “ ſhould put a difference between his Majeſty’s “ Charge againſt one that appeareth as a Delinquent, “ and the Recrimination of the Earl of Briſtol a- “ gainſt his Majeſty’s Witneſs.”

The King interpoſes in the Duke’s behalf.

The Lords Houſe more inclin’d to the Earl than to the Duke.

The Majority of the Lords were more inclined to eſpouſe the Earl’s Cauſe, upon a better Opinion of his Character and Perſon than they had of the Duke’s; and being more apt to pity his Misfortunes, that he had incurred the King’s diſpleaſure only by oppoſing the Duke’s Ambition. Upon appearance of this Inclination in the Houſe, there was an Endeavour to remove the Earl’s Cauſe out of their Lordſhips Cognizance, and to proceed againſt him by way of Indictment in the King’s Bench. But this attempt did but gain the Earl more Friends in the Upper Houſe, in being ſenſible that taking the Cauſe out of their Houſe would infringe their Liberties, and leave an Imputation upon their Honour and Juſtice; and therefore they ſtopt the Revocation of it.

The Earl’s Anſwer and Vindication of himſelf.

About a Fortnight after the delivering in thoſe Articles by the Attorney General, the Earl gave in his Anſwer, and introduc’d it with an eloquent Speech: wherein he firſt aſſerted his conſtant and ſtrict adherence to the Proteſtant Religion; and then inſiſted upon his Honour and Integrity in his Negotiations in Spain: And then exhibited his full Anſwer to the ſeveral Articles preferred againſt him; and then concluded with another Speech, wherein “ He “ hoped their Lordſhips would not only find him “ far from Blame, but a faithful Servant to his “ late and preſent Majeſty; and that therefore “ their Lordſhips would take ſuch Courſe as they “ in their Wiſdom ſhould think fit, not only for “ upholding the Honour and Reputation of a Peer “ of this Realm, but likewiſe for becoming humble “ and earneſt Suitors to his Majeſty, that he may “ be reſtor’d to his Majeſty’s moſt gracious Favour; “ which above all worldly Things he moſt deſireth.”

Impeachment againſt the Duke by the Commons.

But the Proceeding of the Lords in this Caſe was now interrupted by an Impeachment of the Duke prepared in the Houſe of Commons; which upon May 8. was delivered at a Conference of both Houſes, and held them two Days. It was managed by eight Members and ſixteen more Aſſiſtants; the Managers were Sir Dudley Diggs, Mr. Herbert, Mr. Selden, Mr. Glanvil, Mr. Pym, Mr. Sherland, Mr. Wandeford, and Sir John Elliot.

A Conference between the two Houſes.

Sir Dudley Diggs began with thanking their Lordſhips for condeſcending to this Conference: He then repreſented the publick Grievances and Complaints of the People; and then came to this Application. The Commons therefore wondering at the Evils which they ſuffered, debating of the Cauſes of them, found they were many, like many Lines to one Circumference, of Decay of Trade and Strength, of Honour and Reputation in this Kingdom; which, as in one Centre, met in one great Man the Cauſe of all, whom I am here to name, the Duke of Buckingham. Then pauſing a while, he read the Preamble to the Charge, and then ſpoke in general to the Grounds and Reaſons of it; comparing the Engliſh Monarchy to the World, the Commons to the Earth and Sea, the King to the Sun, the Lords to the Stars and Planets, and the Duke of Buckingham to a prodigious Comet. And finally inferring, that all the Grievances complained of by the Commons were to be imputed to the Duke only, and to his Procurement.

The Subſtance of the Articles, and of the Duke’s Anſwer afterwards given in to them.

The Articles of Impeachment and the D.’s Anſwer.

I. Article. “ That he the ſaid Duke, being young “ and unexperienc’d, had with exorbitant Am- “ bition, and for his own Advantage procured “ and engroſſed into his own Hands ſeveral great “ Offices.”

The Duke’s Anſwer. “ As to the Places he holds “ three only are worthy the Name of Offices, viz. the “ Admiralty, the Wardenſhip of the Cinque Ports, “ and Maſterſhip of the Horſe; for which he ac- “ knowledgeth the Bounty and Goodneſs of his moſt “ gracious Maſter, who prevented his deſires in ask- “ ing him for them. And that there be many Prece- “ dents both in ancient and modern Times, that one “ Man eminent in the Eſteem of his Soveraign hath “ at one time held as great and as many Offices.”

II. Art. “ That he the ſaid Duke, in the 16th of “ the late King, did give to the Earl of Notting- “ ham for the Office of Admiral three thouſand “ Pounds; and did procure from the late King “ an Annuity of one thouſand Pounds per Annum, “ to be paid to the ſaid Earl for his ſurrendry, “ to obtain to himſelf a Grant of the ſaid Office “ during Life.”

The Duke’s Anſwer. “ That he obtained a Grant “ of the Office of Admiralty freely, and without “ any Contract or Bargain with the late Lord Ad- “ miral, who ſurrender’d it willingly without any “ Promiſe; and received a Penſion at the King’s own “ Free-will and Pleaſure. And he affirms, that his “ Majeſty’s Navy is in better State by much, than “ ever it was in any precedent Time whatſoever.”

III. Art. “ That in the 22d of the late King, he “ gave to Edward Lord Zouch, Lord Warden of “ the Cinque Ports, for ſurrender of the ſaid Of- “ fice one thouſand Pounds, and procured him “ an Annuity of five hundred Pounds yearly.”

The Duke’s Anſwer. “ That the Lord Zouch being “ grown in Years, and unfit to execute ſo great a “ Truſt, and willing to reſign it, and treating with “ other Noblemen upon ſome Recompence for it, “ he did indeed agree to give him one thouſand

1626. "Pounds in Money, and five hundred Pounds yearly for his ſaid Surrender, the King being privy to it, and his own Intentions therein being Juſt and Honourable."

IV. Art. "That he the ſaid Duke, by reaſon of his ſaid Offices, ought to have ſafely guarded the Seas; whereas, ever ſince the Diſſolution of the two Treaties, 21 Jacobi, he had neglected the performance of his ſaid Office and Duty, and broken the Truſt committed to him."

The Duke's Anſwer. "Whatever Loſſes have happen'd to the King's Subjects during that time, are not owing to his want of Care and Diligence. For that he had encreaſed the ordinary Guard allowed for the Narrow Seas; and ſuch further Proviſion is now made as will give good Satiſfaction."

V. Art. "That a Ship called the St. Peter of Newhaven, laden with Goods of the Subjects of France, in time of Peace with that Kingdom, was taken at Sea by direction of the ſaid Duke, and brought to Plymouth as a Prize, where divers Goods, to the Value of twenty thouſand Pounds were taken out for the benefit of the ſaid Duke, and the Ship with the reſidue of her Goods ſent into the River of Thames and there detained. Upon which there was an Arreſt at Newhaven of two Engliſh Merchant Ships, to the great diſturbance of Trade, and prejudice of the Merchants."

The Duke's Anſwer. "He ſets forth the Fact, and hopes it will ſufficiently appear, that he hath not done any thing herein which was not juſtifiable, and grounded upon deliberate and well adviſed Counſels and Warrants."

VI. Art. "That the ſaid Duke abuſing the Lords of the Parliament in the 21ſt of King James, with pretence of ſerving the State, did oppreſs the Eaſt-India Merchants, and extorted from them ten thouſand Pounds to releaſe their Ships which he had ſtopt from their intended Voyage."

The Duke's Anſwer. "He reciteth the Matter of Fact, and proves the Compoſition made by the Company with his late Majeſty by legal Proceedings, and advice of Counſel; and refers himſelf to the Judicial Acts which prove the contrary to what is alledg'd againſt him."

VII. Art. "That about the end of July laſt, he the ſaid Duke as Admiral, did by indirect and ſubtle Means and Practices, procure one of the principal Ships of his Majeſty's Navy Royal, call'd the Vanguard, and ſix other Merchant Ships to be put into the Hands of the French King."

The Duke's Anſwer. "That this Article was ſo mix'd with Actions of great Princes, that he dar'd not in his Duty publiſh every Paſſage thereof: but he could affirm, that thoſe Ships were lent to the French King at firſt without his privity; and when he knew it, he did that which belong'd to an Admiral of England and a true Engliſh-man."

VIII. Art. "That the ſaid Duke, knowing the ſaid Ships were intended to be employ'd againſt thoſe of the Reformed Religion in the Town of Rochel, did procure the ſaid Ships to be delivered, that they might be ſo uſed and employ'd, as they accordingly were, againſt the Town of Rochel."

The Duke's Anſwer. "That he was ſo far from practiſing, or conſenting that the ſaid Ships ſhould be ſo employ'd, that he believed the Pretence of the French King, that he would uſe thoſe Ships againſt Genoa; and when it was diſcover'd that they would be employ'd againſt thoſe of the Religion, he did by all fit and honourable Means endeavour to divert that Courſe." 1626.

IX. Art. "That whereas Titles of Honour were wont to be conferr'd as the Rewards only of Virtue and Induſtry: he the ſaid Duke had perverted that Ancient and moſt Honourable Way, and had enforced ſome that were Rich to purchaſe Honour: As the Lord R—— Baron of T——, to the prejudice of the Gentry and diſhonour of the Nobility."

The Duke's Anſwer. "He utterly denies compelling the Lord R—— to buy his Title of Honour; who was before willing to have given a much greater Sum, but could not then obtain it; and he did now obtain it by Sollicitation of his own Agents."

X. Art. "That whereas no Places of Judicature ought to be procured for any Reward, Bribe or Gift, he the ſaid Duke in the 18th of King James, did procure of the ſaid King the Office of High-Treaſurer of England, to the Lord Viſcount M.... now Earl of M..... for the Reward of twenty thouſand Pounds: And in the 16th of the ſaid King, did procure the Office of the Maſter of the Wards for Sir L. C. afterward Earl of M.... for the Reward of ſix thouſand Pounds."

The Duke's Anſwer. "That he received not, or had a Penny of either of thoſe Sums to his own Uſe: nor did he know of the procurement of them."

XI. Art. "That he had procured divers Titles of Honour to his Mothers, Brothers, Kindred and Allies, of ſmall Eſtates, to the prejudice of the Nobility and the damage of the Cr own."

The Duke's Anſwer. "That as to procuring ſome few Honours for thoſe who were ſo near and dear unto him, the Law of Nature, and the King's Royal Favour, may plead for his excuſe."

XII. Art. "That he had obtained a Grant from the Crown of divers Manors, parcel of the Dutchy of Lancaſter, and of other Lands and Rents belonging to the Crown; and had likewiſe received exceeding great Sums of Money for his own uſe without Accompt, to the great diminution of the Revenues of the Crown, according to the Schedules annex'd."

The Duke's Anſwer. "That he doth acknowledge the bountiful Hand of his late Majeſty; but as to the immenſe Sums and Values which are ſuggeſted to have been given to him, there be great miſtakes in the Schedules, to which he will give particular Anſwer in another Schedule."

XIII. Art. "That whereas nothing ought to be adminiſtred to the Royal Perſons of Kings in their Sickneſs, without Conſent and Direction of ſome of their known Phyſicians: the ſaid Duke without any ſufficient Warrant, did unduly cauſe and procure certain Plaiſters, and a certain Drink or Potion to be given to his late Majeſty; after which divers ill Symptoms did appear upon his ſaid Majeſty, who did attribute the Cauſe of his growing worſe to the ſaid Plaiſter and Drink."

The Duke's Anſwer. "That he was by infinite bonds of Duty and Thankfulneſs obliged to be tender of the Life and Health of his late Soveraign Maſter. That he did neither apply nor procure the Plaiſter or Poſſet-drink, in the Charge term'd a Potion, to his late Majeſty, nor was preſent when the ſame was firſt taken or applied. But that his Majeſty being ſick of an Ague, enquir'd how he the Duke had lately recovered from the like Diſtemper: and he told his Majeſty that the Earl of Warwick's Phyſician had cured him with

“a Plaiſter and Poſſet-drink. The King deſired to have the like Medicines ſent for; but the Duke delayed it, till the King commanded them to be fetch'd by an expreſs Meſſenger, and firſt took them in his the Duke's abſence. When the King grew worſe, he the Duke heard a rumour as if his Phyſick had done the King hurt; and that he the Duke had adminiſtred it without Advice. The Duke acquainting the King herewith, his Majeſty with much Diſcontent anſwer'd thus: They are worſe than Devils that ſay it. He humbly prays their Lordſhips not only to conſider the Truth of this Matter, but alſo to commiſerate the ſad thought which this Article hath revived in him.”

The ſeveral Articles having been enlarged and aggravated by the reſpective Members choſen out for Management, Sir John Elliot concluded the Impeachment in a bitter Speech; ending thus:

Sir John Elliot's concluding Speech.

“I conclude by preſenting to your Lordſhips the particular Cenſure of the Biſhop of Ely, reported in the 2d of Rich. I. And to give you a ſhort view of his Faults; He was firſt of all noted to be luxurious. Secondly, He married his own Kindred to Perſonages of higheſt Rank and Places. Thirdly, No Man's Buſineſs was done without his help. Fourthly, He would not ſuffer the King's Council to adviſe in Matters of State. Fifthly, He grew to ſuch a height of Pride, that no Man was thought worthy to ſpeak unto him. And, Laſtly, His Caſtles and Forts of Truſt he did obſcuris & ignotis hominibus tradere. His Doom was this, Per totam Inſulam publice proclamatur, pereat qui perdere cuncta feſtinat, opprimatur ne omnes opprimat.”

Concluſion of the Duke's Anſwer.

The Duke concluded his Anſwer with referring all to the Judgment of their Lordſhips; “acknowledging how eaſie it was for him in his younger Years, and unexperienc'd, to fall into thouſands of Errors; but hoping he had been preſerv'd from running into any heinous and high Miſdemeanours and Crimes. In whatſoever he had unwittingly offended, he claimed the Benefit of his late and preſent Majeſty's Pardon; and hopeth, and will daily pray, that for the future he ſhall by God's Grace ſo watch over his Actions both Publick and Private, that he ſhall not give any juſt Offence to any.”

The Duke having put in this Anſwer, earneſtly moved the Lords to ſend to the Commons to expedite the Reply; and the Commons did as earneſtly deſire a Copy of his Anſwer.

The King reſolv'd to prevent a Trial.

But the King did ſeem reſolv'd that this Proceſs ſhould never end in a formal Trial. The faithful Maſter was more than equal to the wiſe Prince: The more popular Odium the Duke lay under, he became the nearer Object of Royal Favour. If his Majeſty could have a little inclin'd an Ear to the Voice of the People, and could have excluded this Favourite from his Councils and his Preſence, while the Cry was loud againſt him, he might in all appearance have better protected his Servant, and better defended his own Royal Honour. But he was impatient of all Proceedings againſt the Duke; and therefore to execute ſome diſpleaſure on the principal Actors, he commanded Sir Dudley Diggs who open'd the Impeachment, and Sir John Elliot who concluded the laſt Article, to be both committed to the Tower. And on May 11. the King came to the Houſe of Lords and expreſſed his Reſentments in this manner:

Impriſons the two Members of the Houſe of Commons.

Makes a Speech full of Reſentment to the Lords.

“My Lords,

“THE cauſe and only cauſe of my coming to you this Day is, to expreſs the Senſe I have of all your Honours: for he that toucheth any of you toucheth me in a very great Meaſure. I have thought fit to take Order for the puniſhing ſome inſolent Speeches lately ſpoken. I have been too remiſs heretofore in puniſhing ſuch Speeches as concern my ſelf: Not that I was greedy of their Monies, but that Buckingham through his importunity would not ſuffer me to take notice of them, leſt he might be thought to have ſet me on, and that he might come the forwarder to his Trial. And to approve his Innocency, as touching the Matters againſt him, I my ſelf can be a Witneſs to clear him in every one of them.

“I ſpeak not this to take any thing out of your hands, but to ſhew the Reaſon why I have not hitherto puniſhed thoſe inſolent Speeches againſt my ſelf. And now I hope you will be as tender of my Honour, when time ſhall ſerve, as I have been ſenſible of yours.”

Motion of the Commons to commit the Duke.

The ſame Day a Meſſage was brought from the Commons to their Lordſhips by Sir Nathaniel Rich, to make Declaration, “That they hold it a thing of dangerous Conſequence, both for the preſent and future times, that a Man of ſo great Eminence, Power, and Authority, being Impeached and Accuſed of ſuch high Crimes and Offences, ſhould yet enjoy his Liberty, &c. Wherefore they recommend it as their unanimous Deſire, that their Lordſhips would be pleaſed forthwith to commit the Perſon of the ſaid Duke to ſafe Cuſtody.” Upon which the Duke made a Speech, to deſire his Trial might be haſtned, that he might no longer ſuffer than needs muſt. “And now (ſays he) that my Accuſer hath not been content only to make my Proceſs, but to preſcribe to your Lordſhips the manner of your Judgment, and to judge me before I am heard, I ſhall not give way to any of their unjuſt Demands, &c.”

The Duke angry.

But the quick Reſentments of the King, and the ſeeming Defiance of the Duke, did but irritate the Commons to a more importunate Proſecution. They reſolved therefore to proceed in no other Buſineſs, till they had Satisfaction in this Cauſe. They turned the Houſe into a grand Committee, and fell upon conſidering Ways and Means how to ſecure their Rights and Liberties. In which Committee Sir Dudley Carleton made a very reconciling Speech, and mov'd the Houſe not to intrench upon his Majeſty's Prerogatives, leſt it ſhould bring him out of Love with Parliaments: He urg'd the Neceſſity of a good Correſpondence to be kept up between the King and his People: He laid ſome blame upon Sir Dudley Diggs and Sir John Elliot, and inferr'd, that they ſpoke beyond their Commiſſion; And this (ſays he) drew his Majeſty, with other inſolent Invectives, to uſe his Regal Authority in committing them to the Tower.

The Commons more incenſed.

Caſe of Sir Dudley Diggs.

The Words imputed to Sir Dudley Diggs were, That he did forbear to ſpeak farther of that (meaning the Plaiſter apply'd to his late Majeſty) in regard of the King's Honour. Upon which a Proteſtation was drawn up and thus taken by every Member.

I Proteſt before Almighty God and this Houſe of Parliament, that I never gave Conſent that Sir Dudley Diggs ſhould ſpeak theſe Words that he is now charged withall, or any Words to that effect. And I have not affirmed to any that he did ſpeak ſuch Words, or any to that effect.

Within few Days after Sir Dudley was releaſed from the Tower, and coming into the Houſe made there a Proteſtation, that the Expreſſion charg'd upon him was far from his Words, and never came into his Thoughts. He thank'd the Houſe for their Reſpects unto him, and ſaid, he had received from his Majeſty a gracious Teſtimony of his Satisfaction. But ſtill the Duke could not digeſt the Affront; he affirmed to the Houſe of Peers, that ſome Words were ſpoken at the late Conference by Sir Dudley Diggs, which ſo far did trench upon the King's Honour, that they are interpreted Treaſonable. After long Debate, thirty ſix Lords made a voluntary Proteſtation, upon their Honours, That the ſaid Sir Dudley Diggs did not ſpeak any thing at the ſaid Conference which did or might trench on the King's Honour; and if he had they would preſently have reprehended him for it.

1626. Not long after, Sir John Elliot was alſo releaſed, and coming into the Houſe diſcharged himſelf of the offenſive Paſſages in his late Charge againſt the Duke, and obtained a Vote of the Houſe, that He had not exceeded the Commiſſion given him in the late Conference.

Caſe of Sir John Elliot.

So as Things were not yet carried ſo high, but that a little mutual Compliance might have ſtill made a happy Seſſion. But his Majeſty had ſo much Affection for the Duke, and ſo much Occaſion for immediate Supply, that he could not bear the Thoughts of a Trial that might be provoking and long depending: And therefore the Day after the Duke had put in his Anſwer, the King wrote this Letter to the Speaker, dated June 9.

King's Letter to the Speaker.

" Truſty and Well-beloved, We greet you well.

"OUR Houſe of Commons cannot forget how " often and how earneſtly we have called up- " on them for the ſpeeding of that Aid which they " intended us for our great and weighty Affairs, con- " cerning the Safety and Honour of Us and Our " Kingdoms. And now the time being ſo far ſpent " that unleſs it be preſently concluded, it can nei- " ther bring us Money nor Credit by the time which " themſelves have prefixed, which is the laſt of this " Month, and being farther deferred would be of " little Uſe, we being daily advertiſed from all " Parts of the great Preparations of the Enemy rea- " dy to aſſail us: We hold it neceſſary by theſe " our Letters to give them our laſt and final Admo- " nition, and to let them know, that we ſhall ac- " count all farther Delays and Excuſes to be expreſs " Denials. And therefore we Will and Require you " to ſignifie unto them, that we do expect that they " do forthwith bring in their Bill of Subſidy to be " paſſed without Delay or Condition, ſo as it may " fully paſs the Houſe by the end of the next Week " at the fartheſt: Which if they do not, it will " force us to take other Reſolutions. But let them " know, if they finiſh this according to our Deſire, " that we are reſolved to let them Sit together for " the Diſpatch of their other Affairs ſo long as the " Seaſon will permit, and after their Receſs to bring " them together again the next Winter. And if by " their Denial or Delay any thing of ill Conſequence " ſhall fall out, either at home or abroad, we call " God and Man to witneſs, that we have done our " Part to prevent it, by calling our People together " to adviſe with us, by opening the Weight of our " Occaſions unto them, and by requiring their time- " ly Help and Aſſiſtance in theſe Actions wherein " we ſtand engaged by their own Counſels. And " we Will and Command you, that this Letter be " publickly read in the Houſe."

Not well received by the Houſe of Commons.

Theſe were thought too hard Words by the Commons, who had their Money yet in their hands, and were reſolv'd to have a Redreſs of ſome Grievances as an Equivalent for it: And therefore their only Anſwer at preſent was an earneſt Petition to the King concerning the Dangers ariſing from the Increaſe and the Impunity of Popiſh Recuſants; giving a Catalogue of many in Commiſſion and Truſt who were either profeſs'd Papiſts themſelves, or had Popiſh Wives and Children: and then deſiring that the aforeſaid Parties, and others ſo ill affected, be put out of ſuch Commiſſions and Places of Authority wherein they now are in his Majeſty's Realm of England, contrary to the Acts and Law of State in that behalf. (a)

Their Anſwer.

Then a Committee was appointed to prepare an Anſwer to his Majeſty's late Letter; and the Subſtance of it was delivered by the Speaker in a Speech before the King, wherein he preſented the Anſwer of the Houſe fairly wrote in Parchment, ſaying, " This Parchment contains two things, the one by " way of Declaration, to give your Majeſty an Ac- " count and humble Satisfaction of their clear and " ſincere Endeavours and Intentions in your Maje- " ſty's Service: and the other an humble Petition " to your Majeſty for the Removal of that great " Perſon the Duke of Buckingham from Acceſs to " your Royal Preſence." 1626.

They proceed to a Remonſtrance.

His Majeſty not giving a favourable Anſwer, the Commons proceeded to draw up a Remonſtrance; which they had no ſooner finiſh'd, but they had Intimation that the Parliament would be that Day Diſſolv'd: upon which, they ordered every Member of the Houſe to have a Copy of the ſaid Remonſtrance; which was to this effect:

" WE your loyal and faithful Subjects the " Commons—retarded in the Proſecution " of Publick Affairs — think it our Duties to de- " clare thoſe Interruptions and Preventions — In " the firſt Parliament, the Commons then aſſem- " bled— preſenting two Subſidies — were preſ- " ſed by means of the Duke of Buckingham to en- " large that Supply, which conceiving not to be " there effected, he procured an Adjournment to " Oxford, and there a Diſſolution. — Before the " Choice of this preſent Parliament, he procured the " late Members to be made Sheriffs, to preclude " them from the Service of this Houſe — Now " enquiring into Grievances, we found that the moſt " preſſing and comprehenſive Miſchief and Grie- " vance that we ſuffer'd was fundamentally ſettled " in the vaſt Power and enormous Actions of the " ſaid Duke. — We have made a Parliamentary " Charge againſt him — in which we have been " interrupted and diverted by Meſſages procured " through Miſinformation from your Majeſty— " Two of our Members have been committed to " cloſe Impriſonment. — Notwithſtanding our " Declaration againſt the Duke for Plurality of Of- " fices, he has ſince procured the Office of Chan- " cellour of the Univerſity of Cambridge. — We " cannot hope for the Service of your Majeſty and " the Safety of the Nation, ſo long as we thus ſuf- " fer under the Preſſures of the Power and Ambiti- " on of the ſaid Duke. — Your Majeſty has been " adviſed to New Counſels, and in particular to levy " the Subſidies of Tonnage and Poundage, which " determined upon the Death of your Royal Father, " and were never payable to any of your Majeſty's " Anceſtors, but only by a ſpecial Act of Parlia- " ment. — We proteſt to your Majeſty and the " whole World, that until this great Perſon be re- " moved, we are out of hope of any good Succeſs— " but no ſooner ſhall we receive Redreſs and Relief " in this, but we ſhall proceed to accompliſh your " Majeſty's own Deſire."

The King hearing that this Remonſtrance was under a Preparation in the Houſe, reſolved to part with the Parliament rather than with the Duke, and was giving Orders for a Diſſolution; when the Houſe of Peers, in great Reſpect to his Majeſty's Intereſt and Honour, preſented this Addreſs to him for continuing the Seſſions.

The Lords Addreſs againſt a Diſſolution.

" May it pleaſe your excellent Majeſty,

" WE your faithful and loyal Subjects, the " Peers of this Kingdom, having received " this Morning a Meſſage from your Majeſty, inti- " mating an Intention to diſſolve this Parliament; " remembring that we are your Majeſty's heredita-

The King reſolute to diſſolve the Parliament.

After this, the Lords ſent ſeveral of their Members to intreat his Majeſty to give Audience to the whole Houſe of Peers: But the King returned Anſwer, That his Reſolution was to hear no Motion to that Purpoſe, but he would diſſolve the Parliament; and immediately cauſed a Commiſſion to paſs under the Great Seal to that Purpoſe: Which Commiſſion being read in the Upper Houſe, in Preſence of the Commons, the ſaid Parliament was diſſolved on the 15th of June.

Declaration of Reaſons for Diſſolving the two laſt Parliaments.

To take off, if poſſible, the Diſcontents and Murmurs of the People on this Occaſion, his Majeſty publiſhed A Declaration of the Cauſes of Diſſolving the two laſt Parliaments—— Given at Whitehall the 30th day of June in the ſecond Year of our Reign.

Wherein his Majeſty aſſerts, "That the Calling, "Adjourning, Proroguing, and Diſſolving of Parliaments, do peculiarly belong unto himſelf by an "undoubted Prerogative inſeparably united to his "Imperial Crown; of which, as of his other Regal "Actions, he is not bound to give an Account to "any but to God only. That coming to the Crown, "he found himſelf engaged in a War with a potent "Enemy, invited and encouraged thereto by the "humble Advice of both the Houſes of Parliament "in the Life of his Father. That after his Death "ſummoning a new Parliament at Weſtminſter, and "by reaſon of the Plague adjourning it to Oxford, "and deſiring a farther Supply, he found them ſo "ſlow, and ſo full of Delays and Diverſions, and "the Contagion ſo much encreaſing, his Majeſty "diſſolved that Parliament. That after this, by "Advice of his Privy Council and his Council of "War, he continued his Preparations and former "Reſolutions, though it pleaſed God not to give the "Succeſs which was deſired. That he ſummon'd "a new Parliament to meet on Febr. 6. at the firſt "Meeting whereof he did forbear to preſs them "with any Thing which might have the leaſt Appearance of his own Intereſt. That the Commons, "on March 27. voted three Subſidies and three Fifteens, and on Apr. 26. upon ſecond Cogitations, "added a fourth Subſidy. His Majeſty, with much "Patience, expected the Performance of what the "Commons had thus promiſed; but they, being abuſed by the violent and ill-adviſed Paſſions of a "few Members of the Houſe for private and perſonal Ends ill beſeeming Publick Perſons truſted by "their Country, not only neglected, but wilfully "refuſed to hearken to all the gentle Admonitions "which his Majeſty could give them; and neither "did nor would intend any thing but the Proſecution of one of the Peers of this Realm.——Whereupon his Majeſty wrote a Letter to the Speaker, "dated June 9. 1626. Notwithſtanding which Letter, read in the Houſe, being a clear and gracious Manifeſt of his Majeſty's Reſolutions, they "never ſo much as admitted one Reading to the "Bill of Subſidies; but inſtead thereof, they prepared and voted a Remonſtrance, containing as well "many diſhonourable Aſperſions upon his Majeſty, 1626. "as dilatory Excuſes for their not proceeding with "the Subſidies. Wherefore his Majeſty, upon mature Adviſement, diſcerning that all farther Patience would prove fruitleſs, on the 15th inſtant he "diſſolved this unhappy Parliament: Since which "he hath put on this Reſolution, that he will go "on cheerfully and conſtantly in Defence of the "Faith and true Religion, and (notwithſtanding "ſo many Difficulties and Diſcouragements) will "take his Sceptre and Sword into his Hand, and "not expoſe the Perſons of the People committed "to his Charge to the inſatiable Deſires of the King "of Spain, who hath long thirſted after an univerſal Monarchy; nor their Conſciences to the Yoke "of the Pope of Rome: And, that at home he will "take that care to redreſs the juſt Grievances of his "good Subjects as ſhall be every way fit for a good "King." (a)

King's Proclamation againſt an intended Remonſtrance of the Commons.

This was ſeconded by a Royal Proclamation taking notice of a Remonſtrance drawn up by a late Committee of the Commons, intended to have been preſented to his Majeſty, "Wherein were many Things "contained to the Diſhonour of the King and his "Royal Father: Of which ſeveral Copies have been "ſcattered; and therefore, for ſuppreſſing of this "inſufferable Wrong, his Majeſty commands all "Perſons who have any Copies or Notes of the ſaid "Remonſtrance, forthwith to burn the ſame, that "the Memory thereof may be utterly aboliſhed."

Earl of Briſtol again committed, Earl of Arundel confin'd.

On the ſame Day the Parliament was diſſolved, the Earl of Briſtol was again committed to the Tower, and the Earl of Arundel again confined to his own Houſe: which, with many other Steps of Diſtinction, did unhappily improve the general Diſcontent of the Lords and Commons.

A ſham Information againſt the Duke of Buckingham in the Star Chamber.

Soon after an Information was preferred by the King's ſpecial Command in the Star-Chamber, againſt the Duke of Buckingham for high Offences and Miſdemeanours, and in particular for the Plaiſter applied to King James, according to the laſt Article preferred againſt him by the Commons. The Duke put in his Anſwer, and divers Witneſſes were examined. But it came to no judicial Hearing, and was therefore ſuſpected to be an Evaſion of Juſtice rather than a Proſecution of it.

Privy Council declare for Tonnage and Poundage, tho' not yet given by Parliament.

To take off the Complaint Parliament in of the illegality of receiving Tonnage and Poundage without a ſpecial Act of the Legiſlature, the Privy Council now declared, that the ſaid Revenue hath been conſtantly continued for many Ages, and is a principal and moſt neceſſary Part of the Revenue of the Crown; and in the two laſt Parliaments had been thought upon, but could not be ſettled by their Authority by reaſon of the Diſſolutions, tho' it was ſufficiently intended to have been confirmed by Parliament, as it hath been from time to time by many Deſcents and Ages. Whereupon they ordered, that all ſuch Duties on Merchandizes ſhall be levied and paid; and an Inſtrument for that purpoſe was paſſed under the Great Seal. For the King having depriv'd himſelf of the Proſpect of all Parliamentary Aids, and yet reſolving to proſecute the War, it was neceſſary to project all poſſible Ways and Means of raiſing Money; which put the King and his Miniſtry upon ſome Inventions which indeed nothing but a Neceſſity could excuſe, and the People would not excuſe that Neceſſity.

Projects of getting Money.

By Forfeitures of Recuſants.

One Method was to improve the Forfeitures ariſing to the Crown by the execution of the Laws againſt Prieſts, Jeſuits, and Popiſh Recuſants; wherein there had been great Abuſes by ſome inferiour Officers, who had oppreſſed ſuch Recuſants without Advantage to the King. And therefore the King grants a Commiſſion to the Arch-biſhop of York, Sir John Savile and others, To Treat and make Compoſition

(a) Of the ſame Date was a Proclamation for a General Faſt to be obſerved in London, July 5th; and in the reſt of England, Aug. 2. 1626.

1626. with the ſaid Recuſants for all Forfeitures in not going to Church, under ſuch Conditions and Immunities as they ſhall ſee meet and convenient, according to ſuch Inſtructions as his Majeſty hath or ſhall give for that Purpoſe: His Majeſty rather deſiring their Converſion than Deſtruction. This was juſtly ſuſpected as a Toleration of Popery in thoſe who could purchaſe it; and as a Power diſpenſing with the common Courſe of the Penal Laws.

By granting Crown Lands.

A Proclamation was likewiſe publiſhed declaring the King's Reſolution to make his Revenue certain, by granting his Crown Lands, as well holden by Copy as otherwiſe, to be from henceforth holden in Fee-Farm. This too was diſliked as a Project of impoveriſhing the ſtated Revenue of the Crown, by raiſing preſent Fines.

By requiring Loans and Contributions.

The King's Letters were ſent to the Nobility and Gentry, that according to the Precedents of former Times, upon extraordinary Occaſions, they would grant him their private Aſſiſtance by way of Contribution, or of Loan; expecting from them ſuch a large and cheerful Teſtimony of their Loyalty as may be acceptable to himſelf, and exemplary to his People. But this was reſented as a way of asking by Authority, and an Extortion rather than a Deſire.

By Ship-Money.

Then a peculiar Charge was laid upon the ſeveral Ports and Maritime Counties, to furniſh and ſet out Ships for the preſent Service, in ſuch and ſuch proportionable Numbers; Twenty for the City of London, &c. The County and Ports of Dorſet preſented a Plea of Excuſe to the Council Table; and alledged that this was an Impoſition without Precedent. The Lord Mayor and Commonalty of London made a like Petition; and pleaded for an abatement at leaſt of the Number of Ships requir'd of them. But the Council gave a general Anſwer, That Petitions and Pleadings againſt a neceſſary Command did but obſtruct the publick Service, and were therefore by no means to be admitted. This Burthen was ſuch a Terror to the Sea-Ports, that many of the Inhabitants removed higher into the Country to avoid the Vexation of it. Their withdrawing encreas'd the Burthen of thoſe who ſtaid behind: And therefore an Order was iſſued out, that leſt the deſerting of the Coaſts, Ports and Sea-Towns, ſhould expoſe thoſe Places to become a Prey, and invite the Enemy to an Invaſion, the Inhabitants who had withdrawn themſelves to inland Places were required to return with their Families and Retinues, and there to abide during the Times of Hoſtility and Danger.

Several Petitions againſt this new Impoſition.

The King more and more engaged in Foreign Quarrels.

For the King found himſelf more and more engaged in Foreign Quarrels. The King of Denmark had taken up Arms againſt the Emperor, in an Alliance with the Princes of the Lower Saxony, and therein claim'd the Aſſiſtance of the Crown of England for the Reſtitution of the Elector Palatine. Hereupon the King ſent a Fleet to be join'd with the Daniſh Ships to ſecure the River Elbe, and ſo prevent the Tranſporting of Commodities for the Service of the Spaniards. And beſides this Aid by Sea, the King ſent over Six thouſand Land Men, under the Command of Sir Charles Morgan, to augment the Army of the King of Denmark, who fought the Imperialiſts under the Command of Count Tilly on Aug. 27. near Luttern; where the King and his Confederates being forced to an unequal Battle were entirely defeated.

Eſpecially in a new Rupture with France.

And beſides theſe open Breaches with Spain and the Empire, the King was now further embarraſs'd in a new Rupture with France. The firſt Occaſion of it was the King of France's employing our Engliſh Ships againſt his Proteſtant Subjects at Rochel, when by Treaty they were lent only to aſſiſt the French upon the Coaſts of Italy: This was reſented as a Breach of Faith in the French King; and made the Engliſh People ſo extremely jealous of our own Court, that nothing leſs could be done than to demand Reſtitution of our Ships, and a Reaſon why they had been ſo employed againſt the Rochellers. The King of France juſtified the putting them upon that Service by the neceſſity of his Affairs; and excuſed the preſent Reſtitution of them on a pretence, that his Subjects, by whom they were now mann'd, would not yet deliver them. Our Ships having been thus diſhonourably employed, and more injuriouſly detain'd; the Duke of Bucks, as Lord Admiral, did by expreſs Commiſſion make a Repriſal on the French, by ſeizing the St. Peter of Newhaven and other French Merchants. This provok'd the King of France not only to deny the giving up our Seven Ships lent to him, but to lay an Arreſt upon our Merchants Goods in his Dominions, to the Value of Three hundred thouſand Pounds. Theſe Feuds were thought to be induſtriouſly improved by an Emulation between the two prime Miniſters of each Nation, Cardinal Richlieu and the Duke of Buckingham; this latter having been deſigned Ambaſſador to France for compoſing of the Differences, was by the other's Envy deny'd Acceptance by the French King. Upon which the Duke is ſaid to have ſworn in a Rage, That ſince he was forbidden to enter in a peaceable manner into France, he would force his Paſſage with an Army. But however upon Reaſons of State the two Kings were reconciled; and ſome Satisfaction being made to the French Merchants, the French King reſtored the Engliſh Ships, and releaſed the Imbargo on their Goods at the beginning of May 1626. which ſeem'd to make up perfect Peace and Union. But Diſtaſtes and Jealouſies were ſtill remaining; and both Courts were diſpos'd to break upon a ſmall Occaſion.

The Queen ſuſpected of doing ill Offices between Engl. and France.

This made the King and Duke the more jealous of the Queen's Family, as ſending Intelligence, and ſpreading Reports, and doing other ill Offices between the two Nations. It had been agreed by the Articles of Marriage, that the Queen ſhould chuſe her own Servants of her own Country and Religion; and ſhould in particular have a certain Number of Prieſts for her Houſhhold Chaplains, together with a Biſhop, who ſhould exerciſe all Eccleſiaſtical Juriſdiction in Matters of Religion. Theſe Men being courted by the Engliſh Papiſts, and zealouſly ſupported by the Queen's Favour, had opportunities to ſhew a very zealous Partiality for their own Country and the Romiſh Communion; growing forward and inſolent, and putting the Queen upon ſuch Courſes as created Diſtruſt and Unkindneſs between the King and Her.

The King reſolves to ſend away the Queen's French Servants.

His Majeſty repreſented this uneaſineſs to his Brother of France, imputing it to the crafty and evil Counſels of the Queen's Domeſticks, contrary to her own Inclinations; and ſo declared he could no longer bear with thoſe that were the known Cauſes and Fomenters of this Diſturbance. He could give many Inſtances of their rude Behaviour, but he thought one might ſuffice, that Without his knowledge they had made his Royal Conſort walk to Tyburn to pay her Devotions there. In ſhort, that they had ſo much abuſed his Patience, and affronted his Perſon, that he was reſolved no longer to endure it. Before any Anſwer was return'd from France, on July 1. toward Evening, the King, attended by the Duke of Buckingham, the Earls of Holland and Carliſle, and other principal Officers, came to Somerſet Houſe, and having commanded the appearance of all the Queen's Servants, the King ſpoke his Mind to them in this manner.

Makes a Speech to them.

" Gentlemen and Ladies,

" I Am driven to that extremity, as I am perſonal-
" ly come to acquaint you, that I very earneſtly
" deſire your Return into France. True it is, the De" portment of ſome amongſt you hath been very in-
" offenſive to me; but others again have ſo dallied
" with my Patience, and ſo highly affronted Me,
" as I cannot, I will not any longer endure it."

The Biſhop of Mende and Madam St. George, who had given the greateſt Offence, began to make their Apologies: but the King turn'd from them, ſaying only, 1626. only, I name none, but I tell you my Reſolution. As ſoon as the Queen heard it, ſhe fell into a high Paſſion, and upbraided his Majeſty with the utmoſt Diſaffection to her. He tried all the moſt kind and tender ways to pacify her; and when he had uſed all gentle Perſwaſions, he roundly bid her be ſatisfied, for it muſt be ſo (a). This Action indeed did ſeem to be ſome Indignity put upon the Queen; and it was a greater hardſhip upon her Servants, who had moſt of them ſold their Effects in France to purchaſe a dependence on the Engliſh Court, and were now worſe than Baniſh'd home. But as there was a Provocation for it, ſo there was in one reſpect a happy Conſequence in it: For after this Set of Creatures were diſmiſt, the Queen grew much more Endearing to his Majeſty, and he moſt Firm and Fond in his Affections to her.

The Queen enraged.

The Lord Carleton ſent to the French Court.

The King ſent over the Lord Carleton to the French Court to give advice of this Action, and prevent all hard Conſtructions of it. But the French King immediately declared his ill Reſentments of it, and denied Audience to the Lord Carleton, and complained of an expreſs Violation of the Articles of Marriage; and for an immediate Act of Hoſtility ſeiz'd upon One hundred and twenty Engliſh Ships, that were then in his Ports and Rivers.

Declaration of War againſt France.

Upon this the King of England publiſhed a Declaration of War againſt France, expreſſing the Grounds of it to be, 1. That the Council of France had obſtructed the landing of Count Mansfeild's Army contrary to promiſe; with whom the French ſhould have joined for relief of the Palatinate. 2. That the King of France contrary to the Articles with his Proteſtant Subjects, had block'd up their Towns, Garriſons and (b) Forts. 3. That the King of France had committed an Example of great Injuſtice in full Peace, by ſeizing 120 Engliſh Ships, with all their Merchandize and Artillery.

A Fleet ſent to the relief of Rochel.

The King prepares a Fleet of Thirty Men of War, and ſent them at the beginning of October under the Command of the Earl of Denbigh to relieve the Rochellers; who being then beſieged and greatly diſtreſſed, had ſued to the King of England for his Protection and Defence. But this Fleet going out too late, ſuffered ſo much by adverſe Winds and Storms, that they were not able to reach the French Coaſts, but were driven back into our own Harbours, and left the Rochellers not only to deplore their own Miſery, but perhaps to ſuſpect our Integrity.

King adviſes with the Privy Council how to raiſe Money.

While the King found himſelf under theſe various Difficulties, he commanded his Council to adviſe by what Means and Ways he might be furniſhed with Monies ſuitable to theſe great Occaſions. After conſulting many Days, they came to this Reſolution: That the Urgency of Affairs not admitting the way of Parliament, the moſt ſpeedy, equal and convenient Means would be by a General Loan from the Subject, according as every Man was Aſſeſſed in the Rolls of the laſt Subſidy.

They adviſe the Mothod of Loan.

A Declaration for it.

Upon this Reſult the King publiſhed a Declaration, to inform his People, that the Urgency of his occaſions would not give leave to the Calling of a Parliament; but aſſuring them, this Way ſhould not be made a Precedent; and promiſing, in the Word of a Prince, Firſt, To Repay all ſuch Sums of Money as ſhould be lent without Fee or Charge. Secondly, That not one Penny ſo borrowed ſhould be expended otherwiſe than on the Publick Service.

Inſtructions to the Commiſſioners.

The King choſe his Commiſſioners for receiving of this Loan, and gave them theſe private Inſtructions.

1. "To ſet themſelves a good Example in freely "ſubſcribing to the beſt of their own Ability.

2. "To require a Loan from others according "to the Rates in the laſt Book of Subſidy: a Man "of 100 l. in Goods to lend 100 Marks, and he "of 100 l. in Lands to lend a full 100 l.

3. "To uſe all poſſible Endeavours to cauſe every "Man to lend cheerfully, upon conſideration of "Honour, Intereſt and Common Safety.

4. "To appoint the Payment within fourteen "Days, or at leaſt one half within that time, and "the remainder before the 20th of December.

5. "That they treat apart with every one; and "if any refuſe, they ſhall examine them upon "Oath, and charge them upon Allegiance not to "diſcloſe whatever their Anſwer is.

6. "That they begin with ſuch Perſons as are "likely to ſet the beſt Examples.

7. "That they certifie to the Privy Council in "Writings, the Names, Qualities and Dwelling-"Places of all Refractory Perſons.

8. "That upon lending the Sums requir'd, his "Majeſty will remit their Grant upon the late Be-"nevolence, and accept what was paid on that ac-"count as a part of the preſent Loan.

9. "That they admit of no Suit to be made, or "Reaſons to be given for the abating of any Sum.

Laſtly, "The Commiſſioners are required upon "their Faith and Allegiance, not to impart their "Inſtructions to any others."

The People murmur at it.

Divers Lords of the Council were appointed to repair into their ſeveral Countries for advancement of this Loan: But no Art or Intereſt could bring off a Free People from Murmuring at it, as an arbitrary and illegal Impoſition. This Reluctancy of private Perſons made the Government more ſevere in execution of the Project; and this Severity of the Government made People more and more averſe to it. Thoſe who ſuffered for their Oppoſition grew Popular; and diſpleaſing of the Court was now thought a Demonſtration of Conſcience and Honour. So as the Steps taken to proſecute this Deſign made the Deſign it ſelf much the more odious.

Thoſe who opposed it were puniſhed by the Court.

Sir Randolph Crew ſhewing himſelf diſſatisfied, was remov'd from his Place of Lord Chief Juſtice, and Sir Nicholas Hide was put in his room, a Creature of the Duke's, and he who had drawn up his Anſwer to the late Impeachment in Parliament.

The Biſhop of Lincoln ſpoke publickly againſt the Loan; for which, a Complaint was ſent up to the Lords of the Council, and upon this Occaſion an Information of other pretended Matters was preferred againſt him in the Star-Chamber.

The Benchers of Lincolns-Inn demurring upon it as not in due Form of Law, received a Letter of Reproof from the Lords of the Council, with a Command to return the Names of the Refractory.

The Gentry in ſeveral Counties refuſing to Subſcribe, were bound over by Recognizance to appear at the Council Table; and there refuſing to comply, were many of them committed to Priſon.

The Common ſort who deny'd the Rates requir'd of them, were by Warrant of the Council, directed to the Commiſſioners of the Navy, impreſt to ſerve in the Ships ready to go out in his Majeſty's Service. And others of them in and about London were made to appear before the Lieutenant of the Tower, by him to be enrolled among the Land Forces; with a Reaſon declar'd, that they who refuſ'd to aſſiſt with their Purſes ſhould ſerve in their Perſons for the Common Defence.

(a) There is a Letter of J. Porey, to Sir Simmonds D'Ewes, dat. London 5. July 1626. giving a very particular Account of what paſſed in Somerſet-Houſe, at the King's diminiſhing the Queen's Servants, in MS. Harley 38. C. 8.

(b) Another Reaſon was given, that the French King had broke his Articles with his Proteſtant Subjects, when the King of England had been a Mediator of Peace between them, and they had done nothing to violate them. So early did King Charles look upon himſelf as a Guarantee of the Liberties and Rights of the French Proteſtants.

And

None ſo forward as the Papiſts.

And that which added to the Popular Diſguſt was, That the Papiſts were all forward and liberal upon this occaſion; and the Proteſtant Subjects who were moſt ſparing of their Liberty and Property, were all hunted into the Reproach of being Puritans. And it was imputed to the Court as an Obſervation of theirs, that in this Teſt of Allegiance the Papiſts were exceeding Orthodox, and the Puritans were the only Recuſants.

The Court Biſhops and ſome of the Clergy were too buſie in it.

Another great Unhappineſs was this; The Biſhops at the King's Requeſt were moſt of them zealous to promote this Supply of the Publick Neceſſities; and earneſtly preſs'd their Clergy to contribute their beſt Aſſiſtance in it (a). Hence ſome were more officious than became their Function in ſuch a ſecular Affair: And others were ſo indiſcreet as to make it a Doctrine of their Pulpits to urge the Duty of Anſwering whatever the King demanded. In particular,

Caſe of Sibthorp.

Dr. Sibthorp, Vicar of Brackley, preach'd upon this Subject at Northampton, on Feb. 22. 1626. at the Lent Aſſizes; and having his Sermon licenſed by the Biſhop of London, he publiſh'd it under the Title of Apoſtolick Obedience, with a Dedication to the King. The whole Scope of it was to advance the Loan, and to juſtifie the King's impoſing publick Taxes without Conſent of Parliament; and to prove that the People, in Point of Conſcience, were bound to ſubmit to the Regal Will and Pleaſure. For which he was afterward called in Queſtion, and Cenſured by the Parliament: But yet he gain'd his Ends at Court, being made Chaplain in Ordinary to his Majeſty, Prebendary of Peterborough, and Rector of Burton Latimers in Northamptonſhire; from which he was ejected in the Civil Wars, and enjoy'd them again at the Reſtoration, dying in April 1662. One who ſpeaks moſt favourably of the Royal Party, ſays, He was a Perſon of little Learning, and of few Parts, only made it his Endeavours, by his Forwardneſs and Flatteries, to gain Preferment.

Caſe of Manwaring.

Dr. Roger Manwaring promoted the ſame Cauſe in two Sermons preach'd before the King and Court at Whitehall, wherein he advanc'd theſe new Doctrines: "That the King is not bound to obſerve the Laws "of the Realm concerning the Subject's Rights and "Liberties, but that his Royal Will and Command "in impoſing Loans and Taxes, without common "Conſent in Parliament, doth oblige the Subject's "Conſcience upon pain of eternal Damnation. That "thoſe therefore who refuſed to pay this Loan, "offended againſt the Law of God and the King's "ſupreme Authority, and became guilty of Impiety, "Diſloyalty, and Rebellion, &c." For which he was Cenſured by the next Parliament, but ſoon after by the Court preferr'd to the Rectory of Stamford Rivers in Eſſex, to hold with his Vicarage of S. Giles in the Fields, London; made Dean of Worceſter in 1633. and Biſhop of St. David's in 1635. dying at Caermarthen in Privacy and Poverty on July 1. 1653. Theſe laſt Sermons were firſt preach'd at Oatlands before the King in July 1627. and publiſh'd under the Title of Religion and Allegiance: but bearing immediate Relation to the Loan, they were fit to be mention'd under this Year 1626.

Having thus paſs'd through the two firſt Years of this unfortunate Reign, and deliver'd the full Series of Civil Affairs; it will be proper to take a Review of the State of Religion and the Church, as very much affecting the Peace and Policy of this Reign.

State of Religion in theſe two firſt Years of King Charles I.

Two Days after the Parliament began, a Convocation was opened at St. Paul's on Monday June 20. 1625. Dr. John Bowles was choſen Prolocutor, who had been made Dean of Saliſbury in July 1620. and was preferred to the See of Rocheſter in 1630. No Eccleſiaſtical Buſineſs was done, nor any Motion made toward it in the Upper or Lower Houſe. During their Seſſion, on June 24. the King commanded the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, with ſix other Biſhops (not in a Synodical Capacity) to draw up a Form of Prayer for the Publick Faſt. On June 25, all the Biſhops who were then in Town were introduced in a Body, to wait upon the Queen, and to kiſs her Hand.

Convocation without Buſineſs.

Mr. Mountague queſtioned in the Houſe of Commons for his Appeal to Cæſar.

On July 7. Mr. Richard Mountague, Canon of Windſor, and Fellow of Eaton, Rector of Stamford Rivers, and Chaplain in Ordinary to his Majeſty, was brought to the Bar of the Houſe of Commons, to anſwer for his Book entitul'd, An Appeal to Cæſar, which was there Charged upon him, to be contrived and publiſhed to put a Jealouſie between the King and his well affected Subjects, and to contain many things contrary to the Articles of Religion eſtabliſh'd by Parliament; and that the whole Frame thereof was an Encouragement to Popery.

Account of the Book and the Author.

This Cauſe had begun in the 21ſt of King James, when this Learned Man had publiſh'd a former Book entitled, A new Gagg for an old Gooſe, in anſwer to a Popiſh Book, call'd A Gag for the new Goſpel. When upon a Suggeſtion that he had receded from ſome Doctrines of the Reformed Churches, and had too much ſoftened ſome of the Roman Tenets; he was then queſtion'd in Parliament, and the Cauſe being of dubious Points of Belief, was referr'd to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury; who expreſſed his diſlike of the Book, and gave the Author a ſolemn Admonition. Some other Biſhops, who were called of the Arminian Party, had a different Notion of Mr. Mountague's Opinions, and encouraged him to re-aſſert them, and defend them in another Treatiſe to be dedicated to the King; and as an Appeal to his Royal Judgment and Authority, to be entitled Appello Cæſarem. The Archbiſhop diſallowed the Book, and endeavoured to ſuppreſs it: But the other Biſhops atteſted their Approbation of it, and haſtned the Edition. The Houſe now appointed a Committee to examine the Errors of it, and gave the Archbiſhop Thanks for his former Admonition to the Author; whoſe Books they Voted to be contrary to the Eſtabliſh'd Articles, to tend to the King's Diſhonour, and to the Diſturbance of Church and State: For which they aſſign'd him a time of Anſwer, and took Bond for his Appearance under the Penalty of Two thouſand Pounds. (b)

The King interpoſes for Mr. Mountague.

But on Saturday, July 9. the King himſelf interpos'd, and ſignified to the Commons, that What had been ſpoken in their Houſe, and determin'd againſt Mr. Mountague, was diſpleaſing to him. He hop'd one of his Chaplains might have as much protection as the Servant of an ordinary Burgeſs. This was look'd upon as an arbitrary Obſtruction of Juſtice, and would but have incenſed the Houſe to have proceeded more ſeverely, if on their next Day of Sitting, Monday, July 11. the Parliament had not been prorogued to Oxford, where they met again on Monday, Aug. 1.

Convocation at Oxford without the Prolocutor.

Here at Oxford there was a very ſmall appearance of Convocation. Dr. Bowles, the Prolocutor, abſenting himſelf for fear of the Infection, Dr. Thomas Goad officiating in his Place; their Meeting was kept in the Chapel of Merton College. The only Motion remember'd in Hiſtory, is that of the Learned Dr. James, who propoſed that all the Manuſcript Works of the Fathers, in the Libraries of each Univerſity, and elſewhere in England, might be peruſed; and that ſuch Places in them as had been corrupted in (a) See Inſtructions directed from the King's moſt excellent Majeſty to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, to be put in Execution, agreeable to the Neceſſity of Times—— for Aſſiſtance from the Church. ——and to ſtir up the People. —— Given at Weſtminſter xxi. Sept. 1626.——and the Archbiſhop's Letter to the Biſhops on that Occaſion. Printed for the King's Printers. 1626. 4*to*.

(b) There was a Declaration made and atteſted by George Biſhop of Chicheſter, John Biſhop of Saliſbury, Walter Belcanqual Dean of Rocheſter, Samuel Ward Profeſſor of Divinity in Cambridge, and Thomas Goad D. D. profeſſing their Opinion, that the Diſcipline of the Church of England was not impeached by the Synod of Dort, as had been falſely ſuggeſted by Mr. Mountague, in his Appello Cæſarem, and it was now Printed 1626. 4*to*.

Popiſh

1626. Popiſh Editions, might be faithfully printed according to the moſt ancient Copies: A very laudable Deſign; but the Motion dropt without conſidering of it. The Encouragement he deſired for it was poſſibly the ſame which he recommends in one of his own Letters. " If every Church-man that hath 100 l. " per Annum and upward, will lay down but a Shil- " ling for every Hundred toward theſe publick " Works, I will undertake the Reprinting of the Fa- " thers, and ſetting forth five or ſix Volumes of Or- " thodox Writers, comparing of Books printed with " printed and written, collating of Popiſh Tranſlati- " ons with the Greek, and generally whatſoever ſhall " concern Books, or the Purity of them, I will take " upon Me to be Magiſter Sancti Palatii in England."

Convocation did nothing but give their Money.

The Convocation having neither deſired nor received any Royal Licenſe to treat of Eccleſiaſtical Matters, kept only to that Civil Purpoſe, for which they were chiefly called, together with the Parliament, of aſſiſting the King with a reaſonable Aid, and accordingly made a Grant of three Subſidies, which was confirmed by Act of Parliament, as had been the Cuſtom ever ſince the Act of Submiſſion; ſince which Time the Taxes of the Clergy were paſſed into Secular Laws, when before that Act they were enjoin'd and levy'd by Synodical Conſtitutions, under the Penalty of Spiritual Cenſures.

Mr. Mountague applies to the King.

Mr Mountague ſeeing himſelf under the Diſpleaſure and Proſecution of the Houſe of Commons, made no Application to either Houſe of Convocation (who without the King's Direction did not apprehend that the Cauſe fell regularly under their Cognizance) but wrote a humble Letter to his Majeſty, dated July 29. 1625. wherein he firſt plainly laid open the State of his Caſe, and then petition'd that by his Majeſty's Authority and Wiſdom, he might be protected from thoſe who had no Power over his Perſon, as being his Majeſty's Servant in Ordinary; nor over his Book as being wrote by the Command of his Royal Father, and authoriz'd by his preſent Majeſty himſelf; and then concluded with this Declaration, " That if " he could not really and throughly anſwer what- " ſoever was, or could be imputed to him in any of " his Books, he would no farther deſire any Favour " or Protection, but would be willingly left to the " Power of his Enemies."

The Biſhops interceed for him in a Letter to the Duke.

The Biſhops of Rocheſter, Oxford and St. David's, who had a kind Opinion of Mountague and his Writings, and ſeemed very ſenſible of the Danger to the Church, in allowing Points of Divinity to be examined and judged by the Commons in Parliament, uſed all poſſible Endeavours to ſtop this Method of Proceeding; and knowing the Duke of Buckingham to have the greateſt Influence upon the King, they begg'd his Interceſſion in this Letter, dated Auguſt 2.

" May it pleaſe your Grace,

" WE are bold to be Suitors to you in the Be- " half of the Church of England, and a poor " Member of it, Mr. Mountague, at this Time not a " little diſtreſſed. We are not Strangers to his Per- " ſon, but it is the Cauſe which we are bound to be " tender of. The Cauſe we conceive (under correcti- " on of better Judgment) concerns the Church of " England nearly. For that Church when it was Re- " formed from the ſuperſtitious Opinions broach'd " or maintained by the Church of Rome, refuſed the " apparent and dangerous Errors, and would " not be too buſie with every particular School- " Point.

" Now, may it pleaſe your Grace, the Opinions " which at this time trouble many Men in the late " Book of Mr. Mountague, are ſome of them ſuch as " are expreſsly the Reſolved Doctrine of the Church " of England, and thoſe he is bound to maintain. " Some of them are ſuch as are fit only for Schools, " and to be left at more liberty, for Learned Men to " abound in their own Senſe, ſo they keep themſelves " peaceable and diſtract not the Church. And there- " fore to make any Man ſubſcribe to School Opini- " ons, may juſtly ſeem hard in the Church of Chriſt, " and was one great Fault of the Council of Trent. " And to affright them from thoſe Opinions in which " they have (as they are bound) ſubſcribed to the " Church, as it is worſe in it ſelf, ſo may it be the " Mother of greater Danger.

" May it pleaſe your Grace further to conſider, " that when the Clergy ſubmitted themſelves in " the Time of Henry VIII. the Submiſſion was ſo " made, that if any Difference doctrinal, or other, " fell in the Church, the King and the Biſhops were " to be Judges of it in the National Synod or Con- " vocation; the King firſt giving leave under his " Broad Seal to handle the Points in Difference. " But the Church never ſubmitted to any other " Judge, neither indeed can ſhe though ſhe would.

" And we humbly deſire your Grace to conſi- " der, and then to move his moſt Gracious Maje- " ſty (if you ſhall think fit) what dangerous Con- " ſequences may follow upon it. For, Firſt, If any " other Judge be allowed in Matter of Doctrine, " we ſhall depart from the Ordinance of Chriſt, " and the continual Courſe and Practice of the " Church. Secondly, If the Church be once brought " down beneath her ſelf, we cannot but fear what " may be the next Stroke at it. Thirdly, it will " ſome way touch the Honour of his Majeſty's dear " Father, and our moſt dread Sovereign of glori- " ous and ever bleſſed Memory, King James, who " ſaw and approved all the Opinions of this Book. " And he in his rare Wiſdom and Judgment, would " never have allowed them, if they had croſſed with " Truth and the Church of England. Fourthly, We " muſt be bold to ſay, that we cannot conceive what " Uſe there can be of Civil Government in the Com- " mon-wealth, or of Preaching, or external Mi- " niſtry in the Church, if ſuch fatal Opinions, as " ſome which are oppoſite and contrary to theſe " delivered by Mr. Mountague are, ſhall be publick- " ly taught and maintained. Fifthly, We are cer- " tain that all or moſt of the contrary Opinions " were treated of at Lambeth, and ready to be pub- " liſhed; but then Q. Elizabeth of famous Memo- " ry, upon notice given how little they agreed with " the Practice of Piety and Obedience to all Govern- " ment, cauſed them to be ſuppreſſed; and ſo they " have continued ever ſince, till of late ſome of them " have received Countenance at the Synod of Dort. " Now this was a Synod of that Nation, and can be " of no Authority in any other National Church till " it be received there by publick Authority. And " our Hope is, that the Church of England will be " well adviſed, and more than once over, before " ſhe admit a Foreign Synod, eſpecially of ſuch a " Church as condemneth her Diſcipline and manner " of Government; to ſay no more.

" And further, We are bold to commend to your " Grace's Wiſdom this one Particular, His Majeſty " (as we have been informed) hath already taken " this Buſineſs into his own Care, and moſt wor- " thily referred it in a right Courſe to Church con- " ſideration. And we well hoped, that without " further trouble to the State, or breach of Unity " in the Church, it might have been well and order- " ly compoſed, as we ſtill pray it may.

" Theſe Things conſidered, we have little to ſay " for Mr. Mountague's Perſon; only thus much we " know, he is a very good Scholar, and a right " honeſt Man: A Man every way able to do God, " his Majeſty, and the Church of England great " Service. We fear he may receive Diſcouragement; " and (which is far worſe) we have ſome cauſe to " doubt this may breed a great Backwardneſs in able " Men to write in the Defence of the Church of " England, againſt either home or foreign Adverſa- " ries, if they ſhall ſee him ſink in Fortune, Repu- " tation, or Health, upon occaſion of his Book. " And this we moſt humbly ſubmit to your Grace's " Judgment, and Care of the Church's Peace and " Welfare.

1626. " Welfare. So commending your Grace to the Pro" tection of Almighty God,

" We ſhall ever reſt at

" Your Grace's Service,

" Apr. 2.1626. Jo. Roffen. Jo. Oxon. Guil. Meneven."

The Duke eſpouſed the Cauſe.

The Duke's eſpouſing this Cauſe, and the King's reproving the Houſe of Commons for meddling in it, did but more exaſperate the adverſe Party, who were now Enemies to Mountague not as an Arminian, but as an Inſtrument (in their Thoughts) of Arbitrary Power. And it was indeed the State Intereſt that gave the great Diſtinction to theſe School Opinions. Thoſe Divines who adher'd to the more rigid Opinions of St. Auſtin, Calvin, and the Synod of Dort, they were at this time of the Country Party, in favour with the People, and with the prevailing Side in Parliament; ſo they eſtabliſh'd to themſelves the Reputation of being ſound and orthodox Proteſtants: While the other Divines who went back to the Foundations of Religion, and to the Import of the Scriptures, and to the Senſe of the Primitive Fathers, in rejecting the hard Decrees of Reprobation, and in reconciling the Will of Man with the Grace of God; they were eminently of the Court-Party, and Favourites of the King and the Duke: and under a Prejudice upon this Civil more than a Religious Account, they were charg'd with Popery and Arminianiſm, only to make them the more odious to the Common People. Even the Arminians in Holland ſuffer'd more as a State Faction than as a Religious Sect; they were found Adverſaries to the Rights and Liberties of the People; and it was under that Character they were made Hereticks, rather than for their abſtracted Notions in Divinity. And it was the ſame now in England; the Doctrinal Controverſie would have created no great Difference, if there had not been a Political Diviſion in it.

Arminians hated as a Civil Faction.

Many Anſwers to Mr. Mountague's Book.

It was this very Reaſon that now inflam'd the Commons againſt Mr. Mountague; and they would have ſhewn their Indignation at his having ſuch an Intereſt at Court, if this Parliament had not been ſo very abruptly diſſolv'd. And this again encreas'd the Prejudice againſt what they now call'd the Arminian Party; and the Cry againſt them was ſo popular, that many Divines were encouraged to confute the Principles of Mr. Mountague's Book, and to repreſent them as falſe and pernicious. In this Deſign Dr. Sutcliff, Mr. Burton, Mr. Rowſe, Mr. Yates, Mr. Wotton, and even a Biſhop of the Church, Dr. Carleton, engaged themſelves. Their Writings ſerv'd to heighten the Jealouſies of the Wiſer, and to confirm the Prejudices of the weaker Men. This was ſoon improv'd into ſuch a univerſal Diſlike of the dreadful Name of Arminianiſm, that even the King and the Duke began to think it not ſafe and honourable to ſupport a Cauſe that was generally run down by the Voice of the People: And therefore at the opening of the ſecond Parliament, ſummon'd to meet Feb. 162⅚, the Duke ſeem'd inclinable to drop his Concern for Mountague, the better to reconcile himſelf to ſome of the leading Members: And for the ſame Reaſon his Majeſty was diſpos'd to leave Mr. Mountague to the free Proſecution deſign'd againſt him, and not to interpoſe in his Favour; that he might not thereby interrupt his more important Affairs. Biſhop Laud, who was a zealous Friend to the Perſon and Opinions of Mr. Montague, was ſenſible of this Intention of the Court to deſert him: It was on ſuch a Proſpect that he made this Entry in his Diary, Jan. 29. Sunday. I underſtand what D. B. had collected concerning the Cauſe, Book, and Opinions of Richard Mountague, and what R. C. had determined with himſelf therein. Methinks I ſee a Cloud ariſing and threatning the Church of England: God of his Mercy diſſipate it. 1626.

The King and Duke were inclined to deſert Mr. Mountague.

Houſe of Commons reſolve to proceed againſt him.

As ſoon as the Parliament began Feb. 6. the Commons had an immediate Eye upon Mountague, and reſolv'd to call him to Account. This rais'd the Curioſity of many Peers to underſtand what the Tenets were, and how they differ'd from the Calviniſtical Opinions which were commonly called the Doctrine of the Church, and were then the generally received Senſe of the Articles of it. To this end, a Conference was procured by the Earl of Warwick to be held in the Duke of Buckingham's Houſe in Preſence of his Grace and many others of the Nobility, upon Saturday Feb. 11. between Dr. Buckeridge Biſhop of Rocheſter and Dr. White Dean of Carliſle on the ſide call'd Arminian, and Dr. Morton Biſhop of Litchfield, and Dr. Preſton Preacher of Lincolns-Inn, on the other ſide. This Conference was again renew'd in the ſame Place upon Friday Feb. 17. wherein Mr. Mountague himſelf appear'd in the room of Biſhop Buckeridge. The Succeſs of theſe Conferences was differently reported, according to the different Affection of the Hearers. The Parliament in the mean time began with returning Thanks to the King for his gracious Anſwer to their late Petition for Religion (a). And when the Houſe of Commons fell upon the Subject of Grievances, thinking their Liberty and Property to depend much on the eſtabliſh'd Faith and Worſhip, they appointed a Committee to conſider of the State of Religion and the Growth of Popery. To this Committee the Houſe referred the Examination of Mr. Mountague's Appeal to Ceſar; who, on Apr. 18. making their Report by Mr. Pym to the Houſe, theſe Articles were drawn up againſt him.

Hence a Conference between Divines of each Opinion.

(a) The good King loſt much of the Affections of the People, by eſpouſing the Cauſe and Intereſt of the Higher and more Rigid Clergy, who in the Name of Conformity exceeded all the Rules and Orders, and Cuſtoms of the Church. This Super-Conformity approaching nearer to the Roman Pomps and Ceremonies was about this time very eminent in the Church of Durham, as we may take from the Words of the Common's Declaration and Impeachment upon the Complaint of Peter Smart Clerk, againſt John Coſin Dr. in Divinity, Ferdinando Morecraft, and other Prebendaries in 1640. That after the Death of Dr. James, late Biſhop of Durham (1617.) Dr. Neale ſucceeding him in that Biſhoprick, during the time he was Biſhop, the ſaid Dr. Coſin, Ferd. Morecraft, &c. with Rich. Hunt, late Dean, and others, late Prebendaries of Durham, took away the Communion-Table of that Cathedral Church, and erected an Altar of Marble Stones, ſet upon Columns, with many Cherubims thereupon, and a carved Skreen curiouſly painted and guilded, ſet over the ſame: Which Altar, Copes, Organs, Images, Pictures, with other Furniture, and unlawful Alterations in the ſaid Church, coſt the ſaid Dean and Chapter above two thouſand Pounds. To which Altar, thus ſet up, were frequent Bowings, which Bowing did encreaſe after Dr. Coſin came to be Prebend there, who did officiate at the ſaid Altar, with his Face toward the Eaſt, and Back toward the People: That the ſaid Dean and Prebendaries bought one Cope found in a Search for Maſs Prieſts, whereupon was embroider'd the Image of the Trinity; and other two Copes, one having a Crucifix, &c. That they firſt changed the Morning Prayer, read plainly and diſtinctly at ſix a Clock, and then took it quite away; and inſtead thereof, divided the Ordinary Morning Service, and Singing, into two Parts. That they ſet up and renewed many gorgeous Images, and Pictures; three whereof were Statues of Stone, one of which ſtanding in the midſt, repreſented the Picture of Chriſt, with a Golden Beard, a Blew Cap, and Sun-Rays upon his Head. That they uſed an exceſſive Number of Candles, more upon a Saint's Day than upon a Lord's Day; and cauſed the ſame Candles to be lighted in the ſaid Church, in a new ſtrange and ſuperſtitious manner, burning two hundred Wax Candles in one Candlemas Night, whereof there were about ſixty upon, and about the Altar. That they did abſolutely forbid the Pſalms in Metre, and would have only Anthems, and namely one of the three Kings of Colen. That they cauſed many Pictures and carved Images to be ſet upon the Font, &c. That they cauſed a Knife to be kept in the Veſtry for cutting of the Sacramental Bread, and appropriated to that Uſe, which they commonly called the Conſecrated Knife, &c.

Theſe Fopperies ſo lately introduced, did not, perhaps, gain over one Papiſt; however the good Meaning of ſome few; but did diſturb and alienate the Minds of Proteſtants, and created that Averſion to Cathedral Service, which was likely enough to end in the Ruin of Cathedral Churches.

Articles

Articles exhibited by the Commons againſt Richard Mountague, Clerk.

Articles of the Commons againſt Mr. Mountague.

"THat he the ſaid Richard Mountague, in or about the 21ſt Year of the Reign of our late Sovereign King James of famous Memory, hath cauſed to be printed, and in his Name to be publiſhed, one Book called An Anſwer to the late Gagg of Proteſtants; and in or about Ann. 22. of the ſame King, he cauſed to be printed and publiſhed one other Book entituled, A Treatiſe of the Invocation of Saints; and likewiſe in the firſt Year of his Majeſty's Reign that now is, he procured to be printed, and in his Name to be publiſhed, another Book entituled, An Appeal to Cæſar: In every of which Books he hath maintained and confirmed ſome Doctrine contrary or repugnant to the Articles agreed by the Archbiſhop and Biſhops of both Provinces and the whole Clergy holden in the Convocation at London 1562. for avoiding Diverſity of Opinions, and for eſtabliſhing Conſent touching true Religion: All which appears in the Places hereafter mentioned, and in divers other Places and Paſſages of the ſame Books: And by his ſo doing, hath broken the Laws and Statutes of this Realm in that Caſe provided, and very much diſturbed both the Peace of Church and Commonwealth.

"I. Whereas in the 35th Article of the Articles aforementioned it is declared, That the ſecond Book of Homilies doth contain a good and wholſome Doctrine, in the 16th Homily of which Book it is determined, That the Church of Rome as it is at preſent, and hath been for the ſpace of 900 Years and odd, is ſo far wide from the Nature of a true Church, that nothing can be more; He the ſaid Richard Mountague, in ſeveral Places of his ſaid Book called the Anſwer to the Gagg, and in his other Book called the Appeal, doth adviſedly maintain and affirm, that the Church of Rome is and ever was a true Church ſince it was a Church.

"II. Whereas in the ſame Homily it is likewiſe declared, that the Church of Rome is not built upon the Foundation of the Prophets and Apoſtles; and in the 28th Article of the ſaid Articles, that Tranſubſtantiation overthroweth the Nature of a Sacrament; and in the 25th Article, that Five other reputed Sacraments of the Church of Rome are not to be accounted Sacraments: yet, contrary and repugnant hereunto, He the ſaid Richard Mountague doth maintain and affirm in his Book aforeſaid, called The Anſwer to the Gagg, that the Church of Rome hath ever remained firm upon the ſame Foundation of Sacraments and Doctrine inſtituted by God.

"III. In the 19th Article it is further determined, that the Church of Rome hath erred not only in their Living and Matters of Ceremony, but alſo in Matters of Faith; he the ſaid Richard Mountague ſpeaking of thoſe Points which belong to Faith and good Manners, Hope and Charity, doth in the ſaid Book called the Gagg, affirm and maintain, that None of theſe are controverted in their Points, meaning the Proteſtants and Papiſts. And notwithſtanding that in the 31ſt Article it is reſolved, that the Sacrifice of Maſſes in which, as it is commonly ſaid, the Prieſt did offer Chriſt for the Quick and the Dead to have Remiſſion of Pain and Guilt too, is a blaſphemous Fable and dangerous Deceit; this being one of the Points controverted between the Church of England and the Church of Rome; the ſaid Richard Mountague, in his Book called the Gagg, doth affirm and maintain, that the controverted Points are of a leſſer and inferior Nature, of which a Man may be ignorant without any danger of his Soul at all; A Man may reſolve to oppoſe this or that without Peril of periſhing for ever.

"IV. Whereas in the 2d Homily entituled againſt peril of Idolatry, contained in the aforeſaid Book of Homilies, approved by the 35th Article aforementioned, it is declared, that Images teach no good Leſſon neither of God nor Godlineſs, but all Error and Wickedneſs; he the ſaid Richard Mountague, in his Book the Gagg aforeſaid doth affirm and maintain, that Images may be uſed for the Inſtruction of the ignorant, and Excitation of Devotion.

"V. That in the ſame Homily it is plainly expreſſed, that the attributing the Defence of certain Countries to Saints is a ſpoiling of God of his Honour, and that ſuch Saints are but the Dii tutelares of the Gentile Idolaters; the ſaid Richard Mountague hath notwithſtanding, in his ſaid Book entituled, A Treatiſe concerning the Invocation of Saints, affirmed and maintained, That Saints have not only a Memory, but a more peculiar Charge of their Friends, and that it may be admitted that ſome Saints have a peculiar Patronage, Cuſtody, Protection and Power, as Angels alſo have, over certain Perſons and Countries by ſpecial Deputation, and that it is no Impiety ſo to believe.

"VI. Whereas in the 17th of the ſaid Articles it is reſolved, that God hath certainly decreed by his Counſel, ſecret to us, to deliver from Curſe and Damnation thoſe whom he hath choſen in Chriſt out of Mankind, and to bring them by Chriſt to everlaſting Salvation; wherefore they which be endued with ſo excellent a Benefit of God, be called according to God's Purpoſe working in due Seaſon, they through Grace obey the Calling, they be juſtified freely, walk religiouſly in good Works, and at length, by God's Mercy, attain to everlaſting Felicity: He the ſaid Richard Mountague, in the ſaid Book called The Appeal, doth maintain and affirm, that Men juſtified may fall away, and depart from the State which once they had; they may ariſe again and become new Men poſſibly, but not certainly nor neceſſarily: And the better to countenance this his Opinion, he hath in the ſame Book wilfully added, falſified, and changed divers Words of the 16th of the Articles before mentioned, and divers other Words both in the Book of Homilies and in the Book of Common-Prayer, and ſo miſ-recited and changed the ſaid Places. He doth alledge in the ſaid Book called The Appeal, endeavouring thereby to lay a moſt wicked and malitious Scandal upon the Church of England, as if ſhe did herein differ from the Reformed Churches of England, and from the Reformed Churches beyond the Seas; and did conſent to thoſe pernicious Errors which are commonly called Arminianiſm, and which the late famous Queen Elizabeth and King James of happy Memory did ſo piouſly and diligently labour to ſuppreſs.

"VII. That the ſaid Richard Mountague, contrary to his Duty and Allegiance, hath endeavour'd to raiſe great Factions and Diviſions in this Commonwealth, by caſting the odious and ſcandalous Name of Puritans upon ſuch his Majeſty's loving Subjects as conform themſelves to the Doctrine and Ceremonies of the Ch. of England, under that Name laying upon them divers falſe and malicious Imputations, ſo to bring them into Jealouſie and Diſpleaſure with his moſt excellent Majeſty, and into Reproach and Ignominy with the reſt of the People, to the great danger of Sedition and Diſturbance in the State, if it be not timely prevented.

"VIII. That the Scope and End of the ſaid Richard Mountague, in the Books before mentioned, is to give Encouragement to Popery, and to withdraw his Majeſty's Subjects from the true Religion eſtabliſhed to the Roman Superſtition, and conſequently to be reconciled to the See of Rome: all which he laboureth by ſubtle and cunning ways, whereby God's true Religion hath been much ſcandaliz'd, thoſe Miſchiefs introduced which the Wiſdom of many Laws hath endeavoured to prevent, the Devices and Practices of his Majeſty's Enemies have been furthered and advanced to the great Peril and Hazard of our Soveraign Lord the 1626. " King, and of all his Dominions and loving Subjects.

" IX. That the ſaid Richard Mountague hath inſerted into the ſaid Book called The Appeal, divers Paſſages diſhonourable to the late King his Majeſty's Father of famous Memory, full of Bitterneſs, Railing, and injurious Speeches to other Perſons, diſgraceful and contemptible to many worthy Divines both of this Kingdom and of other Reformed Churches beyond the Seas, impious and profane in ſcoffing at Preaching, Meditating, and Conferring, Pulpits, Lectures, Bible, and all Shew of Religion: All which do aggravate his former Offences, having proceeded from malicious and envenomed Heat againſt the Peace of the Church, and the Sincerity of the Reformed Religion publickly profeſſed and by Law eſtabliſhed in this Kingdom.

" All which Offences being to the Diſhonour of God, and of moſt miſchievous Effect and Conſequence againſt the Good of this Church and Commonwealth of England, and of other his Majeſty's Realms and Dominions; the Commons aſſembled in Parliament do hereby pray, that the ſaid Rich. Mountague may be puniſhed according to his Demerits, in ſuch exemplary manner, as may deter others from attempting ſo preſumptuouſly to diſturb the Peace of Church and State, and the Book aforeſaid may be ſuppreſſed and burnt."

The Conſequence does not appear.

It does not appear whether theſe Articles were preſented to the King, or preferred in any Judicial manner, or whether Mr. Mountague gave in any Anſwer, or made any other publick Vindication. It is moſt probable that the Commons were ſo immers'd in the Impeachment of the Duke of Buckingham, that they had not leiſure to proſecute this inferior Cauſe before their Diſſolution: Nor did the King take any notice of this Complaint, or ſuffer it to be debated in Convocation. He thought it a Diſpute fitter to be ſilenc'd than to be determined; and therefore by Advice of his Biſhops, he iſſued out a Proclamation on June 14. declaring, " not only to his own People, but to all the World, his utter diſlike of all thoſe who to ſhew the Subtilty of their Wits, or to pleaſe their own Humours, or vent their own Paſſions, do, or ſhall adventure to ſtir, or move any new Opinions, not only contrary but differing from the Sound and orthodoxal Grounds of the true Religion, ſincerely profeſſed in the Church of England; and alſo aſſuring his Subjects of his full and conſtant Reſolution, that neither in matter of Doctrine, nor Diſcipline of the Church, nor in the Government of the State, he will admit of the leaſt Innovation: but by God's Aſſiſtance will ſo guide the Scepter of theſe his Kingdoms and Dominions (by the Divine Providence put into his hand) as ſhall be for the Comfort and Aſſurance of his Sober, Religious and well affected Subjects, and for the ſuppreſſing and ſevere puniſhing of ſuch as out of any ſiniſter Reſpects or Diſaffection to his Perſon or Government, ſhall dare, either in Church or State, to diſtract or diſquiet the Peace thereof. He thereupon commands all his Subjects (the Clergy moſt eſpecially, both in England and Ireland) that from thenceforth they ſhould carry themſelves ſo wiſely, warily and conſcionably, that neither by Writing, Preaching, Printing, Conferences, or otherwiſe, they raiſe any Doubts, or Publiſh or Maintain any new Inventions or Opinions concerning Religion, than ſuch as are clearly grounded and warranted by the Doctrine and Diſcipline of the Church of England heretofore publiſhed and happily eſtabliſh'd by Authority. Straitly charging all Archbiſhops and Biſhops in their ſeveral Dioceſſes, as alſo Counſellors of State, Judges and Miniſters of Juſtice, ſpeedily to reclaim and repreſs all ſuch Spirits as ſhall adventure hereafter to break this Rule of Sobriety, and due Obedience to his Majeſty's Laws, and this Religious Duty to the Church of God, or in the leaſt degree attempt to violate this Bond of Peace: Adding this further Intimation of his Royal Pleaſure, that whoever from henceforth ſhall take the Boldneſs, wilfully to neglect this his Majeſty's Gracious Admonition; and either for the ſatisfying of their unquiet and reſtleſs Spirits, or for expreſſing of their raſh and undutiful Inſolencies, ſhall wilfully break that Circle of Order, which without apparent Danger both to Church and State may not be broken, his Majeſty will proceed againſt them with that ſeverity, as upon due Conſideration had of their Offences and Contempts, they and every one of them ſhall deſerve, &c."

The King iſſues a Proclamation againſt Innovating in the Doctrine or Diſcipline of the Church.

This Proclamation did but encreaſe the Fears of Popery and Arminianiſm.

But this wiſe Proclamation was known to be meant not ſo much to reſtrain Mountague, as to diſcourage and ſuppreſs the Anſwers that were made to him; and therefore did but ſerve to improve the Jealouſies of Arminianiſm and growing Popery: which Jealouſies however unreaſonable, did ſo much obſtruct the King's Intereſt, that it had been more happy if he would not have ſeemed a Party in any ſcholaſtick Queſtions.

Caſe of Biſhop Goodman.

Another Occaſion that much encreaſed the Fears of Popery was a Sermon before the King, on March 26, the fifth Sunday in Lent, Preach'd by Dr. Goodman Biſhop of Glouceſter; who aſſerted the Real Preſence of Chriſt in the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, in ſuch a poſitive and literal Explication, that his Doctrine ſeem'd to differ little but in Word from the groſs Abſurdity of Tranſubſtantiation. This liberty of treading upon the Borders of Popery, taken before the King himſelf, was an Offence to the greateſt Part of the Auditory, and quickly rais'd ſuch a Noiſe in Court and Country, that his Majeſty found himſelf obliged to ſuffer ſome Cogniſance to be taken of it: And accordingly on Wedneſ. following March 29. there were great Debates in Convocation upon the Subject of this Sermon; but having no Licenſe for that purpoſe, they let fall the Matter without any Reſolutions in it. And his Majeſty thought it a more effectual Method to refer the Conſideration of the Sermon to the Lord Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and the Biſhops of Wincheſter, Durham and St. David's; who at the King's Command met together on Wedneſday Apr. 12. and after ſome Conſult agreed to give this Anſwer to the King. That ſome Things in that Sermon were ſpoken leſs cautiouſly, but nothing falſely, That nothing was innovated by him in the Doctrine of the Church of England. But to avoid Offence, it might be very proper that the Biſhop ſhould preach the Sermon again at ſome time to be choſen by himſelf, and ſhould then ſhew how or wherein he was miſunderſtood by his Auditors; which by Order of the King the Biſhop did accordingly perform. But this was by no means a Satisfaction to the World, becauſe it looked like a reciting and at beſt but a ſoftning of the Error, which ought to have been plainly renounc'd: there being Reaſon enough to ſuſpect that Preacher of leaning toward Popery, who to the ſingle Scandal of his Order was afterward a declared Profeſſor of it.

Archbiſhop and Biſhops give their Opinion not in Convocation.

Convocation meets.

A Convocation had been ſummon'd to meet a Day after the Parliament, upon Feb. 7. 162⅚. but no matters of Religion were debated in it, excepting the forementioned Subject of Biſhop Goodman's Sermon; of which Archbiſhop Laud has entered it in his Diary, March 29. In the Convocation held that Day, there was much debating concerning the Sermon which Gabriel Goodman, Biſhop of Glouceſter, had preached before the King on the Sunday preceeding, being the Fifth Sunday of Lent. This debating ſeems to have been only in the Upper Houſe of Convocation, of which the Party offending was a Member, as well as the Writer who took this Note of it. And their Lordſhips ſeem to have enter'd on this Debate by Direction from the King, who immediately after took away the Cauſe from all dependence in Convocation, and referred it to a Committee of Biſhops appointed by his own Royal Authority; who reported their Judgment to the King as before related.

Not a Word in Convocation about Mr. Mountague or his Controverſie.

It is more to be admired, that the Controverſie about Arminianiſm and the Advances toward Popery, ſhould not be once mention'd in Convocation, when it had ſo much divided the Church, and diſturb'd the whole Kingdom, and was now brought into the Houſe of Commons, where the Articles exhibited againſt Mountague muſt to the greateſt degree affect the Church and Clergy. The Reaſon of this paſſive Silence in Convocation is thus accounted for by a Writer who beſt knew the Secret Hiſtory of thoſe Times. "But nothing (ſays he) was of ſuch concernment to a Convocation as the Cauſe of Mountague, vexed and moleſted by the Commons in both "the Parliaments, for ſuppoſed Popery and Arminianiſm, matters meerly Doctrinal. And poſſibly it "may be admired, that they ſhould do nothing in a "Matter of their own Peculiar, having his Majeſty "to their Friend: For it appears in the Letter of the "three Biſhops before mention'd to the Duke of "Buckingham, That his Majeſty had taken that Buſineſs into his own Care, and had moſt worthily referred "it in a right Courſe to Church Conſideration. And "it appears alſo by the Breviate, p. 8. that on Sunday, April 22. of this preſent Year, His Majeſty "had commanded all the Biſhops to come before him, and "reprehended ſuch as came (being fourteen in Number) for being ſilent in Cauſes which concerned the "Church, and had not made known to him what might "be profitable or unprofitable for it, the Cauſe whereof "he was ſo ready to promote. But then we are to call "to Mind, that Laud not long ſince had been ſent "by the Duke of Buckingham to conſult with Andrews, and learn of him what he thought fitting "to be done in the Cauſe of the Church, and more "eſpecially in the Five Articles ſo hotly agitated "between the Remonſtrants and Contra-Remonſtrants "in the Belgick Provinces. And it appears by the "Event, that Andrews did not hold it fit for any "thing to be done in that Particular, as the Caſe "then ſtood; the Truth in thoſe Opinions not being ſo generally entertained amongſt the Clergy, "nor the Archbiſhop, and the greater part of the "Prelates, ſo inclinable to them, as to venture "the determining of thoſe Points to a Convocation."

The Miſfortune of the Bps. who were called Arminian.

There is little more of moment relating to Church Affairs. Biſhop Laud, and thoſe other Prelates and Divines who lay under the Odium of Arminians and Popiſhly affected, becauſe they were of a larger Underſtanding, and a more publick Spirit than many others of their Order, were unhappily engag'd in the Intereſt of the Duke of Buckingham, and very forward in thoſe Meaſures which the King unfortunately took: And their being thus made a Court Faction, brought a popular Diſtruſt and Hatred of them. And a further Occaſion now offer'd to render them the more ſuſpected as Inſtruments of a ſomewhat arbitrary Power. His Majeſty's Neceſſities, that aroſe from his not complying with two ſeveral Parliaments, had driven him upon the way of Loan. This Project much diſcontented and diſturbed the People: the King thought it would be a Means to reconcile them, if the Biſhops and Clergy ſhould recommend the Cauſe in their ſeveral Parts of the Country. (a) In order to this, Biſhop Laud, tranſlated from St. David's to Bath and Wells, on June 20. 1626, did now upon the 14th of September following receive a Command from his Majeſty by the Duke of Buckingham, to reduce into form ſome Inſtructions partly Political partly Eccleſiaſtical, to ſhew the Urgency of the King's Affairs, and his occaſions of Supply to aſſiſt the King of Denmark, to be publiſhed in all Pariſhes within the Realm. The Duke deliver'd the certain Heads to him, and deſired him to put them into formal Inſtructions by the Saturday following; on which Day, Sept. 16. the Biſhop carry'd them to the Duke who approv'd them, and thence to the King who was as well pleas'd with them, and the next Day they were read before the Lords of the Privy Council, who gave a like Approbation of them: Upon which, on Sept. 21, the King ſent them as Letters of Precept to the two Archbiſhops to be communicated to their Suffragans in this Form:

"Moſt Reverend Father in God, Right Truſty and Right "well Beloved Counſellor, we greet you well,

"WE have obſerv'd that the Church and the "State are ſo nearly united and knit together, that tho' they may ſeem two Bodies, yet indeed in ſome relation they may be accounted but "as one, inaſmuch as they are both made up of the "ſame Men, which are differenced only in relation to "Spiritual or Civil Ends. This Nearneſs makes the "Church call in the Help of the State, to ſuccour "and ſupport her, whenſoever ſhe is preſſed beyond her Strength: And the ſame Nearneſs makes "the State call in for the Service of the Church; "both to teach that Duty which her Members know "not, and to exhort them to and encourage them in "that Duty which they know.

"It is not long ſince we order'd the State to ſerve "the Church, and by a timely Proclamation ſettled "the Peace of it: And now the State looks for the "like Aſſiſtance from the Church, that ſhe and all "her Miniſters may ſerve God and us, by Preaching Peace and Unity at Home, that it may be the "better able to reſiſt foreign Force uniting and multiplying againſt it. And to the end that they to "whom we have committed the government of the "Church under us, may be the better able to diſpoſe of the preſent occaſions, we have, with the "Advice of our Council, thought fit to ſend unto "you theſe Inſtructions following, to be ſent by you "to the Biſhops of your Province, and ſuch others "whom it may concern, and by them and all their "Officers directed to all the Miniſters throughout "the ſeveral Dioceſſes; that according to theſe punctually they may Inſtruct and Exhort the People "to ſerve God and Us, and labour by their Prayers "to divert the Dangers which hang over us.

"The Danger in which we are at this time is "great: It is encreaſed by the late Blow given our "good Unkle the King of Denmark, who is the "chief Perſon in thoſe Parts that oppoſed the ſpreading Forces of Spain. If he cannot ſubſiſt there is "little or nothing left to hinder the Houſe of Auſtria from being Lord and Maſter of Germany: and "that is a large and mighty Territory, and ſuch "as, ſhould it be gotten, would make an open way "for Spain to do what they pleaſed in all the Weſt "part of Chriſtendom. For beſides the great Strength "which Germany, once poſſeſſed, would bring to them "which are too ſtrong already, you are to conſider, "Firſt, How it enables them by Land, in that it "will join all or the moſt part of the Spaniard's now "diſtracted Territories, and be a means for him "ſafely and ſpeedily to draw down Forces againſt "any other Kingdom that ſhall ſtand in his way. "Nor can it be thought the Low Countries can hold "out longer againſt him, if he once become Lord "of the Upper Parts. And, Secondly, You are to "weigh how it will advantage him by Sea, and "make him ſtrong againſt us in our particular Dominion of the Seas; which is of eaſie Apprehenſion to all Men: And beſides, if he once get Germany, he will be able, though he had no Gold from "India, to ſupply the Neceſſity of thoſe Wars, and "to hinder all Trade and Traffick of the greateſt "Staple Commodities of this Kingdom, Cloth and "Wool, and ſo make them of little or no Value.

"You are to know therefore, that to prevent this "is the preſent Care of the King and State; and (a) See a Complaint to the Lords of the Council againſt John Biſhop of Lincoln for ſpeaking againſt the Loan, and ſeveral other Informations, in Ruſhworth, p. 224.

“there is no probable way left but by ſending Forces and other Supplies to the ſaid King of Denmark our dear Unkle, to enable him to keep the Field, that our Enemies be not Maſters of all on the ſudden. You are further to take notice, how both we and the whole State ſtand bound in Honour and Conſcience to ſupply the preſent Neceſſity of the King of Denmark: For this Quarrel is more nearly ours, the recovery of the ancient Inheritance of our dear Siſter and her Children. The King of Denmark ſtands not ſo near in Blood unto her as we do: yet for her and our ſakes that brave and valiant King hath adventur'd into the Field; and in that Engagement hath not only hazarded his Perſon, but, as things go now, it may turn to ſome danger to his own Kingdom and Poſterity, ſhould he not receive Aid and Succour from us without delay: which ſhould it happen (as God forbid) will be one of the greateſt Diſhonours that ever this Kingdom was ſtained withall. Nor is Danger and Diſhonour all the Miſchief that is like to follow this Diſaſter: For if it be not preſently relieved, the Cauſe of Religion is not only likely to ſuffer by it in ſome one Part (as it hath already in a fearful manner in the Palatinate) but in all Places where it hath gotten any footing: So that if we Supply not preſently our Allies and Confederates in this Caſe, it is like to prove the Extirpation of true Religion, and the Replanting of Romiſh Superſtition in all the neighbouring Parts of Chriſtendom. And the Coldneſs of this State ſhall ſuffer in all Places as the Betrayer of that Religion elſewhere, which it profeſſeth and honoureth at home, which will be an Imputation never to be waſhed off: And God forbid this State ſhould ſuffer under it.

“Neither may you forget rightly to inform the People committed to your charge, that this War which now grows full of Danger, was not enter'd upon raſhly and without Advice, but you are to acquaint them that all former Treaties by a peaceable way were in the latter end of our dear Father of ever bleſſed Memory diſſolved as fruitleſs and unfit to be longer held on Foot; and this by the Counſel of both Houſes of Parliament then ſitting: So thoſe two great and honourable Bodies of Peers and People repreſented in Parliament, led on this Counſel and Courſe to a War with Spain: To effect this they deſired our Aid and Aſſiſtance, and uſed us to work our ſaid dear Father to entertain this Courſe. This, upon their Perſwaſions and Promiſes of all Aſſiſtance and Supply, we readily undertook and effected, and cannot now be left in that Buſineſs but with the Sin and Shame of all Men: Sin, becauſe Aid and Supply for the Defence of the Kingdom, and the like Affairs of State; eſpecially ſuch as are adviſed and aſſumed by Parliamentary Council; are due to the King from his People, by all Law both of God and Men: And Shame if they forſake the King while he purſues their own Counſel juſt and honourable; and which could not under God but have been as ſucceſsful, if it had been followed and ſupplied in time, as we deſired and laboured for.

“One Thing there is which proves a great hindrance of this State, and not continu'd among the People without great Offence againſt God, Detriment both to Church and State, and our great Diſſervice in this and all other Buſineſs. It is Breach of Unity which is grown too great and common amongſt all ſorts of Men. The Danger of this goes far; for in all States it hath made way for Enemies to enter. We have by all means endeavour'd Union, and require of you to Preach it, and Charity the Mother of it, frequently in the Ears of the People. We know their loyal Hearts, and therefore wonder the more what ſhould cauſe diſtracted Affections. If you call upon them (which is your Duty) we doubt not, but that God will bleſs them with that Love to himſelf, to his Church, and their own Preſervation, which alone will be able to bind up the Scatterings of divided Affections into Strength. To this end you are to lay before them what Miſeries home Diviſions have brought upon this and many other Kingdoms; and to Exhort all Men to embrace it in time. The Danger it ſelf, beſides all other Chriſtian and Prudent Motives, is of force enough (where it is duly conſidered) to make Men join in all Amity againſt a common Enemy, a great and growing Enemy; and to do it in time, before any ſecret and cunning working of his may uſe one Part in a Diviſion to weaken the other.

“And in the laſt place (but firſt and laſt and all times to be inſiſted on) you are to call upon God your ſelves, and to incite the People to join with you in humble and hearty Prayers unto God, that he would be pleaſed now, after long Affliction of his dear People and Children, to look in Mercy both upon them and us; and in particular for the Safety of the King of Denmark and that Army which is left him; that God would Bleſs and Proſper him againſt his and our Enemies. Thus you are to ſtrengthen the Hearts and Hopes of our Loyal Subjects and People in and upon God: And whereas the greateſt Confidence Men have in God ariſeth not only from his Promiſes, but from their Experience likewiſe of his Goodneſs, you muſt not fail often to recall to the Memory of the People with Thankfulneſs, the late great Experience we have had of his Goodneſs towards us: For three great and uſual Judgments, which he darts upon Diſobedient and Unthankful People, are Peſtilence, Famine and the Sword. The Peſtilence did never rage more in this Kingdom than of late; and God was graciouſly pleaſed in Mercy to hear the Prayers which were made unto him; and the ceaſing of the Judgment was little leſs than a Miracle. The Famine threatned us this preſent Year; and it muſt have followed had God rained down his Anger a little longer upon the Fruits of the Earth: But upon our Prayers he ſtaid that Judgment, and ſent us a bleſſed Seaſon, and a moſt plentiful Harveſt. The Sword is the thing which we are now to look to; and you muſt call the People to their Prayers again againſt that Enemy, that God would be pleaſed to ſend the like Deliverance from this Judgment alſo; that in the ſame Mercy he will vouchſafe to ſtrengthen the Hands of his People; that he will ſharpen their Sword, but dull and turn the Edge of that which is in our Enemies Hands; that ſo while ſome fight others may pray for the Bleſſing. And you are to be careful, that you fail not to direct and hearten our loving People in this and all other neceſſary Services, both of God, his Church and Us: that we may have the Comfort of our Peoples Service; the State Safety; the Church Religion; and the People the enjoying of all ſuch Bleſſings as follow theſe. And we end with doubling this Care upon you, and all under you in their ſeveral Places.

The executing of theſe Inſtructions.

Theſe Inſtructions were ſent to the Archbiſhops of Canterbury and York, willing and requiring each of them to ſee the ſaid Inſtructions publiſhed and diſperſed in the ſeveral Dioceſſes of their reſpective Province; who accordingly ſent their Orders to every one of their Suffragans to ſee them made known to the worthy Preachers and Miniſters in their Dioceſs, and, ſo far as their Lordſhips might in their own Perſons, to put theſe things in execution, and to call upon the Clergy under them, in their Preachings and private Conferences to ſtir up all ſorts of People to expreſs their Zeal to God, their Duty to the King, and their Love both to their Country and to one another; that all Good and Chriſtian-like Courſe might 1626. might be taken for the Preſervation of true Religion, both in this Land and throughout all Chriſtendom.

Theſe Inſtructions though Modeſt and Pious, had not the deſired Effect of quieting the Minds of the People, who generally look'd upon them as a Stratagem of State to promote the raiſing of Money without a Parliament: The leaſt Attempts of that kind will be alway odious to the Engliſh People.

However, this Piece of Service recommended Biſhop Laud more and more to the Favour of the King and Duke: And upon the Death of Dr. Lancelot Andrews, Biſhop of Wincheſter and Dean of his Majeſty's Chapel Royal, on Sept. 22. (a) Laud, now Biſhop of Bath and Wells, was admitted to the Deanery of the Chapel on October 6. in which Office he prevailed with his Royal Maſter to break one very ill Cuſtom that had obtained at Court, ſince the firſt entrance of King James. The Cuſtom was, that at what part ſoever of the Publick Prayers the King came into his Cloſet (which looked into the Chapel) the Divine Service then depending was preſently cut off, and an Anthem ſung, to make immediate way for the Sermon. This had an Appearance of Profaneneſs, or Contempt of the Liturgy: And therefore this new Dean did very honourably repreſent the Scandal of it to the King; who piouſly comply'd with a Redreſs of it. Biſhop Laud enters the Matter thus in his own Diary: November 14. or thereabout, taking occaſion from the abrupt both Beginning and Ending of Publick Prayer on the 5th of November, I deſired his Majeſty King Charles, that he would pleaſe to be preſent at Prayers as well as Sermon every Sunday; and that at whatſoever part of the Prayers he came, the Prieſt then officiating might proceed to the End of the Prayers. The moſt Religious King not only aſſented to this Requeſt, but alſo gave me Thanks. This had not before been done from the beginning of King James his Reign to this Day: Now Thanks be to God it obtaineth.

Bp. Laud made Dean of the Chapel.

Reforms one great Abuſe.

The Fears of Popery in England were unhappily augmented by the confidence of the Papiſts in Ireland, who were now driving a Bargain for a Toleration, and offered the Terms of maintaining for the King's Service Five hundred Horſe and Five thouſand Foot (b). To conſider of this Propoſal a great Aſſembly of the whole Nation, both Papiſts and Proteſtants, was called by the then Lord Deputy Falkland to the Hall of the Caſtle of Dublin. The Iriſh Biſhops upon Invitation of the Lord Primate Uſher met firſt at his Houſe; and he and they unanimouſly drew up and ſubſcribed a Proteſtation, againſt the Tolerating Popery, in this Form:

The Inſolence of the Papiſts in Ireland.

" The Judgment of divers of the Archbiſhops and Biſhops " of Ireland, concerning Toleration of Religion.

Archbiſhops and Biſhops in Ireland proteſt againſt any Toleration of Popery.

" THE Religion of the Papiſts is Superſtitious " and Idolatrous; their Faith and Doctrine " Erroneous and Heretical; their Church in reſpect " of both Apoſtatical. To give them therefore a " Toleration, or to conſent that they may freely " exerciſe their Religion, and profeſs their Faith and " Doctrine is a grievous Sin, and that in two re- " ſpects.

" 1. It is to make our ſelves acceſſory not only to " their Superſtitions, Idolatries and Hereſies, and " in a Word to all the Abominations of Popery, " but alſo (which is a Conſequent of the former) " to the Perdition of the Seduced People which pe- " riſh in the Deluge of the Catholick Apoſtacy.

" 2. To grant them Toleration in reſpect of any " Money to be given, or Contribution to be made " by them, is to ſet Religion to Sale, and with it " the Souls of the People, whom Chriſt our Saviour " hath redeemed with his moſt precious Blood. " And as it is a great Sin, ſo alſo a Matter of moſt " dangerous Conſequence: the Conſideration where- " of we commend to the Wiſe and Judicious; be- " ſeeching the God of Truth to make them who are " in Authority Zealous of God's Glory, and of the " Advancement of true Religion: Zealous, Reſo- " lute, and Couragious againſt all Popery, Superſti- " tion and Idolatry. Amen.

This bold and ſeaſonable Declaration, drawn up toward the end of 1626. was publiſhed at Chriſt-Church, before the Lord Deputy and Council, by one of the Subſcribers Dr. George Downham Biſhop of Derry, in the midſt of his Sermon; wherein he ſpoke much againſt Subordinating Religion to Secular Deſigns, and Mens Proſtituting their Conſcience to worldly Reſpects, and ſetting their Souls to Sale for the Gain of earthly Matters, &c. On the next Sunday the Lord Primate preach'd before the ſame Auditory: The Text was 1 John 5. 15. Love not the World, &c. wherein he made a like Application againſt ſelling Toleration to the Papiſts: Rebuking thoſe Who, for worldly Ends, like Judas, would ſell their very Saviour for pieces of Silver. This Conſcience and Courage of the Biſhops did prevent the open Purchaſe of a Toleration of Popery, and put the Government upon finding out another way to maintain Forces for the Defence of that Kingdom. (c)

And now to proſecute the Series of Civil Affairs in the Third of Charles I. 1627. The King engaged in an unſeaſonable War with France, made his Subjects more indifferent in it, by leaving the whole Management to his Favourite the Duke of Buckingham; who obtained a large Commiſſion to be Admiral of the Fleet, and Commander General of all the Land Forces; and to Conduct and Employ them according to ſuch private Inſtructions as he ſhould receive from his Majeſty; and to advance to the Order of Knighthood ſuch Perſons employ'd in the Fleet and Army, as he in his Diſcretion ſhould think fit. 1627. 3 Car. I.

French War committed to the Duke of Buckingham.

With theſe full Powers the Duke ſet Sail from Portſmouth on June 27. with a Fleet conſiſting of One hundred Sail of Ships, of which Ten only were the Kings Men of War, and 6 or 7000 Land Soldiers. Toward the latter end of July he appeared before the Town of Rochel, and ſent a Meſſage to them to join with him in Relief of the oppreſſed Proteſtants in France. But the Rochellers who were ſo importunate for the coming of the Engliſh, were now afraid of their Appearance, and ſhut their Gates againſt them. Upon this Surprize the Duke ſent Sir William Beecher on Shoar, accompanied by the Duke of Sobiez and commiſſioned with a Letter of Credence from his Majeſty of Great Britain. With ſome difficulty they were

1627. were admitted into the Town, and the Magiſtrates for their more ſolemn Reception called an Aſſembly, in which Sir William Beecher ſpoke to this Effect:

Sir Will. Beecher's Speech to them.

"That the Duke of Buckingham was come with a "great Fleet and Army to their Aſſiſtance, which "his Royal Maſter had ſent out of a fellow-feeling "of their Sufferings, to require from the King of "France a performance of the late Articles of Peace, "made by the King of England's Mediation on behalf "of the Proteſtants in France. Declaring, that if "they ſhould now refuſe to accept the Deliverance "offered to them, he muſt proteſt before God and "Man, in the Name of the King his Maſter, that his "ſaid Maſter was fully cleared of his Engagements "upon Honour and Conſcience for their Relief."

This Declaration was ſeconded by the earneſt Sollicitations of their Friend and Country-man the Duke of Sobiez: But the Magiſtrates and chief Inhabitants were poſſeſſed with ſuch a fear of the King of France his Army then upon a March againſt them; and were many of them ſo govern'd by a Court-Party in the Town, that they dar'd give no better Anſwer than this of Suſpence and Forbearance:

Their Anſwer.

"That they "did render all humble and hearty Thanks to his "Majeſty of Great-Britain for the Care he had of "them; and to the Duke for his Forwardneſs and "Readineſs to do his beſt Service for their Good. "But they were bound by Oath of Union to do no- "thing without the common Conſent of the reſt of "their Proteſtant Brethren in France. And there- "fore they muſt pray the King of Great-Britain to "excuſe them, in deferring the Conjunction of their "Forces till they had ſent to the reſt of the Prote- "ſtant Towns, who were of the Union with them. "And in the mean time their Prayers and Wiſhes "ſhould be for the happy Progreſs of ſuch Actions "as the Fleet and Army ſhould undertake (a)."

Before the Duke of Sobiez went from the Engliſh Fleet into the Town, the Duke of Buckingham communicated his Deſign to him, to land his Army in the Iſle of Oleran near to Rochel; which Sobiez well approved as feaſible and proper: the French Forces in that Iſland being few, and the Forts weakly manned and victualled: Diſſuading him from any Thoughts of landing upon the Iſle of Rhee; becauſe it was farther diſtant from Rochel, and furniſhed with a conſiderable Force of Horſe and Foot, with a Citadel well fortified, and other Advantages of repelling Invaders and defending it ſelf.

Buckingham intends a Deſcent on Oleran.

Changes his Reſolution and Lands at Rhee.

But the Admiral not ſtaying for the return of Sobiez from Rochel, alters his Reſolution, and directs his Courſe to the Iſle of Rhee; and upon July 30. makes near the Shoar. The next Day he ordered a Squadron of Twelve Ships to lie before the Mouth of Port-Brelen, falling down with the reſt of the Fleet to the Fort de la Pree, againſt which they played with their Canon, ſtill making their Approaches nearer to the Land. Toiras, Governour of the Iſle, being ſufficiently Alarm'd, marched out from the Citadel of St. Martins with all the Strength he could draw together to prevent the Engliſh from landing: But under the Cover of their own Cannon, the braveſt of the Engliſh Officers, Sir John Burroughs, Sir Alexander Bret, Sir Charles Rich (with the French Proteſtant Monſieur St. Blanchard) went firſt a Shore, ſoon followed and ſupported by Twelve hundred Men. The Enemy being a thouſand Horſe and Foot beſides Voluntiers, Immediately advanc'd up to the Engliſh and began a very warm Encounter, wherein were ſlain Sir William Heyden and ſome hundreds of the Engliſh, with Monſieur Blanchard a Proteſtant Agent from the Duke of Rhoan. On the French ſide the Governour's Brother, the Baron of Chuntal, and ſome few others. By degrees the Engliſh forced their way, made the Enemy retreat, and gained room for their whole Army to land. The Governour retir'd with his wounded Men to the Citadel of St. Martins, and if the Engliſh had immediately purſued, to all appearance they had been eaſily Maſters of that Place, and of the whole Iſle. The Fort la Pree near the Landing-place, and meanly provided of Men and Victuals, was alſo ſlighted or neglected, when the eaſie taking of it would have beſt prevented the landing of French Recruits, and was moſt proper to ſecure a Retreat for the Engliſh. But five Days being oddly ſpent before the Engliſh Army moved, gave Toiras opportunity to repleniſh and fortifie his Citadel of St. Martins, and to ſend away to Court for Supplies. 'Tis certain the Court were in a great Aſtoniſhment upon this Engliſh Invaſion; the King fell Sick, as if by Impreſſion of the ill News, and ſent his Reſolution to give the Proteſtants honourable Terms, if they would not join with the Engliſh; inviting the Head of the Party, the Duke of Rohan, with great offers of Money and Honour, to ſecure him from falling in with this great Juncture of Deliverance to his oppreſſed Brethren.

Sharp Action.

After an ill-tim'd Delay the Duke of Buckingham debark'd all his Land Forces, and ſent back Sobiez and Sir William Beecher to Rochel to ſollicite for ſome Recruits; who by their Intereſt ſoon return'd with five hundred Foot. Upon this the Duke in two Days March came with his Army before St. Martins, and publiſhed a Manifeſto, declaring, "His Royal Ma- "ſter's Care and Zeal for the Reformed Churches of "France, to reſtore them to their ancient Liberty "and Splendor: though indeed his laudable Deſigns "for their Good had been well nigh perverted to "their Ruin, by a breach of Promiſe in the French "King; who had employ'd thoſe Engliſh Ships a- "gainſt Rochel, which were lent him upon a ſolemn "Aſſurance of being otherwiſe employ'd, &c." (b)

The Duke proceeds.

Publiſhes a Manifeſto.

Upon Approach of the Duke the French quitted the Town of St. Martins, and retir'd into the Citadel, which the Duke preſently block'd up; and raiſing Entrenchments and Batteries, he fired upon the Fort for two Months together, when he might have ſtarv'd it in leſs time, if he had remember'd to ſtop up a Well within his Trenches, from which the Enemy had their ſecret Draught of Water, during the whole time of the Siege.

Takes the Town of St. Martins.

Before this Place the Engliſh endured much fatigue and loſs; and more eſpecially ſuffered in the Death of that excellent Soldier Sir John Burroughs, who was ſlain on Sept. 20. with a Muſquet ſhot from the Citadel, while he was viewing of the Engliſh Works: His Body was brought over and honourably Interr'd at Weſtminſter.

Death of Sir John Burroughs.

This Expedition proving ſo tedious and ineffectual, raiſed many Diſcontents in England. Some murmured that the Admiral had broke his Word with Duke Sobiez, and landed in a wrong Place: Others ſaid his landing was rather a Feint than a real hearty Attempt; for he did not march quick enough after landing, nor did he take the Fort la Pree: Nor was he now in earneſt beſieging St. Martins; for many Preſents and Complements had continually paſſed between him and the Governour. And in ſhort, the generality of the People of England diſliked a War not ſupported by a Parliament; and ſpoke freely for a new Parliament to be called, and for ſome Miniſters to be queſtioned in it.

The Duke his Expedition cenſur'd.

The King under theſe Perplexities reſolved to ſend a Squadron with Recruits of Men, Ammunition and Proviſion to the Army at Rhee, and commands the Preſs of certain Companies of Marines, to Rendevouz at Plymouth, and thence to be imbark'd for the ſaid Service: Appointing them at firſt to be under the Command of Charles Lord Viſcount Wilmot, but ſoon after Commiſſioning the Earl of Holland to 1627. take them into his Charge, Tranſport and Conduct them to the Iſle of Rhee, and there deliver them to the Duke of Buckingham.

Which comes too late. Some Recruits, being about Sixteen hundred Engliſh and Iriſh, arrived at Rhee about the end of September; before which time the French had got into the Harbour, and reliev'd the Citadel with Proviſions in ſight of our Navy and Army. The Governour Toiras affrighted at the freſh Recruits of the Engliſh, was in great Trouble how to ſend Intelligence to the French Court. At laſt one Sandgrein ventur'd out, and eſcaping the Guards got ſafe to the King: And for fear of his Miſcarriage Toiras prevail'd with three of his Garriſon to ſwim aſhore to the main Continent: One of the three got ſafe to Land and delivered the Meſſage.

Sandgrein.

French K. advances with an Army. The King of France at this alarm draws down his Army towards Rochel, forming as it were a Blockade as if he deſigned the taking of that Town: When the more immediate Intention was by that means to land Forces upon the Iſland of Rhee, and to put in Proviſions into the beſieged Citadel of St. Martins. And this Deſign was effected, ſeveral little Veſſels getting in with a Supply ſufficient to ſupport the Garriſon, and to encourage them to a longer Defence.

Rochellers at laſt declare for the Engl. The Rochellers at this Juncture put forth a Maniſeſto and declar'd for England; and the Duke of Rhoan gave Commiſſions to raiſe Forces to aſſiſt the Engliſh, in preſervation of the Edict of Peace lately granted and ſince violated by the King of France. On the other hand, the King makes publick Declaration, that he will on his part obſerve the ſaid Edict of Peace; and proclaims the Dukes of Rhoan and Sobiez to be Traitors, and offers Reward for the killing of them. The Reformed were very Unfortunate (if not unjuſt) in theſe Meaſures: If they had heartily received the Engliſh at their firſt Arrival, or had continued to reject the joining with them, they might have either way averted their impending Ruin.

French Fleet. But by this time the French had got a great Supply of Shipping from the Spaniard for their Aſſiſtance, which with their own made up above a hundred Sail, ſuperiour to the Engliſh Navy, with which however they declined Engaging, and propoſed nothing more than to get ſuitable Proviſions into the Citadel, and tire out the Beſiegers. To carry on the ſame Deſign, Toiras ſeem'd to enter into a Treaty of Surrender upon honourable Terms: and prevail'd with the Duke for ſafe Conduct to a Meſſenger ſent to the King of France for leave to come off with Honour. The Duke conſents, on condition that an Engliſh Gentleman ſhould go along with the Meſſenger of Toiras, and be ſuffer'd to paſs through France into England: And ſo they went together to the French Court; but there in open breach of Faith the Engliſh Gentleman was ſecur'd, while the Agent of Toiras did his Buſineſs effectually.

Toiras outwits the Duke.

Toiras carried on the ſham-Treaty, and ſpun out the Time ſo long, that he gained his Point of receiving a conſiderable Relief of Men, Victuals and Ammunition: And then broke off the Treaty in Deriſion, ordering his Men upon the Walls to advance their Pikes with Mutton and Fowl upon the Heads of them, to reproach the Engliſh with their newly obtained Plenty. And they were further animated with News of the French landing more Forces near the Meadow-Caſtle (a Place alſo fatally neglected by the Engliſh) againſt whom the Duke ſent out a ſtrong Detachment, leaving his Trenches unguarded; upon which Advantage the Enemy ſally'd out of the Citadel, and got poſſeſſion of the deſerted Trenches; ſo as when the Engliſh after ſome reaſonable Succeſs had forc'd the new Recruits to take refuge under the Cannon of the Citadel, and were returning to their own Camp, they were obliged to diſpute the recovery of their Trenches, and loſt many Lives before they could regain them.

Under theſe Diſcouragements, about the middle of October, the Duke held a Council of War, and thought of a Reſolution to decamp and re-imbark for England. He communicated to Sobiez his Reaſons, that the Seaſon was declining, his Army diminiſh'd, his Proviſions conſum'd, and his Officers adviſing him to Retire. But Sobiez earneſtly diſſuaded the Duke, told him the Relief brought to the Beſieged was not conſiderable; the Earl of Holland's Fleet was coming with Supplies; the Retreat would draw after it the loſs of Rochel, and bring an irreparable Diſhonour to the King of England, in making ſo great an Enterprize to ſo little purpoſe. 1627. The Duke weary.

Upon this the Duke continued the Siege, and ſoon after reſolved to Storm the Citadel and Works: Accordingly on Novem. 6. a general Aſſault was made; but after the loſs of many Men, the Fort was found to be inacceſſible. Yet continues the Siege.

This Repulſe, with the News of more Forces of the French continually pour'd into the Iſland, inclin'd the Duke to raiſe the Siege and return home. So upon Novem. 8. early in the Morning, the Drums beat, and the Army prepared for a March. Upon their firſt Motions of Retreat, the Enemy appeared equal in Foot, and far ſtronger in Horſe, ready to fall upon the Engliſh Rear. The Duke ſeveral times drew up the Army in their March, and made a ſtand to offer Battle: But the wary French declined an open Fight, having projected a greater Advantage upon leſs hazard. For when the Engliſh in their Retreating had enter'd a narrow Cauſey, having on each Hand Salt-Pits and deep Ditches (wherein the Engliſh had neglected to raiſe a Fort at the Entry, and another at the End of it near the Bridge, which if done might have ſecured their Retreat) the French upon this Advantage fell with great Fury upon the Engliſh Horſe, who preſs'd their Foot into great diſorder, and made the Croud ſo tumultuous upon the Bridge that many of the Engliſh were drowned in the River, beſides many that fell into the Salt-Pits, and many falling by the Sword: Yet the Engliſh who had paſſed the Bridge with their true Native Courage rallied again, and drew up to fight their purſuing Enemy, who being afraid of any equal Terms barely repaſs'd the Bridge, which the Engliſh guarded with a ſelect Party all Day, and burnt it down at Night; and without further Attack from the French were put on board the next Day. The Engliſh loſt about 50 Officers, near 2000 common Soldiers, Priſoners of Note 35, and 44 Colours hung up as Trophies in the Church of Noſtre Dame in Paris. The King of France in a bravery diſmiſt the Priſoners, as a kind Token to his Siſter the Queen of England: And when the Lord Montjoy offer'd a round Sum for his Ranſom, the King told him, his Redemption ſhould be only two couple of Engliſh Hounds. If my Lord look'd on this as a Generoſity of the King, 'tis certain others took it as a ſlight upon his Lordſhip, who had gained more Diſhonour in the Retreat than any other Commander; for having his Troops in the Rear charged by the French, he turn'd and broke in upon the Engliſh Foot, and made ſo much Confuſion, that Sir Charles Rich is reported to have cry'd out, Kill him! Kill him! though he be my Brother. The Duke returns inglorious. Retreat dangerous. Loſs of the Engliſh.

When the Duke had thus ſhipp'd his Army on November 9. he ſent in a civil Promiſe to the Rochellers, that he would come again to their Relief; and preſently after ſet Sail for England, and met the Earl of Holland as he was ſetting out from Plymouth, who excuſed his Delay upon theſe Pretences; that when he was firſt ready to go on Board at Plymouth, the Ships with Proviſion were not come out of Chatham; and when the Proviſions were come, Time was ſpent before he could get them to a Rendezvous; and when all Things were fix'd for Sailing the Winds proved contrary. The Duke of Buckingham himſelf had the greater need of Apologies, going out a hated Favourite, and returning an unfortunate General. All he had to plead was, his acting by Advice of a Coun- Apologies of the Duke.

cil of War, and his want of timely Supply (a). The King received him with full Grace and Affection, and only told him, He was glad not to find the Loſs ſo great as Sir Sackvil Crow had repreſented in a Letter to him. But the King's Indulgence made the popular Reſentments greater: Tongues and Pens were ſharpen'd upon this inglorious Expedition; and the Pulpit it ſelf could not be reſtrain'd from ſome Reflections on it: Dr. Moor Prebendary of Wincheſter, a Man of Wit, took occaſion to cite in his Sermon the Saying of Auguſtus, Quintili Vare redde Legiones, which periſhed (ſays he) by the Hiſtorian's Account, propter inſcitiam & temeritatem Ducis, dwelling on the Word Ducis with ſuch a particular Emphaſis, as made moſt of the Auditors underſtand the Alluſion.

Reflections on him.

French K. reſolves now to take Rochel.

The King of France reſolved now upon a formidable Siege of Rochel, and according to the Advice of Montluc, in the Year 1573. he determined to reduce the Town by Famine. In order to which, he drew an entire Circumvallation toward the Continent, with three Forts and many Redoubts, precluding all hopes of Relief by Land; and by Sea the great Miniſter Cardinal Richlieu (who had the utmoſt Zeal for extirpating the Proteſtants) projected the making of a Mole or vaſt Barricado croſs the Channel, about fourteen hundred Yards in length, leaving a ſmall Space in the Middle for the Flux and reflux of the Sea, and cutting off all other manner of Conveyance.

The Rochellers ſend to the King of Engl.

Under this ſad Proſpect the Rochellers ſent over the Duke of Sobiez and other Deputies to lay before the King and Council their Petition and Remonſtrance, to this effect: "They firſt thank his Majeſty for the "great Aſſiſtance and Comfort they had received "by the Fleet ſent in July laſt. Then they take "notice of Application made to the King of Denmark to propound a Peace between the Crowns of "England and France: and if ſuch a Treaty do proceed, they humbly pray that his Majeſty would "inſiſt upon the Capitulation made between the "French King and the Reformed Churches; which "they on their part had kept inviolable, till they "ſaw the Conditions on the other ſide entirely broke. "They repreſent that they are now to be ſhut up by "Land and Sea, and muſt fall into inevitable Ruin "without ſpeedy Succour: They therefore beſeech "his Majeſty with all poſſible Diligence to ſend "them Supplies, and once more to protect them "with his Royal Navy, to prevent the blocking up "their Harbour, They laſtly entreat his Majeſty "and the Lords of the Council, to have ſo much "pity on their indigent Condition, as to permit a "general Collection to be made for them through "England and Ireland. Concluding with their Reſolutions to hold out a Siege, depending on a ſeaſonable Relief from England, being aſſured thereof by the Duke of Buckingham at his Departure, "that he would once more come in Perſon to their "Aſſiſtance." (b)

The King not able to aſſiſt them.

But alas! the Anſwer could be only good Words: For indeed the Rochellers were not reduced to much greater Neceſſities by their Prince, than our King was by his People and his exigent Affairs: Univerſal Diſcontents and repeated Complaints of Grievance. Many Gentlemen ſtood committed for refuſing to comply with the Demands of Loan, and being brought before the Council had been re-demanded to ſeveral Priſons. Sir John Elliot, a Priſoner in the Gate-houſe, had his Petition for Diſcharge rejected. Sir Peter Hayman upon refuſing Compliance to the Loan, was commanded by the Council to go upon his Majeſty's Service in the Palatinate, and did accordingly go. Many of the like Sufferers upon Return of a Habeas Corpus were denied Bail. Archbiſhop Abbot in much Favour with the People, and the moderate Clergy, was confined to a remote Country Houſe, and ſoon after Sequeſtred from his Office and Juriſdiction, given by Commiſſion to thoſe Biſhops whom he reputed his Enemies. Biſhop Williams another Popular Prelate ſuffered many Hardſhips from the Court. The Citizens murmur'd againſt a viſible Decay of Trade, and againſt an arbitrary Impoſt upon ſome Commodities. The Merchants were diſcouraged from building more Ships, when ſo many had been preſſed for the King's Service and not paid. The Mariners came in Multitudes to the Court at White-hall clamouring for their Pay in great Diſorder and Confuſion. And the Land Forces were kept in Pay without their former Wages.

Great Diſcontents in City and Country.

Advice of Sir Robert Cotton.

In this unhappy State of Affairs, Sir Robert Cotton the judicious Antiquary, was called before the King and Council to deliver his Opinion in point of Hiſtory and Law, upon the preſent Juncture of Affairs; which he did to this effect: "That the Houſe of "Auſtria, from the Time of Charles V. had been graſping at a univerſal Monarchy, which had been all "along the Honour and Intereſt of England to oppoſe: And thoſe Engliſh Princes who had moſt "oppoſed it, had always the Affections and Hearts "of their People. That this was the Buſineſs of "the preſent Reign, and the Deſire of the Engliſh "Nation. That to carry on this Deſign the King "muſt have Money; and no way to get Money with "Speed, Aſſurance, and Satisfaction, but by Grant "of Parliament. No way to diſpoſe a Parliament "to ſuitable Grants but by removing all Jealouſies, "eſpecially thoſe relating to Religion and Liberties. "And nothing more plauſible than for the Duke of "Buckingham to be the firſt Adviſer of calling ſuch "a Parliament."

Wiſe and Honeſt.

Reſolution to call a Parliament.

Upon theſe and ſuch like Conſiderations repreſented to the King, a Reſolution was taken at the Council Table on January 29. for a Parliament to meet on the 17th of March following. And to prepare the way, Warrants were ſent to all Parts to releaſe the Impriſon'd Gentry for the Matter of Loan; according to a precedent Order of Council, by which there were ſet at Liberty 19 Knights, 13 Eſquires, and 4 Gentlemen, who had remained under Confinement in ſeveral Counties: 3 Knights, 1 Eſquire, and 4 Londoners, all Priſoners in the Fleet. Two Knights, 1 Eſq; and 3 Londoners in the Gate-houſe: Some in the Marſhalſea; others in the New-Priſon, and ſeveral in the Cuſtody of Meſſengers. One Effect of their Liberty was this, that as faſt as the Writs came down to the Counties and Boroughs, thoſe Gentlemen who had thus ſuffered were moſt in the Peoples Eye to be elected Members, as the fitteſt to aſſert their Countries Liberties and Rights. The like gracious Orders were iſſued from the Council to the Lord Mayor and Aldermen of London, to uſe great Moderation in demanding the Loan from thoſe Citizens who deferr'd a Compliance with it. And among other Arts of ſoftning, Archbiſhop Abbot, Biſhop Williams, and the Lord Briſtol, who had lain under peculiar Hardſhips, had by expreſs Direction their Writs ſent to them to ſit in the Houſe of Peers this enſuing Parliament.

Methods to ſoften the People.

Some unhappy Steps.

Theſe Ways of Wiſdom and Juſtice could not fail of their natural Effects of Peace and Obedience in the People: But at the ſame Time ſome unhappy Meaſures were taken, that ſerved only to renew the late Jealouſies and Fears. For on the Day after the Parliament Writs were teſted, the King granted a Privy Seal, on January 30. to Philip Burlemach, a Dutch Merchant, to receive Thirty thouſand Pounds from the Treaſury, to be returned into the Low Countries to Sir William Balfour and 1627. John Dalbier, for the raiſing of a thouſand German Horſe, with Arms for Horſe and Foot, to be ſent into England by February 28; which though perhaps a neceſſary Preparation for his Majeſty's Foreign Engagements; yet People ſuſpected it the Deſign of a Standing Army: And the more ſo, becauſe the King near the ſame time granted a Commiſſion to twenty three Lords and others, to raiſe Money by Impoſitions in the nature of Exciſe. And the Levying of Ship-Money upon the ſeveral Counties was then under Debate in the Council; as if Methods were already concerted to live without Parliaments, if the approaching Parliament ſhould riſe without giving Money.

Parliament meets. The Parliament being aſſembled on Monday the ſeventeenth of March, the King began with this Speech.

King's Speech. "My Lords and Gentlemen,

"THeſe Times are for Action: Wherefore for Examples ſake, I mean not to ſpend much "Time in Words; expecting accordingly that your "(as I hope) good Reſolutions will be ſpeedy, not "ſpending Time unneceſſarily, or (that I may better ſay) dangerouſly. For tedious Conſultations at "this Conjuncture of Time are as hurtful as ill Reſolutions.

"I am ſure you now expect from me, both to "know the Cauſe of your Meeting, and what to Reſolve on: Yet, I think, there is none here but "knows, that Common Danger is the Cauſe of this "Parliament; and that Supply at this time is the "chief End of it: So that I need but point to you "what to do. I will uſe but few Perſwaſions: For "if to maintain your own Advices, and as now the "Caſe ſtands for the following thereof, the true "Religion, Laws and Liberties of this State, and "the juſt Defence of our true Friends and Allies be "not ſufficient, then no Eloquence of Men or Angels will prevail.

"Only let me remember you, that my Duty moſt "of all, and every one of yours according to his "Degree, is to ſeek the Maintenance of this Church "and Common-wealth: And certainly there never "was a Time, in which this Duty was more neceſſarily requir'd than now.

"I therefore judging a Parliament to be the Ancient, Speedieſt and Beſt Way, in this Time of "Common Danger, to give ſuch Supply as to ſecure "our ſelves, and to ſave our Friends from imminent "Ruin have called you together: Every Man now "muſt do according to his Conſcience. Wherefore "if you (as God forbid) ſhould not do your Duties, "in contributing what the State at this time needs, "I muſt, in diſcharge of my Conſcience, uſe thoſe "other means which God hath put into my Hands, "to ſave that which the Follies of particular Men "may otherwiſe hazard to loſe.

"Take not this as a Threatning, for I ſcorn to "threaten any but my Equals, but an Admonition "from him, that both out of Nature and Duty hath "moſt Care of your Preſervations and Proſperities. "And though I thus ſpeak, I hope that your Demeanours at this Time will be ſuch, as ſhall not "only make me approve your former Counſels, but "lay on me ſuch Obligations, as ſhall tie me by "way of Thankfulneſs to meet often with you. For "be aſſur'd, that nothing can be more pleaſing to "me than to keep a good Correſpondence with "you.

"I will only add one Thing more, and then leave "my Lord Keeper to make a ſhort Paraphraſe upon "the Text I have deliver'd you; which is, To remember a Thing, to the end we may forget it.

"You may imagine, that I came here with a 1627. "doubt of Succeſs of what I deſire, remembring "the Diſtractions of the laſt Meeting. But I aſſure you, that I ſhall very eaſily and gladly forget and forgive what is paſt, ſo that you will at "this preſent Time leave the former ways of Diſtractions, and follow the Counſel lately given "you, To maintain the Unity of the Spirit in the Bond of Peace."

Remarks on this Speech. This Speech was thought to have a greater Air of Majeſty and Sincerity than of Prudence and Affection. A Parliament call'd for Supply gives more for Asking than for Demanding. When the King referred himſelf to their contributing what the State needed, he might have omitted the mention of any other Means put into his Hands. And whatever he himſelf could ſave, he might forbear to prejudge the loſing by the Follies of particular Men. It is pity any Expreſſions ſhould have wanted an Apology; not to take them as a Threatning, and the Reaſon given is ſomewhat too big: I ſcorn to threaten any but my Equals.

The Lord Keeper ſeconded his Majeſty to this effect:

Lord Keeper's Speech. "YOU are here to Conſult and Conclude of "weighty and urgent Buſineſs. The Pope and "Houſe of Auſtria combine to obtain, one a Spiritual, the other a Temporal Monarchy. France is "ſway'd by a Popiſh Faction, that has broke the Articles of Agreement between the King and his Proteſtant Subjects. The Emperor, France and Spain "are in open War againſt Us. The King of Denmark is diſtreſſed, the King of Sweden diverted, "and the Low-Country Men diſabled to give Aſſiſtance.

"For this Cauſe the King hath called you together, to ſtrengthen our ſelves at Home, and encourage our Allies Abroad.

"The great Preparation muſt be Treaſure; for "the giving of which I might preſs many Reaſons: "1. For his Majeſty's ſake who requires it: to "whom ye owe Duty by the Law of God, the "Law of Nature, and your own Allegiance. 2. "For the Cauſe-ſake, the Charity, Honour, and Intereſt of aſſiſting our diſtreſſed Friends Abroad. "Laſtly, In Reſpect of the manner of his Majeſty's "Demand, which is in Parliament, the way that "hath ever beſt pleaſed the Subjects of England.—— "This way his Majeſty hath choſen, not as the only way, but as the fitteſt.—— If this be deferred, Neceſſity and the Sword of the Enemy "make way to the others.—— Reſolve of your "Supplies, that they may be timely and ſufficient, "ſerving the Occaſion. Your Counſel, your Aid, "all is but loſt; if your Aid be either too little "or too late. And his Majeſty is reſolved, that "his Affairs cannot permit him to expect it over "long."

Sir John Finch Speaker. The Commons choſe Sir John Finch to be their Speaker, who being preſented to the King on Wedneſday March 19. made a cuſtomary Speech to be excuſed from that Office; but his Choice, as uſually, was by the King approv'd. (a)

Before they entred upon any Debates, there was a bold Letter communicated to the Members, directed To my noble Friends of the Lower-Houſe of Parliament, reciting many Grievances of the State, induſtriouſly diſperſt and commonly called, A Speech without Doors.

Thurſday, March 20. The Houſe ſettled their grand Committees for Religion, Grievances, Courts of Juſtice and Trade, and drew up a Petition to

The Commons fall upon the Matter of Grievances.

Saturday March 22. Publick Grievances were warmly Debated, Billiting of Soldiers, Loans by Benevolences and Privy Seal, Impriſonment of Subjects refuſing to lend, Denial of Releaſe upon Habeas Corpus. The Houſe inclining not to ſupply his Majeſty, till theſe Grievances were redreſt. To which purpoſe many ſmart Speeches were delivered by Sir Francis Seymour, Sir Thomas Wentworth, Sir Edward Cook, Sir Robert Philips, &c. Sir Benjamin Rudyard ſpoke as a Moderator between King and People, and adviſed To truſt the King, and to breed a Truſt in him, by giving him a large Supply according to his Wants, and then proſtrating our Grievances humbly at his Feet. The chief Advocate for the Prerogative was Sir John Cook, Secretary of State, who yet confeſt that Illegal Courſes had been taken, and that a Redreſs muſt be by Laws and Puniſhment. But he reſolved thoſe Courſes into the Law of Neceſſity; and declar'd, that to offer Grievances before a Supply would ſeem a Condition with his Majeſty, a wiſe King jealous of his Honour.

No Supply without Redreſs of Grievances.

Monday, Mar. 24. Secretary Cook renew'd the Motion of Supply, as preparatory to the Conſideration of Grievances: Other Members argu'd for preferring the Matter of Grievances, and ſaid, They could have no Thanks for giving, till his Majeſty might ſee they had a Right to give.

1628. Tueſday, March 25. Secretary Cook preſented to the Houſe ſome Propoſitions from the King touching Supply; and told them, that as to Aid and Grievances his Majeſty would not ſtand on Precedence in point of Honour. The ſame Committee might conſider both in what Order they pleaſed. Upon which the Houſe reſolved themſelves into a Committee, and made Edward Littleton, Eſq; the Chair-man. They firſt debated the Grievances relating to the Perſon of the Subject: And after many learned Speeches by Mr. Creſwell, Sir Robert Philips, Sir Edward Cook, Mr. Hackwel, and Mr. Selden, it was Reſolved upon the Queſtion, Nemine Contradicente.

Reſolutions of Liberty and Property.

1. "That no Free-Man ought to be detained or "kept in Priſon, or otherwiſe reſtrained by the "Command of the King or the Privy Council, or "any other, unleſs ſome Cauſe of the Commitment, "Detainer or Reſtraint be expreſſed; for which by "Law he ought to be Committed, Detained or Reſtrain'd.

"2. That the Writ of Habeas Corpus may not be "denied, but ought to be granted to every Man "that is committed or detained in Priſon, or other-"wiſe reſtrained; though it be by Command of the "King, the Privy-Council, or any other, he pray-"ing the ſame.

"3. That if a Free-Man be Committed or De-"tained in Priſon, or otherwiſe Reſtrained by the "Command of the King, the Privy-Council, or "any other, no Cauſe of ſuch Commitment, De-"tainer or Reſtraint being expreſſed; for which "by Law he ought to be Committed, Detained or "Reſtrained: and the ſame be return'd upon a "Habeas Corpus, granted for the ſaid Party, then "he ought to be Deliver'd or Bail'd."

After which the Houſe proceeded to take into Conſideration the Grievances relating to the Property of the Subject in his Goods; and came to this Reſolution, Nemine Contradicente.

"That it is the ancient and indubitable Right "of every Free-Man, that he hath a full and ab-"ſolute Property in his Goods and Eſtate: That no "Tax, Tallage, Loan, Benevolence, or other like "Charge, ought to be commanded or levied by the "King, or any of his Miniſters, without common "Conſent by Act of Parliament."

Wedneſday, March 26. The Propoſitions Yeſterday preſented by Secretary Cook from his Majeſty, were now Received and Read; and were as follow; 1628.

Propoſitions from the King.

"1. To furniſh with Men and Victuals Thirty "Ships to guard the Narrow Seas, and all along "the Coaſts.

"2. To ſet out Ten other Ships for the Relief of "the Town of Rochel.

"3. To ſet out Ten other Ships for preſervation "of the Elbe, the Sound and Baltick Sea.

"4. To levy Arms, Cloath, Victual, Pay and "Tranſport, for an Army of 1000 Horſe and 10000 "Foot for Foreign Service.

"5. To pay and ſupply 6000 more for the Ser-"vice of Denmark.

"6. To ſupply the Forts of the Office of Ord-"nance.

"7. To ſupply the Stores of the Navy.

"8. To build Twenty Ships yearly for the en-"creaſe of the Navy.

"9. To repair the Forts within the Land.

"10. To pay the Arrears of the Office of Ord-"nance.

"11. To pay the Arrears of the Victuallers Office.

"12. To pay the Arrear of the Treaſury of the "Navy.

"13. To pay the Arrears due for the Freight of "divers Merchant Ships imployed in his Majeſty's "Service.

"14. To provide a Magazine for Victuals for "Land and Sea Service."

The Debate upon theſe Propoſitions was referred to another Day. And the Commons had a Conference with the Lords about a Petition againſt Recuſants prepared in the Upper, and agreed to by the Lower Houſe. (a) Petition againſt Popiſh Recuſants.

Monday, March 31. The Petition of both Houſes to his Majeſty againſt Popiſh Recuſants was introduc'd by the Lord-Keeper in a ſhort Speech, and then read by him. After Reading, his Majeſty ſpoke thus.

King's Speech on this occaſion.

"My Lords and Gentlemen,

"I Do very well approve the Method of your Pro-"ceedings in this Parliament; A Jove Principium, "hoping that the reſt of your Conſultations will "ſucceed the happier. And I like the Preamble of "the Lord-Keeper; otherwiſe I ſhould have a little "ſuſpected, that you had thought me not ſo careful "of Religion as I have, and ever ſhall be, wherein "I am as forward as you can deſire. And for the "Petition, I anſwer, firſt in general, that I like it "well, and will uſe theſe as well as other Means "for the Maintenance and Propagation of that Re-"ligion wherein I have lived, and do reſolve to die: "But for the Particulars, you ſhall receive a more "full Anſwer hereafter.

"And now I will only add this, that as we pray "to God to help us, ſo we muſt help our ſelves: "For we can have no aſſurance of his Aſſiſtance, if "we do lie in Bed and only Pray without uſing "other Means. And therefore I muſt remember "you, that if we do not make Proviſion ſpeedily, "we ſhall not be able to put one Ship to Sea this "Year, Verbum ſapienti ſat eſt."

King's Anſwer to the Petition.

After this the Clerk read the firſt Article of the ſaid Petition, and the Lord-Keeper read his Majeſty's Anſwer unto the ſame: And ſo through the whole Eight Articles. To all which his Majeſty gave direct and full Satisfaction, concluding, That the Mildneſs that had been uſed towards thoſe of the Popiſh Religion, was upon hope that Foreign Princes thereby might be induced to uſe Moderation towards their Subjects of the Reformed Religion: But not finding that good

1628. good Effect which was expected, his Majeſty reſolveth, unleſs he ſhall very ſpeedily ſee better Fruits, to add a further degree of Severity, to that which in this Petition is deſired.

Wedneſday, April 2. The Propoſitions ſent from the King to the Commons, March 26. were for ſome time debated, and Speeches on that occaſion by Sir Francis Seymour, Sir Nathaniel Rich, Sir John Elliot, Sir Edward Cook, Sir Thomas Wentworth, Sir Henry Martin who ſpoke moſt, with ſome Reflection on the late Managements of War, and ſeem'd averſe to any new Foreign Expeditions. Then the Houſe proceeded to Grievances, and took into Conſideration two other Heads of the Liberty of the Subject in his Perſon, viz. Confinement and Deſignation, to Foreign Imployment; and came to this Reſolution.

Further Reſolutions upon Liberty and Property. Reſolv'd, "That no Free-Man ought to be Con-"fin'd by any Command from the King or Privy-"Council, or any other, unleſs it be by Act of Par-"liament, or by other due Courſe, or Warrant of "Law."

Thurſday, April 3. Mr. Secretary Cook brought this Meſſage to the Houſe of Commons from the King.

Meſſage from the King. "HIS Majeſty having underſtood that ſome Rumours were ſpread abroad of a ſharp Meſſage "yeſterday delivered by me; and of ſome Malici-"ous Words that the Duke ſhould ſpeak Yeſterday "at the Council Board, he commanded me to tell "you of the Malice of thoſe falſe Reports; for that "nothing fell from the Duke, or that Board, but "what was for the Good of this Aſſembly. He "would have you obſerve the Malice of thoſe Spi-"rits that thus put in theſe Jealouſies. Had the "Duke ſo ſpoken he ſhould have contradicted him "himſelf: For all of Us of the Council can tell, he "was the firſt Mover and Perſwader of this Aſſem-"bly of Parliament to the King: Eſteem of the King "according to his Actions, and not theſe Tales. "His Majeſty takes notice of our purpoſe, that on "Friday we will Reſolve upon Supply, which his "Majeſty graciouſly accepts of; and that our free "Gift, without any Condition, ſhould teſtifie to "the World that we will be as far from incroaching "upon his Prerogative, as he will be to incroach "upon our Liberties: And this ſhall well appear "when we preſent our Grievances to him, and then "we ſhall know that he hath no Intention to vio-"late our Liberties; only let us not preſent them "with an Aſperity of Words. He counts it his "greateſt Glory to be a King of Freemen not of "Villains. He thought to have deliver'd this Meſ-"ſage himſelf, but that he feared it would take us "too much time."

Thanks of the Houſe. After ſome Debates on this Meſſage, the Houſe agreed to acknowledge that his Majeſty had put a threefold Obligation on them: 1. In giving them Satisfaction. 2. In giving them Aſſurance (which is a great Law) that he will protect and relieve them. 3. In giving them Advice as may befit the Gravity of that Aſſembly and his own Honour: So they concluded To carry themſelves as their Progenitors had before done, who never were mark'd for ſtepping too far on the King's Prerogative. And then return'd their humble Thanks to his Majeſty. (a)

Friday, April 4. Mr. Secretary Cook deliver'd another Gracious Meſſage from the King to aſſure them of the Enjoyment of their Rights and Liberties. And after ſome Debate the Houſe came to this unanimous Reſolve, That five Subſidies be given to his Majeſty:

Five Subſidies granted. And Mr. Secretary Cook was appointed to acquaint his Majeſty with this Reſolution. 1628.

Monday, April 7. Mr. Secretary Cook reported to the Houſe, "The King accepted of the Subſidies, "and was pleaſed to ask by how many Voices they "were granted? I ſaid, but by one; his Majeſty ask'd "how many were againſt him? I ſaid, none; for "they were voted by one Voice, and one general "Conſent. His Majeſty was much affected there-"with, and called the Lords in Council, and there "I gave them account what had paſſed. Beſides, it "gave his Majeſty no ſmall content, that although "five Subſidies be inferiour to his Wants, yet it is "the greateſt Gift that ever was given in Parlia-"ment. And now he ſees by this he ſhall have "the Affections of his People, which will be grea-"ter to him than all Value. He ſaid, he liked "Parliaments at the firſt, but ſince (he knew not "how) he was grown to a Diſtaſte of them; but "was now where he was before: He loves them, and "ſhall rejoice to meet with his People often." Well accepted by the King.

Mr. Secretary further acquainted the Houſe with a Speech of the Duke of Buckingham's, at the Council Table, upon report of the five Subſidies; which was very ſweet and popular had it come from any other Perſon. Sir John Elliot expreſſed his Diſlike, that the Duke's Name ſhould be intermingled with the King's; Contrary to the Cuſtom of our Fathers, and to the Honour of our Times.

Several Members were now appointed to manage a Conference with the Lords, upon the Reſolutions of this Houſe relating to the Liberties and Properties of the Subject. Sir Dudley Diggs opened the Conference by way of Introduction. Sir Edward Littleton, of the Inner-Temple, ſpoke at large upon the Subject of Perſonal Liberty. Mr. Selden inſiſted upon the Precedents in that Matter: And Sir Edward Cook maintained the Argument as to the Rational part of the Law. Conference with the Lords upon Liberty and Property.

Tueſday and Wedneſday were ſpent in the Debate about Billeting of Soldiers upon the Subject againſt Law.

Thurſday, April 10. Mr. Secretary Cook deliver'd this Meſſage from the King, "That his Majeſty de-"ſireth this Houſe not to make any Receſs theſe "Eaſter Holidays, that the World may take notice "how earneſt his Majeſty and We are for the Pub-"lick Affairs in Chriſtendom, which by ſuch a Re-"ceſs would receive Interruption." A Meſſage from the King.

This Meſſage was diſpleaſing to ſome Members; Sir Robert Philips ſaid, that in 12 and 18 Jac. upon the like Intimation, the Houſe reſolved, it was in their Power to Adjourn or Sit. Sir Edward Cook declared, The King makes a Prorogation, but this Houſe adjourns it ſelf. The Matter was referr'd to a Committee, to conſider the Power of the Houſe to Adjourn it ſelf; to the End, that it being now yielded unto in Obedience to his Majeſty, it might not turn to Prejudice in Time to come.

Hereupon a Meſſage was ſent to the King, That the Houſe would give all expedition to his Majeſty's Service, notwithſtanding their purpoſe of Receſs. His Majeſty returned Anſwer, That the Motion had proceeded from himſelf, in regard of his Engagement in the Affairs of Chriſtendom; wiſhed them all Alacrity in their Proceedings, and that there might be no Receſs at all. Anſwer of the Commons.

Friday, April 11. Secretary Cook mov'd to expedite the Vote of Subſidies, and turn it into an Act; Sir Dudley Diggs ſeconded the Motion: But Sir Thomas Wentworth oppoſed a middle way, which paſſed into a Reſolution of the Houſe, That Grievances and Supply go Hand and Hand. Grievances and Supply go together.

(a) The good Diſpoſition of the Commons at the Beginning of this Parliament, was well obſerved in a Letter of Mr. William Bedell to Archbiſhop Uſher, dat. London, April 11. 1628. ——In Parliament Affairs, the Beginnings yet go marvellouſly well, the Lower Houſe excellently temper'd; nothing has been yet ſo much as put to Queſtion. The Upper Houſe join'd with them, inſomuch, as when they had received the Motion for a publick Faſt, they added a Motion for putting in Execution all Laws and Acts of State againſt Recuſants. The Petition was Penned by the Biſhops of Norwich and Litchfield, and preſented to his Majeſty by both Houſes, &c. Letters of Archbiſhop Uſher. Fol. p. 389.

1628. Saturday, April 12. Mr. Secretary Cook delivered another Meſſage from the King to haſten the Supply; wherein this Paſſage more eſpecially gave Offence, I muſt with ſome Grief tell you, that Notice is taken as if this Houſe preſſed not upon the Abuſes of Power only, but upon Power itſelf; this toucheth the King and Us who are ſupported by that Power.

King preſſes a Supply.

This gave Offence. He was bid to explain what he meant by the Word Power. He anſwered, I cannot deſcend to Particulars, or go from that his Majeſty gave me warrant or Power to deliver.

About two Days after, Mr. Secretary Cook did again quicken the Buſineſs of Supply. After ſome Debates it was Order'd, "That a ſpecial Committee of eight Perſons ſhall preſently withdraw "themſelves, and conſult together upon ſome Heads, "and upon the Subſtance of a fair Repreſentation "to his Majeſty, which the Speaker ſhall deliver "in his Speech to his Majeſty on Monday next, and "at the ſame time to deliver the Petition againſt "Billeting of Soldiers."

Speaker's Speech to the King. Eaſter Monday April 21. The Commons being admitted to the King's Preſence, the Speaker endeavoured to ſatisfie his Majeſty in the manner of their Proceedings. "For this Purpoſe (ſays he) they "humbly beſeech your Majeſty to take into your "Royal Conſideration, that although by ancient "Right of Parliament, the conſtant Cuſtom hath "been to take into their Conſiderations the common Grievances of the Kingdom, before they enter upon the Matter of Supply: Yet to make a "full Expreſſion of that Zeal and Affection which "they bear to your Royal Majeſty, they have in "this Aſſembly, contrary to the ordinary Proceedings of Parliament, given your Majeſty's Supply "Precedency before the common Grievance of the "Subject, how preſſing ſoever; joining with it "only thoſe fundamental and vital Liberties of the "Kingdom, which give Subſiſtence and Ability to "your Subjects."

Toward the End of his Speech he introduc'd the Petition of the Commons concerning the Billeting of Soldiers.

King's ſhort Anſwer. To the Speech and Petition his Majeſty made Reply, "That they ſhould go on ſpeedily with their "Buſineſſes without any more Apologies. And as "to what concern'd their Petition, he would make "Anſwer in convenient Time."

From this Day to Friday, April 25. the Houſe in a grand Committee ſpent moſt of their Time in Debate about Martial Law; and in holding two Conferences with the Lords, concerning ſome Reſolves in order to a Petition of Right, tranſmitted from the Lower Houſe to the Upper.

Martial Law a Grievance.

Friday, April 25. In another Conference of the Lords and Commons, the Archbiſhop of Canterbury made a ſmooth and ſoftning Speech, to introduce ſome new Propoſitions from the Upper Houſe, of the ſame Nature with the Commons Petition of Right, only more reſpectful and Submiſſive to the King, they were communicated to the Lower Houſe, who were not ſatisfied with them. (a)

Lord Keeper's Speech to urge the Diſpatch of the Supply. Monday, April 28. The King came to the Houſe of Lords, and the Commons being called up, the Lord-Keeper made a Speech to urge a Diſpatch of the Supply without longer Debate upon the Liberty of the Subject. "His Majeſty (ſays he) has commanded me to let you know, that he holdeth the "Statute of Magna Charta, and the other ſix Statutes "inſiſted upon for the Subjects Liberty to be all in "Force; and aſſures you that he will maintain all "his Subjects in the juſt freedom of their Perſons, "and ſafety of their Eſtates. And that he will go- "vern according to the Laws and Statutes of this "Realm. And that ye ſhall find as much Security "in his Majeſty's Royal Word and Promiſe as in "the Strength of any Law ye can make; ſo that "hereafter ye ſhall never have cauſe to complain." 1628.

The Queſtion who ſhould truſt, King or People. So as the only Queſtion between the King and Parliament was this; Whether his Majeſty's Royal Word and Promiſe, delivered by the Speaker in the King's Name and Preſence, was a ſufficient Security for Redreſs of Grievances, and future Maintenance of Rights and Liberties? Or, Whether this Verbal Promiſe ought not rather to be put into a written Law, as a more ſolemn Aſſurance to the People. The Firſt was thought moſt conducing to the King's Honour. The Second more agreeable to the Conſtitution of Parliaments. Mr. Secretary Cook made a Speech for Reliance on the King's Word. Sir Benjamin Rudyard mov'd, that the Effect of the King's Promiſe might be put into a Bill: And it was accordingly ordered, That a Committee of Lawyers do draw up a Bill containing the Subſtance of Magna Charta, and the other Statutes that do concern the Liberty of the Subject. (b)

Meſſage from the King. Thurſday, May 1. While the Bill was preparing, Mr. Secretary Cook delivered a Meſſage from his Majeſty, "to know whether the Houſe will reſt on his "Royal Word or no, as declared to them by the "Lord-Keeper: If they do, he again aſſures them "it ſhall be Royally performed." There was great Silence for ſome time in the Houſe; and after ſome Debate it was plain, that no poſitive Anſwer could be given to ſuch a Meſſage. Open Denial had ſeem'd a rude Affront: And expreſs Aſſent had been (in the apprehenſion of moſt) a giving up the Cauſe of Engliſh Parliaments.

Not to be anſwered.

Friday May 2. The Houſe reſolv'd themſelves into a grand Committee to debate of this Matter. Some few argued for reſting on his Majeſty's Promiſe; but the far greater Majority agreed that the Legal Security muſt be by ſolemn Act. And Sir Edward Cook propoſed, that to pay all poſſible deference to his Majeſty's Honour, the Bill ſhould not come from the Houſe but from the King. Amidſt theſe Debates another Meſſage was deliver'd from his Majeſty, "that Publick Affairs would not "endure long Debate or Delay: ſo as this Seſſion "of Parliament muſt continue no longer than Tueſday ſevennight. But upon Diſpatch and good "Correſpondence, there ſhould be another Seſſion "at Michaelmas next, for the perfecting of ſuch "Things as could not be now done."

King ſends another quickning Meſſage.

Senſe of the Commons by their Speaker. Saturday, May 3. After long Debate the Commons agreed upon an Anſwer to all preceeding Meſſages, to be preſented to the King by the Mouth of their Speaker; who humbly beg'd his Majeſty's leave to lay hold of his Gracious Offer, which gave them Aſſurance, that if they thought fit to ſecure themſelves in their Rights and Liberties by way of Bill, he would be graciouſly pleaſed to give way to it. His Majeſty's Anſwer was delivered by the Lord-Keeper, that He expected an Anſwer by their Actions, and not Delay by Diſcourſes—— that they ought to have Confidence in his Royal Word; yet to ſhew the Sincerity of his Intentions, he is content that a Bill be drawn for a Confirmation of Magna Charta and the other ſix Statutes inſiſted upon for the Subjects Liberties, ſo as it be without Additions, Paraphraſes, or Explanations.

Tueſday May 6. Mr. Secretary Cook again preſs'd the Houſe to rely upon the King's Word. This Importunity was now the more diſpleaſing, becauſe it ſeem'd to retract the late Intimation of his Majeſty's good Pleaſure for a Bill.

(b) On the ſame Day Apr. 28. there were Debates in the Houſe of Commons, upon the Augmentation of poor Livings; and there be two very good Speeches preſerved upon that Subject, One Printed at Oxford 1628. 4*to*. entituled, Sir Benjamin Rudyard his Speech in a Committee of the Houſe of Commons, in behalf of the Clergy, and of Pariſh s miſerably deſtitute of Instruction, through want of Maintenance. The other, A Speech in the Houſe of Commons, touching the Augmentation of poor Benefices. Printed in Dr. Kennett's Caſe of Impropriat. Append. 8*vo*.

Thurſ-

Thurſday May 8. the Bill for Petition of Right was finiſhed, and a Clauſe about Martial Law added to it: And at a Conference it was delivered to the Lords for their Concurrence. (a) Petition of Right.

Monday May 12. their Lordſhips deſired another Conference with the Commons; wherein, the Lord-Keeper declar'd the Reſult of their Debates in the Upper Houſe upon the Petition of Right, that they had propounded ſome ſmall Matters to be altered, to make it more ſweet, and procure it a paſſable way to his Majeſty: and then communicated a Letter from the King directed to the right-truſty and right well-beloved the Lords Spiritual and Temporal of the Higher Houſe of Parliament. —— In which his Majeſty renews his Promiſe of Governing by Law, and puts them in mind that the Seſſion muſt draw to an end. This Letter was the ſame Day communicated to the Houſe of Commons, who were much diſſatisfied, as thinking the Deſign of it was only to defeat their Petition of Right.

Opinion of the Lords.

Saturday May 17. the Lords had another Conference with the Commons, wherein the Lord-Keeper propos'd this additional Clauſe to be put in the Concluſion of the ſaid Petition; We preſent this our humble Petition to your Majeſty, with the Care not only of preſerving our own Liberties, but with due Regard to leave entire that ſoveraign Power wherewith your Majeſty is truſted for the Protection, Safety, and Happineſs of the People.

Lords propoſe a concluding Clauſe.

This Clauſe was oppoſed in ſeveral Speeches by Mr. Alford, Mr. Pimm, Mr. Hackwell, Sir Edward Cook, Sir Tho. Wentworth, Mr. Noy, and Mr. Selden, who ſaid, that Soveraign Power was no Parliamentary Word, and there could be no ſuch Thing diſtinct from the Power of the Law, or a legal Prerogative. To admit of ſuch an additional Salvo for a Regal Power, would be to leave the Subject in worſe Condition than before, &c.

Rejected by the Commons.

After this, ſeveral Conferences were held; wherein the Lords offered Reaſons for their Amendment, and the Commons for not conſenting to it. On this latter ſide, Mr. Glanvil made a remarkable Speech as to the Law-part, and Sir Henry Martin as to the Rational-part of not admitting the Acknowledgment of Soveraign Power in the Perſon of the King. (b)

Monday May 26. the Lords at another Conference agreed with the Commons in the Petition of Right, with theſe ſmall Amendments: Means inſtead of Pretext; not warrantable by the Laws and Statutes of the Realm, to be put inſtead of Unlawful. To which Amendments the Commons readily agreed, and the Bill was engroſſed and read a third Time, and order'd to be preſented to the King. The Bill of Subſidy was read the ſecond Time, and committed.

Petition of Right agreed on by both Houſes.

Wedneſday May 28. a Conference between Lords and Commons about the Manner of delivering the Petition of Right. Agreed, that no Addition or Preface be uſed to the King, but that the Petition be preſented to his Majeſty by Command of the Lords and Commons; and his Majeſty be deſired, that to the Content of his People, he would be pleaſed to give his gracious Anſwer in full Parliament.

How to be preſented.

Monday June 2. the King in Parliament ſpake thus.

" Gentlemen,

"I Am come hither to perform my Duty: I think " no Man can think it long, ſince I have not " taken ſo many Days in anſwering the Petition, as " ye ſpent Weeks in framing it. And I am come " hither to ſhew you, that as well in formal things " as in eſſential, I deſire to give you as much Con- " tent as in me lies."

The King's Speech.

Then the Lord-Keeper, after commending the King's Favour to them, deſired 'em to hear their own Petition read, and his Majeſty's gracious Anſwer.

1628.

The whole Tenour of this Petition of Right was in theſe four Particulars ſupported by reference to former Acts of Parliament; and by expreſſing the late Grievances ſuffered contrary to the ſaid Acts.

They do therefore humbly pray your moſt excellent Majeſty.

" I. That no Man hereafter be compelled to make " or yield any Gift, Loan, Benevolence, Tax, or " ſuch like Charge, without common Conſent by " Act of Parliament: And, that none be called to " make Anſwer, or take Oath, or to give Atten- " dance, or be confined, or otherwiſe moleſted or " diſquieted concerning the ſame, or for refuſal " thereof.

Heads of the Petition of Right.

" II. That no Free-man in any manner, be im- " priſoned or detained without due Proceſs of Law.

" III. That your Majeſty will be pleaſed to re- " move the Soldiers and Mariners, now billetted up- " on divers Inhabitants againſt their Wills; and, " that your People may not be ſo burthened in time " to come.

" IV. That all Commiſſions for proceeding by " Martial Law may be revoked and annulled; and, " that hereafter no Commiſſions of like nature may " iſſue forth to any Perſon or Perſons whatſoever, " to be executed as aforeſaid, leſt by colour of them " any of your Majeſty's Subjects be deſtroyed or put " to Death, contrary to the Laws and Franchiſe of " the Land."

The King's Anſwer was deliver'd in theſe Words:

The King willeth that Right be done according to the Laws and Cuſtoms of the Realm; and, that the Statutes be put in due Execution that his Subjects may have no cauſe to complain of any Wrong or Oppreſſions contrary to their juſt Rights and Liberties: To the Preſervation whereof, he holds himſelf in Conſcience as well obliged as of his Prerogative.

King's Anſwer.

If this could have been thought a free and full Anſwer, it had been a moſt happy Union of King and Parliament. But the fatal Jealouſies were, that the King, in his Prefatory Speech, betrayed an unwilling Compliance extorted from him; and, that the final Anſwer it ſelf was ſomewhat dubious and reſerv'd.

Not acceptable.

Therefore on the next Day, Tueſday June 3. the King's Anſwer being read in the Houſe of Commons, occaſioned many Speeches of Complaint, and a Reſolution of the Houſe, That an humble Remonſtrance be preſented to his Majeſty, touching the Dangers and Means of Safety of King and Kingdom.

A Remonſtrance intended.

Thurſday June 5. this Meſſage was brought from his Majeſty by the Speaker.

" His Majeſty wiſheth you to remember the Meſ- " ſage he laſt ſent you, by which he ſet a Day for " the End of this Seſſion (Wedneſday June 11.) and " he commands me to let you know, that he will " certainly hold that Day prefixed without Altera- " tion: and becauſe that cannot be if the Houſe en- " tertain more Buſineſs of length, he requires you " that ye enter not into, or proceed with, any new " Buſineſs, which may ſpend greater time, or which " may lay any Scandal or Aſperſion upon the State- " Government or Miniſters thereof."

Meſſage from the King.

This Meſſage ſerv'd but to improve the Fears and Jealouſies of the Commons; and they were put into a new and greater Ferment, when Sir John Eliot coming to that Part of the Meſſage which implied their laying Scandal or Aſperſion upon ſome Miniſters of State: The Speaker roſe from his Chair, and apprehending that Sir John was falling on the Duke, he thus enjoin'd him Silence; There is a Command laid upon me, that I muſt command you not to proceed. Upon which Sir John Elliot ſat down; and Sir Dudley Diggs, in great concern, ſaid, Muſt we not proceed? Let us ſit in ſilence. We are miſerable: we know not what we do. And there was a profound Silence in the Houſe for a while; till Sir Nathaniel Rich ſaid, We muſt now ſpeak, or for ever hold our Peace, &c. Some objected, that the Speech lately ſpoken by Sir John Elliot had given Offence (as they feared) to his Majeſty. Upon which the Houſe voted, That every Member of the Houſe is free from any undutiful Speech from the beginning of the Parliament to this day. And ordered, That the Houſe be turned into a Committee, to conſider what is fit to be done for the Safety of the Kingdom, and that no Man go out upon pain of being ſent to the Tower. But the Speaker obtained Leave to go forth. And then the Houſe was reſolv'd into a Committee, Mr. Whitby in the Chair. Mr. Wandesford moved, that they ſhould not fear to make a Remonſtrance of their Rights: And Sir Edward Cook ſpoke out, Let us palliate no longer; if we do, God will not proſper us. I think the Duke of Buckingham is the Cauſe of all our Miſeries; and till the King be informed thereof, we ſhall never go out with Honour, or ſit with Honour here. That Man is the Grievance of Grievances, &c. The Houſe agreed upon ſeveral Heads for a Remonſtrance; and while it was moving to be put to the Queſtion, Whether the Duke of Buckingham ſhould not be declared the chief and principal Cauſe of all thoſe Evils? the Speaker (who after he had Leave to go forth, went privately to the King) brought this Meſſage, That his Majeſty commands for the preſent they adjourn the Houſe till to morrow morning, and that all Committees ceaſe in the mean time. And the Houſe was accordingly adjourn'd. The Lord Keeper carried the like Command to the Upper Houſe, where it was likewiſe obey'd.

The Speaker enjoins Silence.

This gives great Offence.

The King commands the two Houſes to adjourn.

And ſends a kinder Meſſage.

Friday June 6. the Speaker brought a more kind Meſſage from the King, to declare his Majeſty's Intentions not to bar them from what hath been their Right, but only to avoid all Scandals on his Council and Actions paſt. After ſome Debate, the Commons ſent a Meſſage to the Lords, that they would join in a humble Requeſt to the King, that a clear and ſatisfactory Anſwer be given by his Majeſty, in full Parliament, to the Petition of Right. To which the Lords agreed.

Requeſt of the two Houſes for a fuller Anſwer to their Petition of Right.

Saturday June 7. The King came to the Houſe; and the Commons being ſent for, the Lord Keeper preſented the Requeſt of both Houſes, and ſaid,

"May it pleaſe your moſt excellent Majeſty,

"THE Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and "Commons in Parliament aſſembled, taking "into Conſideration, that the good Intelligence be- "tween your Majeſty and your People doth much "depend upon your Majeſty's Anſwer unto their "Petition of Right formerly preſented, with unani- "mous Conſent do now become moſt humble Sui- "tors unto your Majeſty, that you would be plea- "ſed to give a clear and ſatisfactory Anſwer there- "unto in full Parliament."

The King graciouſly replied,

King's Reply.

"The Anſwer I have already given you, was "made with ſo good Deliberation, and approved by "the Judgments of ſo many wiſe Men, that I could "not have imagined but it ſhould have given you "full ſatisfaction. But to avoid all ambiguous In- "terpretations, and to ſhew you there is no Dou- "bleneſs in my Meaning, I am willing to pleaſure "you as well in Words as in Subſtance. Read your "Petition, and you ſhall have an Anſwer that I am "ſure will pleaſe you."

He grants,

The Petition was read, and Anſwer given, Soit droit fait come il eſt deſiré.

The King proceeded, "This I am ſure is full, yet "no more than I granted you in my firſt Anſwer; "for the Meaning of that was, to confirm your Li- "berties: knowing, according to your own Prote- "ſtation, that ye neither mean nor can hurt my "Prerogative. And I aſſure you, my Maxim is, "That the Peoples Liberties ſtrengthen the King's "Prerogative, and the King's Prerogative is to de- "fend the People's Liberties. You ſee how ready "I have ſhewed my ſelf to ſatisfie your Demands; "ſo that I have done my part: Wherefore if this "Parliament have not a happy Concluſion, the Sin "is yours; I am free from it."

Joy of the Commons.

Whereupon the Commons return'd to their Houſe in great Joy, and reſolved ſo to proceed, as to expreſs their Thankfulneſs to his Majeſty. They order'd, that the Grand Committees for Religion, Trade, Grievances, and Courts of Juſtice, ſhould ſit no longer, and the Houſe ſhould proceed only in conſideration of Grievances of moſt moment. Bells ringing and Bonfires were through the whole City, and all true Hearts had a ſhare in the publick Joy.

If the Commons at this Juncture could have withdrawn their intended Remonſtrance, or the King could have look'd upon it as no Diminution of his Honour; then the Accommodation had been perfect and laſting.

The Remonſtrance goes on.

But the Commons thought their Rights and Liberties not ſufficiently aſſerted, without complaining of the ſeveral Inſtances wherein they apprehended a manifeſt Breach and Violation of them. So they proceeded to draw up the Particulars of greateſt Moment; and in concluſion, Hatred of the D. of Buckingham.

Friday June 13. It was reſolved upon the Queſtion, That the exceſſive Power of the Duke of Buckingham is the Cauſe of the Evils and Dangers to the King and Kingdom. And ordered, That this be added to the Remonſtrance.

Remonſtrance preſented.

Tueſday June 17. The Remonſtrance was preſented to the King in the Banquetting-houſe by the Speaker, attended by the whole Houſe. The Subſtance of it was in theſe ſix Branches:

Subſtance of it.

"I. The Danger of Innovation and Alteration "in Religion. This occaſioned, 1. By the great "Eſteem and Favours many Profeſſors of the Romiſh "Religion receive at Court. 2. Their publick Re- "ſort to Maſs at Denmark-houſe, contrary to his "Majeſty's Anſwer to the Parliament's Petition at "Oxford. 3. Letters and Warrants to ſtop Proceed- "ings againſt them. Laſtly, The daily Growth of "the Arminian Faction.

"II. The Danger of Innovation and Alteration "in Government, occaſioned by the Billeting of "Soldiers, by the Commiſſion for procuring one "thouſand German Horſe and Riders, as for the "Defence of the Kingdom; and by a ſtanding Com- "miſſion granted to the Duke to be General at Land "in Times of Peace.

"III. Diſaſters in the late Publick Deſigns; as, "the Expedition to the Iſle of Rhee, and that lately "to Rochel, wherein the Engliſh have purchaſed "their Diſhonour with the Waſte of a Million of "Treaſure.

"IV. The Want of Ammunition, occaſioned by "the late ſelling away of thirty ſix Laſt of Pow- "der.

"V. The Decay of Trade by the Loſs of three "hundred Ships taken by the Dunkirkers and Pirates "within theſe three laſt Years.

"VI. The not guarding the Narrow Seas, where- "by his Majeſty hath almoſt loſt the Regality.

"Of all which Evils and Dangers, the princi- "pal Cauſe is the Duke of Buckingham's exceſſive "Power, and Abuſe of that Power. And therefore "they humbly ſubmit it to his Majeſty's Wiſdom, "Whether it can be ſafe for himſelf, or his King- "dom, that ſo great Power both by Sea and Land, "as reſts in him, ſhould be truſted in the Hands "of any one Subject whatſoever."

1628. The King having heard out the Remonſtrance with ſome Indignation, told the Commons, That he little expected ſuch a Remonſtrance, after he had paſſed the Petition of Right: However, as for their Grievances, he would conſider of them as they ſhould deſerve.

The King angry at it.

It is ſaid, that ſoon after the King order'd a formal Anſwer to be drawn up in Writing to the ſaid Remonſtrance, denying or excuſing the ſeveral Charges in it: And in the mean time he ſent a Meſſage by Sir Humphry May, that he meant to end the Seſſion on the 26th of June. And that he might ſeem ready to redreſs every juſt Grievance, he order'd the Lord-Keeper to report in the Upper-Houſe that his Majeſty had cancell'd the Commiſſion of Exciſe, and the Warrant for putting the Seal thereto. And a Meſſage was ſent to the Commons to ſhew them the ſaid cancell'd Commiſſion and Warrant.

Another Remonſtrance againſt Tonnage and Poundage.

The Commons fell to preparing a Bill for Tonnage and Poundage to the King. In debating thereupon it was Order'd, That a Committee be appointed to draw a Remonſtrance to his Majeſty of the Peoples Rights, and of the undue taking of Tonnage and Poundage, and Impoſitions without Act of Parliament, and to ſhew Reaſons why the Houſe cannot in ſo ſhort a time prepare that Bill.

Subſtance of it.

In the ſaid Remonſtrance they declare theſe two things. "1. That there ought not any Impoſition "to be laid upon the Goods of Merchants exported "or imported, without common conſent by Act of "Parliament, which is the Right and Inheritance "of your Subjects; founded not only upon the "moſt Ancient and Original Conſtitution of this "Kingdom, but often confirm'd and declar'd in divers Statute Laws. 2. That the receiving of "Tonnage and Poundage, and other Impoſitions not "granted by Parliament, is a breach of the Fundamental Liberties of this Kingdom, and contrary "to your Majeſty's Royal Anſwer to our late Petition of Right. And therefore they humbly beſeech his Majeſty to forbear any further receiving "of the ſame, and not to take it in ill part from "thoſe of his loving Subjects, who ſhould refuſe to "make payment of any ſuch Charges without Warrant of Law demanded."

King offended.

When the King heard of this ſecond Remonſtrance, he was reſolved to prevent the delivery of it. And therefore on Thurſday, June 26. While the Remonſtrance being engroſſed was a reading in the Houſe, the King ſent for the Speaker and the whole Houſe, and ſhew'd his Reſentments in the following Speech.

Speech of Reſentment.

"My Lords and Gentlemen,

"IT may ſeem ſtrange that I came ſo ſuddenly to "end this Seſſion, before I give my Aſſent to the "Bills. I will tell you the Cauſe, tho' I muſt avow, "that I owe the account of my Actions to God "alone.

"It is known to every one, that a while ago the "Houſe of Commons gave me a Remonſtrance, how "acceptable every Man may judge; and for the Merit of it, I will not call that in Queſtion; for I "am ſure no wiſe Man can juſtifie it.

"Now ſince I am truly inform'd, that a ſecond "Remonſtrance is preparing for me, to take away "the Profit of my Tonnage and Poundage, one of "the chiefeſt Maintenances of my Crown, by alledging, I have given away my Right thereto by "my Anſwer to your Petition: This is ſo prejudicial to me, that I am forc'd to end this Seſſion "ſome few Hours before I meant, being not willing to receive any more Remonſtrances; to which "I muſt give a harſh Anſwer.

"And ſince I ſee that even the Houſe of Commons begins already to make falſe Conſtructions "of what I granted in your Petition, leſt it be "worſe interpreted in the Country, I will now "make a Declaration concerning the true Intent "thereof.

"The Profeſſion of both Houſes in the time of 1628. "hammering this Petition was no ways to trench "upon my Prerogative; ſaying, they had neither "Intention or Power to hurt it. Therefore it muſt "needs be conceiv'd, that I have granted no new, "but only confirm'd the ancient Liberties of my "Subjects: Yet to ſhew the clearneſs of my Intentions, that I neither Repent nor mean to Recede "from any thing I have promiſed you, I do here "declare my ſelf, that thoſe things which have been "done (whereby many have had ſome Cauſe to expect the Liberties of the Subjects to be trench'd upon, which indeed was the firſt and true Ground "of the Petition) ſhall not hereafter be drawn into Example for your Prejudice: And from time "to time, in the Word of a King, ye ſhall not have "the like cauſe to complain.

"But as for Tonnage and Poundage, it is a thing "I cannot want, and was never intended by you to "Ask, nor meant by me I am ſure to Grant.

"To Conclude; I command you all that are here "to take notice of what I have ſpoken at this time "to be the true Intent and Meaning of what I granted you in your Petition: But eſpecially you my "Lords the Judges; for to you only, under me, belongs the Interpretation of Laws: For none of the "Houſes of Parliament, either joint or ſeparate "(what new Doctrine ſoever may be rais'd) have "any Power either to make or declare a Law without my Conſent."

A ſurprize to both Houſes.

The King had come to the Houſe ſo unexpectedly that the Lords were not in their Robes, and the Commons had given no Order for the Speaker to deliver the Bill of Subſidies, which had not been yet return'd (as uſually) from the Upper Houſe. However, the Bill was deliver'd to the Speaker, ſtanding at the Bar of the Lords; who in a ſhort Speech declar'd it to be the greateſt Gift that ever was given to any Prince in ſo ſhort a time. And then the Bill was paſſed with theſe that follow: 1. An Act for the Reformation of Abuſes committed on the Lord's Day, called Sunday. 2. The Petition exhibited to his Majeſty concerning divers Rights and Privileges of the Subject. 3. An Act for repreſſing of all unlicenſed Ale-houſes. 4. An Act to reſtrain the ſending over any to be Popiſhly bred beyond the Seas. 5. An Act for five entire Subſidies granted by the Clergy. 6. An Act for the Continuance and Repeal of divers Statutes; with ſeveral Private Acts. As to the Bill prepar'd for Explanation of the Statute 3 Jac. about Leaſes of Recuſants Lands; the King ſaid, "That in this ſhort Time he had not "ſufficient leiſure to conſider thereof; but though "the Title were fair, he found many Errors therein; and if at the next Meeting they would amend "thoſe Errors, it ſhould paſs."

Bills paſſed.

Parliament prorogued to Oct. 20.

After which, the Lord Keeper expreſs'd it to be his Majeſty's Pleaſure, that this Seſſion now end, and that the Parliament be prorogued till the twentieth of October next.

General Diſcontents.

Thus broke up that Parliament, wherein were ſome of the greateſt mutual Obligations between King and People, and yet unhappily no Satisfaction on either ſide. The King had yielded to the largeſt Petition of Rights and Liberties, and yet left the People Jealous. The People had granted a Supply beyond Example, and yet left the King uneaſy: In ſhort, the Generality went home in Diſcontent. Some at the being interrupted in a Bill of Tonnage and Poundage, which upon Foundation of the Subject's Right, ſhould have ſettled and advanc'd the King's Revenue. Some at the King's Omiſſion of Thanks for the Bill of Subſidy, and taking not the leaſt notice of it. Others at the Speech of Prorogation, ſomewhat ſevere and upbraiding: And many at the Prorogation it ſelf, when they deſir'd rather a Receſs by joint Adjournment, that depending Matters might be kept in the ſame Condition to another Meeting.

Having

Having thus without interruption related the Affairs of Parliament, we muſt now return to other Matters of State that interven'd.

The Rochellers, block'd up by the King of France, had ſome dependance on the Word of the Duke of Buckingham, who had promiſed to come again to their Relief, and had ſome expectance from the King and Council to whom they had made a very earneſt Application. To this purpoſe a Fleet of about 50 Ships was early fitted out, under the Command of the Earl of Denbigh; who for want of Mariners, or for the Service of a Deſcent, took in two thouſand two hundred able Land-Men; and ſetting ſail from Plymouth on April 17. came to anchor at Charleboy in the Road of Rochel on May 1. He found twenty Sail of the King of France's Ships riding before the Harbour, and being much ſuperiour in Number and Strength, he ſent Advice into the Town, that he would ſink the French Ships as ſoon as the Wind came Weſt, and made a higher Flood. About May 8. the Wind and Tide ſerved accordingly, and the Rochellers expected and ſollicited for that ſeaſon of Deliverance. But the Earl without attempting the Opportunity, weighed Anchor and ſail'd away, ſuffering four of the French Ships to purſue as it were the Engliſh Fleet, that arrived at Plymouth on May 26. This other inglorious Expedition was a greater diſcouragement to the poor Rochellers; and increas'd the Fears and Jealouſies of a Popiſh Intereſt at home. Many concluded the whole Deſign was but a Feint, and meant rather by the Court Party to reduce Rochel than relieve it. Some clamour'd againſt the Earl of Denbigh, and ſaid nothing better could be expected from his Conduct, who was Brother-in-law to the Duke of Buckingham. Others charg'd it as a Plot in one Clark a Bed-Chamber Man, who had been a chief Commiſſioner in both the Expeditions, and being a reputed Papiſt, was ſuppoſed to be employ'd for an Inſtrument of Miſcarriage. (a)

A Fleet ſent to Rochel.

This Expedition inglorious.

Complaints of it.

One La Brun a French Man, Captain in the Engliſh Fleet, gave in Depoſitions before the Mayor of Plymouth on May 16. which argu'd Treachery or apparent Cowardice in the Management of this late Expedition. This Account was certified by the Mayor of Plymouth the Burgeſſes, of that, Town in Parliament; by whom it was communicated to the Council-Table, from whence a Letter was directed to the Duke of Buckingham, as Lord High Admiral, dated the 30th of May 1628, To ſignify his Majeſty's Pleaſure, that the Earl of Denbigh ſhould return back to relieve the Town of Rochel with the Fleet under his Charge, with other Ships prepared at Portſmouth and Plymouth. But for all this Order of Council, no ſuch Return was made, nor any enquiry into the obſtruction of it. (b)

Sir Charles Morgan ſurrenders Stoadt.

In the ſame Month of May the Engliſh Garriſon of Stoadt, about twenty Miles from Hamborough on the other ſide the Elbe, was ſurrender'd to the Imperialiſts upon honourable Terms, by the Commander Sir Charles Morgan, who had defended the Place with the utmoſt Bravery and Reſolution.

Dr. Lamb killed by the Mobb.

June 13. Dr. Lamb, a Creature of the Duke's, was ſet upon in the Streets of London by the Rabble, and ſo roughly beat, that he died of his Bruiſes next Morning in the Compter. Some of the Mobb in their Fury were heard to ſay, that were his Maſter the Duke there, they would give him as much.

A Terror to the Duke.

This made the Duke more apprehenſive of the Popular Rage againſt him; and turned that into an Omen which had poſſibly been otherwiſe an Accident, viz. on the ſame Day that Lamb was ſo aſſaulted, the Duke's Picture fell down in the High Commiſſion Chamber at Lambeth; though if Lamb had bore no relation to the Duke, he was of himſelf enough provoking to the Multitude. For he had got the common Reputation of a Conjurer, and had been publickly arraigned for practiſing Sorcery and helliſh Arts upon the Body of the Lord Windſor. He was further infamous for Vice and Lewdneſs, having been indicted and try'd for a Rape at the King's-Bench Bar, where he inſiſted upon his Innocence in ſuch an impudent manner, that his very Language implied the Fact, though he was found not Guilty. This riotous Murther was the unhappy Cauſe of a wider Breach between the Court and City: For on Monday after, the Lord Mayor and Aldermen were ſent for to appear at the Council Table and were there examined, and threatn'd that they ſhould loſe their Charter if they did not diſcover and deliver up the principal Agents in the late Uproar; and had in concluſion a Fine of 6000 l. impos'd upon them.

Sir Rich. Weſton made Ld. Treaſurer.

July 15. The Earl of Marlborough was remov'd from the Treaſury, as a Man too cautious in advancing the King's Revenue, and Sir Richard Weſton Chancellor of the Exchequer, was made Lord Treaſurer, as a Miniſter acute and active, and fit for the Neceſſities of raiſing Money; Chief Baron Walter was for the like Reaſon diſplac'd. Sir Tho. Wentworth, a Leader of the Country Party in the Houſe of Commons, was near the ſame time honour'd with a Barony, and brought over to the Court. Biſhop Laud was tranſlated to the See of London, Mr. Mountague and Dr. Manwaring were pardon'd and preferred; theſe and ſome other of the like Promotions gave more and more diſguſt to the People, and confirm'd them in the Prejudice that the Court was only a governing Party.

Other Changes.

A third Fleet preparing for Rochel. To be commanded by the Duke.

A third Fleet was in the mean time preparing for the Relief of Rochel, that by a cloſe Siege was now reduc'd to the laſt Extremities (c). The Duke of Buckingham choſe to command in Perſon, and to that end came to Portſmouth, where on Auguſt 23. having been at Breakfaſt with Sobiez and the general Officers, John Felton (late Lieutenant in a Regiment of Foot under Sir John Ramſey) plac'd himſelf in an Entry through which the Duke was to paſs, who walking along with Sir Thomas Frier, and inclining his Ear to him in the poſture of Attention, Felton with a back blow ſtabb'd him on the left Side into the very Heart, leaving the Knife in his Body; which the Duke pulled out with his own Hand, and then fell down, crying only, The Villain hath killed me. Felton ſlipt away, and might have gone off undiſcover'd, but that either his Conſcience or his Inſolence betrayed him. For while the general Rumour was, that the Murderer muſt be a French Man, and ſome began to ſuſpect Sobiez as a Party in it, Felton ſtept out and ſaid, I am the Man who did the Deed; let no Man ſuffer that is Innocent. Upon which he was apprehended, and ſent Priſoner to London. When examined before the Privy Council, he was ſo obſtinately ſilent, that he was threaten'd with the Rack; but the Queſtion being put to the Judges, they declar'd it to be no legal way. He made no other 1628.

Confeſſion than what he had (before the Commiſſion of the Fact) wrote in a Paper ſtitch'd in the Lining of his Hat; wherein he declared the only Motive "to be the late Remonſtrance of the Commons a- "gainſt the Duke; and that he could not ſacrifice "his Life in a nobler Cauſe, than by delivering his "Country from ſo great an Enemy." Yet others believ'd it was rather from a private and perſonal Revenge; becauſe he had been twice repuls'd upon his Application for a Captain's Commiſſion, and had long waited for his Arrears of Pay.

His Motive.

King bears it with great preſence of Mind.

The King within four Miles of Portſmouth was on his Knees in Devotion when the News was brought him, and did not riſe up, nor betray the leaſt interruption, till his Prayers were over: And then with great Evenneſs of Mind, he only cammanded that the Murderer ſhould be ſecur'd; and immediately gave Order that the Fleet ſhould haſten out. But to ſhew his Affection to the Duke's Memory, he gave command for a magnificent Funeral, till the thrifty Treaſurer diverted the Project by telling his Majeſty, Such Pomp would but prove but an Hour's ſhow; and it would be more for his Glory to erect him a ſtately Monument that might be done for half the Coſt. Upon which his Body was privately interr'd on September 25. And when the King afterwards talk'd of a coſtly Monument, the Treaſurer is ſaid to have uſed this other Evaſion: Sir I am loth to tell your Majeſty what the World will ſay both here and abroad, if you ſhould raiſe a Monument for the Duke before you erect one for your Father.

Character of the Duke.

Thus fell the Duke in the Age of Perfection, thirty ſix; a Gentleman born and built for a Courtier: of an Air and Port great and ſweet, with all the Nature and all the Art of Addreſs: Of Parts ſufficient to cover the want of Learning; and of a Seriouſneſs that ſerved much to diſguiſe his Neglect of Religion.

The Fleet ſail'd.

The Fleet, under the Command of the Earl of Lindſey, ſail'd from Portſmouth Sept. 8. but very defective in their Stores of Victuals and Tackle, as Information was after given to the King and Council. When they came before Rochel, they found no French Navy to oppoſe them, only the immenſe Barricado croſs the Entry of the Port was now compleatly finiſh'd: Many brave Attempts were made to break through, but all in vain. So that the Rochellers in diſtreſs and deſpair implored the King's Mercy, and ſurrender'd October 18. And the Engliſh Fleet looking on, were now at liberty to return. (a)

Rochel ſurrendred.

After the Loſs of this Town, the French Proteſtants in all other Parts were ſo ſeverely treated, that they could not but reſolve upon ſome laſt Efforts of Self-preſervation; and ſent again to the King of England to implore Aſſiſtance, with this pathetical Expreſſion, that what they now wrote was with their Tears and with their Blood. But there was a Peace depending, and ſoon after concluded between the two Crowns; and the French Proteſtants were glad to ſubmit to any Terms that gave them their Freedom in Religion.

Laſt effort of the French Proteſtants.

Parliament further prorogued.

The Parliament by laſt Prorogation appointed to meet on October 20. was by Proclamation iſſued October 1. further prorogued to the 20th of January following.

Diſputes upon Tonnage and Poundage.

The Merchants and Traders were in great Diſturbances about the payment of Tonnage and Poundage: Upon the late Declaration of the Commons, and a concurrent Opinion of the Lawyers, many had declined, and even refuſed to pay the Impoſitions. For this Contempt they were ſummon'd before the Council Table, and committed to the Fleet and Marſhalſea, and not ſet at Liberty without entring into Bond for Payment. Mr. Chambers, committed on this account, brought his Habeas Corpus October 23. and was bail'd by Order of the Court. The Lords of the Council were much diſatisfied at it, and ſent for the Judges to the Lord-Keeper's Houſe, where they juſtified their Proceeding, and prov'd the Bailing of the Priſoner to be according to Law and Juſtice. Mr. Vaſſal, for a like refuſal, had an Information preferr'd againſt him in the Exchequer in Michaelmas Term; to which he pleaded Magna Charta and the Statute De Tallagio non concedendo, and that the Impoſition was illegal, becauſe without Aſſent of Parliament. The Attorney General demurr'd, and Mr. Vaſſal join'd in the Demur; the Barons in Exchequer denied to hear Vaſſal's Council, and ſaid it was a Caſe already adjudged, and a Right of which the King was in Poſſeſſion; and impriſoned Vaſſal as ſtanding in contempt of the Court. About the ſame time Mr. Chambers had other Goods and Merchandiſe ſeiz'd for not paying Cuſtom; and upon the detaining of them, he ſued out a Writ of Replevin: But the Barons of the Exchequer order'd an Injunction to the Sheriffs, not to execute the Writ; and ſent a Precept to the Officers of the Cuſtom, to detain double Value of the Sums by them demanded for Duties to his Majeſty, and to reſtore the Reſidue. The like Proceedings were taken againſt Mr. John Rolls, a Parliament Man, and ſome other Merchants, to the unhappy Diſcouragement of Trade, and the general Grievance of the City of London.

The King did ſome Popular Things.

And yet, to ſoften the Minds of the Subjects before the Meeting of Parliament, ſome Popular Things were wiſely done. As to the Horſe levied in Germany, which People ſuſpected was for a ſtanding Force in England, the Privy Council wrote to Dalbeer to diſpoſe them into the Service of the King of Sweden and the Duke of Savoy, his Majeſty's Allies: Archbiſhop Abbot, the more Popular for being in Diſgrace at Court, was ſent for to White-hall, and from his Barge received by the Archbiſhop of York and Earl of Dorſet, and by them ſolemnly introduced to the King, who gave him his Hand with a particular Countenance of Favour, and bid him not fail the Council Table twice a Week. Mountague's Apello Cæſarem was call'd in by Proclamation; and other pleaſing Orders given againſt Popery and Arminianiſm, the two Terrors of the common People. (b)

Parliament meets.

Fall upon Grievances.

Tueſday Jan. 20. the Parliament met; and the firſt Debate of the Commons was on the Petition of Right which had been Printed with ſome Additions and Comments, and the Copies firſt Printed without ſuch Additions had been by Order of the King ſuppreſt. They ſent for Norton the King's Printer, who own'd the Thing done by ſpecial Warrant.

The King ſends a Meſſage.

The Commons fell next upon Violation of the Subjects Liberty and Property ſince the End of laſt Seſſion, by the Levies of Tonnage and Poundage. This Matter was referr'd to a Committee; but while the Debate was warm upon it, the King ſent a Meſſage to the Houſe, and willed them to deſiſt from (a) The Memoirs of the Duke of Rohan relate it thus: p. 188. At length on the 24th of Aug. new Stile, comes the Duke of Buckingham to Portſmouth. And on the 29th arrived there fifty Ships, ſome Men of War; and others laden with Ammunition and Proviſion. But on the 2d of September, the Duke of Sobiez going to viſit the Duke of Buckingham, as he had newly dined, he told him, that juſt then he had received Intelligence of the Re-victualing of Rochel, and that he was now going with the News to the King; and as he was lifting up the Hangings to go forth of the Room, he was ſtabbed with a Knife into the great Artery of his Heart by an Officer, whoſe Name was Felton, of which he died, and fell immediately.——The next Day the King makes the Earl of Lyndſey Admiral, Morton Vice-Admiral, and Montjoy Rear-Admiral,——and by the Care and Preſence of the King, more was now diſpatched in 10 or 12 Days, than in many Weeks before: So that all Things being now ready, they ſet Sail on the 18th of September.

King's Speech.

"My Lords and Gentlemen,

"THE Care I have to remove all Obſtacles that may hinder the good Correſpondency between Me and this Parliament, is the Cauſe I have called you together at this time; the particular Occaſion being a Complaint made in the Lower Houſe. And for you, my Lords, I am glad to take this and all other Occaſions, whereby you may clearly underſtand both my Words and Actions: For as you are neareſt in Degree, ſo you are the fitteſt Witneſſes unto Kings.

"The Complaint I ſpeak of is for ſtaying Mens Goods that denied Tonnage and Poundage. This may have an eaſie and ſhort Concluſion, if my Words and Actions be rightly underſtood. For by paſſing the Bill as my Anceſtors have had it, my by-paſt Actions will be included, and my future Proceedings authoriz'd; which certainly would not have been ſtuck at, if Men had not imagin'd that I had taken theſe Duties as appertaining to my Hereditary Prerogative; in which they are much deceived. For it ever was, and ſtill is my Meaning, by the Gift of my People to enjoy it: and my Intention in my Speech at the ending of the laſt Seſſion concerning this Point, was not to challenge Tonnage and Poundage as of Right, but de Bene eſſe, ſhewing you the Neceſſity not the Right by which I was to take it, until you had granted it to me; aſſuring my ſelf according to your general Profeſſions, you wanted Time not Will to give it to me.

"Wherefore now, having opportunity, I expect that without loſs of Time you make good your Profeſſions, and ſo by paſſing of a Bill put an end to all the Queſtions ariſing from this Subject; eſpecially ſince I have clear'd the only Scruple that can trouble you in this Buſineſs.

"To conclude, Let us not be jealous of one anothers Actions: For if I had been eaſily moved at every Occaſion, the Order you made on Wedneſday laſt might have made me ſtartle; there being ſome ſhow to ſuſpect, that you had given your ſelves the liberty to be the Inquiſitors after Complaints (the Words of your Order being ſomewhat too largely penn'd) but looking into your Actions, I find you only here Complainers, not ſeeking Complaints: For I am certain you neither pretend nor deſire the Liberty to be Inquiſitors of Men's Actions, before particular Complaint be made.

"This I have ſpoken, to ſhew you how ſlow I am to believe harſhly of your Proceedings; likewiſe to aſſure you, the Houſe s Reſolutions, not particular Men's Speeches, ſhall make me judge well or ill: Not doubting but according to my Example you will be deaf to ill Reports concerning me, till my Words and Actions ſpeak for themſelves; that ſo this Seſſion, beginning with Confidence one towards another, it may end in a perfect good Underſtanding between us; which God grant."

The Speech wiſe and tender.

It is certain, this Speech was as Prudent and Tender as faithful Subjects could poſſibly deſire from their lawful King. But it is in Jealouſies between Prince and People, as in thoſe between a married Pair; where if one ſide has given grounds of Suſpicion to the other, it is hard for the ſtricteſt Caution and Conduct, to remove the unhappy Doubts and Fears. 1628.

Meſſage from the King.

Monday January. 26. Mr. Secretary Cook brought a Meſſage from the King, That the Bill for Tonnage and Poundage might be ſpeedily taken into Conſideration, and that no time might be loſt. But now a Popular Fancy roſe, that the Bill muſt not be impos'd upon them, but muſt proceed naturally from the Motions of their own Houſe; that for that Reaſon it was moſt proper to ſuſpend the Bill for ſome time, while they proceeded upon other Grievances; and in the firſt place thoſe relating to Religion.

Grievance in Religion.

Tueſday, January 27. A Report was made to the Houſe, from the Committee for Religion, that a Remonſtrance upon that Subject, drawn up in laſt Seſſion, had been commanded away by the King; and for want of it the Committee could not now proceed. Hereupon Mr. Secretary Cook brought a Meſſage from his Majeſty: That underſtanding the Remonſtrance concerning Religion was called for, he was pleaſed (to take away all Queſtion) to deliver it back to them; hoping, nevertheleſs, that they will proceed with the Bill for Tonnage and Poundage, and give Precedency to that Buſineſs. But this Meſſage being referr'd to a Committee, they reſolv'd, "That the Conſideration of Religion ſhould take place before the Bill for Tonnage and Poundage." (a)

Another Meſſage from the King.

Wedneſday January 28. Secretary Cook brought another Meſſage from the King, That if the Houſe would firſt diſpatch the Bill of Tonnage and Poundage, they ſhould not be thereby interrupted in Matters of Religion, provided they did not intrench upon that which did not belong to them. Sir Thomas Edmonds preſs'd a Compliance with this Meſſage, and urg'd them to conſider how dangerous it was to alienate his Majeſty's Heart from Parliaments. But after a Reply by Mr. Corriton, the Houſe Reſolved to ſend an Anſwer to the King, That theſe Meſſages are inconvenient, and breed Debates and loſs of Time; and did farther Reſolve, That Tonnage and Poundage, ariſing naturally from this Houſe, they would in fit time take ſuch a Courſe therein, as they hoped would be to his Majeſty's ſatisfaction and Honour: And for the preſent, they would proceed in Matters of Religion.

The Commons Anſwer.

Sir John Elliot's Speech.

Upon this Sir John Elliot ſpoke freely againſt the King's late Declaration prefix'd to the 39 Articles, and againſt that part eſpecially, where it is ſaid, that if there be any difference in Opinion, concerning the ſeaſonable Interpretation of the ſaid Articles, the Biſhops and Clergy in Convocation have Power to ſettle thoſe Diſputes. By which Power, he ſaid, Popery and Arminianiſm might be introduced. After ſome Debate upon ſuch a Power of determining the ſenſe of the 39 Articles, the Commons entred into a Proteſtation; which ſhall be given in the following Accounts of Religion.

Commons deſire a Faſt.

Friday January 30. Both Houſes preſented an Addreſs to the King, to appoint a Day of Faſting and Prayer, in conſideration of the Miſeries of the Reformed Churches abroad, &c. The King anſwer'd in ſome diſguſt, that Fighting would do them more good than Faſting; that the Cuſtom of Faſting every Seſſion was but lately begun, and he was not fully ſatisfied with the neceſſity of it at this time: However, he would now grant their Requeſt, with this Note, that it ſhould not be brought into precedent for frequent Faſts, except on great Occaſions.

The King not pleaſed with the Motion grants it.

Declaration of the Commons.

Soon after the Houſe of Commons preſented a Declaration to the King, in anſwer to his Meſſages,

for

1628. for expediting the Bill of Tonnage and Poundage; to Repreſent that they could not proceed therein without giving a Precedency to Religion, which they apprehended to be in great danger from Popery and Arminianiſm. The King anſwer'd, that the Bill of Tonnage and Poundage was firſt regularly offered, and he muſt be ſtill inſtant with them, that they proceed in it with diligence: and as for the Cauſe of delaying Religion, there is none of them ſhould have a greater Care of it than himſelf.

Againſt the King's Declaration.

Wedneſday February 4. The Houſe of Commons debated of the King's Declaration to prohibit Diſputes about Religion; concluding, that the main End thereof was to ſuppreſs the Puritan Party, and give liberty to the contrary Side; and they conceiv'd that Biſhop Laud and Biſhop Mountague had adviſed the King to that Declaration.

A Member ſerv'd with a Subpœna.

Tueſday February 10. Amidſt the Debates upon Religion, the Ware-Houſe of Mr. Rolls, Merchant and Sitting Member, was lock'd up by a Purſuivant, and he himſelf called forth and ſerv'd with a Subpœna. This much inflam'd the Houſe, though Sir Humphry May, a Privy-Counſellor, declar'd, that it did not proceed from King or Council; and the Attorney-General wrote to Mr. Rolls to excuſe the thing as a Miſtake.

Meſſage of the Commons to the Barons of the Exchequer.

Thurſday February 12. The Houſe was in a Committee upon Tonnage and Poundage, and admitted the Complaints of ſeveral Merchants, that their Goods were ſeiz'd, and Informations in the Star-Chamber preferr'd againſt them. Upon which, the Houſe Order'd, that a Meſſage ſhould be ſent to the Barons of the Exchequer, to make void their Injunctions and Orders about the ſtopping of Merchants Goods.

The Barons Anſwer.

Soon after, the Lord Treaſurer and Barons return'd an Anſwer, "That in their ſaid Orders and "Injunctions they did not determine, nor any way "touch upon the Right of Tonnage and Poundage." This Anſwer was ill reſented by the Houſe, as a Juſtification of the Proceedings in the Exchequer; into which they reſolve farther to enquire.

The Pardons granted to Mr. Mountague, Dr. Manwaring, Dr. Sibthorp, and Mr. Coſens, gave a new Offence to the Houſe, who referr'd the Matter to a Committee, and they Reported ſome indirect Dealings, as well as dangerous Deſigns in it.

The Bookſellers and Printers in London, by Petition to the Houſe, complain'd of the Reſtraint of Books written againſt Popery and Arminianiſm, and the contrary allowed by the only means of the Biſhop of London.

Sir Will. Acton Sheriff of London, committed to the Tower.

An Information in Star-Chamber preferred againſt Mr. Chambers for refuſing to pay Tonnage while his Petition of Relief was lodg'd in Parliament, rais'd another Ferment in the Houſe; who on that occaſion committed to the Tower Sir William Acton, Sheriff of London.

Friday Feb. 13. The Houſe debated of the Increaſe of Popery, and made Enquiry concerning the ten Prieſts arraign'd at the King's-Bench; of which one only was condemn'd, and he repriev'd, and the other nine releas'd, Mr. Secretary Cook and the Attorney General being examin'd upon this Matter, reſolv'd the Proceeding into Warrants granted by the King's Mercy.

King's Meſſage ungrateful.

Thurſday Feb. 19. Several Officers of the Cuſtoms were examin'd, and charg'd with Breach of Privilege in ſeizing the Goods of Mr. Rolls, a Parliament-Man. But while the Houſe was debating of Reparation and Puniſhment, the King ſent a Meſſage on Feb. 23. that what the Cuſtomers did was by his own direct Order and Command at the Council-Board. Upon which a Committee reſolv'd, that Mr. Rolls ought to have had Privilege of Perſon and Goods: but the Command of the King is ſo great, that they leave it to the Houſe. Upon this followed many warm Speeches, and long Debates, and at laſt the Queſtion ordered to be put, Whether the ſeizing of Mr. Rolls's Goods was not a Breach of Privilege? The Speaker refuſed to put the Queſtion, and ſaid, He was otherwiſe commanded by the King. Upon which the Houſe, in ſome heat, Adjourn'd to Wedneſday next: At which time, both Houſes were Adjourn'd by his Majeſty's Command to Monday March 2. 1628.

Speaker held in the Chair.

On that Day the Commons being met, urged the Speaker to put the former Queſtion, who ſaid, I have a Command from the King to Adjourn till Mar. 10. and put no Queſtion: And ſo offering to leave the Chair, he was held down in it by ſome Members till the enſuing Proteſtations were publiſh'd.

Proteſtations of the Houſe.

"I. Whoſoever ſhall bring in Innovation of Religion, or by Favour or Countenance ſeek to extend or introduce Popery or Arminianiſm, or other "Opinion diſagreeing from the Truth, and Orthodox Church, ſhall be reputed a capital Enemy to "this Kingdom and Commonwealth.

"II. Whoſoever ſhall counſel or adviſe the taking "and levying of the Subſidies of Tonnage and Poundage, not being granted by Parliament, or ſhall "be an Actor or Inſtrument therein, ſhall be likewiſe reputed an Innovator in the Government, and "a capital Enemy to the Kingdom and Commonwealth.

"III. If any Merchant or Perſon whatſoever ſhall "voluntarily yield or pay the ſaid Subſidies of Tonnage and Poundage, not being granted by Parliament, he ſhall likewiſe be reputed a Betrayer of "the Liberties of England, and an Enemy to the "ſame."

The King much incens'd.

The King being inform'd of this Diſorder, ſent for the Serjeant of the Houſe; but the Door was lock'd upon him, and he could not attend his Majeſty. Then the King ſent the Gentleman Uſher from the Lord's Houſe; but he was refuſed Admittance till the ſaid Votes were read: and then, in great confuſion, the Houſe was Adjourn'd to the 20th of March.

Commits ſeveral of the Members.

March 3. Several leading Members were by Warrant ſummon'd to appear before the Council on the next Day: when Mr. Holles, Sir John Elliot, Mr. Coriton, and Mr. Valentine, appearing, and refuſing to anſwer out of Parliament for what was ſaid and done in Parliament, were committed cloſe Priſoners to the Tower; and a Proclamation for apprehending Mr. Long and Mr. Stroud.

Tueſday March 10. His Majeſty in the Throne with Crown and Robes, the Lords in their Robes, the Commons not ſent for, tho' ſeveral appearing below the Bar; the King ſpoke thus:

Diſſolving Speech.

"My Lords,

"I Never came here upon ſo unpleaſant an Occaſion, it being the Diſſolution of a Parliament. "Therefore Men may have ſome cauſe to wonder "why I ſhould not rather chuſe to do this by Commiſſion, it being a general Maxim of Kings, to "leave harſh Commands to their Miniſters, Themſelves only executing pleaſing things. Yet conſidering that Juſtice as well conſiſts in Reward and "Praiſe of Virtue, as Puniſhing of Vice; I thought "it neceſſary to come here to day, and to declare "to you and all the World, that it was meerly the "undutiful and ſeditious Carriage in the Lower "Houſe, that hath made the Diſſolution of this "Parliament. And you, my Lords, are ſo far from "being any Cauſers of it, that I take as much "comfort in your dutiful Demeanour, as I am juſtly diſtaſted with their Proceedings. Yet to avoid "their Miſtakings, let me tell you, that it is ſo far "from me to adjudge all the Houſe alike guilty, "that I know there are many there as dutiful Subjects as any in the World; it being but ſome few "Vipers among them that did caſt this Miſt of Undutifulneſs over moſt of their Eyes: Yet to ſay "Truth, there was a good Number there that could "not be infected with this Contagion; inſomuch "that ſome did expreſs their Duties in ſpeaking, "which was the general Fault of the Houſe the laſt "Day.

"To conclude, As thoſe Vipers muſt look for "their Reward of Puniſhment, ſo You, my Lords, "may juſtly expect from me that Favour and Pro-"tection that a good King oweth to his loving and "faithful Nobility.

"And now, my Lord Keeper, do what I have "commanded you."

Then the Lord Keeper pronounc'd the Parliament Diſſolv'd: and there had been a Proclamation for the Diſſolution of it, dated March 2. (a)

Diſcontents and Libels.

The Diſcontents of the People were rais'd and artificially improv'd upon this Occaſion; and many Libels were thrown about the City, and eſpecially one againſt Biſhop Laud, to this effect. "Laud "look to thy ſelf; be aſſured thy Life is ſought. "As thou art the Fountain of Wickedneſs, Repent "of thy monſtrous Sins before thou be taken out of "the World: and aſſure thy ſelf, neither God nor "the World can endure ſuch a vile Counſellor or "Whiſperer to live."

King's Declaration of the Cauſes of Diſſolving this Parliament.

Upon the many Murmurs and Tendencies to Sedition, the King thought it proper to quiet the Minds of his loving Subjects by a Declaration of the Cauſes which moved him to diſſolve the laſt Parliament; beginning thus: "Howſoever Princes are not bound to "give Account of their Actions but to God alone, "yet for the Satiſfaction of the Minds and Affe-"ctions of our loving Subjects, we have thought "good to ſet down thus much by way of Declara-"tion, that we may appear to the World in the "Truth and Sincerity of our Actions, and not in "thoſe Colours in which we know ſome turbulent "and ill-affected Spirits (to maſk and diſguiſe "their wicked Intentions, dangerous to the State) "would repreſent us to the publick View."

And ſo giving an Account of their whole Proceedings, with full Reflections on them, it ended thus:

"And now having laid down the Truth and "Clearneſs of our Proceedings, all wiſe and diſcreet "Men may eaſily judge of thoſe Rumours and jea-"lous Fears that are maliciouſly and wickedly "bruited abroad; and may diſcern, by Examina-"tion of their own Hearts, whether, in reſpect of "the free Paſſage of the Goſpel, indifferent and "equal Adminiſtration of Juſtice, Freedom from "Oppreſſion, and the great Peace and Quietneſs "which every Man enjoyeth under his own Vine "and Fig-tree, the Happineſs of this Nation can "be parallel'd by any of our Neighbour Countries; "and if not, then to acknowledge their own Bleſ-"ſedneſs, and for the ſame be thankful to God the "Author of all Goodneſs."

The King now reſolv'd to proceed in the Star-Chamber againſt the Members committed to the Tower. For this purpoſe, the Judges, by Command, met at Serjeants-Inn, where the Attorney-General propoſed ſome Queſtions, to which their Lordſhips gave in theſe Opinions.

Anſwer of the Judges to the Queſtions of Privilege of Parliament.

"I. All Parliament Men, by Privilege of Houſe, "ought to have freedom of Speech, concerning Mat-"ters debated in Parliament, by a Parliamentary "Courſe.

"II. That a Subject receiving probable Informa-"tion of any Treaſon, ought to make it known to "the King, or his Commiſſioners, when thereunto "required: Or elſe it is an Offence puniſhable in the "Star-Chamber, unleſs the Diſcovery concern the "Party himſelf.

"III. That a Parliament Man committing an "Offence againſt the King or Council, not in a Par-"liamentary way, may be puniſh'd for it after the "Parliament is ended; though regularly, he cannot "be compell'd out of Parliament to anſwer things "done in Parliament in a Parliamentary Courſe.

"IV. That if Parliament Men raiſe falſe Ru-"mours and Slanders againſt the Lords of the Coun-"cil and Judges, it is puniſhable out of Parliament, "as an Offence exorbitant committed in Parliament, "beyond the Office and beſides the Duty of a Par-"liament Man."

Upon the ſtrength of theſe Opinions, the King confirm'd his Reſolution of bringing the impriſon'd Members to Submiſſion or Penalties, for their late Behaviour in the Houſe. (b)

Proceedings againſt the late Members of Parliament.

This Eaſter Term Mr. Strond and Mr. Long, two of the confin'd Members brought a Habeas Corpus, directed to the Marſhal of the Houſhold to be return'd to the King's-Bench. A ſpecial Return was made, that they were committed by Warrant of Council, and detained by another Warrant under his Majeſty's Hand. The Sufficiency of this Return was argu'd largely, and Judgment given againſt the Priſoners.

May 7. An Information had been exhibited in the Star-Chamber, againſt the ſeveral Members then in Cuſtody, Sir John Elliot, Denzil Holles, Benjamin Valentine, Walter Long, William Corriton, William Strode, John Selden, Sir Miles Hobert, and Sir Peter Hayman, for their undutiful Speeches and Actions in the late Parliament. In Trinity Term they ſeverally brought a Habeas Corpus, and after Pleading a Return was made, that their Cauſe of Commitment was Special, and they ought not to be Bail'd. Nor were the Priſoners brought to the Bar, as by Rule and Cuſtom of the Court; but thoſe of them who had been committed to other Priſons, were now by expreſs command remov'd to the Tower. In Michaelmas Term the Judges came to a Reſolution, that the Priſoners ſhould be Bail'd, giving Sureties for their good Behaviour. And this Motion of Diſcharge proceeded from the King himſelf, who had conferr'd with the Judges, and had declared his Conſent the Priſoners ſhould be Bail'd, notwithſtanding their Obſtinacy, that they would not ſo much as preſent a Petition to him to expreſs, That they were ſorry he was offended with them. But the Priſoners began now to value themſelves upon their Suffering, and had ſo much Countenance from ſeveral of their late fellow Members, that they would not now accept of a Deliverance, but unanimouſly refuſed to find Sureties for their Behaviour; nay, Mr. Holles was ſo induſtrious to be continu'd in Cuſtody, that when one offer'd his own Bail, he would not yield to the Courſe of the Court, to be himſelf Bound with him. And even Mr. Long, who had actually found Sureties in the Chief Juſtices Chamber, declar'd in Court that his Sureties ſhould no longer continue. Such a Merit did they now place in Confinement as to labour againſt their own Liberty; and by ſuch glorying in Perſecution to raiſe a Popularity to themſelves, and caſt an Odium on the King.

Who glory in their Sufferings.

Upon this intractable Humour the King purſued another Method, and letting fall the Proceſs in the Star-Chamber, he reſolv'd to proceed againſt them by Common Law in the King's-Bench; where in this Michaelmas Term an Information was exhibited by the Attorney General, to which the Defendants put in a Plea to the Juriſdiction of the Court, and the Court did not over-rule the Plea, but gave a Day to join in Demurr that Term; when after learned Arguments on both ſides, the Judges agreed, That the Court,

1629. Court, as this Caſe is, ſhall have Juriſdiction, although theſe Offences were committed in Parliament, and that the imprisoned Members ought to Anſwer. But the Defendants refuſed to put in any other Plea; upon which, on the laſt Day of the Term, Judgment was given againſt them upon a Nihil dicit, in this manner:

Judgment of the Court.

" I. That every of the Defendants ſhall be impriſon'd during the King's Pleaſure; Sir John Elliot to be impriſon'd in the Tower of London, and " the other Defendants in other Priſons.

" II. That none of them ſhall be deliver'd out of " Priſon, until he give Security in this Court for his " good Behaviour, and have made Submiſſion and " Acknowledgment of his Offence.

" III. Sir John Elliot, as the greateſt Offender " and Ringleader, ſhall pay a Fine to the King of " 2000 l. Mr. Holles 1000 Marks, and Mr. Valentine " 500 l."

They refuſed to ſubmit to any thing but the neceſſity of a long Impriſonment, where ſome of them died in Cuſtody, and others treaſur'd up a Reputation of Confeſſors for the Privilege of Parliament, and in 1640. had an ample Reward of Thanks and Money.

Peace between England and France.

Rochel being Surrender'd by the Proteſtants, and the French King being immediately after engag'd to proſecute a War in Italy againſt the Spaniards: This was a proper Juncture to mediate a Peace between England and France, of which the Articles were agreed upon at Suſa in Italy, within the Month of April, and publiſhed in both Kingdoms on the 10th of May. A Peace very acceptable to the King and Court upon the juſt Principles of Policy; and more ſo to the Queen, upon the accounts of Nature and Religion. But tho' Wiſe and Honourable enough in the Terms and Articles, it was ſuſpected and traduc'd by many Popular Heads, as if it did not provide for the Proteſtants abroad, and would much encourage the Papiſts here at home. (a)

Affairs of Ireland.

Ireland had been long without a Parliament, and many Grievances began to diſcontent the People; the Lord Deputy, Viſcount Falkland, conſented to the Deſires of the Nobility and Gentry, that Commiſſioners ſhould be choſe out of each Province, to go over into England, and preſent their Grievances to the King himſelf, and pray a Redreſs of them. Theſe Commiſſioners came to the Court in September, and gave in Writing their humble Petition; offering to remit to his Highneſs one hundred and fifty thouſand Pounds, borrowed of the Country for pay of the Army, and to grant three Subſidies to be paid in the next three Years, humbly requeſting Eaſe and Relief to ſome Burthens and Grievances. To every one of theſe Complaints of Grievance (being fifty five in number) the King return'd a particular Anſwer, either giving preſent Satisfaction, or promiſing a Method of ſudden Remedy: And to the laſt Requeſt for a new Parliament in that Kingdom, the King declar'd his Pleaſure for a ſpeedy Summons; upon which the Deputy and Privy-Council iſſued Writs for a Parliament to meet in November: A courſe too haſty and irregular. For by Poyning's Act 20 Hen. 7. a Certificate muſt be firſt ſent over into England, from the Deputy and Council, under the Great Seal of Ireland, and then his Majeſty's Licenſe muſt be ſent back under the Great Seal of England: This Defect and Omiſſion was cenſur'd by an Order of the Council-Board, and by them referred to the Judges; who gave their Opinion, that the Summons was illegal and void. 1629.

Delivery of the Queen.

May 13. The Queen before her Time was deliver'd of a Son, and the Romiſh Prieſts were ſuch Frogs in the Bed-Chamber, that they would have immediately baptiz'd the Child in their way, if the King had not ſtep'd in and expreſsly aſſign'd that Office to his Chaplain Dr. Webb, who baptiz'd him by the Name of Charles: He died about an Hour after, and was interr'd at Weſtminſter by the Biſhop of London. (b)

Inſolence of the Popiſh Prieſts.

A Peace in agitation with Spain.

The King of Spain by his Loſſes in Italy, was brought low enough to ſue for a Peace with England. To ſollicite this Affair, Peter Reuben the famous Painter of Antwerp, Secretary and Gentleman of the Chamber to the Archdutcheſs, was ſent hither as an Agent, and ſeem'd to offer the reſtitution of the Palatinate, which was but a Bait to bring on other Terms. Upon the Jealouſie of the Spaniards, and the Honour of the Engliſh Court, this Negotiation went ſlowly on, till Reuben was recalled, and Don Carlos de Colonnos was ſent hither as Ambaſſador in January following, who brought it to a concluſion in the following Year.

The King ſoftens ſome of the late Members.

To ſoften the Murmurs of the late Members now impriſoned, the King tried another way of gaining over ſome other of the moſt Popular Commons, by Royal Favours and Preferments. Sir Thomas Wentworth and Sir John Savile were made Privy-Counſellors, Sir Dudley Diggs Maſter of the Rolls, Mr. Noy the King's Attorney-General, and Mr. Littleton Sollicitor. This Policy, however Generous and Wiſe, was called the buying off Men, and among the Improvers of Sedition, it help'd to aggravate the Craft of the Court, and the mercenary Spirit of theſe Perſons, who were yet moſt of them Men of the greateſt Induſtry, Fidelity and Ability in the King's Service.

Having thus related all Civil Affairs of Importance to the end of 1629, by a Method before preſcribed, we ſhall now look back upon the State of Religion, where we left it at the end of 1626.

State of Religion 1627.

The Lenity of Abp. Abbot.

And here it muſt be acknowledg'd to have been the Senſe of many Church-men, that the Lenity and Coldneſs of Archbiſhop Abbot had a very unhappy Influence upon the Peace and Honour of the Church of England. His immediate Predeceſſor, Dr. Bancroft, had Experience to underſtand the Conſtitution of the Church, and had Courage to aſſert the Diſcipline of it: and had he been ſucceeded by Biſhop Andrews, or Biſhop Overal, or ſome other active Inſtrument of Decency and Order; this Church had perhaps ſtood the Glory of the Reformation and the Envy of Rome. But by the bold Importunity of the Earl of Dunbar, the prime Scotch Favourite, Dr. Abbot was firſt preferr'd to the See of Coventry and Litchfield, then ſoon to London, and ſo to Canterbury. A private Maſter of a College in Oxford, heavy and moroſe, and little elſe to make him ſeem wiſe and grave. His Character is thus drawn by a great Maſter of that Art. " He had been Head or Maſter of " one of the pooreſt Colleges in Oxford, and had " Learning ſufficient for that Province. He was a " Man of very moroſe Manners, and a very ſour " Aſpect, which in that time was called Gravity: " Made Biſhop before he had been Parſon, Vicar, " or Curate of any Pariſh Church in England, or " Dean or Prebend of any Cathedral Church: and " was in truth totally ignorant of the true Conſtitution of the Church of England and the State and " Intereſt of the Clergy; as ſufficiently appeared " through the whole courſe of his Life. He conſi-

See the Articles of Peace between the French King and his Proteſtant Subjects, upon Condition of general Pardon, and keeping in force the Edict of Nantz, concluded at Netz, 27. June 1629. in the ſaid Memoirs. p. 223.

1629. "dered Chriſtian Religion no otherwiſe than as it "abhorred and reviled Popery, and valued thoſe "Men moſt who did that the moſt furiouſly. For "the ſtrict Obſervation of the Diſcipline of the "Church, or the Conformity to the Articles or Canons eſtabliſh'd, he made little Enquiry, and took "leſs Care; and having himſelf made a very little "progreſs in ancient and ſolid Study of Divinity, "he adhered only to the Doctrine of Calvin, and "for his ſake did not think ſo ill of the Diſcipline "as he ought to have done."

For theſe Infirmities, this Prelate never made a juſt Figure in the Church, and had but very little Intereſt in the Court. But theſe very Diſadvantages turn'd to his greater Credit in the Country, and in the late Parliaments: And one Thing now happen'd, that ſerv'd much to raiſe his Reputation.

Caſe of Dr. Sibthorp. Dr. Sibthorp, Vicar of Brackley, Son-in-law to Sir John Lamb, a Man of ordinary Parts and ſordid Ambition, had preach'd a Sermon at the Lent-Aſſizes in Northampton 1626, on Rom. 13. 7. wherein his profeſt Deſign was, to prove the King's Right of impoſing Loans and Contributions on the Subject. This gave ſuch Offence to many of the Auditors, that the Noiſe of it reach'd the Court, and the Preacher was to be countenanc'd upon the meer Fame of Loyalty. Upon this Conceit, he tranſcribes his Sermon, and preſents it to the Duke of Buckingham, who carried the Copy to the King, and recommended the Publiſhing of it. The Biſhop of London wiſely declined the Licenſing, or purpoſely threw the Temptation upon the Archbiſhop, to whom the Copy was brought by Mr. Murrey Gentleman of the Bed-chamber, requiring his Approbation and Licence in the King's Name. Abp. Abbot honeſtly refuſes to Licenſe the Sermon. The Archbiſhop made Exceptions to ſeveral Paſſages in the Sermon, and deſir'd the Meſſenger to acquaint his Majeſty with the Reaſons why he muſt decline to give his Imprimatur. After ſome days, Mr. Murrey return'd, and told the Archbiſhop, the King would inſiſt upon it. But the Archbiſhop ſtill wav'd the matter, till another Meſſage was brought him by the ſame hand, that if he did not diſpatch it, the King would take ſome other courſe with him. Upon this the Archbiſhop put his Objections into Writing, and ſent them to the King, by whom they were communicated to the Duke, and by him to Laud Biſhop of Bath and Wells, and the Biſhops of Durham, Rocheſter, and Oxford; in whoſe Names an Anſwer to the Archbiſhop's Exceptions was drawn up, and ſent by Mr. Murrey to Lambeth: but no Argument or Authority could prevail with his Grace to licenſe the Sermon; which was ſoon after licens'd by the Biſhop of London (a). The Duke of Buckingham reſented this Denial as a Contempt of himſelf and the King, and reſolved upon ſome Mark of Diſpleaſure. On Tueſday July 5. the Lord Conway was ſent to Croyden, to inform the Archbiſhop, that it was his Majeſty's Pleaſure he ſhould withdraw himſelf to Canterbury, and ſhould not from henceforth meddle with the High Commiſſion. The Archbiſhop offer'd Reaſons why Canterbury would be an inconvenient Place of Reſidence for him, and deſired he might rather retire to his Houſe of Foard five Miles beyond; to which the King readily aſſented, and allow'd convenient time to prepare for his Removal. See this Narrative of Abp. Abbot, in Ruſhwort. Collect. Vol. 1. p. 438. The Report of this Hardſhip upon the Archbiſhop, brought him more Viſitors to take their Leave of him; to thoſe degrees of Popularity, that this more provok'd the Court againſt him. When in ſubmiſſion he was got to Foard, he wrote there a large Narrative of his own Caſe; which indeed makes his Judgment and Actions in this Particular to be very laudable.

Severe Proceedings againſt the Abp. The Archbiſhop, in Diſgrace and a ſort of Baniſhment, made no Submiſſion to the King, but gave new Occaſions to the Court to be more and more offended with him. Upon which he was ſequeſtred from his Juriſdiction, and a Commiſſion was ſign'd Octob. 9. to the Biſhops of London, Durham, Rocheſter, Oxford, Bath and Wells, to do, execute, and perform all Acts, Matters and Things, any way touching or concerning the Power, Juriſdiction, or Authority of the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, in Cauſes or Matters Eccleſiaſtical.

Dangers of Popery. After the Reſolution to call the Parliament (which met March 17. 162 8/9.) the Dangers of Popery made a very popular Noiſe; and there were ſome unhappy Reaſons to promote it: eſpecially, that a Society of Recuſants was taken in Clerkenwell, moſt of them Jeſuits, and the Houſe where they were taken was deſigned to be a College of that Order. Among their Papers was found the Copy of a Letter written to their Rector at Bruſſels, upon the Subject of the enſuing Parliament; wherein they thus expreſs themſelves—"We hope as much in this Parliament, as ever we feared any in Qu. Elizabeth's "days.—We have made great uſe of this Anarchical Election, and have prejudicated and anticipated the great one, that none but the King's "Enemies and His are choſen of this Parliament.— "Now we have planted that ſoveraign Drug Arminianiſm, which we hope will purge the Proteſtants "from their Hereſie.—I cannot chuſe but laugh "to ſee how ſome of our own Coat have accoutred "themſelves: You would ſcarce know them if you "ſaw them: And 'tis admirable how in Speech and "Geſture they act the Puritans.—I am at this "time tranſported with Joy, to ſee how happily all "Inſtruments and Means, as well great as leſs, cooperate unto our Purpoſes." (b)

Policy of the Papiſts to divide the Proteſtants. The Senſe of this Letter was only to ſhew, that the Hopes of the Papiſts was in the Diviſion of the Proteſtants, and their Intereſt was to promote that Diviſion. And the Diſcovery of the Letter did but unhappily ſerve to promote the Argument of it: for it encreas'd the Fears and Jealouſies between Churchman and Puritan, and between Court and Country.

Proceedings in Parliament upon Matters of Religion. One of the firſt Things in the Houſe of Commons was to ſettle a Committee for Religion on Thurſday Mar. 20. and to addreſs the King for a ſolemn Faſt. The Commons had ſoon after a Conference with the Lords upon a Petition againſt Recuſants, wherein Mr. Secretary Cook thus expreſt himſelf.—"And "a little to awake the Zeal and Care of our learned and grave Fathers, it is fit that they take notice of that Hierarchy which is already eſtabliſhed in competition with their Lordſhips; for they "have a Biſhop conſecrated by the Pope: This Biſhop hath his ſubalternate Officers of all Kinds, "as Vicars-General, Arch-Deacons, Rural-Deans, "Apparitors, and ſuch like: Neither are theſe Nominal and Titular Officers alone; but they all execute their Juriſdictions, and make their ordinary "Viſitations through the Kingdom, keep Courts, "and determine Eccleſiaſtical Cauſes: And, which "is an Argument of more Conſequence, they keep "ordinary Intelligence by their Agents in Rome, and "hold correſpondence with the Nuncio's and Cardinals both at Bruxels and in France. Neither are "the Seculars alone grown to this height, but the "Regulars are more active and dangerous—Even "at this time they intend to hold a concurrent Aſſembly with this Parliament."

(a) Not meerly licenſed, but approved and recommended in theſe Words.—I have read over this Sermon; and I do approve it as a Sermon learnedly and diſcreetly preach'd, agreeable to the ancient Doctrine of the Primitive Church, both for Faith and good Manners, and to the Doctrine eſtabliſh'd in the Church of England; and therefore under my Hand I give Authority for the Printing of it, May 8. 1627. Geo. London.

(b) This Letter ſaid to be found amongſt the Papers of the Jeſuits, lately taken in London directed, to the Father, Rector at Bruſſels, and dated 24. March 1627, is printed at large in the Papiſts Deſigns detected. 1678. 4*to.* and there is a Manuſcript Copy of it in MSS. Harley 37. B. 5. And it was Printed by it ſelf in 1643. 4*to.*

Petition of the Parliament,

Upon this View of Popiſh Inſolence, a Petition was agreed upon by both Houſes, and preſented to his Majeſty on Monday March 31.

To give a Specimen of the firſt Article, and his Majeſty's Anſwer to it.

Againſt Popery.

Art. 1. "We moſt humbly and ardently beg at "the Hands of your moſt Sacred Majeſty, that your "Majeſty will be pleaſed to give continual Life "and Motion to all thoſe Laws that ſtand in force "againſt Jeſuits, Seminary Prieſts, and all that have "taken Orders by Authority of the See of Rome, by "exacting a more due and ſerious Execution of the "ſame. Amongſt which Number, thoſe that have "highly abuſed your Majeſty's Clemency by return- "ing into the Kingdom after their Baniſhment, "contrary to your Highneſs expreſs Proclamation, "we humbly deſire may be left to the Severity of "your Laws, without admitting of any Mediation "or Interceſſion for them. And that ſuch of your "Majeſty's unſound and ill-affected Subjects as do "receive, harbour, or conceal any of their viperous "Generation, may without delay ſuffer ſuch Penal- "ties and Puniſhments as the Laws moſt juſtly im- "poſe upon them."

King's Anſwer.

Anſw. "To the firſt Point his Majeſty anſwer- "eth, That he will, according to your Deſire, give "both Life and Motion to the Laws that ſtand in "force againſt the Jeſuits, Seminary Prieſts, and all "that have taken Orders by Authority of the See "of Rome: And to that end, his Majeſty will give "ſtrict Order to all his Miniſters for the diſcover- "ing and apprehending of them; and ſo leave "them, being apprehended, to the Tryal of the "Law. And in caſe after Tryal there ſhall be cauſe "to reſpit Execution of any of them; yet they ſhall "be committed (according to the Example of the "beſt Times) to the Caſtle of Wisbich; and there "be ſafely kept from exerciſing their Functions, or "ſpreading their ſuperſtitious and dangerous Do- "ctrine: And the Receivers and Abetters they ſhall "be left to the Law."

The Second Article was for watching Ports and Harbours, and ſearching Ships for Diſcovery of Jeſuits and young Students: The Third for prohibiting all Popiſh Recuſants to come to Court, or within ten Miles of London: The Fourth for taking away Compoſitions by which Papiſts purchaſe to themſelves a ſort of concealed Toleration: The Fifth for reſtraining the Reſort of Engliſh Papiſts to the Chapels of Foreign Ambaſſadors: The Sixth that no Papiſt be put into any Place of Authority or Command: The Seventh that all Judges and Juſtices be commanded to execute the Laws, and to give to the Lord Keeper a ſtrict Account of their Proceedings: The Eigth and laſt, for making a proviſional Law for training and educating of the Children of Popiſh Recuſants in the Grounds and Principles of our holy Religion. To all which Articles his Majeſty return'd ſuch diſtinct and full Anſwers, as might have convinc'd all rational People, that ſome late Connivences were really owing to the Hopes of a like Tenderneſs to foreign Proteſtants, and to an indulging Affection to the Queen, not at all to the King's own Judgment or Inclination, nor to any worſe Deſign in the prime Miniſters of State. (a) Complaint againſt the Clergy for Principles of Arbitrary Power.

There was another Jealouſie in the Houſe of Commons, that ſome of the inferiour Clergy were advancing new Doctrines, to flatter the Court, and to give the King a Divine Right to abſolute Power. They thought this to be pragmatical, and of pernicious Effect. And therefore about the latter End of May, Mr. Rous brought in a Charge againſt Dr. Edward Manwaring, for his Plot and Practice to alter and ſubvert the Frame and Fabrick of this Eſtate and Commonwealth. To which end (ſays he)

1629.

Speech of Mr. Rous againſt Dr. Manwaring.

"1. He labours to infuſe into the Conſcience of "his Majeſty, the Perſuaſion of a Power not bound- "ing it ſelf with Laws, which King James, of fa- "mous Memory, calls in his Speech to the Parlia- "ment Tyranny, yea Tyranny accompanied with Per- "jury.

"2. He endeavours to perſwade the Conſcience "of the Subjects, that they are bound to obey Com- "mands illegal; yea, he damns them for not o- "beying them.

"3. He robs the Subjects of the Propriety of their "Goods.

"4. He brands them that will not loſe this Pro- "priety with moſt ſcandalous Speeches and odious "Titles, to make them moſt hateful to Prince and "People; ſo to ſet a Diviſion between the Head "and the Members, and between the Members "themſelves.

"5. To the ſame End, not much unlike to Faux, "and his Fellows, he ſeeks to blow up Parliaments "and Parliamentary Powers."

Declaration of the Commons againſt Dr. Manwaring.

The Matter of this Charge was put into a formal Declaration of the Commons againſt Dr. Manwaring Clerk and Doctor in Divinity, which was preſented on June 3. to the Lords at a Conference betwixt the Committees of both Houſes, Mr. Pymm managing that Conference for the Commons, who in a very long Speech did inveigh and aggravate as much as Zeal and Talk could do. Soon after the Commons, by their Speaker, demanded Judgment of the Lords againſt the ſaid Doctor; and they gave this Sentence.

Judgment of the Lords againſt him.

"1. That Roger Manwaring, Doctor in Divinity, "ſhall be impriſoned during the Pleaſure of the "Houſe.

"2. That he be fined one thouſand Pounds to "the King.

"3. That he ſhall make ſuch Submiſſion and Ac- "knowledgment of his Offences, as ſhall be ſet "down by a Committee in Writing, both at the "Bar, and in the Houſe of Commons.

"4. That he ſhall be ſuſpended for the time of "three Years from the Exerciſe of the Miniſtry, "and in the mean time a ſufficient Preaching Mi- "niſter ſhall be provided out of his Livings to ſerve "the Cure: This Suſpenſion and Proviſion to be "done by the Eccleſiaſtical Juriſdiction.

"5. That he ſhall be hereafter diſabled to have "any Eccleſiaſtical Dignity or Secular Office.

"6. That he ſhall be for ever diſabled to preach "at the Court hereafter.

"7. That his ſaid Book is worthy to be burnt, "and that for the better effecting this, his Maje- "ſty may be moved to grant a Proclamation to call "in the ſaid Books, that they may be all burnt ac- "cordingly in London, and both the Univerſities; "and for the Inhibiting the printing thereof upon a "great Penalty."

In purſuance of the third Article of Penance, the Doctor made this Submiſſion in Tears upon his Knees.

The Doctor's Submiſſion.

"May it pleaſe this Honourable Houſe,

"I Do here in all Sorrow of Heart, and true Re- "pentance, acknowledge the many Errors and "Indiſcretions which I have committed, in preach- "ing and publiſhing thoſe two Sermons of mine, "which I called Religion and Allegiance, and my great "Fault in falling upon this Theme again, and hand- "ling the ſame raſhly and unadviſedly in my own "Pariſh Church of St. Giles in the Fields, the 4th "of May laſt paſt. I do humbly acknowledge thoſe "three Sermons to have been full of many dange- "rous Paſſages, Inferences, and ſcandalous Aſperſi- "ons in moſt part of the ſame. And I do humbly

Roger Manwaring.

If all the other Particulars in the Sentence had been as duly executed, it had been more for the Intereſt of the King, and even for the Credit of the Preacher. But when, after this Solemnity of Cenſure and Submiſſion, the Party was made a Favourite of the Court, and had Preferments heap'd upon him, this threw the Odium of the Doctrine upon the King and his Miniſters, which might otherwiſe have reſted upon the Indiſcretion of the Preacher. And this mark'd out the Doctor for a more propenſe Deſign of Flattery, and for diſſembling a Submiſſion, when he might have been otherwiſe pitied for inconſiderate Raſhneſs, and even beloved for the Ingenuity of Confeſſing and Retracting.

Preferr'd by the Court.

Next to Popery and Arbitrary Power, the Commons were under terrible Apprehenſions of what they called Arminianiſm. And tho' few underſtood the Thing, or ſo much as the Name; yet it was enough that they thought it a Hereſy, and even a Court Hereſy. And therefore June 13, the Commons voted, that Dr. Neal, Biſhop of Wincheſter, and Dr. Laud, Biſhop of Bath and Wells, be named to be thoſe near about the King, who are ſuſpected to be Arminians; and that they are juſtly ſuſpected to be unſound in their Opinions that way. And accordingly in the Commons Remonſtrance againſt the Duke of Buckingham, they declare, " The Hearts of your " good Subjects are perplexed, when with Sorrow " they behold a daily growth and ſpreading of the " Faction of the Arminians, that being, as your " Majeſty well knows, but a cunning way to bring " in Popery; and the Profeſſors of thoſe Opinions, " the common Diſturbers of the Proteſtant Churches, " and Incendiaries in thoſe States wherein they have " gotten any Head; being Proteſtants in Show, but " Jeſuits in Opinion: which cauſed your Royal Father, with ſo much pious Wiſdom and ardent " Zeal, to endeavour the ſuppreſſing of them, as " well at home as in the Neighbour Countries. And " your gracious Majeſty imitating his moſt worthy " Example, hath openly, and by your Proclamation, declared your miſlike of thoſe Perſons and of " their Opinions; who, notwithſtanding, are much " favoured and advanced, not wanting Friends even of the Clergy near to your Majeſty, namely " Dr. Neal, Biſhop of Wincheſter, and Dr. Laud, Biſhop of Bath and Wells; who are juſtly ſuſpected " to be unſound in their Opinions that way. And " it being now generally held the way to Preferment " and Promotion in the Church, many Scholars do " bend the Courſe of their Studies to maintain thoſe " Errors."

Fears of Arminianiſm.

Bp. Neal and Bp. Laud expreſly named.

It is certain theſe Suggeſtions were founded much upon Prejudice and Inadvertence: For moſt of the Engliſh Divines called Arminians, had never read the Works of Arminius, but had drawn their diſtinguiſhing Opinions from the Primitive Fathers, and from the ſevere Abſurdities of ſome of the Calviniſtical Writers. The Arminians in Holland had been chiefly odious for being a State Faction, and it was under that Civil Character that King James was ſo incenſed againſt them. His preſent Majeſty and the Duke, favoured theſe Engliſh Divines, not ſo much for their Sentiments in Point of Faith, as for their eminent Zeal in Matters of Diſcipline, and their extraordinary Spirit of Loyalty: But however, the Popular Rumour obtained, that all who departed from the Rigours of Calvin were Arminians, and all Arminians were the Inſtruments of Popery and Arbitrary Power. 1629.

A Convocation was called in concurrence with this Parliament to meet.

A Convocation called with the Parliament.

But nothing of Eccleſiaſtical concern was ſo much as moved in it, tho' Opportunity, and even Provocation offer'd, by the unhappy Controverſies in Religion then depending; and by the Examination and Cenſure of Books and Perſons in the Civil Aſſembly, which might have been thought as proper to fall under the Cognizance of this Eccleſiaſtical Body. But the Principle and Practice were then fix'd, that a Convocation began no Debates in Religion, without Inſtruction from the Biſhops and Licenſe from the King. And therefore not receiving ſuch Commiſſion to act in Spirituals, they kept only to their immemorial Right in Temporals, and granted five entire Subſidies to the King confirmed by Act of Parliament.

To do nothing but give their Money.

In the Intervals of Parliament and Convocation, the King purſued thoſe Methods that were Wiſe and Honourable. He ſet forth a Proclamation to ſuppreſs the offenſive Sermons of Dr. Manwaring, and therein declared, " That tho' the grounds were rightly laid to perſwade Obedience from Subjects to " their Soveraign, and that for Conſcience ſake: " yet in divers Paſſages, Inferences and Applications thereof, trenching upon the Laws of this " Land and Proceedings of Parliaments, whereof " he was ignorant, he ſo far err'd, that he had drawn " upon himſelf the juſt Cenſure and Sentence of the " High Court of Parliament, by whoſe Judgment " alſo that Book ſtands condemn'd. Wherefore being deſirous to remove Occaſions of Scandal, he " thought fit that theſe Sermons, in regard of " their Influences and Applications, be totally " ſuppreſs'd."

Proclamation againſt the Sermons of Dr. Manwaring.

It was an Error and Misfortune, that the Advancement of Dr. Manwaring was ſoon after contriv'd, that ſeem'd to make the Proclamation a Court Jeſt, and the Counſels of the Miniſtry to be little Myſteries of deceiving the People. (a)

Another Proclamation was iſſued to declare the King's Pleaſure for a vigorous Proceeding againſt Popiſh Recuſants, and for Directions to the King's Commiſſioners to ſuffer Recuſants convict to compound for no leſs than two parts of three of their Eſtates, which by Law were forfeited to the Crown. (b)

Proclamation againſt Papiſts.

A third Proclamation for diligent Search to be made for all Prieſts and Jeſuits, particularly for the Biſhop of Chalcedon, to Apprehend them and Commit them, &c. The Jeſuits taken at Clerkenwel, were from ſeveral Priſons remov'd to Newgate, in order to be convicted and condemned. The Privy-Council wrote to the Biſhop of Ely to prepare the Caſtle of Wisbich for the ſafe Cuſtody of Popiſh Priſoners; and ſent to require the Lord Mayor of London, to ſearch out all Recuſants within the City and Liberties thereof. So as the King appeared to act in perfect Compliance with the Senſe of the Parliament laſt ſitting.

Againſt Prieſts and Jeſuits.

But ſome Steps were taken, at which the diſcontented Party would be ſure to murmur: For Dr. Laud Biſhop of Bath and Wells, who was thought a Creature of the Duke of Buckingham's, and ſtood cen-

1629. cenſur'd for an Arminian in the Commons Remonſtrance, was on July 15, tranſlated to the Biſhoprick of London, and thereby brought to a nearer acceſs to Court, and to a greater Influence upon the Church. Mr. Mountague was promoted to the See of Chicheſter,(a) and Dr. Manwaring to the good Rectory of Stanford Rivers in Eſſex, and to each of them was granted a Royal Pardon of all Errors heretofore committed by them, either in Speaking, Writing, or Printing, for which they could be any way liable to be hereafter queſtion'd. And as Manwaring had a Royal Favour to reverſe and ſweeten the late Sentence of his Majeſty's Proclamation againſt him: So Mountague had juſt contrary, a Proclamation to cenſure him immediately after the Letters Patent to promote him. For the King thought fit to call in that Author's Work, entitled Appello Cæſarem, and to declare "That out "of his Princely Care to maintain the Church, in "the Unity of the true Religion and the bond of "Peace, to prevent unneceſſary Diſputes, he had "lately cauſed the Articles of Religion to be Re-"printed, as a Rule for avoiding diverſities of Opi-"nions; and conſidering that a Book written by "Richard Mountague, now Biſhop of Chicheſter, en-"titled Appello Cæſarem, was the firſt Cauſe of thoſe "Diſputes and Differences, which ſince have much "troubled the Quiet of the Church; he would take "away this occaſion, by commanding all Perſons "that had any of thoſe Books in their hands, to de-"liver them to the Biſhop of the Dioceſs, or if it "be in either of the Univerſities, to the Chancellor "and Vice-Chancellor thereof, who were command-"ed to ſuppreſs them."

Mountague made Biſhop of Chicheſter.

And yet his Book called in.

But this too was thought a falſe appearance of Policy, to prefer a Writer, and then to ſuppreſs the very Book for which the World thought him preferr'd. Others imputed it to a farther reach of making a ſhew of Impartiality; when about the ſame time the ſeveral Anſwers made to the Appello Cæſarem by Dr. Featly, Dr. Goad, Mr. Ward, Mr. Burton, Mr. Yates, Mr. Wotton, and Francis Rous, Eſq; were all in like manner ſuppreſs'd, and ſome of the Printers queſtioned in the High Commiſſion.

Theſe warm Contentions are thus judiciouſly ſtated by a Witneſs of thoſe Times. "Some Do-"ctrinal Points in Controverſie had been agitated "in the Pulpits with more warmth and reflections "than had uſed to be, and thence the Heat and A-"nimoſity encreaſed in Books Pro and Con upon the "ſame Arguments. Moſt of the Popular Preachers, "who had not look'd into the ancient Learning took "Calvin's Word for it, and did all they could to "propagate his Opinions in thoſe Points: They "who had ſtudied more, and were better verſed in "the Antiquities of the Church, the Fathers, the "Councils, and the Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtories, with "the ſame heat and paſſion in Preaching and Wri-"ting defended the contrary. The latter were cal-"led Arminians, tho' many of them had never read "a Word written by Arminius. Either Side defen-"ded and maintained the different Opinions as the "Doctrine of the Church of England; as the two "great Orders in the Church of Rome, the Domini-"cans and the Franciſcans, did at the ſame time, and "had many hundred Years before, with more vehe-"mence and uncharitableneſs, maintained the ſame "Opinions one againſt the other; either Party pro-"feſſing to adhere to the Doctrine of the Catholick "Church, which had been ever wiſer than to deter-"mine the Controverſie. And yet that Party here, "which could leaſt ſupport themſelves with Reaſon, "were very ſollicitous, according to the Ingenuity "they alway practiſe to advance any of their Pre-"tences, to have the People believe, that they who "held with Arminius did intend to introduce Popery.

"And truly the other ſide was no leſs willing to have "it thought, that all who adhered to Calvin in thoſe "Controverſies, did in their Hearts likewiſe adhere "to him with reference to the Diſcipline, and deſir'd "to change the Government of the Church, and to "ſet up the Diſcipline that he had eſtabliſhed at "Geneva; and ſo both Sides found ſuch reception "generally with the People, as they were inclin'd "to the Perſons. Whereas in truth, none of the "one ſide were at all inclin'd to Popery; and very "many of the other were moſt Affectionate to the "Peace and Proſperity of the Church, and very "Pious and Learned Men." 1629.

When the Parliament re-aſſembled on Tueſday, Jan. 20. 162$\frac{8}{9}$, the Fears and Jealouſies about Religion were ſo much in the Heads of the leading Men in the Houſe of Commons, that when the King ſent a Meſſage to them to conſider ſpeedily of a Bill for Tonnage and Poundage, they rejected the King's Deſire, and reſolv'd to proceed in the firſt place with Matters of Religion, and particularly againſt Arminianiſm: Upon which occaſion Mr. Rous ſpoke with moſt indecent Bitterneſs. —— I deſire we may conſider the Encreaſe of Arminianiſm: an Error that makes the Grace of God lackey it after the Will of Man, that makes the Sheep to keep the Shepherd, and makes a Mortal Seed of an Immortal God: Yea, I deſire that we may look into the very Belly and Bowels of this Trojan Horſe, to ſee if there be not Men in it ready to open the Gates to Romiſh Tyranny and Spaniſh Monarchy: For an Arminian is the Spawn of a Papiſt, &c.

Commons poſtpone all Matters to Religion.

On Tueſday Januar. 27. The Draught of a Remonſtrance concerning Religion in the laſt Seſſion, ſince delivered by the Clerk to the King, was now brought back to the Houſe by Mr. Secretary Cook, with a repeated Deſire from his Majeſty, that they would give the precedency to the Buſineſs of Tonnage and Poundage. But the Houſe again thought fit to prefer Religion; and upon this Debate Mr. Pym made a very eager Speech: Two Diſeaſes there be (ſaid he) the one old the other new; the old Popery, the new Arminianiſm, &c. And becauſe it had been objected in the Houſe, that they ought not to handle Queſtions touching Matters of Religion, which were proper for his Majeſty and a Convocation to determine, Mr. Pym made this Argument againſt the ſaid Objection. —— It belongs to the Duty of Parliaments to eſtabliſh true Religion and to puniſh falſe; we muſt know what Parliaments have done formerly in Religion. Our Parliaments have confirmed General Councils: In the time of King Henry VIII. the Earl of Eſſex was condemned for countenancing Books of Hereſie. For the Convocation, it is but a Provincial Synod of Canterbury, and cannot bind the whole Kingdom. As for York, that is diſtant, and cannot do any thing to bind us or the Laws. For the High Commiſſion, it was derived from Parliament.

Mr. Pym againſt Popery and Arminianiſm.

On Wedneſday Jan. 28. Upon another Meſſage from the King for diſpatch of Tonnage and Poundage, the Houſe again agreed to perſiſt in the Matters of Religion. And Sir John Elliot deliver'd himſelf in moſt provoking Language. —— As to Popery and Arminianiſm our Faith and Religion is in Danger by it; for like an Inundation it doth break in at once upon us. It is ſaid, if there be any Difference in Opinion concerning the Interpretation of the 39 Articles, the Biſhops and the Clergy in Convocation have Power to diſpute it, and to order which way they pleaſe: and then for ought I know Popery and Arminianiſm may be introduc'd by them. — We ſee there are ſome among our Biſhops who are not Orthodox nor ſound in Religion as they ſhould be; witneſs the two Biſhops complained of the laſt Meeting of the Parliament, &c. He put the Houſe into ſuch a ferment, that they made this ſolemn Proteſtation.

Sir John Elliot very free on the ſame Subject.

Proteſtation of the Commons upon the Senſe of the 39 Articles.

"WE the Commons in Parliament aſſembled, "do claim, proteſt, and avow for Truth "the Senſe of the Articles of Religion, which were "eſtabliſhed by Parliament in the 13th Year of our "late Queen Elizabeth; which by the publick Acts "of the Church of England, and by the general and "current Expoſitions of the Writers of our Church "have been deliver'd unto Us. And we reject the "Senſe of the Jeſuits and Arminians and all others, "wherein they differ from us."

This Declaration upon the Senſe of the Articles, was of greater Latitude than any Interpreter had uſed in expounding of them: But it being drawn up thus large and dubious, it was the fitter for a Charm and Spell to affright and drive away ignorant People.

Commons inſiſt upon Redreſs of Grievances in Religion.

Soon after the Commons preſented a Declaration to the King, to juſtifie their Reſolutions of giving Precedency to Religion: Wherein they tell him, "That finding the extreme Dangers wherewith "their Religion is threatned, they think they can-"not, without Impiety to God, Diſloyalty to his "Majeſty, and Unthankfulneſs to thoſe from whom "they are put in Truſt, proceed to other Buſineſs, "till ſomething be done to ſecure them in this main "Point, which they prefer above their Lives, and "all earthly things whatever." The King anſwered, "As for the Cauſe of Delay in my Buſi-"neſs being Religion, there is none of you ſhall "have a greater Care for the true Preſervation of "it than my ſelf; which ſince it is confeſſed by "your Anſwer, you muſt either think I want Pow-"er (which cannot be) or that I am very ill coun-"ſelled, if it be in ſo much Danger as you affirm. "I muſt think it ſtrange, that this Buſineſs of Re-"ligion ſhould only be a Hinderer of my Affairs, "whereas I am certainly informed all other things "go according to their ordinary Courſe."

The King's Declaration about Preaching cenſur'd by the Commons

But the Spirit was now rais'd, and it was the Art of cunning Men to keep it up. And therefore on Wedneſday Feb. 4. the Houſe fell into Debate upon the King's Declaration publiſh'd in Print to prohibit Diſputing or Preaching one way or other in the Controverſies lately rais'd; and did conclude, that the main End of the Declaration was to ſuppreſs the Puritan Party, and give Liberty to the oppoſite Side. They conceiv'd, that Biſhop Laud and Biſhop Mountague had adviſed the King to that Declaration. They complain'd of the King's Pardon granted to the latter; and obſerved, that the Warrant to draw a Pardon was for him only: and yet the Attorney General had put in three others, Dr. Coſens, Dr. Sibthorp, and Dr. Manwaring. (a)

Thurſday Feb. 12. A Report was made from the Committee of Religion about ſolliciting and obtaining the Pardons lately mentioned. And 'tis obſervable, that the Hand of Oliver Cromwel was in this Religious Feud: He was one of this warm Committee, and informed the Houſe, that the Biſhop of Wincheſter gave countenance to ſome Divines that preach'd flat Popery; and it was by his Means that Manwaring (who by Cenſure the laſt Parliament was diſabled from farther Preferment) was now advanc'd to a rich Living. If theſe be the Steps (ſaid he) to Church Preferment, what are we ſhortly to expect?

Bookſellers Petition.

It was the Artifice, or at leaſt the Countenance of this Committee, that brought in the Bookſellers and Printers of London with a Petition, complaining of the Reſtraint of Books written againſt Popery and Arminianiſm, and the contrary Books allow'd by the only means of the Biſhop of London; and that Licenſing was now reſtrain'd to him and his Chaplains.

Friday Feb. 13. The Heats were more inflam'd, by an Order of the Houſe to examine the releaſing of the Jeſuits committed to Newgate, and the Stay of Proceedings againſt ſeveral Recuſants. And tho' fair Accounts were given of the King's Juſtice and Mercy in Execution of the Penal Laws; yet the Out-cry held on, and the firſt Proteſtation made in the Houſe juſt before Diſſolving, (while the Speaker was held in the Chair) was this.

Final Proteſtation of the Commons.

"Whoever ſhall bring in Innovation of Religi-"on, or by Favour or Countenance ſeek to extend "or introduce Popery or Arminianiſm, or other Opi-"nion, diſagreeing from the Truth and Orthodox "Church, ſhall be reputed a Capital Enemy to this "Kingdom and Commonwealth." (b)

Though there ſeems to have been more Reaſon for Diſſolving this Parliament than any other in this Reign before the Long One, (which unhappily could not be Diſſolv'd by the King) yet the leading Members, who were interrupted in their Schemes of Policy and Power, were enrag'd at being no longer capable to ſhew themſelves. They caſt the Odium of this Counſel upon the Biſhop of London, who was thereupon baited with Reflections and Libels. And it is indeed probable, that this Prelate join'd heartily in the Advice for Diſſolving this Parliament: for in his own Diary he obſerved, that this Parliament ſought his Ruin: and it was no doubt his Judgment, that they ſought the Ruin of the Church.

(a) Sir Robert Philips in a Speech complained of theſe four Pardons, and ſaid, If ever King of England was abuſed in his Mercy, it is our King. What Perſons are pardon'd? Even the greateſt Enemies to the Church and State, that were ſtanding under the Judgment of the Parliament, and they are pardoned between Parliaments.—— Mr. Attorney General examined upon it by Order of the Houſe, &c. Crew's Proceedings, &c. 8*vo*. p. 54. and other Manuſcript Accounts of this Seſſion.

(b) This was ſomewhat owing to the many Innovations in the Cathedral Church of Durham, and to the unmerciful Proſecution of one of the Prebendaries who preach'd againſt them, the Reverend Mr. Peter Smart, who lived afterwards to prove before the Parliament; that being juſtly offended with their Innovations in the Communion-Table, Font, Candles, Pictures, Images, Copes, Singing, Veſtments, Geſtures, Prayers, Doctrines, and Speeches of Dr. Coſin, and other Alterations unlawfully introduced and practis'd in the ſaid Cathedral Church, he oppoſed the ſame, and in diſcharge of his Duty, Place and Calling he did upon July 27, 1628. being the Lord's-Day, preach in the ſaid Church againſt the ſame, reproving theſe Innovations and Innovators, and exhorted the People to keep themſelves from the Infections of them; in which Sermon there was nothing ſcandalous, nor diſagreeable to the Word of God, or the Doctrine and Diſcipline of the Church of England. That notwithſtanding the ſaid Dr. Coſin, both upon Mr. Smart's reading his Text, and going on in his Sermon ſuitable thereunto, very turbulently demean'd himſelf in the ſaid Church; and the Sermon being ended, Mr. Smart's Troubles began, for there was not one Day ſet between his Preaching and his Puniſhment: for the ſaid Dr. Coſin, and William James, with others, the ſame Lord's-Day, did ſend a Warrant in the Nature of an Attachment, under the High Commiſſion Seal for that Province, by two Purſevants to convent him before them: Whereupon he perſonally appear'd and delivered to them the imperfect Notes of his Sermon, which were ſealed up, and He ordered to attend the next Day.—Afterward the ſaid Dean and Prebendaries, with John Lively, and Dr. Cardell were Informers, Proſecutors, and Judges, for ſix Months againſt the ſaid Peter Smart at Durham for the ſame, where they cenſur'd him by two Acts of Sequeſtration, and one of Suſpenſion.—And then unlawfully tranſmitted him to London, to anſwer in the High Commiſſion there for the ſame Cauſe.——Thence ſent back to the High Commiſſion at York; there fined Five hundred Pounds; committed him to Priſon; detained him under great Bonds; excommunicated him; ſequeſtred all his Eccleſiaſtical Livings; degraded him ab omni gradu & dignitate clericali, becauſe he did not recant and pay Coſts; by Colour of which Degradation, his Prebendſhip and Parſonage were both taken from him, and he kept in Priſon: By which heavy and unjuſt Oppreſſions, his Life hath been ſeveral times evidently endangered, and he and his Children loſt and ſpent above Fourteen thouſand Pounds of real Eſtate, whereby they were utterly undone. See Canterbury's Cruelty by Peter Smart. 1643, 4*to*.

Richard Hutchiſon's Singing Man and Organiſt of Durham being ſent for by the Parliament in 1628. to bear Witneſs of Innovations, in the Change of Ceremonies and Services brought into that Cathedral Church by the Dean and Chapter; the Parliament being diſſolved upon Tueſday the 16th of March, he left this in Writing, which he purpoſed to teſtifie upon his Oath, &c. ib. p. 25.

King's ſolemn Proteſtation.

His Majeſty, in his Declaration of the Cauſes which moved him to Diſſolve this Parliament, made this ſolemn Profeſſion, “We call God to Record, before “whom we ſtand, that it is and always hath been “our Heart's Deſire, to be found worthy of that “Title which we account the moſt glorious in all “our Crown, Defender of the Faith. Neither ſhall “we ever give way to the Authorizing of any thing “whereby any Innovation may ſteal or creep into “the Church; but to preſerve that Unity of Do“ctrine and Diſcipline, eſtabliſhed in the time of “Queen Elizabeth, whereby the Church of England “hath ſtood and flouriſhed ever ſince.

“And as we are careful to make up all Breaches “and Rents in Religion at home, ſo did we, by “our Proclamation and Commandment for the Ex“ecution of Laws againſt Prieſts and Popiſh Recu“ſants, fortifie all Ways and Approaches againſt “that foreign Enemy; which, if it have not ſuc“ceeded according to our Intention, we muſt lay “the Fault where it is, in the ſubordinate Officers, “and Miniſters in the Country, by whoſe Remiſ“neſs Jeſuits and Prieſts eſcape without Apprehen“ſion, and Recuſants, from thoſe Convictions and “Penalties which the Law and our Commandment “would have inflicted on them. For we do pro“feſs, that as it is our Duty, ſo it ſhall be our “Care, to command and direct well: but it is the “Part of others to perform the Miniſterial Office. “And when we have done our Office, we ſhall ac“count Our-ſelf, and all charitable Men will ac“count Us, innocent both to God and Men. And “thoſe that are negligent, we will eſteem as culpa“ble both to God and Us; and therefore will ex“pect that hereafter they give us a better Account. “—We do here profeſs to maintain the true Re“ligion and Doctrine eſtabliſhed in the Church of “England, without admitting or conniving at any “backſliding either to Popery or Schiſm.”

The People taught to be jealous of Popery.

But the diſcontented Members, upon their unwilling Return into the Country, made an Impreſſion of Unbelief to all that the King declared; and cauſed the popular Prejudices to ſwell ſo high, that for the future there could be no Decency in Worſhip without the Imputation of Popery; and no Reaſoning in Doctrine without the Reproach of Arminianiſm. And this created an Obſtruction and an Odium to all that the King and Biſhops could hereafter do, when very much was fit to be done. The prime Mover and Agent was Biſhop Laud, of whom it may be more proper to take a Character than to give it.

Lord Clarendon's Character of Biſhop Laud.

“The “Duke had obſerv'd and diſcover'd that the Chan“nel in which the Church Promotions had for“merly run, had been liable to ſome Corruptions, “at leaſt to many Reproaches; and therefore had “committed the ſole Repreſentation of thoſe Af“fairs, and the Recommending to the Vacancies “which ſhould happen, to Dr. Laud then Biſhop of “Bath and Wells, and ſworn of the Privy Council. “And the King, after the Duke's Death, continu“ed that Truſt in the ſame Hands, infinitely to the “Benefit and Honour of the Church, tho' it may “be no leſs to the Prejudice of the poor Biſhop; “who, too ſecure in a good Conſcience, and moſt “ſincere worthy Intention (with which no Man “was ever more plentifully repleniſhed) thought “he could manage and diſcharge the Place and Of“fice of the greateſt Miniſter in the Court, with“out the leaſt Condeſcenſion to the Arts and Stra“tagems of the Court, and without any other “Friendſhip or Support, than what the Splendour “of a pious Life, and his unpoliſhed Integrity, “would reconcile to him: Which was an unſkilful “Meaſure in a Licentious Age, and may deceive “a good Man in the beſt Times that ſhall ſucceed; “which expoſed him to ſuch a Torrent of Adverſi“ty and Miſery, as we ſhall have too natural an “Occaſion to lament in the following Diſcourſe, in “which it will be more ſeaſonable to enlarge upon “his ſingular Abilities and immenſe Virtue.” 1629.

Remiſneſs of Abp. Abbot created the greater Difficulties to Bp. Laud.

By the Remiſneſs of Archbiſhop Abbot there had crept in a Contempt of Eccleſiaſtical Authority even among the Clergy themſelves. One Huntley, beneficed in Kent, had been required by the Archdeacon of Canterbury to preach at a Viſitation, which he wilfully declined to do: Afterwards the Archbiſhop by his Letters enjoin'd him to preach another Turn, which he again ſtubbornly omitted. For theſe Contempts he was conven'd before the High Commiſſion Court, and fin'd and committed to Priſon; and being upon a Habeas Corpus brought to the King's-Bench Bar, the Cauſe of his Commitment was return'd, Default in his Canonical Obedience. He was firſt Bailed, and afterwards diſcharged upon this Opinion of the Court, That Breach of Canonical Obedience is an Offence puniſhable by the Ordinary by Eccleſiaſtical Cenſures; and not by the Commiſſioners Eccleſiaſtical by Fine and Impriſonment.

To reſtore the decayed Diſcipline of the Church, Biſhop Laud preſented to the King theſe good Conſiderations for the better ſettling of the Church Government. (a)

Conſiderations preſented to the King by Bp. Laud.

“That his Majeſty would be graciouſly pleaſed,

“1. To command the Lords the Biſhops to their “ſeveral Sees, excepting thoſe which are in Atten“dance at Court.

“2. That none of them reſide upon his Land “or Leaſe that he hath purchaſed, or on his Com“mendam, if he hold any; but in one of his Epiſ“copal Houſes; and that he waſte not the Woods “where any are left.

“3. That they give Charge in their triennial “Viſitations and at other times, by themſelves “and the Archdeacons, that the Declaration for “ſettling the Queſtions in difference be ſtrictly ob“ſerved.

“4. That a ſpecial Charge be given them againſt “frequent and unworthy Ordinations.

“5. That a ſpecial Care be had over the Lecturers “in every Dioceſs, which by reaſon of their Pay “are the People's Creatures, and blow the Bellows “of their Sedition: For the abating of whoſe Pow“er, theſe ways may be taken.

“1. That the Afternoon Sermons in all Pariſhes “may be turned into Catechiſing by Queſtions and “Anſwers, according to an Order ſet out by King “James of bleſſed Memory. If this cannot be, “then.

“2. That every Biſhop ordain in his Dioceſs, “that every Lecturer do read Divine Service in his “Surplice before the Lecture.

“3. That where a Lecture is ſet up in a Market “Town, it be read by a Combination of grave and “orthodox Divines near adjoining.

“4. That if an Incorporation do maintain a Le“cturer, that he be not ſuffered to Preach, till he “take upon him Cure of Souls within that Incorpo“ration.

“5. That the Biſhop do countenance and encou“rage the grave orthodox Divines of his Clergy, “and gain them in the ſeveral Quarters of his Dio“ceſs to be preſent at ſuch Lecturers Sermons as are “near them; that ſo the Biſhop may have Know“ledge.

“6. That the Biſhop ſuffer none under Noblemen “and Men qualified by Law, to have any private “Chaplain in his Houſe.

“7. That his Majeſty may be graciouſly pleaſed, “that Men of Courage, Gravity, and Experience in “Government, be preferred to Biſhopricks.

“8. That Emanuel and Sidney Colleges in Cam“bridge, which are the Nurſeries of Puritaniſm, “may from time to time be provided of grave and “orthodox Men for their Governours.

(a) See Ruſhworth, ii. p. 7.

1629. "9. That his Majeſty's High Commiſſion be countenanced by the Preſence of ſome of his Majeſty's "Privy Council, ſo oft at leaſt as any Matter of "Moment is to be ſentenc'd.

"10. That ſome Courſe may be taken, that the "Judges may not ſend ſo many Prohibitions.

"11. That his Majeſty would be graciouſly pleaſed once in half a Year to call for an Account of "all, or ſo many of theſe, as he in his Wiſdom "ſhall think fit.

"12. A Conſideration alſo to be had as to the general Feoffees, for Benefices and Impropriations; "and as to a new Authorizing of the Injunctions."

Theſe were indeed very excellent Heads of Intimation, and the putting many of them in Practice had a mighty Influence upon the Beauty and Honour of the Church; and muſt needs have had a much better effect, if the inveterate Prejudice of People had not infected theſe Times with an Iniquity ſoon eſtabliſhed by Cuſtom.

The King in his Heart againſt Popery. The King did what he could to make his Subjects ſenſible that Popery ſhould have no more favour out of Parliament than in it. And therefore he made a ſtrict Order in Council, that all Engliſh Papiſts going to the Houſes of Ambaſſadors to hear Maſs, ſhould be apprehended and proſecuted according to Law. (a)

Therefore proceeds againſt Prieſts and Jeſuits. And to ſhew the Sincerity of his Intentions, he declares, that he has begun already at his own Houſe, not permitting any to go to the Queen's Chapel but thoſe of the Queen's own Houſe, who are bound to attend upon her. Another Order of Council to the Attorney-General, that the Statute 3 Jacobi be put in Execution againſt Recuſants dwelling within ten Miles of London; and the Statute of Confinement, to be executed upon all Popiſh Lodgers within the City; and a Bill of Indictment to be exhibited againſt the Keeper of New-Priſon, for ſuffering Prieſts committed to his Cuſtody to walk abroad at their Pleaſure; and a Letter from the Council to the High Sheriff and Juſtices of Peace in Northumberland, to reprove them for their Remiſsneſs, and to require them to execute the Laws againſt Popiſh Recuſants without Partiality or Connivance; and a Proclamation dated March 24, 1628. for the Apprehenſion of Richard Smith a Popiſh Prieſt, calling himſelf the Biſhop of Calcedon; and an Order of the Lord-Mayor of London for a ſtrict Care in the better Obſervation of the Lord's Day, dated Apr. 20. 1629. And becauſe one of the moſt viſible Scandals of the Nation was the lamentable Decay of Churches, and the frequent Prohibitions that ſtayed the Proceſs in Eccleſiaſtical Courts for Repair of them; therefore his Majeſty, at Hampton-Court, Octob. 11. Reg. 5. ſet forth a Proclamation for preventing the Decays of Churches and Chapels for the time to come: Wherein he declares, Proclamation for preventing the decay of Churches and Chapels. "THat having of late taken ſpecial notice of the "general decay and ruin of Pariſh Churches "in many Parts of this Kingdom; and that by Law "the ſame ought to be repaired and maintained at "the proper Charge of the Inhabitants, and others "having Land in thoſe Chapelries and Pariſhes reſpectively; who had wilfully neglected to Repair "the ſame, being conſecrated Places of God's Worſhip and Divine Service. His Majeſty doth therefore charge and command all Archbiſhops and Biſhops, that they take ſpecial care of the Repairing and Upholding the ſame from time to time, "and by themſelves and their Officers to take a "View and Survey of them, and to uſe the Power "of the Eccleſiaſtical Court for putting the ſame "in due Execution; and that the Judges be requir'd 1629. "not to interrupt this good Work by their too eaſy "granting of Prohibitions." (b)

King's Inſtructions to the two Archbiſhops. By the vigilant Zeal of Biſhop Laud, the Conſiderations which he had lately preſented to the King, were now formed into Regal Inſtructions, ſent to the Archbiſhops of Canterbury and York, by them to be tranſmitted to all the Biſhops within their reſpective Provinces. Thoſe for Canterbury were thus entitled, Inſtructions for the moſt Reverend Father in God our right Truſty and right entirely beloved Counſellor George Lord Archbiſhop of Canterbury, concerning certain Orders to be obſerved and put in execution by the ſeveral Biſhops in his Province.

They differ in nothing from the Conſiderations before recited, excepting theſe Additional Particulars.

"That the Biſhops take ſpecial Care that Divine "Service be diligently frequented, as well for Prayers and Catechiſms as Sermons; and take a particular Note of all ſuch as abſent themſelves, as "Recuſants or otherwiſe.

"That every Biſhop, who by our Grace and Favour, and good Opinion of his Service, ſhall be "nominated by us to another Biſhoprick, ſhall "from that Day of Nomination not preſume to make "any Leaſe for three Lives, or twenty one Years "or concurrent Leaſe, or any ways to renew any "Eſtate, or cut any Wood or Timber, but merely "to receive the Rents due, and quit the Place. For "we think it a hateful Thing that any Man's leaving the Biſhoprick ſhould almoſt undo the Succeſſor. And if any Man ſhall preſume to break "this Order, we will refuſe our Royal Aſſent, and "keep him at the Place he hath ſo abuſed.

"And laſtly, We command you to give us an "Account every Year, the ſecond of January, of "the performance of theſe our Commands."

Nothing was more ſeaſonable and honourable than the laſt but one of theſe Inſtructions. For Tranſlations began now to be more frequent than in former Reigns; and ſome Biſhops upon the proſpect of Removal had been Sordid and Scandalous in leaving Places bare behind them. This muſt, however, be an Argument of the Innocence and Integrity of Biſhop Laud, who ſuggeſted this Advice, when he had been already removed from two Sees, and had a full view of being Tranſlated to another.

Bp. Laud zealous for executing of them. He was vigorous in providing for the ſtrict Execution of thoſe Royal Injunctions: And therefore he firſt cited all the Miniſters and Lecturers within the City and Suburbs of London, and made an affectionate Speech to them, exhorting them to obey his Majeſty's late Inſtructions, as founded on Religion and Juſtice, and adapted to the Honour and Intereſt of Church and Common-wealth, and diſlik'd by few but thoſe who had not weigh'd them, nor ſo much as ſeen them. After which he wrote an earneſt Letter (including a Letter to him from his Grace in Obedience to the King) to his ſeveral Archdeacons to preſs the Duty on them in their reſpective Viſitations. (c)

But there was now a warm Spirit of Diſaffection to the Court in many of the Inferiour Clergy; Mr. Bernard, Lecturer at St. Sepulchre's Church in London, had on January 28. 1629. uſed this Expreſſion in Many of the inferiour Clergy diſaffected to the Court. his Prayer before Sermon: Lord, open the Eyes of the Queen's Majeſty, that ſhe may ſee Jeſus Chriſt, whom ſhe hath pierced with her Infidelity, Superſtition and Idolatry. For which being queſtion'd in the High Commiſſion, the Court declared, that the Saying was un-

1629. adviſed and ſcandalous: but Mr. Bernard making an open and humble Submiſſion, the Court deſired the Biſhop of London to inform his Majeſty, and upon his Report the Offender was with great Mercy diſmiſt. Mr. Charles Chancy Miniſter of Ware, had likewiſe in a Sermon been bold to ſay, That Idolatry was admitted into the Church; that the preaching of the Goſpel would be ſuppreſt; that there is much Atheiſm, Popery, Arminianiſm, and Hereſie crept into the Church: For which intolerable Liberty he was brought into the High Commiſſion, and by Order of that Court the Cauſe was referred to the Biſhop of London, who enjoin'd him no other Penalty than a Latin Form of Submiſſion(a). And Mr. Palmer, a Lecturer at St. Alphage in Canterbury, was by the Archdeacon's Certificate found to Preach without Licenſe; to read Prayers againſt the Miniſter's Will; to Catechiſe not according to Canon; to take upon him to declare the King's Mind in his Royal Inſtructions; never to uſe the Surplice; to have preached a factious Sermon in the Cathedral Church; and therein to have detracted from Divine Service; and ſo to have gained all factious Parties to be his Auditors. For which the Commiſſioners had only enjoin'd him Silence, till being informed that the Archbiſhop had authoris'd him to Preach again, they then found a way to drive him from that City. This Seditious Ferment among ſome few of the Lower Clergy was too eaſie to be improv'd, when ſo many of the leading Gentry were pleaſed with it; and when the Archbiſhop himſelf in Jealouſie and Diſcontent conniv'd at it.

Popery in Ireland.

In Ireland the Apprehenſions of Popery were more dreadful and more juſt. The Popiſh Biſhops and Prieſts had held their publick Aſſemblies in all parts of that Kingdom, and exerciſed an open Juriſdiction: Convents were profeſſedly erected; and even in Dublin the Friers were enough to make a Riot. Upon a due Information of theſe Diſorders, a Letter was ſent from our Privy-Council, January 31. 1629. to the Lords Juſtices and Council of Ireland, with Thanks for ſuppreſſing the Seditious Riot moved by the Friers and their Adherents at Dublin; with Advice to reſtrain them by a due and ſeaſonable Execution of the Laws: ſpeedily to demoliſh the Houſe in Dublin, where the Archbiſhop and Mayor received the firſt Affront; and that other Houſes erected to the uſe of ſuperſtitious Societies be converted into Houſes of Correction, &c. (b)

There can be no doubt but the King was in Conſcience averſe to Popery; and whatever Favours were obtained for ſome of that inſolent Party, were all extorted from his Majeſty's good Nature, in compliance with an importunate Queen. When Judgment and Inclination could exert themſelves, the King always fell upon the proper Meaſures of eſtabliſhing the Church of England at home, and of ſupporting the Proteſtant Intereſt abroad. To this latter effect, he granted his Letters Patents given at Weſtminſter March 16. Regn. 5. "for a Collection to "be made thro'out England and Wales for the poor "exiled Miniſters of the Palatinate, and their Wives "and Children, being ſpoiled of all their Temporal "Eſtates, and expoſed to unexpreſſible Miſeries; "whoſe Caſe is the more to be deplored, becauſe "theſe Extremities fell upon them for their Since-"rity and Conſtancy in the true Religion." But here again ſome People catcht at an Offence, becauſe in the firſt Patent after the Words Sincerity and Conſtancy in the true Religion, it follow'd thus, which we together with them do Profeſs, and which we are all bound in conſcience to maintain to the utmoſt of our Powers. The Biſhop of London was diſſatisfied at the laſt Expreſſion, and prevailed with his Majeſty to have that firſt Patent cancell'd, and a new one drawn with omiſſion of that Clauſe. And though this Alteration was but cautious and ſtrictly proper, yet when diſcovered, there were not wanting thoſe Wits who could make a ſort of Popiſh Plot of it.

The King was for eſtabliſhing the Church and ſupporting the Proteſtant Intereſt.

To return to the Courſe of Civil Affairs from the beginning of the ſixth Year of this Reign 1630.

Death of Will. Earl of Pembroke.

On April 10. died a great Miniſter of State, William Earl of Pembroke, Lord Warden of the Stannaries, Governour of Portſmouth, Knight of the Garter, Lord High Steward of the King's Houſhold, and Chancellour of the Univerſity of Oxford. He ſupp'd that Night with the Counteſs of Bedford at Biſhopſgate, and was more than ordinarily cheerful, it being his Birth-Day: After Supper he went home to Bernard's Caſtle, and being that Day Seventy Years of Age, he was boaſting of his Health and Strength, and ſaid, he would never truſt a Woman Propheteſs for the Lady Davis's ſake, who had told him he ſhould die upon that Day of his Birth. He went to Bed very well, and died of an Apoplexy before Morning.

Character of the Earl of Pembroke, by the Lord Clarendon in his Hiſt. of Rebel. b. I. p. 45.

His Character is thus given by the Lord Clarendon. One the moſt univerſally Beloved and Eſteemed of any Man of that Age; and having a great Office in the Court, he made the Court it ſelf better eſteem'd and more reverenc'd in the Country: Well-bred, and of excellent Parts, and a graceful Speaker upon any Subject, having a good proportion of Learning, and a ready Wit to apply it, and enlarge upon it: Of a pleaſant and facetious Humour, and a Diſpoſition Affable, Generous and Magnificent. He was Maſter of a great Fortune from his Anceſtors, and had a great addition by his Wife; but all ſerv'd not his Expence, which was only limited by his great Mind and Occaſions to uſe it nobly. He lived many Years about the Court, before in it; and never by it: being rather regarded and eſteemed by King James than loved and favoured. —— He ſtood upon his own Feet without any other Support than of his proper Virtue and Merit. —— Exceedingly beloved in the Court, becauſe he never deſired to get that for himſelf which others laboured for, but was ſtill ready to promote the Pretences of worthy Men. And he was equally celebrated in the Country, for having received no Obligations from the Court, which might corrupt or ſway his Affections and Judgment. —— He was a great Lover of his Country, and of the Religion and Juſtice, which he believed could only ſupport it; and his Friendſhips were only with Men of thoſe Principles. —— Yet he was not without ſome Allay of Vice, and without being clouded with great Infirmities, which he had in too exorbitant a proportion. —— He died exceedingly lamented, &c.

Project of raiſing Money.

By occaſion of the late Wars, and a want of Parliament Supply, the greateſt care of the Court muſt be how to advance the publick Revenue: To which effect the Lords of the Council adviſed the King to put forth a Proclamation; declaring his Pleaſure to

(a) One Extreme is often owing to another. Dr. John Coſin, Prebendary of Durham, was indicted at the General Aſſizes in Durham within this Year 1629. for introducing and practiſing ſeveral Innovations and Corruptions in the Cathedral Church of Durham, and for unſound Doctrine, and for impugning the King's Supremacy; particularly, he the ſaid Dr. Coſin, preaching in the ſaid Church, upon the Parable of the Tares ſaid; that the Reformers of our Church, when they took away the Maſſe, took away or marr'd all Religion, and the whole Service of God; they called it a Reformation, but it was indeed a Deformation: And that the Maſs was not ſo taken away, but that the Preſence of Chriſt ſtill remaineth; and that if the Reformation were otherwiſe, it were not a Reformed but a Deformed Religion. And that he meant of a Corporal Preſence was plain, for that he complained afterward in the ſaid Sermon, that ſome had thruſt out the Preſence of Chriſt; and he likewiſe ſaid, that in Queen Elizabeth's Time, when Popery was put out, the Reformation was a Deformation; and inſtead of bringing in Order, they brought in Ordure. That the ſaid Dr. Coſin perſwading a Papiſt to come to Church, ſaid, that the Body of Chriſt was ſubſtantially and really in the Sacrament. And again at a publick Dinner, he ſaid, that the King was not ſupreme Head of the Church in England, nor could be ſo called. —— Billa vera was returned, but Proceedings ſtopt.

(b) The Lords Juſtices of Ireland being ſworn 26. October, 1629. did immediately direct, that the Papiſts ſhould be proſecuted for not coming to Church, and accordingly the Statute of 2. Eliz. was given in charge at the Aſſizes, but by Directions from England, that Proſecution was ſuperſeded. Cox's Hiſtory of Ireland. 1630. confirm to his Subjects their defective Titles in Eſtates and Poſſeſſions (as well by colour of former Grants, as without any Grant from the Crown) and a Proclamation was accordingly iſſued May 27. to inform the People, that his Majeſty had renewed a Commiſſion to ſome Lords, Judges and Counſel learned, to ſell, grant and confirm to them all Poſſeſſions to which their Titles were any way defective, by making of ſuch Compoſition as the ſaid Commiſſioners ſhould approve and accept. Though this Method might have very well tended to the Quiet and Relief of the Subject in many dubious Tenures, which might be now made unqueſtionable Settlements: yet either the proceeding of the Commiſſioners in this Matter, or the natural Prejudice againſt raiſing Money out of Parliament, turned it into the popular Notion of a new Grievance and Oppreſſion.

Birth of Prince Charles.

On May 29. a little before One after Noon, the Queen was delivered of a Son, baptized Charles by the Lord Biſhop of London, who had the Honour to ſee him before he was an Hour old. The King rode publickly to St. Paul's Church to give Thanks to God for the Queen's ſafe delivery of a Son: at which time a Star appeared in a clear Sky; ſeen and atteſted by very many Spectators. (a)

Libel in the Star-Chamber.

On the ſame Day a great Cauſe was brought to Hearing in the Star-Chamber, concerning a Diſcourſe entitled, A Propoſition for his Majeſty's Service to bridle the Impertinency of Parliaments; which had given ſo much Offence and Jealouſie about the time of the laſt Diſſolution, that the King order'd his Attorney-General to prefer an Information againſt the Earls of Bedford, Clare and Somerſet, Sir Robert Cotton, Mr. Selden, Mr. Saint John, and others, for ſpreading the ſaid Libel. The Earl of Somerſet by his Council pleaded, "That this Diſcourſe was either the ſame " that was ſhewed him in the time of his attendance " upon his late Majeſty King James, or had the " ſame things in it. And finding no cauſe of con- " cealing ſuch a former Project, and imagining it " to be of no Scandal to the preſent Government, " he had caſually imparted it to the Earls of Bedford " and Clare; who after peruſal thereof deliver'd this " Opinion of it at their next Meeting, that it was " a phantaſtick Project of ſome Brain ſick Traveller, who " had made Collections of ſome Princes in Italy, and o- " ther Foreign States, no way ſuitable to the Govern- " ment of this Kingdom." And upon the Depoſitions of Sir David Fowlis it appear'd, that the very Original Manuſcript was pen'd by Sir Robert Dudley at Florence, and ſent over hither in the time of King James by one Mr. Yates, who ſent it in a Letter to the Deponent, and he deliver'd it to the Earl of Somerſet, and the Earl communicated it to the King. While this Cauſe was hearing in a great preſence of Nobility and Gentry, the King ſent Word to the Lord Keeper, "That in reſpect of the great Joy, upon " the Birth of his Son, he ſhould immediately order " the Proceedings to be ſtopp'd, and the Defendents " to be diſcharg'd." Accordingly the Keeper acquainted the Court with his Majeſty's ſpecial Command: Upon which, the ſaid Writing was ordered to be burnt as Seditious and Scandalous; and the Proceedings were taken off the File. And here, though the Project was prov'd to have been a private Eſſay in a former Reign, and in a Foreign Country: and tho' the ſtopping of Proceſs hereupon was a generous Act of Favour upon a proper Seaſon of publick Joy; yet thoſe Perſons who had the Art and the ill nature to turn every thing, as a Diſgrace and a Diſadvantage upon the Court, knew how to inſinuate, as if the King and the Miniſtry had really form'd that 1630.
Scheme againſt the uſe of future Parliaments; and therefore would not ſuffer it to be examin'd to the bottom.

Another Project for Money.

The urgent Neceſſity of Supplies, to be in ſame meaſure ſuitable to the King's Honour, and the very Nation's Support, muſt exerciſe the King's Council in finding out all poſſible Ways and Means to bring in Money. In order to this urgent End, the King ſent his Letters, dated May 13. to the Judges and Attorney-General, to frame and publiſh certain Orders for execution of the Office of Receiver and Collector of Fines and Forfeitures, erected by his late Father of bleſſed Memory, and by his preſent Majeſty confirm'd to John Chamberlayn his Majeſty's Phyſician, and Edward Brown, Eſq;. The Judges met and concluded, that the ſaid Letters Patents were both againſt Law and his Majeſty's Profit, and ſent an account of the Exceſſes and Irregularities in the ſaid Patent, in a Letter from all the Juſtices and Barons, directed ſeverally to the Lord Keeper and Lord Treaſurer. And though this did well demonſtrate the Integrity of the Judges, that they would never proſtitute an Opinion to the meer Intereſt of the King; and did as much vindicate his Majeſty's Honour, that he would inſiſt upon no Method (tho' begun by his Father) which the Judges of his Realm ſhould not pronounce to be ſtrictly Lawful; yet, however, this too was applied to the prejudice of the Court, as if they were purſuing Methods which the very Judges condemn'd for Arbitrary and Illegal.

Project of Knighthood.

Another Project was reaſſum'd about impoſing the Order of Knighthood, or requiring a Fine for Neglect of it, as founded upon an old Statute and cuſtomary Writs. The King ſet forth his Proclamation on July 6. that "Whereas he had formerly ſent " Writs to ſeveral Sheriffs for Summoning all that " had forty Pound Land or Rent yearly, to appear " at the day of his Coronation, and prepare them- " ſelves to receive the Order of Knighthood; he " had now eſtabliſh'd a Commiſſion to certain Lords " and others of his Privy Council, to treat and com- " pound with all thoſe who had made Default by " not taking the ſaid Order on them." Upon this the Nobility were ordered to compound before the Lords of the Council; and the Gentry before other Commiſſioners appointed in the ſeveral Counties. The Rate for Compoſition was commonly requir'd to be one third and a half of as much as the Perſons compounding were found rated in the Subſidy. But this too was grievouſly reſented as an Impoſition out of Parliament; ſo that many in all Parts neglected to appear, or refuſed to compound. This gave occaſion to new Summons, and to farther Proceſs; and the Iſſue in all Courts being in Favour and Confirmation of the King's Prerogative; this left upon ſome Spirits the deeper Impreſſion of Regret, that they were oppreſt againſt Law, and yet had no Law to relieve them.

London riotous.

Diſaffection and Sedition were ſo induſtriouſly fomented in the City of London, that upon Friday July 10, upon occaſion of an Arreſt made by the Sheriff's Officers in Fleetſtreet, a very tumultuous Riot was made upon it; and the Lord Mayor and Sheriffs, and Train'd Bands, coming down to diſperſe the Mob, did for a while meet with open and violent oppoſition. Upon which, Proclamation was made to apprehend the Ringleaders, and in particular one Captain Vaughan, Ward an Enſign, and Henry Stamford: Several of them were ſoon after indict-

Prohibitions to Eccleſ. Courts.

Weſtminſter-hall was exerciſ'd with many ſingular Caſes, that ſerve much to expreſs the Diſpoſition of the Times. In Eaſter-Term Sir Henry Martyn, Dr. of Laws, and Judge of the Admiralty, made a great Complaint to the King againſt the Judges of the King's-Bench, for granting Prohibitions againſt his Court: And upon this Occaſion the Judges were called before the King, where they ſtoutly juſtified their Proceedings in thoſe Caſes to be according to Law, and from whence they could not depart by vertue of their Oaths.

Defended by the Judges.

About the next Term, the Feoffees in Truſt for the buying in of Impropriations to be beſtow'd upon preaching Miniſters, were brought into the Exchequer for breach of their Truſt in not augmenting poorer Vicarages, but giving arbitrary Penſions to Lecturers and diſaffected Preachers: Their Corporation was diſſolved, and their Fund and Stock adjudg'd to the King; of which we muſt take ſome farther notice in our view of Church Affairs.

Feoffment for buying in Impropriations diſſolv'd.

Nigh the ſame time, Huntley, a Miniſter in Kent before mentioned, having been cenſur'd and impriſon'd by the High Commiſſion Court, brought now his Action of falſe Impriſonment againſt the Keeper Mr. Barker, and ſome of the Commiſſioners by Name.

An Action brought againſt the High Commiſſioners.

The Attorney General moved, that the Action might lye againſt the Goaler only, and by no means againſt any of the Perſons in the High Commiſſion: but after long Debate, the Court ordered that two of the Commiſſioners ſhould Anſwer. The Biſhop of London made the King ſenſible, that the Authority of his High Commiſſion Court would fall to nothing, if the Judges of it muſt be now expos'd to perſonal Actions.

The King ſtops the Action.

Upon which the King ſent his Advocate Dr. Ryves to the Lord Chief Juſtice, requiring him to proceed no farther in that Cauſe till he had ſpoken with his Majeſty. The Chief Juſtice anſwer'd, We receive the Meſſage; and then conſulted with the Judges, and they came to this Reſolution, that they conceived ſuch a Meſſage not to ſtand with their Oaths, which commanded an indefinite ſtay of a Cauſe between Party and Party, that might ſtop the Courſe of Juſtice ſo long as the King would.

Stout Anſwer of Chief Juſtice and Judges.

And they farther declared the Doctor to be no fit Meſſenger, all Meſſages from the King to them being uſually by the Lord Keeper, or the Attorney General, in Cauſes relating to the Adminiſtration of Juſtice. By the Court's Deſire, the Chief Juſtice acquainted the Lord Keeper, and the Biſhop of London, who both agreed that the Meſſage was miſtaken, and that the King's Mind was not to command a Stop, but to deſire as much Slowneſs as might ſtand with Juſtice. After this, upon the Importunity of the Commiſſioners, who would no longer act if thus expoſed to Suits at Common Law; the King aſſumed the Matter to himſelf, and ſending for the Judges, charg'd them with expreſs Command, that they ſhould not put the Commiſſioners to anſwer.

The King again interpoſes, to no purpoſe.

The Judges ſtoutly replied, that they could not, without breach of their Oaths, perform that Command. Afterwards the Matter was handled at the Council-Table in Preſence of the Judges; where, after long hearing, it was determin'd, that the Judges had done their duty, and that the Commiſſioners ought to anſwer. Toward the End of Trinity-Term, the Sickneſs encreaſing in Southwark, Hobart, Stroud, and Valentine, three of the late Members, impriſon'd in the Marſhalſea, ſued to the Judges of the King's-Bench to be removed to the Gate-Houſe, and were by Writ from the Court ſo removed; But Mr. Selden, being at the ſame time in the Marſhalſea, had forgot or omitted to make the like Application to the King's-Bench till the Term was over, and the Judges in the Circuit: After which he ſued to the Lord Treaſurer for the like favour of Removal, and by Warrant from his Lordſhip was accordingly ſo removed.

Proceedings againſt ſome of the late Members.

But in Michaelmas Term the Judges called the Marſhal for his Priſoner Selden; and he producing the Treaſurer's Warrant by the King's direction, they declared ſuch a Warrant to be Illegal, and ſent their Writ to remand the Priſoner back again to the Marſhalſea. In the Hilary Term following, the Attorney-General exhibited two ſeveral Informations againſt Sir Miles Hobart, Kt. and William Stroud, Eſq; (who by Writ from the King's-Bench had been remov'd from the Marſhalſea to the Gate-Houſe) for Eſcapes out of Priſon, proving that Stroud had reſided with a Keeper in his own Chambers at Gray's-Inn; and Hobart had continued with a Keeper at his Lodgings in Fleet-ſtreet. The Jury return'd their Verdicts ſeverally not Guilty: And the Judges reſolved, that The Priſon of the King's Bench is not any local Priſon confined to one Place; but that every Place where any Perſon is by Authority of that Court reſtrained of his Liberty, is a Priſon.

Honour of the King and his Judges.

Theſe ſeveral Caſes, and the Deciſion of them, do abundantly prove, that the preſent Sett of Judges were no ſervile Creatures of the Court; and that the King did not inſiſt upon their obſequious Compliance with him: but they gave their Judgments with Freedom and Courage, and the King acquieſced in their Opinion, tho' contrary to his own. (a)

Foreign Affairs.

We muſt now look over upon the Foreign Affairs of this Year. The King was in Honour and Good-nature earneſt to relieve his Siſter, and reſtore, if poſſible, the Palatinate to her Husband. In order to this, the Marqueſs of Hamilton was to carry over an Army of ſix thouſand Men, for aſſiſtance of the King of Sweden, to be employ'd againſt the Imperialiſts or any other Enemies, for reſtoring our oppreſſed Friends in Germany. And Articles of Agreement between Guſtavus Adolphus, King of Sweden, and James Marqueſs of Hamilton, were ſigned May 31. 1630.

Expedition of Guſt. Adolphus King of Sweden.

Soon after, the King of Sweden croſſes the Baltick Sea with a Fleet; and declaring the Cauſes of his Expedition into Germany, he landed upon the Coaſt of Pomeren about the middle of June. To enable the Marqueſs Hamilton to raiſe and tranſport his Men, the King granted him a Leaſe of the Cuſtom of Wines in Scotland for ſixteen Years. Upon this Fund the Marqueſs levied his Men in Scotland: and toward Winter came back to the Court in England to receive the King's Order for their Embarkment. But here one Mackay, Lord Ochiltry, charg'd the Marqueſs with a treaſonable Deſign of Raiſing this new Army with an Intention when he was at the Head of them to ſet himſelf up as King of Scotland. The Lord Treaſurer Weſton encouraged this Suggeſtion, and preſs'd it home to the King; who told Hamilton, the next time he came into his Preſence, what an Accuſation was brought againſt him: but, ſays the King, I don't believe it; and that the World may know I have a Confidence in your Loyalty, you ſhall lie in my Bed-chamber this Night. And the Marqueſs did accordingly continue in the moſt intimate Acceſſes to the King, who hitherto had this Principle, Never to ſuſpect his Friends, and never to deſert them. (b)

At this time a Dyet was held at Ratisbone in Germany, to which an Ambaſſadour was ſent from the King of Great Britain, and another from the Palſgrave, to accommodate, if poſſible, the Reſtitution of the Palatinate.

Endeavours for Reſtitution of the Palatinate.

Sir Robert Anſtruther, the Engliſh Ambaſſadour, preſented his Maſter's ardent Requeſt to his Imperial Majeſty, " That having regard to

(a) There were ſome invidious and ſevere Proceedings in the Star-Chamber, particularly a Sentence given 27. June, 1630. againſt Dr. Alexander Leighton for writing and publiſhing a Seditious Pamphlet entituled, An Appeal to the Parliament, or a Plea againſt Prelacy; to ſtand in the Pillory, to have his Noſe ſlit, his Ears cropt, his Forehead branded, to pay ten thouſand Pounds, and to ſuffer perpetual Impriſonment. See his own Deſcription of his Troubles. 4*to*. 1646.

(b) During theſe Endeavours for the Recovery of the Palatinate, the King iſſued his Letters of Licenſe for a Collection of Charity and Benevolence, throughout England and Wales, toward the Maintenance of the exiled Miniſters of the Palatinate. "the many Interceſſions of his late Father, and other Kings and Princes, he would remit the Diſpleaſure conceived againſt his Brother the Prince Elector, and recall the Proſcription iſſued out againſt him." It was only anſwered, "That the preſent Affairs in Germany, which occaſioned the Dyet, were ſo important, as not to admit of any foreign Debate; and yet, upon Opportunity and Leiſure, the King of Great-Britain ſhould receive ſuch Satisfaction as would be agreeable." This Anſwer was ſoon found to be a Complement: for the Emperour propoſed to the Dyet to paſs an Act, that the Palſgrave ſhould continue a baniſh'd Man, and that no Offers of Return ſhould be made to him. And many other of the Proteſtant Princes had their Lands confiſcated, and had other great Hardſhips impos'd upon them. Upon which the Dyet broke up on Nov. 3. leaving the Palatinate and the whole Proteſtant Intereſt in a more deſperate Condition. This made the Reformed Princes enter into Conſultation for their own Safety, and by a Letter from the Duke of Saxony to his Imperial Majeſty, they obtained Leave to hold a Dyet by themſelves at Lipſick on Feb. 8. following: where they laid open their Grievance to the Emperour; and upon Denial of their Requeſts, they entred into a League to redreſs themſelves. The Emperor put forth his Imperial Ban againſt them, but they ſupported their Cauſe and Courage by the Advances of the King of Sweden.

In the mean time, the King of Spain promiſing that he would improve his utmoſt Intereſt in the Emperour towards the Reſtoration of the Prince Elector, Articles of Peace were publiſhed Dec. 5. between the Crowns of England and Spain. So that now the King was delivered from two very expenſive and very ineffectual Wars, that had unhappily betrayed him to be ſomewhat too poor and weak both Abroad and Home.

E. of Caſtlehaven Tried and Executed.

We paſs on to the 7 Car. 1631. when Mervin Lord Audley, Earl of Caſtlehaven in Ireland, having had 3 Indictments found againſt him at Salisbury Aſſizes for a Rape upon his own Wife, and for Sodomy, was tried by his Peers in Weſtminſter-Hall on Apr. 25. and being found guilty of thoſe abominable Sins, in the moſt aggravating ways of Commiſſion, he was ſentenc'd to Death, and ſoon after executed.

More little Projects for raiſing Money.

The Ways and Means of raiſing Money in the Intervals of Parliament, were thought as neceſſary to the King, as they were odious to the People: and the Neceſſity deſcended to little Arts, that were not for that reaſon leſs offenſive. An Office was now erected for the Sealing of Playing Cards; and the Duties hence ariſing were farm'd out to one Henry Cagon. The Maſter and Wardens of the Company of Card-makers made ſome Oppoſition to it, but ſubmitted to a Contract with the King that made the Profit anſwerable to the Project. A like Contract was made between his Majeſty and the Dice-makers of the City of London, to pay an allotted Proportion for every Bale of Dice. On July 27. by Order of the Privy Council, there came out Printed Inſtructions for Muſters and Arms and the Uſe thereof, upon Occaſion of the Train'd-Bands of ſeveral Counties being ordered to march to the See-Coaſts for Defence of the Kingdom: The Rates to be paid to the Muſter-maſter of each County were thought a Grievance, tho' grounded upon Precedent in the Reigns of K. James and Q. Elizabeth. Several Perſons refuſing to pay the Aſſeſſment, were ſent for up by Meſſengers to the Council-Table, where they moſt of them ſubmitted. But the Misfortune was, that under a Jealouſie of new Impoſitions, People were alarmed and affrighted at the calling for any old Cuſtom or Tribute.

Further to increaſe the Revenues of the Crown, Letters Patent were granted to erect a new Society or Body corporate, by the Name of The Governour, Aſſiſtants, and Society of Soap-makers. And all who did not come into this Corporation, were prohibited the Trade of Soap-boiling. This brought into the Exchequer ten thouſand Pounds by way of Advance, and eight Pounds a Tun for all Soap hereafter boiled. This was looked on as a Monopoly, and all other Trades began to be jealous of the like practiſing upon them.

1631. 7 Car. I.

On Monday Aug. 22. the Lord-Keeper and Judges conſulted how to examine into the Truth of the late Charge againſt the Marqueſs of Hamilton. The Lord Rea, a Scotch Baron, impeach'd Ramſey and Meldrum for moving him beyond the Seas to join in this Conſpiracy: Ramſey denied the Fact, and offer'd to clear himſelf by Combat; and Rea accepting of the Challenge, the Judges now declared, 1. That it was an high and horrible Treaſon, if the Matter in the Examinations were found true. 2. That the Trial might be by an Appeal of Treaſon, after the manner of the Civil Law, the Judges not to intermeddle. Upon which Opinion, a Court of Chivalry was erected by Commiſſion under the Great Seal, dated Novemb. 24. And after very long and formal Proceedings, when the Parties were juſt ready for Combat, the King interpoſed; and to prevent the Duel, ſent them both Priſoners to the Tower.

Combat agreed between Ramſey and Rea.

Death of Sir Nich. Hide, Ch. Juſtice.

His Character.

On Friday Aug. 26. Sir Nicholas Hide, Chief Juſtice of the King's-Bench, died at his Houſe in Hampſhire; a Man of great Integrity, Widom, and Temper. He had this Character given him by Judge Whitlock; Being made Chief Juſtice 2 Car. he lived in the Place with great Integrity and Uprightneſs, and with great Wiſdom and Temper, conſidering the Ticklishneſs of the Times. He would never undertake to the King, nor adventure to give him a reſolute Anſwer in any weighty buſineſs, when the Queſtion was of the Law; but he would pray that he might confer with his Brethren: and the King ever gave way to it. This latter Acknowledgment from a Writer who was not partial to the King, is a great Argument that ſome following Opinions of the Judges in this Reign were not extorted by any Menace from their Royal Maſter.

Foreign Affairs.

As to our foreign Affairs this Year, the Marqueſs of Hamilton was early provided to tranſport his ſix thouſand Men to be employed in the Service of the King of Sweden; yet he could not ſet Sail with them before the 19th of July. He landed in Pomeren Aug. 2. where he ſtayed for the coming of ſix thouſand Swedes, to march with them through the Enemies Quarters to the King. But that Convoy failing, he loſt the Honour of being engaged in the Battle of Lipſick, which happen'd about a Month after, to the great Regret of himſelf and his Army.

Victory of the King of Sweden.

The King of Sweden in a Letter under his own hand, gave our King an account of his Victory obtained againſt Tilly the Imperial General, in the Battle before Lipſick. After this ſignal Defeat, he march'd on with little Oppoſition. In this Month of September, Sir Henry Vane, Kt. Comptroller of his Majeſty's Houſhold, and one of the Privy Council, was ſent Ambaſſador Extraordinary to the Kings of Sweden and Denmark, and other Princes and States of Germany, with command to impart his publick and private Inſtructions to the Marqueſs of Hamilton, whom he met at Wirtzburgh in October; and was admitted to Audience of the King of Sweden on January 29. at Frankfort, where he earneſtly preſs'd, that his Majeſty would undertake the Reſtitution of the Elector Palatine, King of Bohemia, to his Eſtates and Dignity. The King anſwer'd, "That he could not do this without having War with France and Bavaria; nor could he undertake any ſuch War unleſs the King of England would enter into Alliance with him againſt the Spaniards." However it was concerted, that upon the King of Bohemia's arrival at the Swediſh Camp, where he was ſpeedily expected, the Chancellor of the Swedes and the Engliſh Ambaſſadour, ſhould enter into Treaty of this difficult Affair.

To reſume the Thread of Church Hiſtory for theſe two laſt Years. Decency and Order in Religion were continually ſuggeſted by the Biſhop of London, and as heartily approved by the King; who on April 6.

1631. 7 Car. I. 1630. publiſhed a Proclamation for the better ordering of thoſe who repair to the Court for the Cure of the Diſeaſe called the King's-Evil. At which Time a Form of Divine Service was uſed, the Goſpel from the 16th of St. Mark, Jeſus appeared unto the Eleven, &c. and from the firſt of St. John, In the Beginning was the Word, &c. when the King put the Angel about the Neck of the Party touch'd, theſe Words were repeated: That Light was the true Light, which lighteth every Man that cometh into the World. After this the Lord's-Prayer; then a Collect on behalf of the Diſeaſed, that they receiving Health may give Thanks to God, &c. Tho' there was nothing in this Matter but what was grave and regular; yet, thoſe who ſought for Offences, knew how to murmur about Superſtition and Will-worſhip.

Petition of the Clergy of York for a better Maintenance.

The Miniſters of the City of York, on May 24. made an Addreſs to the Archbiſhop of that Province, and to the Preſident of the North, for a more ample Allowance; they approv'd the Cauſe, and referr'd it to the Lords of the Privy-Council, who made an Order, directed to the Archbiſhop, the Preſident, the Mayor and Aldermen of York, to enter into ſerious Conſideration, how the Wants of thoſe Miniſters might be ſupplied, by levying an indifferent and competent Sum out of every Man's Houſe-rent as might not be burthenſome; that ſo the poor City Clergy, having their Maintenance augmented, might be enabled and encouraged to diſcharge their Duty. But tho' the Thing was highly reaſonable, and there were Precedents for it in the Cities of London and Norwich; yet this too made a Noiſe of Arbitrary Power and Illegal Impoſition. (a)

Caſe of Dr Leighton.

On June 4. the Cauſe of Alexander Leighton, D. D. a Scot, was heard in the Star-chamber. An Information had been exhibited againſt him, for framing and publiſhing a ſcandalous and ſeditious Book, entitled, An Appeal to the Parliament, or a Plea againſt Prelacy: Wherein he aſſerted, that God's People were perſecuted in this Iſland; that the Prelates were Men of Blood; that their Prelacy was Antichriſtian and Satanical; that kneeling at the Sacrament was a Spawn of the Beaſt; that the Queen was a Daughter of Heth; and many other inſolent and libellous Expreſſions. The Defendant confeſs'd the writing of the Book, and pleaded nothing but his good Intention of remonſtrating certain Grievances in Church and State, for the Parliament to redreſs them. The two Lord Chief Juſtices being preſent, delivered their Opinions, that they would have proceeded againſt him for Treaſon, if the Cauſe had come before them. And other Lords affirmed it to be his Majeſty's great Mercy and Goodneſs, that he was brought to receive the Cenſure of this Court, and not arraigned for a Traitor at another Bar.

Sentence againſt him.

Upon this Conviction and Confeſſion and Declaration of the Judges and Lords of the Council, he was ſentenced to a perpetual Impriſonment in the Fleet, and to a Fine of ten thouſand Pounds; to be degraded in the Eccleſiaſtical Court; to be then Pilloried and Whipp'd, to have his Ears cut off, his Noſe ſlit, and his Face branded. But waiting for the Penitence of the Offender, no Part of this Sentence was put in execution, till the Beginning of November; when being degraded on the 4th, he was to have had his corporal Puniſhment on the 10th of that Month: But he eſcaped out of Priſon the Evening before, and being ſoon after apprehended in Bedfordſhire, and brought back to the Fleet, he had the former Sentence fully executed on him. And tho' the Nature of the Crime, and the Obſtinacy of the Offender, and indeed the Neceſſity of ſuppreſſing the Spirit of Zealots, did ſufficiently require this Severity, yet it had the natural effect of moving Pity in the People, and of raiſing harder Thoughts againſt the Government.

His Eſcape.

Taken and Suffers.

Upon the Death of the Earl of Pembroke the Chancellorſhip of the Univerſity of Oxford was by great majority of Votes conferr'd upon Dr. Laud Biſhop of London, who was abſolutely the greateſt Patron of Learning and Religion, the greateſt Promoter of Diſcipline and Government, and the greateſt Benefactor to all publick Deſigns of Piety and Charity; and therefore the moſt fit for this Honour. The greatneſs of his Soul may be meaſur'd by theſe Projects, which he ſet down in November 1630, and he finiſh'd moſt of them, and at leaſt began all the reſt. 1631. 7 Car. I.

Character of Bp. Laud.

Theſe excellent Deſigns ſhewed the Projector of them to have a greatneſs of Soul above the ordinary extent of Mankind: And his proſecuting moſt of them to their full effect did prove that by a Conſtancy of Mind his Reſolutions (as far as poſſible) came up to his generous Attempts. A Prelate of his excellent Spirit might have had ſome Infirmities allowed and forgiven to him: And eſpecially becauſe without theſe Infirmities, he could have never had thoſe Virtues. For without a warmth of Temper, and ſome vehemence and impetus of Mind, he could never have ſupported himſelf in ſuch glorious Intentions, that drew infinite Difficulties and Dangers on him. A Man whom the World ſhould have called Wiſe, would never have engaged in ſuch vaſt Undertakings, or would at leaſt have timely receded from them.

Conſecration of Creed Church in London.

By this active zeal of doing Good out of the ordinary courſe of other Men, he raiſed Envy and Oppoſition in all he did. On the 16th of Jan. 1630. he conſecrated St. Catherine Creed Church in London; where obſerving all the Ceremonies of Reverence and Devotion, that could make ſuch an Office more Solemn and Sacred; he had on this occaſion the Charge of Innovation and Superſtition renewed upon him: and it was remember'd and objected at his Tryal; where he learnedly defended his Form of Conſecration, and proved it the ſame which Bp. Andrews had drawn up.

He promotes the Repair of St. Paul's Church.

He had ſet his Heart upon the Strength and Beauty of his own Cathedral: And to that pious End he obtained a Commiſſion under the Broad-Seal, dated Apr. 10. 1631. to authorize the Abps. of Canterbury and York, the Bp. of London and Wincheſter, all the Lds. of the Council, the Lords Ch. Juſtices, the Mayor and Aldermen, the Dean and Reſidentaries, to purſue this Work. And for the more effectual promoting of it, a Regiſter was appointed for the Subſcription of Benefactors; Briefs were iſſued forth to ſtir up Contributions; Letters Monitory were ſent from the Council-Table to ſeveral Juſtices in the Country; and theſe Reſolutions taken by a Committee to carry on the Buſineſs.

"1. That once a Year Certificates be made of the "Monies given, and the Donor's Names.

"2. That a Clerk of the Work be choſen, and a "Pay-Maſter and a Purveyor.

"3. The Work not to begin till there be 10000*l.* "in Bank.

"4. When the Scaffolds are up, and the Work "begun; 2 or 3 Cheſts to be ſet within the Church, "for receiving the Benevolences of well diſpoſed "Perſons to the ſaid Work."

And decent uſe of it.

And the Council Board by ſpecial Direction and Commiſſion from his Majeſty, took into conſideration a Care as well for the Religious and Decent uſe of the Inſide as for repairing of the Outſide; and how to remove that Offence taken as well by Foreigners as thoſe of our own Nation, that in time of Divine Service, while the upper part of the Church is uſed for Praying and Preaching, the nether part of the Church is uſed as an Exchange for Men to meet in, to walk, talk, and diſcourſe of all Things: Upon their Deliberation and Advice, his Majeſty publiſh'd his ſpecial Commands and Orders for the Reformation of Abuſes in Cathedral Churches, particularly that of St. Paul in London, lately begun.

Orders for the reforming Abuſes in Cathedral Churches.

"1. That no Man of what quality ſoever, ſhall "preſume to walk in the Iſles of the Quire, or in the "Body or Iſles of the Church, during the Time of di-"vine Service, or the celebration of the bleſſed Sacra-"ment, or Sermons, or any part of them; neither do "any Thing that may diſturb the Service of the Church "or diminiſh the Honour due to ſo holy a Place.

"2. That no Man preſume to profane the Church, "by the carriage of Burthens or Baskets, or any "Portage whatſoever.

"3. That all Parents and Maſters of Families do "ſtrictly forbid their Children and Servants to play "at any time in the Church, or any way miſdemean "themſelves in that Place, in time of divine Service "or otherwiſe. And if any Children or Servants be "found ſo doing, beſides the Puniſhment of the De-"linquents, their Parents and Maſters ſhall be ſub-"ject to ſuch Cenſures and Puniſhments as is "thought fit to be inflicted.

1631. 7 Car. I.

"Theſe Orders by command of his Majeſty now "publiſh'd, to the intent that no Man may hereafter "pretend Ignorance for his Excuſe in any of them."

Offences taken in the Repair of S. Paul's

No one could imagine that this new Structure of the principal Church in the chief City of the Kingdom could have met with any Exceptions to it, but from the profeſs'd Enemies of Piety and Charity and common Good. And yet it ſo happen'd, that by ſome Neceſſities or Overſights in the management of this Work, ſome Offences were taken, and grievous Complaints were made of them: For ſome Houſes and Shops adjoining to St. Paul's were thought fit to be demoliſhed, for the greater ſafety or beauty of the Fabrick: And tho' reaſonable Compenſation was made to the Owners, yet this was thought obtruding and extorting. Again, the Limits of the Church-yard were to be ſomewhat enlarged, and to be clear-ed from the Obſtruction and Encroachment of ſome Walls and Buildings; which (tho' with due Satisfaction to all Parties concerned) had a Show of waſte and depopulation. A Vault for Burial, belonging to the Pariſh of St. Gregory's, running too near the Sides of the Cathedral, and threatning the Foundations of it, was order'd to be fill'd up with Earth. Firſt a Wall of St. Gregory's, and then the whole Church it ſelf was found neceſſary to be pull'd down by Order of Council; and the Pariſhioners aſſigned to the Weſt-end of Chriſt-Church, even againſt the Conſent of that Pariſh. After all voluntary Contributions greater Supplies were ſtill wanting to carry on the vaſt Expence; and therefore to raiſe more Money, the Fines and Commutations in the High Commiſſion and Spiritual Courts, were commonly aſſign'd to this uſe; and this made Offenders murmur, as if their Penalties were impos'd only for a Tax to Pauls. In ſhort, this glorious Enterprize of Biſhop Laud, tho' it might have wip'd out all other Prejudice againſt him, yet it unhappily ſerv'd to foment the Paſſions of thoſe little angry People, who turned all the Marks of Generoſity and Magnificence into the Tokens of Pride and Ambition.

Factions in Oxford.

In June and July there were ſome diſorders in Oxford occaſioned by Mr. Tho. Ford of Magdalen-Hall, Mr. Giles Thorn of Baliol College, and Mr. Giles Hodges of Exeter College, who in their Sermons at St. Mary's had bitterly inveigh'd againſt the Arminians as Pelagians and Hereticks. This was thought a breach of the K's. Inſtructions, that had been publiſh'd to quiet theſe Controverſies; and therefore at the motion of the Chancellor Bp. Laud, they were cited as Offenders before the Vice-chancellor Dr. Smith, and charged with perturbation of the Peace, and violation of the King's Injunctions. They appeal'd from the Vice-chancellor to the two Proctors, Mr. Bruch and Mr. Doughly, who received their Appeals, and thereby obſtructed Juſtice in a Cauſe that did not ſtatutably come before them.

Appeal to the King.

The Vice-chancellor by Advice appeal'd to the King, who heard the Matter in Council at Woodſtock on Tueſday Aug. 23. where Sentence was, that the Three Preachers ſhould be expell'd the Univerſity; the two Proctors ſhould come into the Convocation-Houſe and there reſign their Office. And becauſe Dr. Prideaux Rector of Exeter, and Dr. Wilkinſon Principal of Magdalen-hall, did ſeem to countenance the Men and their Cauſe, they received a ſharp Admonition from the Council-Board. But however juſt and ſeaſonable this Diſcipline was to reſtrain the Intemperance of forward Preachers, and to ſilence, if poſſible, thoſe dark and dangerous Diſputes; yet this too did not fail to be charg'd as a Partiality upon the Biſhop,(a) and as an Argument of his too potent Influence upon the King and Council.

Queſtions about the Liberties and Exemptions of the Clergy.

In Michaelmas-Term certain Queſtions were propoſed to the Judges concerning the Liberties and Exemptions of the Clergy.

1. Whether Clergy-men were bound to find Watch or Ward Day or Night? To this the Anſwer was deferr'd till the Judges had informed themſelves of the Practice in the Counties where they went their Circuit.

2. Whether Clergy-men might be compelled to take Apprentices by the Statute of the Poor in 43 Eliz.? They agreed that no Man was expreſly out of the Statute: but there was a diſcretion to be uſed in the Juſtices of Peace, to conſider where it was fit to put the Child to be kept; and where it was fitter to take Money toward the putting of it out.

Diſputes about obſerving the Lord's Day. Wakes, or Sunday Revels.

The obſervation of the Lord's-Day was now made a moſt unhappy Subject of Diſpute: Some Doctrines were advanced ſo Sabbatarian and Jewiſh, that the Rigours of the one Party gave occaſion to extreme Looſeneſs in another. The Liberties taken at Wakes, or annual Feaſts of Dedication of Churches, were grown to that exceſs in ſome Parts, that Judge Richardſon in a Circuit, made an Order to ſuppreſs them. This was thought intruding upon the Eccleſiaſtical Power; Bp. Laud complain'd to the King, and the Judge was reprov'd. Nothing made this Controverſy more unhappy, than that it gave occaſion for the Book of Sports to be hereafter mentioned.

1632. 8 Car. I. We are now to proſecute Civil Affairs from the beginning of 1632. 8 Car. The too great Reſort of the Nobility, Gentry, and dignified Clergy to the Court and City, and thereby leaving the Country deſtitute of Hoſpitality, and the other Benefits of Reſidence; was a good Reaſon for his Majeſty, by Proclamation, dated June 20. "To charge and com- "mand, that before the end of forty Days, all Lords, "Knights, Gentlemen, and Clerks, ſhould reſort to "the ſeveral Counties where they uſually reſided, "and there keep their Habitations and Hoſpitality, "except ſuch as were of his Majeſty's Council, or "bound to Attendance on the King or Queen, or "their Children." But the immediate Cauſe of this Diſmiſſion, was a Fear, that the Acceſs of People from infected Places in the Country, might again endanger the Town lately delivered from the Plague. And therefore another Proclamation was dated the ſame Day at Greenwich, "To inhibit the Reſort of "his Majeſty's People to the Court, for Cure of the "King's Evil, and to reſtrain the Acceſs of others "from infected Places."

Information againſt the City of London for the Murder of Dr. Lamb.

Mr. Attorney General Noy, in the Eaſter Term, brought an Information in the King's-Bench againſt the Mayor and Commonalty of London, for that in June 1628, Dr. John Lamb was ſlain in a Tumult and Riot, and none of the Offenders taken, nor any Perſon known or indicted for that Felony. The Mayor and Commonalty appearing, confeſs'd the Offence, and ſubmitted themſelves to the Favour of the Court, and were Fined in 1500 Marks, as for a Tranſgreſſion in Common Law. But tho' the Proſecution was juſt, and Submiſſion made the Amercement as it were voluntary; yet the Diſgrace and the Loſs together left a ſore Place upon the Hearts of many of the Citizens, who began to hate the Court for bearing hard upon them.

Prynne publiſhes his Hiſtrio-Maſtix.

Mr. William Prynne now publiſh'd his Hiſtrio-Maſtix, or Book againſt Stage Plays, Licenſed by the Chaplain of Archbiſhop Abbot; wherein, with very profuſe Collections, he expoſed the Liberties of the Stage, and condemn'd the very Lawfulneſs of Acting. In his way of Writing he could not refrain from over-doing any Subject and from many Appearances of Railing. And becauſe the Court became now more addicted to theſe ludicrous Entertainments, and the Queen her ſelf was ſo fond of the Amuſement that ſhe had bore the Part of a Paſtoral in her own Royal Perſon; therefore this Treatiſe againſt Plays was ſuſpected to be levell'd againſt the Practice of the Court, and the Example of the Queen: And it was ſuppos'd an Innuendo, that in the Table of the Book this Reference was put, Women Actors notorious Whores, The Attorney-General proſecuted Prynne for this Libel in the Star-Chamber, where he was ſentenc'd to Impriſonment and other Penalties. The Misfortune was, that Biſhop Laud was the Inſtrument and Abetter of this Proceſs againſt the Book and the Author, by ſhewing the Book to the King, and pointing at the offenſive Parts of it; and then by employing Dr. Heylin to pick out all the virulent Paſſages, and give the ſevereſt Turn to them; and laſtly, by carrying thoſe Notes to the Attorney-General for matter of Information, and urging him earneſtly to proceed againſt the Author: Which tho' a Prelate might do with ſincere Intention to ſuppreſs Libelling, and to aſſert a Reſpect to crown'd Heads; yet it was looked upon, by ſome ſerious Men, as a giving countenance to the Licentiouſneſs and Prophaneneſs of the Stage, which ought rather to have been Reproved and Reſtrained by a Chriſtian Biſhop. Windebank made Secretary of State.

Mr. Francis Windebank (ſoon after Knighted) was made Secretary of State by the Intereſt of Biſhop Laud, who has thus enter'd it in his Diary, 1632, June 15. Mr. Francis Windebank, my old Friend was ſworn Secretary of State; which Place I obtained for him of my gracious Maſter King Charles. He proved ſo much a Creature of the Queens, and ſuch an Advocate and Patron of all ſuffering Prieſts and Jeſuits, that he got the Character of a Papiſt, and brought the greater Odium upon Biſhop Laud, who preferr'd him, and who for that Reaſon was to anſwer to the People for his good Behaviour. The Dean Dr. John Williams called together the Prebendaries, and inform'd them of the great Scandal given by their late Brother. Mr. Prynne ſoon after affirm'd, that this Man, very intimate with the Archbiſhop, and recommended ſpecially to the King by Him to be a Welſh Biſhop, in oppoſition to the E. of Pembroke, and his Chaplain Griffith Williams, ſoon after died a Reconciled Papiſt, and received extreme Unction from a Prieſt. It is ſtrange Partiality in the Oxford Hiſtorian to queſtion this Matter, when Archbiſhop Laud himſelf in his MSS. Notes upon that Relation given by Mr. Prynne, does by no means deny the Fact, but excuſes the uſing his Intereſt for him, and ſays, He was more inward with another Biſhop, and who laboured his Preferment more than I.

Take his Character from a Writer excelling in that way. "Sir John Coke, upon the Death of Sir "Albert Moreton, was, from being Maſter of Re"queſts, preferr'd to be Secretary of State. A Man "of a very narrow Education, and a narrower Na"ture; having continued long in the Univerſity of "Cambridge, where he had gotten Latin Learning "enough; and afterwards in the Country in the "Condition of a private Gentleman, till after he "was fifty Years of Age; when upon ſome Repu"tation he had for Induſtry and Diligence, he was "called to ſome painful Employment in the Office "of the Navy, which he diſcharged well, and after"wards to be Maſter of Requeſts, and then to be "Secretary of State, which he enjoyed to a great "Age: And was a Man rather unadorn'd with any "Parts of Vigour and Quickneſs, and unindow'd "with any notable Virtues, than notorious for any "weakneſs or defect of Underſtanding, or tranſport"ed with any vitious Inclinations, Appetite to Mo"ney only excepted. His Cardinal Perfection was "Induſtry, and his moſt eminent Infirmity Cove"touſneſs. His long Experience had informed him "well of the State and Affairs of England; but of "Foreign Tranſactions, or the common Intereſt of "Chriſtian Princes, he was entirely Undiſcerning "and Ignorant."

State of Ireland.

Ireland, under the Government of Lords Juſtices, was under great Ferments and Diſtempers, owing chiefly to the potent Faction of the Papiſts; who had been too much conniv'd at and encouraged, and according to the Nature of thoſe Men, and that Religion, had turned all Favour into intolerable Inſolence. To reduce the Affairs of that Kingdom into better Peace and Order, the King ſent the Lord Wentworth, under the Title of Lord Deputy, upon good Experience of his Spirit of Diſcipline and Conduct, as Preſident of the North; where he had indeed carried ſome Things with extremity of Rigour, tho' perhaps no farther than the Neceſſity and Iniquity of Times requir'd. Foreign Affairs.

As to Foreign Affairs, we left Sir Henry Vane in an Embaſſy to the King of Sweden, at the Head of a marching Army, ſolliciting for the Reſtauration of the Palſgrave to his Dominions in the Palatinate. He had his laſt Audience about the middle of July, when that ſucceſsful Prince offer'd theſe hard Propoſals.

Offers of the King of Sweden.

"I. That the Palſgrave ſhould hold his Country as "a Donative of the King of Sweden.

"II. That he ſhould make no Martial Levies "without the Swedes conſent.

"III. That during this War he ſhould furniſh the "Swedes with ſo many thouſand Men upon his own "Pay.

1632. 8 Car. I.

"IV. That two of his chiefeſt Towns ſhould ſtand "Cautionaries for the performing of Covenants.

"V. That he ſhould make no League nor Article "with any other Prince without the Swedes conſent."

The Ambaſſador knew, that his Maſter and the Palſgrave, and all Mankind, would think theſe Terms diſhonourable; and therefore he expoſtulated with the King of Sweden, upon the hardſhip of them, in ſo much freedom of Speech, that they both parted in a Paſſion, and the Treaty broke off. The King of England perceiving his Forces not likely to be employ'd, as he deſigned them, for the Service of the Palatinate, wrote to the Marqueſs of Hamilton to make an Excuſe and return home: And ſent Letters to the King of Sweden, charging him with obſtructing a League between them, and ſo recalling his Ambaſſadour, who came away in the beginning of November, leaving Inſtructions with his Secretary Mr. Curtius, who ſtaid behind as his Majeſty's Agent with the King of Sweden. After this, the Swediſh Army paſs'd on with rapid Succeſs. Tilly had been often defeated, and at laſt wounded to Death; and Count Wallanſtein in great diſguſt for having been caſhier'd at the Diet of Ratisbone, had been now forc'd to be courted to re-accept the Office of Generaliſſimo of the Imperial Army. The deciding Battle was fought at Lutzen on Novemb. 6. 1632. wherein the King of Sweden was unfortunately ſlain; and yet his Death was ſo far from being a damp to his Army, that it incens'd them to Revenge, and they came off with Victory. The Palſgrave, or Prince Elector, much encouraged by the King of Sweden to hope for Right and Reſtitution, tho' no Conditions could be expreſsly made, died of an Infection taken at Mentz, on the 29th of the ſame Month. And Wallenſtein ſoon after being diſcover'd in a Conſpiracy, to make himſelf King of Bohemia, was murther'd in his Bed-Chamber. (c)

Muſcovites and Poles.

The Emperor of Muſcovy deſigning to regain the Town of Smolensko from the King of Poland, applied himſelf to the King of England for leave to raiſe two thouſand Men; who by conſent were accordingly raiſed, and Commanded by Colonel Thomas Sanderſon, who landed them at Archangel on the 6th of Auguſt, and march'd them to the Siege of Smolensko, where, upon a Pet of Honour, Colonel Sanderſon was baſely murder'd by Colonel Leſley; and this drew the Scotch and Engliſh into Parties of Revenge and Defence. The Poles took Advantage of this Mutiny and Diſtraction, and at that Juncture fell upon the Muſcovite with that Fury and Succeſs, that they made them quit the Siege and comply with diſhonourable Terms of Peace.

1633. 9 Car. I.

The Year 1633. began with the King's Preparation for a Progreſs into Scotland, where he had been expected for the Solemnity of a Coronation ever ſince his Father's Death. His long Delay had been unkindly reſented in that Kingdom; and ſome Murmurs were given out, that if the King did not think the Crown of Scotland worth his Journey thither, there might be ſome other way of diſpoſing of it. (a)

K. goes to Scotland to be Crown'd.

To make this ſeaſonable Progreſs with more Pomp and Order, the King iſſued his Proclamation on the 4th of May, that competent Proviſions ſhould be made for his Royal Perſon and Attendants, in the ſeveral Parts of this Realm through which he was to paſs; and that the Prices of them ſhould be Aſſeſſed and Rated by the Clerk of the Market of the King's Houſhold. And the next Day, May 5. another Proclamation was publiſh'd for the better ordering his Majeſty's Court and Train in his Journey to Scotland, and his Return from thence. And then his Gueſts or Stays upon the Roard being appointed as to Time and Place, on May 13. his Majeſty ſet out from London with a noble Retinue of the Earls of Northumberland, Arundel, Pembroke, Southampton, Holland, Marqueſs Hamilton, Biſhop of London, and many other Perſons of Quality. He accepted of many noble Entertainments by the way; at Welbeck from the Earl of Newcaſtle, at Raby Caſtle from Sir Henry Vane, at Durham ſeveral Days by Biſhop Moreton, and at Newcaſtle from the Magiſtrates and Town. The King enter'd Scotland on the 12th of June, when immediately all his Engliſh Servants and Officers yielded up their Places of Attendance to the Scots, who were admitted to the ſame Titles and Duties.

His Retinue and Journey.

Enters Edinborough.

June 15. the King enter'd Edinborough in great State and Magnificence; and indeed the Pomp and Grandour of the Scotch Nobility, had ſo much Emulation and Profuſeneſs in it, that the Debts which they now contracted, did help to breed and foment the Seditions that ſoon after broke out. June 18. was the Coronation Day, which paſs'd with as much Solemnity and publick Joy as could poſſibly fill the Hearts of Prince and People: The Sermon was preach'd by Dr. David Lindſey Biſhop of Brechin, upon 1 Kings 1. 39. and the chief Ceremonies performed by Dr. Spotſwood, Archbiſhop of St. Andrews.

His Coronation.

The Parliament began June 20. the Archbiſhop of St. Andrews preach'd, and the King made a very gracious Speech. Then the Lords and Members of the Articles being choſe, they prepared and preſented ſeveral Bills, which were paſs'd, agreeable to the King's Deſire, and the Parliament diſſolv'd on Friday June 28. the King returning toward Berwick on Tueſday July 16.

He returns.

Effect of this Progreſs.

In this Progreſs the King carried himſelf with great Prudence and Moderation, and yet many Things concurr'd to open a way for thoſe Commotions which afterward diſtracted both Kingdoms. For, Firſt, it did now appear, that the Scotch Noblemen, who had been greateſt Favourites in the Engliſh Court, had the leaſt Intereſt in their own Country: And that the Bounties thrown upon them by the King and his Father were not look'd upon as any Favour to the Nation, but as Obligations caſt away upon thoſe particular Men, who in being the more gracious with the King, were but the more ſuſpected to the People. Secondly, Some of the Scotch Nobility endeavour'd to make themſelves Popular by ſpeaking in Parliament againſt thoſe Things which were moſt grateful to his Majeſty; and in entring their Diſſent to ſome Acts; for which the King did openly diſcountenance ſeveral of them, and made them not forgive the King, becauſe they imagin'd the King would never forgive them. Thirdly Two or three Acts were paſſed, which did much leſſen the Authority of the great Men, and the Subjection and Dependence of their Tenants; which ſerv'd to incenſe the one, and to make the other more licentious. But Fourthly, the worſt of all was, the Fears and Jealouſies taken up by the Kirk Party: They were taught to be upon their Guard by the Biſhop of London's waiting on the King; and they looked with a worſe Eye upon him, when they heard him preach in the Royal Chapel at Edinborough, chiefly on the Benefit of Conformity, and the Reverence due to the Ceremonies of the Church. They grew more and more angry, when the King during his Stay had erected and endowed an Epiſcopal See at Edinborough, and had promoted ſome of the Biſhops to principal Offices of State, and had committed the framing and compoſing of a Liturgy for the Church of Scotland to a ſelect Number of their Biſhops. Theſe ſofteſt Steps were with great Indignation exclaim'd upon, as a Project to make Scotland ſubject to all the Forms and Eſtabliſhments of England, which they pretended would make their Kingdom appear like a depending Province, and leave their Kirk deprived of all the Remainder of its own way of Reformation.

The King having come Poſt from Berwick in four Days, reach'd on Saturday July 20. to Greenwich, where the Queen kept her Court. Aug. 4. Archbiſhop Abbot, having been long dead to the Church, died at Lambeth. An honourable Author obſerves, that "He had ſate too many Years in that See, and had too great a Juriſdiction over the Church.—He had been promoted to Canterbury upon the never enough lamented Death of Dr. Bancroft, that Metropolitan who underſtood the Church excellently, and had almoſt reſcued it out of the Hands of the Calvinian Party, and very much ſubdued the unruly Spirit of the Nonconformiſts; countenanced Men of the greateſt Parts in Learning, and diſpoſed the Clergy to a more ſolid Courſe of Study than they had been accuſtomed to; and if he had lived would quickly have extinguiſhed all that Fire in England which had been kindled at Geneva; or if he had been ſucceeded by Biſhop Andrews, Biſhop Overal, or any Man who underſtood and loved the Church; that Infection would eaſily have been kept out, which could not afterwards be ſo eaſily expelled. But Abbot brought none of this Antidote with him, &c.— And though many other Biſhops plainly diſcern'd the Miſchiefs which daily broke in to the prejudice of Religion, and prevented it in their Dioceſſes as much as they could — yet that Temper in the Archbiſhop, whoſe Houſe was a Sanctuary to the moſt Eminent of that factious Party, and who Licenſed their moſt pernicious Writings, left his Succeſſor a very difficult Work to do, to reform and reduce a Church into Orders that had been ſo long neglected, and that was ſo ill filled with many weak and more wilful Church-men." Majeſty received him with this Compellation, (a) My Lord's Grace of Canterbury, you are very welcome; and gave Order the ſame Day for the diſpatch of all neceſſary Forms for his Tranſlation, which was expedited and compleated by Sept. 19. The Day before, when he went firſt to Lambeth, the Ferry-boat that carried his Coach and Horſes and Servants ſunk to the bottom of the River, tho' without damage to the Men or Goods. He entred this Accident in his Diary as an obſervation of Omens, to which he was ſomewhat ſuperſtitiouſly addicted; yet rather from a Senſe of Religion and an awe of Providence, than from any Conceits of Fate or Chance. Upon his merited Acceſſion to this higheſt Seat in the Church, it may be proper to take the continuation of his Character.

"He was a Man of great Parts and very exemplary Virtues, allayed and diſcredited by "ſome unpopular natural Infirmities, the greateſt "of which was (beſides a haſty ſharp way of expreſſing himſelf) that he believed Innocence of "Heart and Integrity of Manners was a Guard "ſtrong enough to ſecure any Man in his Voyage "through this World, in what Company ſoever he "travell'd, and through what Ways ſoever he was "to paſs; and ſure never any Man was better ſupplied with that Proviſion.—— He was always maligned and perſecuted by thoſe who were of the "Calvinian Faction, which was then very powerful, "and who, according to their uſual Maxim and "Practice, call every Man they do not love, Papiſt: "and under this ſenſeleſs Appellation they created "him many Troubles and Vexations.—— When "he came into great Authority, it may be he retain'd too keen a Memory of thoſe who had ſo "unjuſtly and uncharitably perſecuted him before; "and I doubt was ſo far tranſported with the ſame "Paſſions he had reaſon to complain of in his Adverſaries, that as they accuſed him of Popery becauſe he had ſome doctrinal Opinions which they "liked not, though they were nothing allied to Popery; ſo he entertained too much Prejudice to "ſome Perſons, as if they were Enemies to the Diſcipline of the Church, becauſe they concurr'd with "Calvin in ſome Doctrinal Points when they abhorr'd his Diſcipline, and reverenc'd the Govern"ment of the Church, and pray'd for the Peace of "it with as much Zeal and Fervency as any in the "Kingdom, as they made manifeſt in their Lives, "and in their Sufferings with it, and for it."

Reformation of ſome Abuſes in Trading.

The King iſſued his Proclamations for preventing the Abuſes that did ariſe by the unorder'd retailing of Tobacco, and reduced the Vending of it to thoſe only who ſhould receive Licenſe ſo to do; and for the Uſe of the Bow and Pike together in Military Diſcipline, authorizing William Neal to inſtruct the Train'd-Bands in the Uſe of a Warlike Invention to that Purpoſe. And in Michaelmas-Term, upon Conſultation with the Judges, and Certificate of their Opinions, a Decree was made to confirm the Orders given by his Majeſty againſt Ingroſſing of Grain by Chandlers, and againſt many Exactions and Abuſes of Taverners, Victuallers, Bakers, Inn-keepers, and other Retailers of Proviſion: The Reformation whereof was as much a Relief to the Subject, as it was made a Benefit to the King: tho' the Offenders aggriev'd by it would have had it thought an Art only of advancing the King's Revenue. In Hilary-Term, Sir David Foulis, one of the Council of York, Deputy-Lieutenant and Juſtice of Peace, upon an Information in the Star-Chamber, for oppoſing his Majeſty's Service, and deterring his Subjects from making Fines for Knighthood, and traducing and affronting the Commiſſioners, was cenſur'd to be committed to the Fleet, to pay a Fine of five thouſand Pounds, and to acknowledge his Offences in ſeveral open Courts, and to be incapable of any Office, and to pay three thouſand Pounds to the Lord Wentworth.

Sir David Foulis proſecuted.

Mr. Will. Prynne.

In the ſame Term, Mr. William Prynne was proſecuted in the ſame Court, for compiling and printing a Libellous Volume, entitled Hiſtrio-Maſtix, againſt Plays, Maſques, Dancings, &c. And being ſufficiently Convicted of many foul and ſlanderous Reflections in it, he was ſentenced to have his Book burnt in the moſt publick manner, to be himſelf put from the Bar, and made for ever uncapable of his Profeſſion; to be excluded from the Society of Lincolns-Inn, and degraded in Oxford, and ſtand in the Pillory in Weſtminſter and Cheapſide, and loſe both his Ears, one in each place, with a Paper on his Head, declaring his Offence to be an Infamous Libel againſt both their Majeſties, the State, and the Government; and to pay a Fine of five thouſand Pounds, and to ſuffer perpetual Impriſonment. Theſe Proſecutions and Penalties in the Star-chamber, were thought to exceed the Proportion of the Crimes, by thoſe eſpecially who favoured the Committers of them: And this Terror ſerv'd but to increaſe the Averſion againſt that Court, and the principal Aſſeſſors of it. (b)

Maſque by the Inns of Court.

It was a ſofter Anſwer to Mr. Prynne's Book againſt Plays and Actings, that about the beginning of November, to congratulate the King's Return, and divert his Royal Conſort, the four Inns of Court, by ſome of their principal Members, offer'd a ſplendid Maſque to be perform'd by their Societies jointly, as an Expreſſion of their Love and Duty to their Majeſties. The Offer was very graciouſly accepted; and upon Conſult and Order of the Benchers, was very nobly perform'd at White-hall on Shrove-Tueſday, February the 18th, and again at Merchant-Taylors-Hall, where the King, Queen, and Court, were magnificently entertain'd by the City.

State of Ireland.

In Ireland great Confuſions began to be compos'd by the vigilant and active Lord Deputy Thomas Viſcount Wentworth, who wrote a Letter to his Majeſty dated January 22. 1633. wherein he adviſes the Calling of a Parliament, and ſuggeſts the Ways and Means of a Parliamentary Supply to make up the Revenue, which within a Year would fall ſhort twenty thouſand Pounds Sterling, and to diſcharge a Debt upon the Crown of fourſcore thouſand Pounds, and to ſupport the Army; with Propoſitions for the Peace and Intereſt of his Majeſty's Affairs, and Conſiderations for the better Government of the Church and Clergy in that Kingdom: Wherein he preſcribed, and afterward purſued ſuch Meaſures as ſhewed him to be an expert Soldier, an able Stateſman, and a good Chriſtian.

There was nothing remarkable in foreign Affairs, becauſe the King was at Peace with all States and Princes: and the Thoughts of reſtoring the Palatinate ſeemed at preſent to die with the Prince Ele-

State of Religion. 1632.

To review the State of Religion for theſe two laſt Years. Arminianiſm was thrown for an odious Name upon thoſe Divines who had the greateſt Reputation for Learning, and were moſt conſidered in the Church Preferments. This Reſpect of the Court paid to them, created them more Envy and Hatred than the bare Opinions charg'd upon them could poſſibly have done. And for theſe Political Reaſons, more than for any Merit of the Cauſe, the Popularity went moſt on the Calvinian Side; and many Preachers who inclin'd to pleaſe the People, took a zealous Freedom to reflect upon the Tenets called Arminian, and upon the Profeſſors of them. This Liberty was Penal, as a Tranſgreſſion of his Majeſty's Injunctions; and Biſhop Laud never failed the Opportunities of making an Example of every ſuch bold Preacher.

Noiſe againſt Arminianiſm.

Sermon of Mr. Barnard.

Mr. Nathaniel Barnard, Lecturer of St. Sepulchre's in London, had preach'd at St. Mary's in Cambridge, upon 1 Samuel 4. 21. The Glory is departed from Iſrael, &c. in which he tragically complain'd of Pelagian Errors brought into the Doctrine of our Church, with ſuperſtitious Inventions of Men; to the Authors whereof he prayed for Converſion or Deſtruction, &c. For which he was queſtion'd in the High Commiſſion, and was enjoin'd a Form of Recantation; which he refuſing to ſubmit to, he was ſuſpended from his Office, fined a thouſand Pounds, condemned in Coſts, and committed to Priſon. (a) Church Preferments.

The great Care of Biſhop Laud was to recommend ſuch Perſons to the Dignities of the Church as he thought to be Men of the greateſt Probity and Publick Spirit. Under this View, he got Dr. Curl to be Tranſlated from the See of Bath and Wells to that of Wincheſter, and Dr. Pierce to be promoted to Bath and Wells; Dr. Auguſtine Lindſey to the See of Peterborough; Dr. Robert Wright to be Tranſlated from Briſtol to Coventry and Litchfield; and with a more particular Affection, as his Diary expreſſes, July 10. 1632. Dr. Juxon, the Dean of Worceſter, at my Suit ſworn Clerk of his Majeſty's Cloſet, that I might have One that I might truſt near his Majeſty, if I grew weak or infirm, as I muſt have a time.

Cauſe againſt the Feoffees for Impropriations.

The Cauſe againſt the Feoffees for buying in of Impropriations, as Inſtruments of the Puritan Faction to divide and deſtroy the Church, was now brought by Information into the Exchequer; where the Attorney-General ſet forth, that the ſaid Feoffees had purchaſed divers Rectories, Tithes, &c. under a Pretence of augmenting poor Vicarages, but had not employ'd them according to ſuch pious Uſes, according to the true Intention of the Donors. The Defendants made Anſwer, that they believed Impropriations in the Poſſeſſion of Lay-men, not employ'd for the Maintenance of Preachers, to be a great Damage to the Church of England; and therefore, that the Purchaſing thereof for the Maintenance of Divine Service and Preaching, was a pious Work: and that the Donors and Benefactors had not ſpecially aſſign'd the Endowment of perpetual Vicars, but intended the Maintenance of Preachers, and ſuch other good Uſes, as the Defendants ſhould think meet; and that they had converted the Money to ſuch Uſes, according to the beſt of their Diſcretion. The Court gave Judgment, That the Defendants had uſurped upon the King's Regality, and of their own Authority had made themſelves a Body or Society; that they had purchaſed divers Impropriations, but never reſtored one of them to the Church; that by diſpoſing the Profits to Lecturers and Miniſters, they had drawn a Dependency of the Clergy upon them, and introduced many Novelties of dangerous Conſequences. The Court did forbear to proceed to Puniſhment, becauſe his Majeſty had determin'd a Criminal Proceſs againſt them in the Star-Chamber.

1633. 9 Car. I.

Proſecution of Mr. Sherfield.

In February this Year, Henry Sherfield, Eſq; Bencher of Lincolns-Inn, and Recorder of Sarum, was inform'd againſt in the Star-Chamber, for taking down the painted Glaſs from a Window in St. Edmund's Church in Salisbury; for which he was ſentenc'd to a Fine of five hundred Pounds, to be remov'd from the Recorderſhip of that City, to make a publick Acknowledgment of his Fault, and to be bound to his good Behaviour. This ſhew'd the Puritanical Humour of being now offended with thoſe Ornaments which had ſtood unblamable ever ſince the Reformation. And yet theſe Cenſures upon the Heat and Indiſcretion of forward Menders, did but encreaſe the Rumour of favouring Superſtition and Idolatry. (b)

Upon Complaints made concerning Ales and Revels upon the Wakes or Dedication-Sundays in Somerſetſhire, the Lord Chief Juſtice Richardſon and Baron Denham, in their Circuit in that County, had made this Order.

Order of Aſſizes againſt Wakes and Revels.

"WHereas divers Orders have been made heretofore, by Judges of the Aſſize, for the ſuppreſſing of all Ales and Revels, the ſame Order is now confirmed at the Aſſizes, and again order'd by the Court, in regard of the infinite number of Inconveniencies daily ariſing by means of Revels, that ſuch Revels, Church-Ales, Clerk-Ales, and all other Publick-Ales, be henceforth utterly ſuppreſſed; and to the End this may be obſerv'd, it is farther Order'd, that the Clerk of the Aſſizes ſhall leave Copies hereof with the Miniſter of every Pariſh within his ſeveral Hundred, and ſhall give a Note under his Hand, that he ſhall publiſh it Yearly, within the Pariſh, the firſt Sunday in February, and likewiſe the two Sundays before Eaſter yearly."

The Abp. offended.

The Archbiſhop did well apprehend, that this Proceeding of the Judges in an Eccleſiaſtical Affair, and impoſing an Order upon the Miniſters to publiſh, without conſent or knowledge of the Biſhop, might grow into greater Encroachments upon the Authority of the Church, and make the Diſcipline of it depend upon the Pleaſure of the Lay Magiſtrates. Under this Concern, he complains to the King of this Irregularity of the Judges; and writes to the Biſhop of Bath and Wells, for a full Account how the Feaſts of the Dedication of Churches, commonly called Wakes, were obſerved in thoſe Parts; and to know whether the Diſorders of them might not be prevented by the Care of the Juſtices of Peace, without abrogating the Feaſts themſelves; which if decently kept up might encourage neighbourly Meeting, and a ſeaſonable Recreation of the People. The Biſhop return'd Anſwer, That the ancient Cuſtom of thoſe Feaſts was Laudable and Innocent; that the late Suppreſſion was very unacceptable; and the Reſtitution of them would be grateful to the Clergy, Gentry, and Common People. Upon this Report and farther Enquiries, the Lord Chief

Juſtice

1633. 9 Car. I.

Juſtice was Reprov'd at the Council Table, and commanded to revoke his Order; which he did at the next Aſſizes, but with ſo much Reſerve and Regret, that it look'd like a Penance impoſed, and like declaring the Will and Pleaſure of the King, againſt his own Conſcience. This Revocation however well intended, was thought the giving Countenance to Miſpending and Profaning of the Lord's-Day. And many devout People were ſo much offended at it, that from being Serious they grew Preciſe, and condemned all the cuſtomary Sports and Diverſions upon Sundays (which after Divine Service had been long practis'd without ſcruple) as now abſolutely unlawful. This one Extreme of the Puritans put the Government upon another more unhappy.

Makes the Order be revers'd.

Unhappy allowance of Sports on the Lord's Day.

It was remember'd, that when the like rigorous Notions of a Sabbath began to obtain, in the Reign of King James, he in his Princely Wiſdom publiſh'd a Declaration, To all his Loving Subjects, concerning lawful Sports to be uſed upon Sundays after Evening Prayers ended, and upon Holidays. Wherein he declares, "That in his late Progreſs through Lancaſhire "he did rebuke ſome Puritans and preciſe People, "and took Order that the like unlawful Carriage "ſhould not be uſed by any of them hereafter, in "the prohibiting and unlawful puniſhing of his "good People, for uſing their lawful Recreations "and honeſt Exerciſes upon Sundays, and other Holidays, after the Afternoon Sermon or Service—— "which cannot but produce two Evils, the one the "hindring the Converſion of many Papiſts, whom "their Prieſt will take occaſion hereby to vex, perſwading them that no honeſt Mirth or Recreation "is lawful or tolerable in Religion;——the "other, that this Prohibition barreth the common and meaner ſort of People from uſing ſuch "Exerciſes, as may make their Bodies more able for War, when his Majeſty or his Succeſſors "ſhall have occaſion to uſe them.——The "King's expreſs Pleaſure therefore is, That the "Laws of this Kingdom, and Canons of the Church, "be well obſerved; and that no lawful Recreation ſhall be barred to his Good People, which "ſhall not tend to the breach of the aforeſaid Laws "and Canons of the Church.—— That after the "end of Divine Service, his good People be not "diſturbed, letted or diſcouraged, from any lawful Recreation; ſuch as Dancing, either Men or "Women, Archery for Men, Leaping, Vaulting, "or any ſuch harmleſs Recreation.——But "withal, his Majeſty doth here account ſtill as "prohibited, all unlawful Games to be uſed upon Sundays, as Bear and Bull-Baitings, Interludes, "and Bowling. And likewiſe bars from this Benefit and Liberty all ſuch known Recuſants, either "Men or Women, as will abſtain from coming to "Church, or Divine Service, and to all, that tho' "conform in Religion are not preſent in the Church "at the Service of God, before their going to the "ſaid Recreations.—— He doth likewiſe ſtrictly command, that every Perſon ſhall reſort to his "own Pariſh Church to hear Divine Service, and "each Pariſh by it ſelf to uſe the ſaid Recreation "after Divine Service.——And his Pleaſure is, "that this his Declaration ſhall be publiſh'd, by "Order from the Biſhop of the Dioceſs, through all "the Pariſh Churches, and that both the Judges of "the Circuits, and the Juſtices of the Peace, be informed thereof. Given at the Mannor of Greenwich "the 24th Day of May, in the 16th Year of his "Majeſty's Reign, of England, &c. and of Scotland "the 51ſt. 1618."

Declaration of King James for lawful Sports.

Declaration of K. Charles.

The King and Council thought fit to renew and confirm this Declaration, and therefore a like Declaration was now drawn, which gives an account of the occaſion taken by King James, and then recites his ſaid Declaration at large, and concludes thus:

"Now, out of a like pious Care for the Service of God, and for ſuppreſſion of any Humours "that oppoſe Truth, and for the Eaſe, Comfort "and Recreation of his well-deſerving People, his "Majeſty doth ratifie and publiſh this his bleſſed "Father's Declaration, the rather becauſe of late in "ſome Counties of this Kingdom, his Majeſty finds "that under pretence of taking away Abuſes, "there hath been a general Forbidding, not only "of ordinary Meetings, but of the Feaſts of the "Dedication of the Churches, commonly called "Wakes. Now his Majeſty's expreſs Will and "Pleaſure is, that theſe Feaſts with others ſhall "be obſerved, and that his Juſtices of the Peace, "in their ſeveral Diviſions ſhall look to it, both "that all Diſorders there may be prevented or puniſhed; and that all neighbourhood and freedom "with Manlike and lawful Exerciſes be uſed. And "his Majeſty farther commands all Juſtices of Aſſize in their ſeveral Circuits to ſee, that no Man "do trouble or moleſt any of his Loyal or Dutiful "People, in or for their lawful Recreations, having "firſt done their Duty to God, and continuing in "Obedience to his Majeſty's Laws. And for this his "Majeſty commands all his Judges, Juſtices of the "Peace, as well within Liberties as without, Mayors, "Bailiffs, Conſtables and other Officers, to take notice of, and to ſee obſerved, as they tender his Diſpleaſure. And doth farther Will, that publication "of this his Command be made, by Order from the "Biſhops, through all the Pariſh Churches of their "ſeveral Dioceſſes reſpectively. Given at our Palace of Weſtminſter the Eighteenth Day of October, "in the ninth Year of our Reign."

Ill Effects of this Declaration.

Nothing more proves the Diverſity of Times than the different Operation that the ſame Act ſhall have upon the one and the other. This Declaration in the Reign of King James was generally thought more than Innocent, even ſeaſonable and popular. But now under King Charles it was reſented by many ſober People as worſe than needleſs, as even Irreligious and Prophane. Great Numbers of People could not endure to hear it, and ſeveral Miniſters refuſed to read it: And this one Thing, tho' founded upon ſo late a Precedent, drew on more prejudice againſt the King and the Archbiſhop, than any other Part of the publick Adminiſtration. It had been more happy to have timely conſidered the Pulſe and Temper of the People: For it ſeems the Political Phyſick in one Age may be Poiſon in another.

State of Religion in Scotland.

Lord Clarendon's Hiſt. Rebel. B. 1. p. 63.

The State of Religion in Scotland, had ſo great an influence on Publick Affairs; that it will be proper here to repreſent it, in the Words of a profound Judge in Matters of Church and State. "The King "was always the moſt punctual Obſerver of all Decency in his Devotion, and the ſtricteſt promoter "of the Ceremonies of the Church; and believing "in his Soul the Church of England to be inſtituted "the neareſt to the Practice of the Apoſtles, and the "beſt for the propagation and advancement of Chriſtian Religion of any Church in the World, he had "the higheſt diſlike and prejudice to that Part of his "own Subjects, who were againſt the Government "eſtabliſh'd, and did always look upon them as a "very dangerous and ſeditious People. This Temper and Diſpoſition in England lurk'd with wonderful Secrecy: In Scotland, indeed, it cover'd the "whole Nation, ſo that though there were Biſhops "in Name, the whole Juriſdiction, and they themſelves, were upon the Matter ſubject to an Aſſembly, which was purely Presbyterian; no Form of "Religion in Practice; no Liturgy, nor the leaſt "Appearance of any Beauty of Holineſs.—— "Yet the King's own Chapel at Holy-Rood-Houſe, "had ſtill been maintained with the Comelineſs of "the Cathedral Service, and all other Decencies: "And the whole Nation ſeem'd in the Time of King "James well inclin'd to receive the Liturgy of the "Church of England, which that King exceedingly "deſired, and was confident of bringing the Work to "paſs; however, upon ſome extraordinary Junctures he thought it neceſſary to ſuſpend the Proſecution. The King his Son propoſed nothing

"more to himſelf, than to unite his three Kingdoms in one Form of God's Worſhip and publick Devotions; and there is great Reaſon to believe that in his Journey into Scotland to be crown'd, he carried this Reſolution with him.——And many wiſe Men were then, and are ſtill of Opinion, that if the King had then propoſed the Liturgy of the Church of Eng. to have been receiv'd and practis'd by that Nation, it would have been ſubmitted to without Oppoſition.—— But there were Obſtructions that diverted the King; yet the party that was averſe from the Thing, and abhorr'd any thought of Conformity, could not have been powerful enough to have ſtop'd the Progreſs of it. The Miſchief was, that they who moſt deſired it, and were moſt concern'd to promote it, were the Men who uſed all their Credit to divert the preſent attempting it; and the Biſhops themſelves applied all their Counſels ſecretly to have the Matter more maturely conſidered.—— The great Objection was, that the Engliſh Liturgy without Alterations would be dangerous to impoſe upon a jealous People, who, had been long afraid of Scotland being reduc'd as a Province to England, and made ſubject to their Laws and Government.—— This made a deep Impreſſion on his Majeſty, and ſo he committed the framing and compoſing ſuch a Liturgy as would moſt probably be acceptable to that People, to a ſelect Number of the Biſhops there, who were very able and willing to undertake it."

Archbp. Laud concern'd for Uniformity in Scotland.

While this was in agitation, Archbiſhop Laud, moſt truly zealous in this Work of Uniformity, kept a conſtant Correſpondence with the Scotch Biſhops, and directed and encourag'd them to proceed, with ſuch an Air of Authority, and in ſuch Terms of Preſcribing; that even this was a pretence to carry on the Prejudice, that a Scotch Liturgy ſhould be ſtill dictated and impoſed from England. And it was made another Advantage of the like Suſpicions; that while a Liturgy and Canons were under a due deliberation in Scotland, the King was thought to interpoſe with too much haſte, by ſending Articles of Conformity for the better ordering of Divine Service in his Chapel Royal in Scotland, certified to the Lords of the Privy Council to be executed with Diligence and Care, dated the 8th of October 1633. with a ſufficient Intimation, that this was a Patern of the intended Reformation to all Cathedrals, Pariſh Churches and Chapels in Scotland. This more and more fill'd the Heads of a People that mightily affected to be free and independent.

Ld. Clarendon's Hiſt. Rebel.
People in England jealous of Alterations tho' to the better.

A like Jealouſie againſt any Alterations prevail'd too much in England. "The Remiſsneſs of Abbot, and of other Biſhops by his Example, had introduced, or at leaſt conniv'd at a Negligence that gave great ſcandal to the Church, and no doubt offended very many pious Men. The People took ſo little Care of the Churches, and the Parſons as little of the Chancels, ſuffering them to be kept ſo indecently and ſlovenly, as they would not have endured in the ordinary Offices of their own Houſes; the Rain and the Wind to infeſt them, and the Sacraments themſelves to be adminiſtred where the People had moſt Mind to receive them. This prophane Liberty and Uncleanlineſs, Archbiſhop Laud reſolv'd to reform with all expedition, requiring the other Biſhops to concur with him in ſo pious a Work; and the Work ſure was very grateful to all Men of Devotion: yet I know not how, the Proſecution of it with too much affection of expence it may be, or with too much paſſion between the Miniſters and Pariſhioners, raiſed an Evil Spirit towards the Church, which the Enemies of it took much Advantage of, as ſoon as they had an opportunity to make the worſt of it."

9 Car. I.

Placing the Communion-Table.

The Archbp. had obſerv'd, that placing the Communion-Table in the Body of the Church, or at the entrance only of the Chancel, was not only an impediment of the Church, in obſtructing the Paſſage of the People; nor only a proſtitution of the Table to other ordinary and ſordid Uſes; but that it made the Chancel look like a uſeleſs Building, fit only for Schooling and Pariſh Meeting, tho' originally deſign'd for the moſt ſolemn Office of Religion. To redeem theſe Places from Prophaneneſs, and reſtore them to the primitive Uſe of the holy Sacrament; the Archbiſhop uſed his utmoſt diligence to remove the Communion-Table from the Body of the Church, and fix it at the upper end of the Chancel, and ſecure it from the approach of Dogs, and all ſervile Uſes, by railing it in, and obliging the People to come up to thoſe Rails, to receive the Sacrament in more Decency and Order. This now, however regular and agreeable to devout Perſons, was thought a Grievance in many Pariſhes, more on the account of Trouble and Expence, than upon any other Scruple. Theſe Murmurs were artificially improv'd into the cries of Innovation, Superſtition and Popery it ſelf. The Archbiſhop guided purely by his Zeal and Reverence for the Place of God's Service, and by the Canons and Injunctions of the Church, with the Cuſtom obſerv'd in the King's Chapel, and in moſt Cathedral Churches, without conſidering the long Intermiſſion and Diſcontinuance in many other Places, proſecuted this Affair more paſſionately than was fit for the Seaſon, and had Prejudice againſt thoſe, who out of Fear or Foreſight, or not underſtanding the Thing, had not the ſame Warmth to promote it. Ld. Clarendon.

Great oppoſition given to the Abp.

The firſt oppoſition and diſturbance in this Matter, was in the Pariſh of St. Gregory's, London, where the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's, as Ordinaries, had appointed the Communion-Table to be remov'd from the middle of the Chancel to the upper end, in ſuch manner as it ſtandeth in the ſaid Cathedral and Mother-Church. Some few of the Pariſhioners did complain of this Act by Appeal to the Dean of Arches, where they had Advocates to plead, that the Book of Common-Prayer, and the 82d Canon did give Liberty to place the Communion-Table where it may ſtand with moſt fitneſs and convenience, which a general Cuſtom had determined to be in the Body of the Church, or toward the Bottom of the Chancel. This Queſtion was brought before his Majeſty in Council, Nov. 3. 1633. where an Order was made, That his Majeſty having heard particular Relation made by the Council of both Parties, of all the Carriage and Proceeding in this Cauſe, was pleaſed to declare his diſlike of all Innovation and receding from ancient Conſtitutions, granted upon juſt and warrantable Reaſons, eſpecially in Matters concerning Eccleſiaſtical Order and Government, knowing how eaſily Men are drawn to affect Novelties, and how ſoon weak Judgments in ſuch Caſes may be overtaken and abuſed. That the Cathedral Mother-Church, was a fit Example by which all other Churches depending thereon ought to be guided; and if a few Pariſhioners might have their Wills in affecting a difference from it, this might give too much ſubject of Diſcourſe and Diſputes. As to what concerns the Liberty given by the Common-Prayer Book or Canon, for placing the Table with moſt convenience; ſuch Liberty is not to be ſo underſtood, as if it were left to the diſcretion of the Pariſh, much leſs to the particular fancy of any humourous Perſon, but to the Judgment of the Ordinary, to whoſe Place and Function it doth properly belong to give direction in that Point, both for the Thing it ſelf, and for the time when, and how long, as he may find Cauſe. Upon which Conſideration, his Majeſty declares, that he well approved and confirmed the Act of the ſaid Ordinary, and did require it to be confirmed by the Dean of the Arches, if the Pariſhioners ſhould proceed in their Appeal. (a)

1633. 9 Car. I. Whether it was Policy to intereſt the King and Council in ſo ſmall an Affair of Church Diſcipline, that might have been ſufficiently determined in the Eccleſiaſtical Courts, without ſeeming to interrupt the Proceſs, or to preſcribe the Sentence of them, is not hard to judge. But this Application is very obvious, that the Governours of the Church ought to keep up their Juriſdiction to the utmoſt bounds of Law, and to maintain an even and regular practice of all decent Ceremonies, and orderly Reverence in Divine Service: Or otherwiſe, if they recede into Neglect and Indifference, this may breed firſt a Contempt and then a diſuſage in the People, and that by degrees may ſettle into ſuch a Cuſtom of Rudeneſs and Diſreſpect to ſacred things; that thoſe of their Succeſſors, who ſhall labour to reſtore the good old Ways, ſhall bear the odium of Change and Innovation. This was the Caſe of Archbiſhop Laud, and of thoſe Prelates who aſſiſted in the reforming many Corruptions crept in of later times.

Cure of Ordination. One other great Abuſe was the eaſy Ordination of young Divines, who often came into the Church with no affection to it, only to be domeſtick Chaplains in Malecontent Families, or to be forward Preachers in Popular Lectures, with no inclination to a regular Cure of Souls. To prevent this growing Miſchief, the Archbiſhop procured a wiſe Injunction from the King, given at Weſtminſter September 19. 1633. for the ſtrict Obſervation of ſuch Canons of the Church as concern thoſe that are to take Orders in their ſeveral times; more eſpecially of keeping that particular Canon which enjoins, that no Man be made a Prieſt or a Canonical Titles. Miniſter without a Title; and that nothing ſhall be reputed a Title to enable a Man for Orders, but that which is ſo by the ancient courſe of the Church and the Canon Law, ſo far forth as that Law is received in this Church of England. The Archbiſhop communicated this Royal Injunction to his Comprovincial Biſhops, and declared to them what ſhould be a Canonical Title:

"1. A Preſentation to ſome Eccleſiaſtical Preferment.

"2. A Certificate undoubted, that he is provided of ſome vacant Church.

"3. A grant of a Petty Canon's Place, or the like Office, in a Cathedral or Collegiate Church.

"4. A Fellowſhip, or Right of a Fellowſhip, in ſome College in Oxford or Cambridge.

"5. The being Conduct or Chaplain in ſome College in Oxford or Cambridge.

"6. The being Maſter of Arts of five Years ſtanding, living at his own Charge in either of the Univerſities.

"7. The Intention of the Biſhop that ordains, ſhortly to admit him to ſome Benefice or Curate's Place then void."

Theſe Rules were a very ſeaſonable Reſtraint from the promiſcuous and bold intruding into Orders, and for that very Reaſon were an Offence to many young Students, to ſome of the Nobility, and to ſeveral Corporations, becauſe no Lecture in a populous Place, and no Chaplainſhip to a great Family were any longer allowed to be a ſufficient Title.

1634. 10 Car. I. To carry on the Series of Civil Affairs for the Year 1634. 10 Car.

The narrow Seas were at this time infeſted with Pirates of all the neighbour Nations, and the Dutch Dominion of the Seas aſſerted. began to challenge ſuch a Right of Fiſhery, as would have robb'd the King of that Dominion, which had been alway claim'd and exerciſed by his Royal Anceſtors. To carry on this new Pretenſion, they encouraged their learned Grotius to aſſert their free Uſe of Shipping, in a Treatiſe ſtiled Mare Liberum; anſwer'd, and ſufficiently refuted, by our excellent Antiquary Mr. Selden, in his Mare Clauſum, of which the Materials had been formerly thrown together at the motion of King James, and were now put in Order, and within a Twelve Month publiſhed at the command of King Charles. But this Controverſie was not likely to be determined in Paper: Therefore to ſhew a juſt concern for the Honour and Safety of the Nation, the King on May 5. publiſhed two ſeveral Proclamations. 1634. 10 Car. I. In the firſt declaring his Royal Will and Pleaſure, "That no Mariner or Sea-faring Men, Shipwright or Ship-Carpenter, whatſoever, being his Majeſty's Subjects, ſhould without the King's Licenſe, or the Licenſe of the Admiral of England, enter, or attempt, or go about to enter into the Service of any foreign Prince or State, or be employed out of this Realm in any Sea-Service whatſoever, unleſs it were in the King's own Service, or of ſome of his Subjects. And if any at this time be in the Service of any Foreign Prince, that they forthwith return under a great Penalty." Proclamations in Marine Affairs. In the other of the ſame date, he declares his farther Pleaſure concerning "the Flags to be employed for his Royal Navy, as well as for the Ships of his Subjects of South and North-Britain; and conceiving it meet for the Honour of the King's own Ships in his Navy Royal, and of ſuch other Ships as are, or ſhall be employed, in the King's immediate Service, that the ſame be by their Flags diſtinguiſh'd from the Ships of any other of his Subjects; doth therefore prohibit and forbid, that none of the Subjects of any of his Nations and Kingdoms, ſhall from henceforth preſume to carry the Union Flag in the Main-top, or other part of any of his Ships, that is St. George's Croſs and St. Andrew's Croſs joined together; but that the ſame Union Flag be ſtill reſerved as an Ornament proper to the King's own Ships, and Ships in his immediate Service and Pay, and none others. And his Majeſty's farther Will and Pleaſure is, that all other Ships of his Subjects of England or South-Britain bearing Flags, ſhall from henceforth carry the Red Croſs, commonly called St. George's Croſs; and alſo that all the other Ships of the King's Subjects of Scotland, ſhould from henceforth carry the White Croſs, commonly called St. Andrew's Croſs."

But the great Difficulty was how to raiſe Money for fitting out a Navy ſufficient to guard the Seas; as Neceſſity ſeem'd now to require not only againſt the encroachments of the Dutch, but againſt the growing Inſolence of the Turkiſh and Algerine Pirates. Ship Money projected by Mr. Noy. By degrees a Project was fram'd out of ancient Records by Mr. Attorney General Noy, to impoſe upon every Sea-Port and Place of Merchandiſe the finding ſuch a number of Ships and Men, in proportion to their Wealth and Trade, or to compound with Commiſſioners at ſuch a rate. The firſt Writ for this Tax called Ship-Money was dated the 20th of October, beginning with the City of London in this Form:

First Writ for Ship-Money. Carolus Rex, &c. To the Mayor, Commonalty and Citizens of our City of London, and to the Sheriffs of the ſame City, and good Men in the ſaid City and in the Liberties, and Members of the ſame, Greeting;

And foraſmuch as we ſee them daily preparing all manner of Shipping further to moleſt our Merchants, and to grieve the Kingdom, unleſs Remedy be not ſooner apply'd, and their Endeavours be not more timely met withal; alſo the Dangers conſider'd, which on every ſide in theſe Times of War do hang over our Heads, that it behoveth us and our Subjects, to haſten the Defence of the Sea and Kingdom with all Expedition or Speed that we can: We willing, by the help of God, chiefly to provide for the Defence of the Kingdom, Safe-

This Writ was read in a Common Council held at Guild-Hall Dec. 2. where the Matter gave a general Diſguſt, and brought out this Reſolution upon it. This Court, after due and ſerious conſideration taken of the Premiſſes, conceiving that by their ancient Liberties, Charters, and Acts of Parliament, they ought to be freed and diſcharged of thoſe things which by the ſaid Writ are required by them to be done, doth order and agree, That the Draught of a Petition touching the ſaid Buſineſs, this Day read to this Court, ſhall be engroſſed, and with all dutiful reſpect for and on this City's behalf, humbly preſented to the King's moſt excellent Majeſty.

The Writ read in Common Council.

Which Petition was drawn up, and preſented in this Form:

Petition of the City of London againſt Ship-Money.

To the King's moſt excellent Majeſty.

The Humble Petition of your faithful Subjects, the Mayor and Commonalty, and Citizens of your City of London, moſt humbly ſhewing;

" THat where your Majeſty by Writ bearing " teſte 20. Octob. laſt, commanded your Petitioners, at their Charge, to provide ſeven Ships of " War furniſhed with Men, Victual, and all Warlike Proviſions, to be at Portſmouth by the firſt of " March next, and to continue from thence by the " ſpace of twenty ſix Weeks in your Majeſty's Service, upon the Defence of the Seas, and other " Cauſes in the ſaid Writ contained.

" Your Petitioners do in all ſubmiſſive Humbleneſs, and with acknowledgment of your ſacred " Majeſty's many Favours unto your ſaid City, inform your Majeſty that they conceive, that by " ancient Privileges, Grants, and Acts of Parliament (which they are ready humbly to ſhew " forth) they are exempt and are to be freed from " that Charge. And do moſt humbly pray, " That your Majeſty will be graciouſly pleaſed, " That the Petitioners, with your Princely Grace " and Favour, may enjoy the ſaid Privileges and " Exemptions, and be freed from providing of the " ſaid Ships and Proviſions.

And they ſhall pray, &c."

This Petition ſeem'd to have no other effect, but only to expreſs a Diſſent, when there muſt follow a Compliance. And the Example of Submiſſion, however extorted from the City of London, would have its ſure and certain influence upon all inferiour Places. The legal Right of this Aid was not yet diſputed in any Court of Juſtice, but it created a general Offence and Odium. The Nobility and Gentry had reaſon to be jealous of any Methods of raiſing Money out of Parliament: The Merchants and Traders had the Grievance of thinking the whole Burden caſt upon them: The Clergy could not at firſt obtain an Exemption from their conſiderable ſhare in it(a); and the Country Farmers thought it little leſs than ſeizing their Corn and Cattel to be ſent on Shipboard. The Murmurs were indeed ſo univerſal, and ſo artificially improv'd by the Enemies of the Court, that they look'd upon the Death of the Projector to be a Judgment ſent upon his Head. Mr. Attorney-General Noy departed this Life Auguſt 9. His Character is thus drawn by one that underſtood him well:

Character of Mr. Att. Gen. Noy. Lord Clarendon Hiſt. of the Rebellion B. 1. p. 57.

"Mr. Noy, upon the great Fame of his Ability and "Learning (and he was very Able and Learned) "was by great Induſtry and Importunity from Court, "perſwaded to accept that Place, for which all "other Men labour'd (being the beſt for Profit, that "Profeſſion is capable of) and ſo he ſuffered him- "ſelf to be made the King's Attorney General. "The Court made no Impreſſion upon his Manners, "upon his Mind it did: and though he wore about "him an affected Moroſity, which made him un- "apt to flatter other Men; yet even that Moroſity "and Pride rendred him the moſt liable to be groſsly "flatter'd himſelf that can be imagined. And by this "means the great Perſons, who ſteer'd the publick "Affairs, by admiring his Parts and extolling his "Judgment as behind his back, wrought upon him "by degrees for the eminency of the Service, to be "an Inſtrument in all their Deſigns; thinking that "he could not give a clearer Teſtimony, that his "Knowledge in the Law was greater than all other "Mens, than by making that Law which all other "Men believed not to be ſo. So he moulded, "framed and purſued the odious and crying Pro- "ject of Soap; and with his own Hand drew and "prepared the Writ for Ship-Money, both which "will be the laſting Monuments of his Fame. In "a Word, he was an unanſwerable Inſtance how "neceſſary a good Education and Knowledge of "Men is to make a Wiſe Man, at leaſt a Man fit "for Buſineſs."

Sir John Banks made Attorney General. Sir John Finch Ch. Juſtice of Common-Pleas.

On the Death of Mr. Noy, Sir John Banks was conſtituted Attorney-General by Patent, dated Sept. 27. 10 Car. And Sir Robert Heath being without Reaſon given, removed from the honour of Lord Chief Juſtice of the Common Pleas, Sir John Finch was advanced to that honour. Great were the Diſcourſes what the occaſion ſhould be of that ſudden Advancement. But four Days after the Writ for Ship-Money coming forth, it was conceived by common Diſcourſe, that he was to be Inſtrumental to advance that Buſineſs. His Concern in this invidious Matter is thus repreſented by the Lord Clarendon.

His Character.

"Sir John Finch had much that the other "(Mr Noy) wanted, but nothing that the other had. "Having led a free Life in a reſtrained Fortune, "and having ſet up upon the ſtock of a good Wit, "and natural Parts, without the ſuperſtructure of "much Knowledge in the Profeſſion by which he "was to grow; he was willing to uſe thoſe Wea- "pons in which he had moſt Skill, and ſo (being "not unſeen in the Affections of the Court, but not "having Reputation enough to guide or reform them) "he took up Ship-Money where Mr. Noy left it; and "being a Judge carried it up to that Pinnacle, from "whence he almoſt broke his own Neck; having "in his Journey thither, had too much Influence on "his Brethren, to induce them to concur in a Judg- "ment they had all cauſe to repent."

The King importun'd by the Queen to favour the Papiſts.

By the Intereſt of the Queen, the King was too often prevailed upon to grant Letters of Grace and Favour in behalf of the Papiſts, and to direct his Precepts to the Courts of Juſtice to ſtay all Proceedings againſt them, upon Indictment, Preſentment or Information for Recuſancy (b). And even after their Conviction, Letters of Protection were ſent by the Secretary of State to the Judges of the Court, that their Penalties and Fines ſhould not be eſtreated into the Exchequer. Many of the Privy Council were indeed ſuſpected to be inclining to Popery, and ſome of them died of the Romiſh Religion: as the Lord Cottington, and the Lord Treaſurer Weſton, which latter died at the end of this Year, March 13, and left the Character to be beſtow'd on him.

Character of the Lord Treaſurer Weſton.

"Sir Richard Weſton had been advanced to the "White-Staff, into the Office of Lord High Treaſurer "of England, ſome Months before the Death of the "Duke of Buckingham; and had in that ſhort time "ſo much diſobliged him, at leaſt diſappointed his "expectation, that many who were privy to the "Duke's moſt ſecret Purpoſes, did believe, that if "he had out-liv'd that Voyage in which he was "engaged, he would have remov'd him and made "another Treaſurer. —— He was a Gentleman of "very ancient Extraction by Father and Mother; "his Education had been very good amongſt Books "and Men. After ſome Years Study of the Law in "the Middle-Temple, he travelled into foreign Parts, "and at an Age fit to make Obſervations and Refle- "ctions; out of which, that which is commonly "call'd Experience, is conſtituted. After this he "betook himſelf to the Court, and liv'd there ſome "Years at that diſtance, and with that awe, as was "agreeable to the Modeſty of the Age, when Men were "ſome time before they were known; and well known "before they were preferr'd, or durſt pretend to it. "——When made Lord Treaſurer, he did indeed "appear on the ſudden wonderfully elated, and ſo "far threw off his old Affectation too to pleaſe ſome "very much, and to diſpleaſe none, in which Art "he had excell'd; that in few Months after the "Duke's Death, he found himſelf to ſucceed him "in the publick Diſpleaſure, and in the Malice of "his Enemies, without ſucceeding him in his Cre- "dit at Court, or in the Affection of any conſidera- "ble Dependents. And yet though he was not ſu- "periour to all other Men in the Affection, or rather "Reſignation of the King, ſo that he might diſpenſe "Favours and Diſfavours according to his own Ele- "ction; he had a full ſhare in his Maſter's Eſteem, "who look'd upon him as a wiſe and able Servant, "and worthy of the Truſt he repoſed in him.—— "The King's Revenue had been very looſely mana- "ged during the late Years, and might by Induſtry "and Order have been eaſily improved; and no Man "better underſtood what Method was neceſſary to- "wards that good Husbandry, than he.——No Man "had greater Ambition to make his Family great, or "ſtronger Deſigns to leave a great Fortune to it. "Yet his Expences were ſo prodigious, eſpecially in "his Houſe, that all the Ways he uſed for Supply, "which were all that occurr'd, could not ſerve his "Turn; inſomuch that he contracted ſo great Debts "(the anxiety whereof he pretended broke his Mind, "and reſtrained that Attention and Induſtry, which "was neceſſary for the due execution of his Office) "that the King was pleaſed twice to pay his Debts; "at leaſt towards it, to disburſe 40000 l. in ready "Money out of his Exchequer.——He was of an im- "perious Nature, and nothing wary in diſobliging "and provoking other Men, and had too much Cou- "rage in offending and incenſing them: But after ha- "ving offended and incenſed them, he was of ſo unhap- "py a Feminine Temper, that he was always in a "terrible Fright and Apprehenſion of them. —— "He quickly loſt the Character of a bold, ſtout and

Death of Sir Edw. Cook.

In September, this ſame Year, died the eminent and long Abdicated Judge Sir Edward Cook, who having made himſelf obnoxious to the Court, was the more Popular in the Country, and the more an Oracle in the Houſe of Commons. There is an account given by one of his Poſterity: "That upon his Death-bed Sir Francis Windebank, Laud's old Friend, by an Order of Council, came to Search for ſeditious and dangerous Papers; by Virtue whereof he took Sir Edward Cook's Comment upon Littleton, and the Hiſtory of his Life before it, written with his own Hand; his Comment upon Magna Charta &c. the Pleas of the Crown, and Juriſdiction of Courts, and his 11th and 12th Reports in Manuſcript, and (as this Writer thinks) 51 other Manuſcripts, with the Laſt Will of Sir Edward; wherein he had for ſeveral Years been making Proviſions for his younger Grand-Children. The Books and Papers were kept till ſeven Years after, when one of Sir Edward's Sons in 1641. mov'd the Houſe of Commons, that the Books and Papers taken by Sir Francis Windebank, might be delivered to Sir Robert Cook, Heir of Sir Edward; which the King was pleaſed to grant, and ſuch as could be found were delivered: but Sir Edward's Will was never heard of more to this Day." Seditions in Scotland.

There was a Spirit of Diſcontent in Scotland, that could yet ſhew it ſelf in no other way but in Murmurs and ſeditious Reports. By the impulſe of this Spirit there was now publiſhed a Pamphlet properly called The Libel, which reflected on the King's Proceedings in the laſt Parliament, charging his Majeſty with gaining of Votes by undue means, for obtaining an Act to paſs for wearing of Whites, &c. The Lords of the Council found out the Author to be one Hagg, who eſcaped and went beyond Seas; but on farther Enquiry, the Lord Balmerino was found to have the principal Hand in it, who was Apprehended, Try'd and Condemn'd, for Læſe Majeſty; but the King was graciouſly pleaſed to reſtore him to his Life, Honour and Eſtate. His Father, Secretary to King James, had fell under the like Sentence, and received the like Pardon: So that Gratitude ſhould have been as Hereditary to this Family, as were their Crimes and the Remiſſion of them.

State of Ireland.

Ireland under the active Government of the Lord Deputy Wentworth, had a Parliament called to conſider of Ways and Means to maintain the Army, and to diſcharge a Debt of eighty thouſand Pounds, which the Crown had there contracted. By the Courage and Prudence of the Lord Deputy, theſe ends were obtained, and three Subſidies were granted. And in a concurrent Convocation, there was a Canon paſs'd, Of the Agreement of the Church of England and Ireland in the Profeſſion of the ſame Chriſtian Faith, by receiving and approving the Book of Articles of Religion agreed upon by the Archbiſhops and Biſhops, and the whole Clergy in Convocation holden at London, Anno Dom. 1562. Which was charg'd as an Arminian Project upon the Deputy and his Chaplain Dr. Bramhall, when the Primate Uſher and other Calviniſts perceived, that the thus admitting the 39 Articles of the Church of England had repealed and excluded the Articles of the Church of Ireland, eſtabliſhed Anno 1615. wherein the Nine Articles of Lambeth determining the Predeſtinarian Doctrines, and many other Calvinian Rigours, were aſſerted and received. (b)

Foreign Affairs.

Abroad there was nothing ſo remarkable as the ſignal Victory obtained by the Imperialiſts againſt the Swedes, who had got Poſſeſſion of almoſt half Germany; and under the Command of Guſtavus Horn and Duke Bernard, attack'd the Imperial Army near Nordlingen on Sept. 6. commanded by the Duke of Lorrain and John de Wert, ſupported by the Cardinal Infanto, who had marched from Milan thro' Switzerland with the old Spaniſh and Italian Troops. The Victory was abſolute on the Imperial Side; the Swedes loſt all their Cannon and Baggage, and above 10000 Men; and of their two Generals Duke Bernard was Wounded, and the brave Guſtavus Horn was taken Priſoner. Our Engliſh Court had no great Concern for this Action, having an Alliance with both Parties, tho' no very right Underſtanding with either of them. The great Miniſter of Sweden, Chancellor Oxenſtiern, had this Year ſent his eldeſt Son as Ambaſſador into England; but either wanting proper Credentials from the Queen of Sweden, Regent in her Son's Minority, or making hard Propoſals for aſſiſting the Prince Elector againſt the Emperor, he was ſo much ſlighted and diſobliged, that he left England in diſcontent, and made ſuch a Report of his Uſage to his Father, that he and his Family ſo reſented this Affront as never to forgive the King.

State of Religion. 1634.

As to the Affairs of Religion in this Year 1634. Abp. Laud, who had ſet his Heart, where his Conſcience did direct him, upon an Uniformity of Worſhip through his whole Province, was offended at the Practice of the French and Dutch Churches here allow'd, and thought their ſeparate Service was an Example and Encouragement to our own Diſſenting Brethren. He was reſolv'd therefore, if poſſible, to bring them to a Conformity with the Church of England. And having for this Purpoſe the Advice and Aſſiſtance of the Privy-Council, in a Viſitation at the beginning of this Year, he tender'd theſe three Articles to the French Congregation in Canterbury, and to the two Dutch Congregations in Sandwich and Maidſtone, Apr. 14. 1634. 1. What Liturgy do you uſe? or whether you have not the Dutch or French Liturgy in uſe? 2. Of how many Deſcents, for the moſt part, they were born Subjects? 3. Whether ſuch as were born Subjects would conform to the Church of England? They look'd upon themſelves as tolerated and exempted from ordinary Juriſdiction, and accordingly put in their Pleas of Right, and with Archbiſh. Laud labours to bring the French & Dutch Proteſtants to Uniformity.

(a) In the MSS. Collections left by Archbiſhop Teniſon, there is an Original Paper, intituled, A Note of ſuch Things as were found in a Trunk of Sir Edward Coke, taken from Pepys his Servant, brought to Baggſhot by his Majeſty's Commandment, to be there broken up by his Majeſty. 9th September, 1634.

a Salvo

1634. 10 Car. I.

a Salvo to it, by conſent of their ſeveral Churches, they prepared theſe Anſwers to be deliver'd on the 5th of May: 1. "That they had that Liturgy "which all the Churches of the French Tongue "(both in France, and in the United Provinces of "the States) have had ſince the bleſſed Reformati- "on, and which their Churches refuged here have "had this ſixty or ſeventy Years, or more: That "the Engliſh Liturgy was Tranſlated into French, "but that they uſed it not; and, that they know "not whether it be Tranſlated into Dutch or not. "2. That the greateſt part of the Heads of the Fa- "milies were not born here, but about a third part, "becauſe that the greateſt part of the old ones were "Strangers born, and many others are newly come "over within a few Years. 3. They deſire to be "excuſed from giving any Anſwer to the third Ar- "ticle, becauſe of the Maintenance of their Mini- "ſtry and Relief of their Poor, which would be "obſtructed by any Diviſion of their Members."

They put in a Declinator.

But before theſe Anſwers were put in, they conſulted the Cœtus of the French and Dutch Churches in London; where, by the Influence no doubt of ſome of our own Nonconformiſts, they adviſ'd their Brethren to ſuppreſs thoſe Anſwers, and to preſent their Declinator, or a Plea of Privileges and Challenge of Exemption granted them by King Edw. 6. and confirm'd by ſeveral Acts of Council in the following Reigns. (a)

Abp. ſends Injunctions.

This incenſed the Abp. and confirm'd him in the Reſolution of taking away their Liberty of Separation. And therefore he ſent down theſe Injunctions to Canterbury, deliver'd Dec. 19. with time of Conformity allow'd to March 1.

"Firſt, That all the Natives of the Dutch and "Walloon Congregations in his Grace's Dioceſs, "ſhould repair to their ſeveral Pariſh Churches of "thoſe ſeveral Pariſhes where they inhabited, to "hear Divine Service and Sermons, and perform all "Duties and Payments required in that behalf.

"Second, That the Miniſters and all other of the "Dutch and Walloon Congregations, which were not "Natives, and born Subjects to the King's Majeſty, "that ſhould come over to them, might have and "uſe their own Diſcipline, as formerly they have "done; yet it was thought fit that the Engliſh Li- "turgy ſhould be Tranſlated into French and Dutch "for the better fitting their Children to the Engliſh "Government."

They would not obey.

Theſe Injunctions might have been thought the more reaſonable, becauſe the laſt (which was indeed qualified by the King in Council) did not intrench upon their Liberty as Foreigners, but claim'd their Obedience only as native Subjects; and rather provided for a Conformity of the Children, than of the preſent Parents. But the innate Ambition of keeping themſelves up as a diſtinct Tribe of Strangers, and the Honour of not letting their Families recede from the Example of their Heads and Governours; and above all, the Countenance and Inſtigation given to them by the Puritan Faction, and even by many ſober Church-men who were jealous of the Zeal of Archbiſhop Laud, made them reject and oppoſe theſe Injunctions, in ſeveral Remonſtrances and Petitions. To all which the Archbiſhop anſwer'd to this effect: That his Majeſty was reſolved the Injunctions ſhould be obey'd by all the Natives after the firſt Deſcent, who might continue in their former ways; but all of the ſecond Deſcent, born here in England, ſhould reſort to their ſeveral Pariſh Churches. He doubted not but they themſelves, or their Poſterity, would have cauſe to thank both the State and the Church for this care taken of them. But if they refuſed, he muſt then proceed againſt the Natives according to the Laws and Canons Eccleſiaſtical.

1634. 10 Car. I.

This good Endeavour of the Archbiſhop was afterward, in the beginning of his Troubles, ſeverely charg'd upon him: and at his Trial it made up a twelfth original Article againſt him, in theſe Words:

This made an Article againſt him.

He hath traiterouſly endeavoured to cauſe Diviſion and Diſcord between the Church of England, and other Reformed Churches; and to that end hath ſuppreſſed and abrogated the Privileges and Immunities which have been by his Majeſty, and his Royal Anceſtors, granted to the French and Dutch Churches in this Kingdom: and divers other ways hath expreſſed his Malice and Diſaffection to thoſe Churches.

His own Vindication.

And yet in the Pleadings againſt him upon that 12th Article, "What is the Reaſon (ſays the Abp.) "why here's nothing urg'd againſt me about abro- "gating the Immunities and Privileges of the French "and Dutch Churches, which fill the Body of this "Article? Why, I conceive, there may be two "Reaſons of it: One, becauſe there was taken by "Mr. Pryme, among other Papers for my Defence, "a Letter under Queen Elizabeth's own hand, to "the Lord Pawlet Marqueſs of Wincheſter, then Lord "Treaſurer, in which ſhe expreſſes her Willingneſs "that thoſe Strangers diſtreſſed in and for point of "Conſcience, ſhould have Succour and free Enter- "tainment, but ſhould conform themſelves to the "Engliſh Liturgy, and have that tranſlated into their "own Language: And they knew I would call to "have this Letter produced, proved, and read: "And had this Letter been ſtood unto, they had "never been able to do the Church of England half "the Harm they have ſince done. The Other was, "becauſe they found by their own Search againſt "me, that all which I did concerning thoſe Churches "was with this Moderation, that All thoſe of "their ſeveral Congregations in London, Canterbury, "Sandwich, Norwich, or elſewhere, which were of "the ſecond Deſcent, and born in England, ſhould "repair to their ſeveral Pariſh Churches, and con- "form themſelves to the Doctrine, Diſcipline, and "Liturgy of the Church of England, and not live "continually in an open Separation, as if they were "an Iſrael in Egypt, to the great Diſtraction of the "Natives of this Kingdom, and the aſſiſting of that "Schiſm which is now broke forth. And as this "was with great Moderation, ſo was it with the "joint Approbation of his Majeſty and the Lords "of his Council, upon the Reaſons openly given "and debated. And all this before I proceeded to "do any thing: as appears apud Acta."

The Abp. reforming Engliſh Factories.

The Archbiſhop was farther concern'd in ſettling the regular Worſhip of the Church of England in our Factories beyond the Seas; for which he had obtained an Order from the Council Table, dated Octob. 1. 1633. enjoining a ſtrict Obſervation of the Engliſh Liturgy and Rites and Ceremonies. Which not being much regarded by the Merchants, the Archbiſhop now preſented to the Council ſome Propoſitions concerning Engliſh Preachers employ'd in Foreign Parts. And wrote a Letter to the Factory at Delf, dated June 17. 1634. letting them know, "That it was "his Majeſty's expreſs Command, that both they "and all Merchants reſiding in thoſe Parts beyond "the Seas, ſhould conform themſelves to the Do- "ctrine, Diſcipline and Worſhip ſettled in the "Church of England."

The Defalcations of the legal Proviſion made for the Parochial Clergy of London, was found to be a cauſe of unable and unworthy Miniſters in that City, and the greater Encouragement to Lecturers and Preachers depending on the People. Wherefore, in (a) See, A Relation of the Troubles of the Foreign Churches in Kent. 4to. p. 6.

The great Objection was, that while Foreign Proteſtants were ſo hardly dealt with, the Papiſts had their open Houſes and Chapels in the midſt of London. The Plot diſcover'd by Habernfeld in 1640. made it known, that Captain Read, a Secular Jeſuit, had a Houſe in Long-Acre, with a publick Chapel, and daily Maſſes. And that the Lord Gage, a Jeſuit Prieſt, had a Palace in Queen-ſtreet, within which was a Monaſtery, wherein forty Nuns were maintained. And that the Secular Jeſuits had bought that whole Street, to reduce it into a Quadrangle, where a Jeſuitical College was tacitly built, in hopes it might be openly finiſh'd in ſhort time. See Rome's Maſter-Piece, &c.

May,

1634. 10 Car. I.

Petition of the London Clergy for better Maintenance.

May 1634. the Parſons and Vicars in the City of London preſented a Petition to his Majeſty, humbly ſhewing, "That the Benefices in London were a hundred Years ſince very great: That a Decree now in force provided 2 s. 9 d. to be paid upon every Pound Rent without fraud: That notwithſtanding they were now very poor and mean, many of them not worth 40 l. per Ann. That the Petitioners have not independent Maintenance, and for want thereof are daily thruſt upon dangerous and great Inconveniences: That they are not able to diſcover the true Value of the Rents, becauſe the Landlords make double Leaſes or Proviſo's of Colluſion. And the Lord Mayor being their ordinary Judge, they have no Ability or Leiſure to proſecute and appeal to the Lord Keeper: And therefore beg, that it may pleaſe the great Patron of the Church, his Royal Majeſty, to take into his Princely Conſideration theſe Preſſures and Grievances of his poor Clergy of London for Redreſs thereof."

Referr'd to Commiſſioners.

This Petition was by the King referr'd to the Lord Archbiſhop of Canterbury, the Lord Keeper, the Earl Marſhal, the Biſhop of London, the Lord Cottington, Secretary Windebank, and the Lord Chief Juſtice Richardſon, or any five or three of them, whereof the Archbiſhop to be one. While they were endeavouring to ſettle the diſputed Tithes, ſeveral Citizens petition'd the King and Council againſt their manner of Proceeding, which came to ſeveral Hearings, November the 5th, 16th, and 23d: and being again taken into Conſideration December the 15th and January the 18th, it was agreed between the Clergy and City mutually to ſubmit the ſaid Differences to be arbitrated and ſettled by his Majeſty. But even the King was afraid to make any abſolute Deciſion againſt the Inclinations of the People.

This objected to Abp. Laud.

On the 4th Day of the Archbiſhop's Trial, The buſineſs of the Tithe in London (ſays he) was raiſed up in Judgment againſt me —— I had been much to blame, having been Biſhop of London, ſhould I have had other Thoughts: For their Caſe is very hard, all their Offerings being ſhrunk away into nothing but a poor Eaſter-Book. The Miniſters of London had often petitioned about ſome Relief long before my time; and I did then, and do ſtill think it moſt juſt they ſhould have it: for they are now under the Task-Maſters of Egypt; the Tale of Brick muſt be made, they muſt Preach twice a Sunday, get Straw where they can: And yet I never thought of any thing contrary to Law, had all been done which I deſired; for that was no more, than that the Citizens would voluntarily yield to ſome reaſonable Addition, where Right and Need appeared: And this I am ſure nor did nor could croſs with the Act of Parliament concerning the Tithes of London.

Metropolit. Viſitation.

The Archbiſhop held a Metropolitical Viſitation through his whole Province by his Vicar-General Sir Nathaniel Brent: And upon Articles of Enquiry, a great many Defects and Abuſes were reform'd, as to the Fabrick of Churches and the Ornaments of them, and the decent Habit of the Clergy, who in the Country parts had almoſt loſt that apparent diſtinction of their Order. Whence we find Sir Nathaniel Brent giving this Admonition to the Clergy of the Dioceſs of Lincoln, on Aug. 11. 1634. that All who wanted Canonical Cloaks, commonly called Prieſts Cloaks, ſhould provide themſelves before Allhallowtide next, on pain of Eccleſiaſtical Cenſures.

But the Zeal and publick Spirit of Archbiſhop Laud will beſt appear from the annual Accounts of his Province ſent to the King. In that of 1633. he certifies his Majeſty, "That, according to his Royal Commands, he does here, upon the ſecond of Jan. 1633. Comput. Anglic. preſent his Account of both the Dioceſs and Province of Canterbury concerning all thoſe Church Affairs which were contained within his Majeſty's moſt gracious Declaration and Inſtructions. And firſt, for his own Dioceſs of Canterbury, he heard of many things amiſs; but as yet his time had been ſo ſhort, that he had no certain Knowledge of any thing fit to certifie.

Canter.

1634. 10 Car. I.

London.

"For the Biſhoprick of London, the now Biſhop had not received Complaint againſt any of his Clergy ſince his coming to that See, which was ſince Michaelmas laſt. For the former part of the Year he was himſelf Biſhop, and had then left Mr. Nathaniel Ward under the Cenſure of Excommunication for refuſing to ſubſcribe to the Articles; had convented Mr. John Beadle Rector of Barnſton in Eſſex, for omitting ſome parts of Divine Service, and had diſmiſs'd him with Canonical Admonition only; and that he found Mr. John Davenport Vicar of St. Stephen Coleman-ſtreet (whom he had uſed with all Moderation) had now reſigned his Vicarage, and declared his Judgment againſt Conformity.

Bath and Wells.

"For Bath and Wells, he found the Biſhop had in his late Viſitation taken a great deal of pains to ſee all his Majeſty's Inſtructions obſerved: and particularly had put down divers Lecturers in Market Towns which were beneficed Men in other Biſhops Dioceſſes; and had ſent up a Liſt of Romiſh Recuſants.

Rocheſter.

"In the Dioceſs of Rocheſter, the Town of Mawling, and that whole Deanry, were very much out of order; but the Archdeacon, by my Lord the Biſhop's Command, had ſettled them; that the Biſhop complained that the Cathedral Church ſuffer'd much for want of Glaſs in the Windows, and the Church-yard lay very undecently, and the Gates down; and that he had no Power to remedy theſe things, becauſe the Dean and Chapter refuſed to be viſited by him, upon pretence that the Statutes were not confirmed under the Broad Seal. [To which the King wrote this Poſtill in the Margin] This muſt be remedied one way or other, concerning which I expect a particular Account of you.

Peterborough.

"Concerning Peterborough Dioceſs, whereas his Majeſty's Inſtructions required that Lecturers ſhould turn their Afternoon Sermons into Catechiſing; ſome Parſons and Vicars made a queſtion, whether they were bound to that Order, becauſe Lecturers only are named.

Coventry and Lichfield.

"As to Coventry and Lichfield, the Biſhop complain'd that the Peculiars of his Dioceſs (wherein he had no Power) were much out of Order: that he had ſuppreſſed a ſeditious Lecture at Repon, and divers monthly Lectures, with a Faſt and a Moderator; as alſo the Running Lecture, ſo called, becauſe the Lecturer went from Village to Village; ordain'd, as they ſaid, to illuminate the dark Corners of that Dioceſs. [To which the King noted in the Margin] If there be dark Corners in this Dioceſs, it were fit a true Light ſhould illuminate it, and not this that is falſe and uncertain.

S. David's.

"My Lord of St. David's was now reſident in his Dioceſs, and would take care to whom he gave holy Orders; had ſuſpended a Lecturer for his Inconformity, and found but few Romiſh Recuſants.

S. Aſaph.

"In St. Aſaph all was exceeding well, ſave only that the Number and Boldneſs of ſome Romiſh Recuſants increaſed much in many Places; and was encouraged by the ſuperſtitious and frequent concourſe of that Party to Holy Well, long complain'd of without remedy.

Landaff.

"The Biſhop of Landaff had certified, that he had not one refractory Nonconformiſt, or Schiſmatical Miniſter, within his Dioceſs; but two Lecturers, and they both licenſed Preachers.

Lincoln.

"The Biſhop of Lincoln had ſignified, that the Company of Mercers in London, truſted with the Gift of one Mr. Fiſhburn, had ſet up a Lecturer in Huntingdon, to be retained or removed, without any relation to Biſhop or Archbiſhop. His moſt humble Suit to his Majeſty is, that no Lay-man whatſoever, and leaſt of all Companies or Corporations, ſhould have power to put in or put

1634. 10 Car. I. " put out any Lecturer, or other Miniſter. [To which his Majeſty remark'd in the Margin] Certainly I cannot hold fit, that any Lay Perſon or Corporation whatſoever ſhould have the Power theſe Men take to themſelves: For I will have no Prieſt have any neceſſity of a Lay Dependency. Wherefore I command you to ſhew me the way to overthrow this, and to hinder the performance in time to all ſuch Intentions.

" That all the Biſhops above-mention'd did agree, that all other Things in his ſacred Majeſty's Inſtructions contained, were carefully obſerv'd; and particularly that of avoiding factious meddling with the prohibited Queſtions.

" From the reſt of the Biſhops he had not yet receiv'd any Certificate. And ſo he humbly ſubmitted this his Certificate ſubſcrib'd W. CANT.

Annual Account of the Prov. of Canterb. 1634. The ſecond yearly Account of his Province was for 1634. wherein he firſt repreſents to his Majeſty,

" That he had this Year, partly by his Vicar-General, and partly by the Dean of the Arches, viſited ſeven Dioceſſes, beginning at his own Metropolitical Church of Canterbury. That he found in his own Dioceſs, (eſpecially about Aſhford ſide) divers profeſſed Separatiſts, with whom he ſhould take Order. That he conceived the Dutch Churches in Canterbury and Sandwich were great Nurſeries of Inconformity, of which he had already complained to his Majeſty and the Council-board, and had humbly deſired, that they, both of the French, Italian, and Dutch Congregations, which were born Subjects, might not be ſuffer'd any longer to live in ſuch a Separation both from Church and State." [The King remark'd in the Margin] Put me in mind of this at ſome convenient time, when I am at Council, and I ſhall redreſs it.

" For Rocheſter, he found no eminent thing amiſs, but the Biſhop himſelf fell into a Palſie.

" For Saliſbury, he found the Biſhop had taken a great deal of care about his Majeſty's Inſtructions, and had cauſed Copies of them to be ſent to moſt of the Miniſters. The greateſt part of Wiltſhire was overgrown with the Humours of thoſe Men who do not conform: That the Cathedral of Saliſbury was much peſter'd with Seats, which he had given Order to remove, and hoped his Majeſty would approve, as well as he did at York and Durham, and add the Royal Power, if his own be not ſufficient.

" For Briſtol, he found in his Viſitation that the Biſhop had taken very good Pains and Care. And ſome Clergy-men in Dorſetſhire, who gave great Cauſe of Suſpicion, had quitted themſelves in a better manner than was expected: tho' all was not right in thoſe Parts.

" Concerning Bath and Wells, all his Majeſty's Inſtructions were punctually obſerved, and the Lectures read, not by any particular factious Perſons, but by a Company of learned neighbouring Miniſters, every way conformable to the Church.

" For Exeter, he muſt do my Lord Biſhop this Right, that for his Majeſty's Inſtructions, they had been carefully obſerved: but a great Diviſion was between Dean and Chapter; and another great Difference between the Dean and Chapter and the City, about burial within the Church-yard of the Cathedral.

" As for Lincoln, that greateſt Dioceſs in the Kingdom, had been viſited this Year. And his Viſitors found Bedfordſhire, for the bigneſs, moſt tainted of any part of the Dioceſs. Many Anabaptiſts were in Lincoln it ſelf, their Leader one Johnſon a Baker. In divers parts the Clergy and Laity exceſſively given to Drunkenneſs. The Town of Boſton, a great Nurſery of Inconformity, was, ſince the calling ſome of the Magiſtrates into the High Commiſſion, become very orderly; but the Town of Louth ſomewhat to blame. At Kenſworth in Hertfordſhire, and ſome other Places, many gadded from their own Churches by Troops after other Miniſters. The Cathedral of the Dioceſs was not well ordered either for Reparation or Ornaments. For Eaton College, the Provoſt Sir Hen. Wotton, had carried himſelf very worthily. 1634. 10 Car. I.

" Thus far concerning the Dioceſſes which he had viſited this Year; in all which he found one great Complaint, and very fit to be redreſſed. The general Grievance of the poor Vicars, that their Stipends are ſcarce able to feed and cloath them; and which was worſe, the Vicars in great Market-Towns, where the People are very many, were for the moſt part worſt provided for. He humbly thanks his Majeſty ſome Good had of late been done for them; and he ſhould purſue all juſt and fair ways to give them relief, humbly beſeeching his Majeſty's gracious Aſſiſtance.

" For Wincheſter, he found his Majeſty's Inſtructions well obſerved, ſave only that in two Pariſhes the Biſhop found ſome Defect about Catechizing in the Afternoon, which ſhould be remedied. There were divers obſtinate Recuſants in thoſe Parts.

" The Biſhop of London had viſited his Dioceſs this Year; the City and Middleſex in Perſon, the reſt by his Chancellour. Divers Complaints about Inconformity to the Church Diſcipline; but the Proofs came home only againſt four, three Curates and a Vicar: The Vicar and two Curates had ſubmitted, the third was ſuſpended.

" For Norwich, the Biſhop had certified that he had put down ſome Lectures, where factious Men performed them; had heard complaint of Mr. Ward of Ipſwich, for ſome Words utter'd in Sermons, for which he was now called into the High-Commiſſion; that he had ſuſpended one Enoch Grey for unſound Doctrine; and that he had made two wandring Preachers run out of his Dioceſs.

" The Biſhop of Ely had certified, that all the Royal Injunctions for the good of the Church had been carefully obſerved, and that he would have a watchful Eye concerning all Lecturers.

" For St. David's, the Biſhop was now gone and ſettled in his Dioceſs, whence he had not been abſent two Months theſe two Years; that his Lordſhip complained grievouſly (and not without cauſe) that divers Impropriators in thoſe Parts have either pulled down the Chancels, or ſuffered them to fall, or left them ſo open and cold, that the People in thoſe Mountainous parts muſt endure a great deal of hardſhip.

" The Biſhop of St. Aſaph profeſſed he had little to return, they were not troubled with Inconformity; but heartily wiſhes, they might be as well acquitted from Superſtition and Profaneneſs.

" The Biſhop of Landaff had certified, that this laſt Year he viſited in Perſon, and found William Erbury, Vicar of St. Mary's in Cardiff, and Walter Cradock his Curate, very Schiſmatical Preachers: that he hath given the Vicar a Judicial Admonition, and had ſuſpended the Curate, and taken away his Licenſe to ſerve the Cure.

" The Biſhop of Gloceſter certified, that he is forced to Ordain ſome very mean Miniſters in his Dioceſs to ſupply Cures as mean. He hath put down ſome Lecturers, and ſet up other ſome, which he conceives he did without offence, being done upon different occaſions." [The King noted in the Margin,] I muſt be ſatisfied that the Occaſions were very neceſſary, otherwiſe he ſhall anſwer it.

Hereford, the Biſhoprick was void.

" Oxford, the Biſhop was very careful, had, according to his promiſe made unto his Majeſty, built a Houſe at Cuddeſden, held in Commendam; which Houſe he deſired might be annexed to the See of Oxford.

" My Lord of Chicheſter had certified All very well in his Dioceſs; ſave only in the Eaſt Part, ſome Puritan Juſtices of the Peace had awed ſome of the Clergy into like Opinions with themſelves.

" The Biſhop of Peterborough had viſited his Dioceſs this laſt Year; and begun ſo well to look to " all

“ all good Orders, that he hoped things would go “ very well there.

“ That he had received no Account from the Bps. “ of Worceſter, Coventry and Lichfield, and Bangor.”

So I humbly ſubmit my Certificate.

The good Application of Ship Money.

By the Fund of Ship-money (which was not mingled with the other Treaſure or Accounts in the Exchequer, but was kept as a ſeparate Bank for the Navy) the King was enabled to ſet out a Fleet of Forty Men of War under the Command of the Earl of Lindſey Admiral, and twenty Sail more under the Earl of Eſſex Vice-Admiral, for ſecuring of the Narrow Seas, and aſſerting the Dominion of them. And indeed the conſiderable Increaſe of the French Navy, and their late building ſeveral greater Ships, and threatning the Sea Ports in Flanders, together with the Progreſs which the Hollanders had now made in their Attempts of Fiſhing upon our Coaſts, and the great Improvements of Piracy made by the Algerines and other Rovers, who now infeſted the very Chanel; were a great Argument for the Neceſſity of ſetting out a Fleet, which under preſent Circumſtances could not be done without an extraordinary Aid. To make this Aid more ample and more continual, it was found expedient to enlarge the Extent of it; and whereas in the former Year the Writs were directed to Maritime Places only, it was now reſolv'd to bring in all Counties of the Kingdom to ſome proportionable ſhare. And accordingly Inſtructions and Directions were prepared by the Lords of the Council, to be ſent with the Writs to the reſpective Sheriffs, to inform them, “ That his Majeſty, for “ his own Honour, and the ancient Renown of the “ Nation, and the common Safety of his People, “ had iſſued the like Writs to all Counties, Cities, “ and Towns through the whole Kingdom; that “ for due Execution hereof, they ſhould firſt ſettle “ the general Aſſeſſment on the whole County, and “ then ſubdivide the particular Charge on each Hundred and Pariſh: Not to aſſeſs poor Cottages; “ nor Rent of Houſes, but with regard to the Ability of the Inhabitants; to take Diſtreſſes upon “ ſuch as refuſe to pay; to collect with ſpeed, and “ pay the Money to the Treaſurer of the Navy.”

The Demand of Ship-Money enlarg'd.

Lord Keeper's Charge for Ship-Money.

To promote the Execution of theſe Writs, Thomas Lord Coventry, Lord Keeper, deliver'd a Charge in his Majeſty's Name to all the Judges of England, in the Star-Chamber, June 17. concluding with this Affair of the Navy; “ That his Majeſty, out of his “ great Wiſdom, had found it expedient to ſet a “ Fleet to Sea, and reſolv'd to add a greater Strength, “ and muſt therefore ſend out new Writs for the “ Preparation of a greater Fleet next Year, not only to the Maritime Towns, but to all the Kingdom “ beſides. That therefore his Majeſty did require “ and command them, that in their Charges at the “ Aſſizes, and in all other Places, they ſhould take “ an occaſion to let the People know how careful “ and zealous his Majeſty was to preſerve his own “ Honour, this Kingdom, and the Dominion of the “ Sea, and to ſecure both Sea and Land by a powerful Fleet, that Foreign Nations might ſee, that “ England is both able and ready to keep it ſelf and “ all its Rights; and to let them know farther, how “ juſt it was, that his Majeſty ſhould require this “ for their Defence, and with what Chearfulneſs “ they ought and were bound in Duty to contribute unto it.”

Ship-Money grows more odious.

Theſe Charges at the County Aſſizes (however proper and juſt to promulge Orders before the Execution of them) did but alarm the Country, and make 'em feel the Burden before it touch'd em. What was before thought a particular Proviſion to be made by particular Ports for their own immediate Safety, was now found to be intended for a National Tax, and therefore the more odious for want of an Authority of Parliament. And though the Load it ſelf was not heavy, for the yearly Income was at height computed to be not above 236000 l. which was not fully 20000 l. a Month through the whole Kingdom; yet the making it a univerſal Aid, and the aſſeſſing and collecting it in the Parliamentary Methods, gave it much the greater Air of Grievance and Oppreſſion. This is certain, that if Ship-Money had been rais'd with Appearance of voluntary Contribution (as the Royal Loan was) and not by rated Impoſition, it had made leſs Noiſe, and might have produced as high Effects: Or if while turn'd into a neceſſary Aid, it had been in good time communicated to a Parliament, while the King and his Friends might have had Intereſt to juſtifie the paſt Neceſſity, and to authorize the Continuance or Intermiſſion by the Legiſlative Power; then the People of England would have been eaſie and quiet, who will never, by any means, endure the extorting of Taxes from them without their own Conſent in Parliament.

More Projects for Money.

But beſides this extraordinary Aid of Ship-Money, which was not ſufficient for the meer Occaſions of the Navy; the King's Neceſſities urg'd him to many other Projects of ſupporting and improving his Revenues: as, By erecting an Office for giving Licence by the King, or by ſix of the Privy Council, to any Subject departing out of the King's Dominions, by Proclamation July 21. And by granting to Robert Leſley, Eſq; the Profits of the Office erected for receiving the Forfeitures incurred by profane Swearers and Curſers, by Proclamation July 26. And by fixing a Letter Office for England and Scotland, and appointing Thomas Witherings Eſq; to be Poſt-Maſter, and commanding that no Letters ſhould be otherwiſe carried, except by common known Carriers, or by a particular Meſſenger, as by Proclamation July 1. And by renewing a Commiſſion to ſome Lords and others, to Sell, Grant, and Confirm to the People their defective Eſtates, Poſſeſſions and Titles, as by Proclamation Aug. 24. And by inflicting Penalties on exceſſive Carriages that were to the Deſtruction of the Highways, and on Hackney-Coaches diſturbing the Streets of the City, and by other Ways and Means, which however lawful, and how much ſoever for the Benefit of the Subject as well as of the Prince, yet all theſe, at this juncture, were look'd on with a jealous Eye, as Inventions how to maintain the King without a Parliament.

Yet our Dangers from abroad were very imminent, and might well juſtifie ſome extraordinary Proviſions. For, the Hollanders had made a League with the French againſt the Spaniards, by which a French Army was to invade Flanders by Land, and to attempt Dunkirk, while a Dutch Fleet were to attend, and aſſiſt at Sea. And poſſibly the Deſign had been effected, if the Terror of our Engliſh Navy had not quickly perſwaded the Dutch to draw off their Ships, and return home.

Prince Elector comes into England.

In November, Charles Prince Elector came over to ſollicit his Royal Uncle to promote his Reſtoration; and in the Month after came his younger Brother Prince Rupert, who were received with great Civilities; and their Cauſe ſeem'd to look ſomewhat better by the Concluſion of a Peace at Prague, whereby at leaſt the Proteſtants were reſtor'd to their Liberties and Profeſſion, as ſettled in the Year 1627.

Birth of the Princeſs Elizabeth.

In Decem. the Queen was brought to Bed of a 2d Daughter, named Elizabeth, to congratulate this new Acceſſion of Happineſs to the Court, the States of Holland ſent hither a ſolemn Ambaſſy, with a noble Preſent of Amber-greaſe, China-Baſons, a Clock, the Workmanſhip of Rudolphus the Emperor, and ſome exquiſite Pieces of Painting.

State of Religion. 1635.

As to Church Affairs; A Liturgy and Book of Canons for the Church of Scotland, by the Advice of Biſhop Laud, had been committed to ſome Biſhops of Scotland, who ſent a Letter to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, dated April 2. 1635. brought hither by the Biſhop of Roſs, wherein they acquainted his Grace, that they all wiſh a full Conformity in the Churches, but his Grace knew that this muſt be the Work of Time.

1635. 11 Car. I. They had made a farther Progreſs than could have been expected, and hoped ſtill to go farther, if it ſhould pleaſe God to continue his Grace in Health and Life. The Liturgy was not yet finiſh'd, but the Book of Canons was by the King referred to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury and Biſhop of London, and after their Approbation, it was confirmed by Royal Authority, under the Great Seal 23d of May, and ſent back to be enforced in the nature of Royal Injunctions. But the Scotch quarrel'd with them, and raiſed ſo many Objections againſt them, that they could never grow into a ſettled Uſe and Practice. Farther Advice was ſent in a Letter of Archbiſhop Laud to the Abp. of St. Andrew's, dated November 10. 1635. That for all the Buſineſs of that Church in future, they were immutably to hold this Rule, that they were privately to acquaint the Earl of Traquair with every Matter, before it was propoſed in Publick; and that the Earl had aſſured the King in his Preſence, that he will ſtrictly obſerve a good Correſpondence with them, and faithfully do all good Offices for the Church, according to the Commands he ſhould receive from the King; which mutual Relation between the Earl of Traquair and them was to be kept very ſecret. And in another Letter he adviſes the ſaid Archbiſhop of St. Andrew's, that the King was much diſpleaſed with the Biſhop of Aberdeen, for allowing a publick Faſt thro' his Dioceſs to be kept upon the Lord's-Day; expreſſing his Majeſty's Will, that no Biſhops ſhould there preſume to command or ſuffer any Faſt to be kept on that Day, or on any other, without the ſpecial Leave and Command of the King; and that if the Canons were not already printed, they ſhould make a Canon purpoſely againſt this unworthy Cuſtom. Which Advices and Orders, however juſt and ſeaſonable, raiſed ſome uneaſie Jealouſies, even among the Scotch Biſhops themſelves, as if they interfer'd with the Liberty of their National Church; and were more eſpecially offenſive to the People, who hated to receive Eccleſiaſtical Diſcipline from England, and eſpecially from the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, who ſeemed to them by this means to affect a Britiſh Primacy.

Scotch Liturgy.

Injunctions to the Church of Winchester.

The Archbiſhop might have expected leſs Envy within his own Province, where he carried on his Metropolitical Viſitation with great Zeal for Uniformity: In which, by his Vicar General, Sir Nathaniel Brent, he gave theſe Injunctions June 19. to the Cathedral Church of Wincheſter, "That the Dean "and Chapter ſhould provide four Copes; ſhould "bow at their coming in and going out of the "Quire; ſhould read the Epiſtles and Goſpels at "the Altar; and in greater Feſtivals ſhould read the "Divine Service by turns in their own Perſons"(a)." 1635. 11 Car. I. And the like Orders were preſcribed to other Cathedrals, which however fit and decent in themſelves, and now more eſpecially ſeaſonable, becauſe of the Diſorders and various Abuſes crept in by the connivance of late Governours: Yet by a great part of the Laity and Clergy not uſed to any ſtanding Rules, they were look'd on as Innovations and perfect Impoſitions.

Preaching againſt Innovations.

And unleſs the Regulation could be evenly carried on, and perfectly eſtabliſh'd, it would be ſure to give advantage to the Puritans, who waited for Complaints of Innovation: And many of the Calviniſtical Divines ſhewed a high Spirit of Impatience. In November Mr. Samuel Ward, a Miniſter in Ipſwich, preach'd againſt Bowing at the Name of Jeſus, and againſt the King's Book of Sports, and ſaid, The Church of England was ready to ring Changes in Religion, and the Goſpel ſtood on Tiptoe, as ready to be gone. For this he was Cenſured in the High Commiſſion, Suſpended, and enjoyn'd a publick Recantation; which he refuſing was committed to Priſon. And Mr. Chancey, Miniſter of Ware in Hertfordſhire, for oppoſing the making of a Rail about the Communion Table in that Church, and calling it an Innovation and Snare to Men's Conſciences, was brought into the High Commiſſion, and cenſur'd for Contempt of Eccleſiaſtical Government, and made a ſolemn Recantation; after which the Archbiſhop diſmiſs'd him with a ſevere Admonition. (b)

Diſpoſal of Church Preferments.

That which created Archbiſhop Laud the greater Envy was, his Intereſt in diſpoſing of moſt of the Preferments in Church and State. Of which the two great Inſtances this Year, were the promoting of Dr Roger Manwaring, ſo obnoxious to former Parliaments, to the See of St. David's, Feb. 28. and procuring the great Office of Lord-Treaſurer for Juxon Biſhop of London; who though he had Abilities for it, and an Integrity that his Enemies could never queſtion, yet his Education and Order made it a moſt invidious Honour to him: The Nobility thought themſelves injur'd; and moſt of the Courtiers had their peculiar Indignation. Archbiſhop Laud enters it thus in his Diary; 1635. March 6. William Juxon, Lord Biſhop of London, made Lord High-Treaſurer of England; no Church Man had it ſince Henry VII. time. I pray God bleſs him to carry it ſo, that the Church may have Honour, and the King and the State Service and Contentment by it. And now if the Church will not hold up themſelves, under God, I can do no more. (c)

(c) One of the great Offences taken by wiſe and good Men was the new Attempt of reconciling the Church of England to the Church of Rome; in order whereunto, one Chriſtopher Davenport, an Engliſh Franciſcan Frier, under the Name of Franciſcus de Sancta Clara, publiſht a Book, intituled, Deus, Natura, Gratia, &c. Adjicitur Paraphraſtica Expoſitio Articulorum Confeſſionis Anglicanæ. The Deſign was to accommodate the Articles of the Church of England to the Senſe of the Church of Rome, for the eaſier Reconciliation of the two Churches. The Book was confidently Dedicated to the King, and was ſaid to have been directed to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury. It was at leaſt an Article objected againſt him, that for the Advancement of Popery and Superſtition in this Realm, the ſaid Archbiſhop had wittingly and willingly received, harboured, and relieved divers Popiſh Prieſts and Jeſuits, and namely, one called Sancta Clara, alias Davenport, a dangerous Perſon, and Franciſcan Frier, who hath written a Popiſh and Seditious Book, intituled, Deus, Natura, Gratia, &c. wherein the 39 Articles of the Church of England, eſtabliſhed by Act of Parliament, are much traduced and ſcandalized; the ſaid Archbiſhop having had divers Conferences with him, while he was Writing the ſaid Book.——The Archbiſhop does not ſeem to deny his Acquaintance with the Man, nor with the Deſign of this Book, but was rather afraid the Book would not anſwer the Deſign. Said he, I never ſaw that Franciſcan Frier in my life, to the utmoſt of my Memory, above four times or five at moſt. He was firſt brought to me by Dr. Lindſell. I did fear he would never expound the Articles, ſo as the Church of England might have cauſe to thank him for it.

The beſt Obſervations on this Matter were made by Mr. Rous in a Speech againſt Dr. Coſin, March 16. 1640.——A ſecond way by which this Army of Prieſts advanceth this Popiſh Deſign, is the way of Treaty. This hath been acted both by Writings and Conference. Sancta Clara himſelf ſaith, Doctiſſimi eorum quibuſcunq; egi, ſo it ſeems they have had Conference together. And Sancta Clara, on his part, labours to bring the Articles of our Church to Popery, and ſome of our Side labour to meet him in the way. We have a Teſtimony, that the great Archprieſt himſelf hath ſaid, It were no hard Matter to make a Reconciliation, if a wiſe Man had the handling of it. But I verily believe, as the State of Papacy ſtands, a far wiſer Man than he cannot reconcile us without the loſs of our Religion. For the Pope being faſtned to his Errors, even by his Chair of Inerrability, he ſits ſtill unmoved; and ſo we cannot meet, except we come wholly to him. A Man ſtanding in a Boat tied to a Rock, when he draws the Rope, doth not draw the Rock to the Boat, but the Boat to the Rock. And Sancta Clara doth in this ſomewhat honeſtly confeſs it; for he ſaith, he dealt in this way of Treaty, not to draw the Church to the Proteſtants, but the Proteſtants to the Church.

The whole State of other Church Affairs is beſt repreſented in this Account of his Province, ſent by the Archbiſhop to the King.

Archbiſhop's Account of his Province. 1635.

"ACcording to your Royal Commands, I do here upon the 2d of January 1635. Comput. Anglic. preſent my Account, both for the Dioceſs and Province of Canterbury, concerning all thoſe Church Affairs, which are contained in your Majeſty's moſt gracious Inſtructions, publiſhed out of your moſt princely and religious Care to preſerve Unity in Orthodox Doctrine, and Conformity to Government within this your Church of England.

"And, firſt, for my own Dioceſs, I humbly repreſent to your Majeſty, that there are yet very many refractory Perſons to the Government of the Church of England, about Maidſtone and Aſhford, and ſome other Parts; the Infection being ſpread by one Brewer, and continued and increaſed by one Turner. They have been both cenſur'd in the High-Commiſſion Court ſome Years ſince; but the hurt which they have done is ſo deeply rooted, as that it is not poſſible to be plucked up on the ſuddain. But I muſt crave time to work it off by little and little.

"I have, according to your Majeſty's Commands, required Obedience to my Injunctions, ſent to the French and Dutch Churches at Canterbury, Maidſtone and Sandwich; and albeit they made ſome ſhew of Conformity, yet I do not find they have yielded ſuch Obedience as is required, and was order'd with your Majeſty's Conſent and Approbation: So that I fear I ſhall be driven to a quicker Proceeding with them.

"The Cathedral Church begins to be in very good Order: And I have almoſt finiſhed their Statutes; which being once perfected will (mutatis mutandis) be a ſufficient Direction for the making of the Statutes for the other Cathedrals of the new Erection, which in King Henry VIIIth's time had either none left or none confirmed; and thoſe which are, in many things not Canonical. All which Statutes your Majeſty hath given Power to Me, with others, under the Broad-Seal of England, to alter or make new as we ſhall find cauſe. And ſo ſoon as theſe Statutes for the Church of Canterbury are made ready, I ſhall humbly ſubmit them to your Majeſty for confirmation.

"There is one Mr. Walker of St. John's the Evangeliſt, who hath all his time been but a diſorderly and peeviſh Man; and now of late hath very frowardly preached againſt the Lord Biſhop of Ely's Book concerning the Lord's-Day, ſet out by Authority. But upon a Canonical Admonition given him to deſiſt, he hath hitherto recollected himſelf, and I hope will be adviſed.

London.

"For the Dioceſs of London, I find my Lord the Biſhop hath been very careful for all that concerns his own Perſon. But three of his Archdeacons have made no return at all to him; ſo that he can certifie nothing but what hath come to his Knowledge without their help. There have been convented in this Dioceſs Dr. Stoughton of Aldermanbury, Mr. Simpſon Curate and Lecturer of St. Margaret's New-Fiſh-ſtreet, Mr. Andrew Moline Curate, Lecturer of St. Swithin, Mr. John Goodwin Vicar of St. Stephen Coleman-ſtreet, and Mr. Viner Lecturer of St. Lawrence in the Old-Jury, for breach of the Canons of the Church in Sermons, or Practice, or both. But becauſe all them promiſed Amendment for the future, and Submiſſion to the Church in all Things, my Lord very moderately forbore farther Proceeding againſt them.

"There were likewiſe convented Mr. Sparrowhawke Curate and Lecturer at St. Mary Woolchurch, for preaching againſt the Canon for bowing at the Name of Jeſus; who becauſe he willfully perſiſted is ſuſpended from Preaching in that Dioceſs. As alſo one Mr. John Wood a wild turbulent Preacher, and formerly cenſur'd in the High Commiſſion Court. But his Lordſhip forbore Mr. White of Knightsbridge, for that his Cauſe is at this preſent depending in the Court aforeſaid.

Lincoln.

"Concerning the Dioceſs of Lincoln, my Lord the Biſhop returns this Information, that he hath viſited the ſame this Year all over in Perſon, which he conceives no Predeceſſor of his hath done theſe hundred Years: And that he finds ſo much good done thereby, beyond that which his Chancellors uſe to do when they go the Viſitation; that he is ſorry he hath not done it heretofore, in ſo many Years as he hath been Biſhop.

"He farther certifies, that he hath prevailed beyond Expectation for the augmenting of four or five ſmall Vicarages; and conceives (as your Majeſty may be pleaſed to remember I have often told you upon my own Experience) that it is a Work very neceſſary and fit to be done, and moſt worthy of your Majeſty's Royal Care and Conſideration.

"For Conformity his Lordſhip profeſſeth, that in that large Dioceſs he knoweth but one unconformable Man, and that is one Lindhall, who is in the High-Commiſſion Court and ready for Sentence.

Bath and Wells.

"My Lord the Biſhop of Bath and Wells certifies, that his Dioceſs is in very good Order and Obedience. That there is not a ſingle Lecture in any Town Corporate, but grave Divines preach by courſe; and that he hath changed the Afternoon Sermons into Catechiſing by Queſtion and Anſwer in all Pariſhes.

"His Lordſhip farther certifies, that no Man hath been preſented unto him ſince his laſt Certificate, for any Breach of the Canons of the Church, or your Majeſty's Inſtructions; and that he hath received no notice of any increaſe of Men Popiſhly affected, beyond the Number mentioned in his laſt Certificate.

Norwich.

"The Biſhop of this See died almoſt half a Year ſince, and had ſent in no Certificate. But I find by my Viſitation there this preſent Year, that the whole Dioceſs is much out of Order, and more at Ipſwich and Yarmouth than at Norwich it ſelf. But I hope my Lord that now is will take care of it, and he ſhall want no Aſſiſtance that I can give him.

"Mr. Samuel Ward Preacher at Ipſwich was cenſured this laſt Term in the High-Commiſſion Court, for preaching in diſgrace of the Common-Prayer Book, and other like groſs Miſdemeanours.

Oxon. Sarum, Ely, Chicheſt. St. Aſaph, Briſtol.

"Theſe ſix Biſhops reſpectively make their Anſwer, that in their own Perſons they have obſerved all your Majeſty's Inſtructions; and that they find all their Clergy very conformable, no one of them inſtancing in any Particular to the contrary.

Landaff.

"In this Dioceſs the Biſhop found in his Triennial Viſitation the former Year two noted Schiſmaticks, Wroth and Erbury, that led away many ſimple People after them. And finding that they wilfully perſiſted in their Schiſmatical Courſe, he hath carefully preferr'd Articles againſt them in the High-Commiſſion Court; where, when the Cauſe is ready for Hearing, they ſhall receive according to the Merits of it.

Hereford.

"Concerning this Dioceſs your Majeſty knows that this late Biſhop's Reſidence upon the Place was neceſſarily hindred by his Attendance upon your Majeſty's Perſon, as Clerk of the Cloſet. But he hath been very careful for the obſervance of all your Inſtructions, and particularly for catechizing the Youth; as alſo for not letting of any thing into Lives, to the prejudice of his Succeſſor, in which he hath done exceeding well: And I have by your Majeſty's Command laid a ſtrict charge upon his Succeſſor, to look to thoſe particular Leaſes which he hath made ſtay of, that they may be reduced into Years, for the good of that See which abundantly needs it.

1635. 11 Car. I.

Winton.

“ My Lord Biſhop of Wincheſter certifies, that “ there is all Peace and Order in his Dioceſs; and “ that himſelf and his Clergy have duly obey'd your “ Majeſty's Inſtructions: But he informs, that in the “ Pariſh of Avington in Hampſhire, one Unguyon an “ Eſquire, is preſented for a new Recuſant, as alſo “ three others, whereof two are in Southwark.

Peterborough, Rochester, Exeter.

“ Theſe three Biſhops for their ſeveral Dioceſſes “ reſpectively make return, that all Obedience is “ yielded to every of your Majeſty's Inſtructions.

St. David's.

“ The late Biſhop of St. David's (now of Hereford) “ hath in his time of Reſidence taken a great deal “ of Pains in that See, and hath cauſed two to be “ queſtion'd in the High Commiſſion, and ſuſpended “ one Roberts a Lecturer, for Inconformity. Three “ or four others which were Suſpended he hath re- “ leaſed upon hope given of their Obedience to the “ Church, and hath abſolutely deprived two for their “ exceeding ſcandalous Life. He complains much, “ and ſurely with Cauſe enough, that there are few “ Miniſters in thoſe poor and remote Places, that “ are able to Preach and Inſtruct the People.

“ My Lord the Biſhop informs, that that County “ is very full of Impropriations, which makes the “ Miniſters poor; and their Poverty makes them “ fall upon Popular and Factious Courſes. I doubt “ this is too true, but it is a Miſchief hard to cure “ in this Kingdom; yet I have taken all the care I “ can, and ſhall continue ſo to do.

“ From the reſt of the Biſhops of my Province, “ I have received no Certificate this Year, viz. “ Coventry and Lichfield, Worceſter, Bangor.

So I humbly ſubmit this my Certificate.

W. CANT.

1636. 12 Car. I.

To proceed to the Year 1636. It began with a Plague, that broke forth in the uſual Seat of Infection among the Butchers in the Row leading from Aldgate to White-Chapel. Upon which his Majeſty by Proclamation dated April 22. provided, That whereas in the time of the laſt Plague there were divers good Orders publiſhed with Rules preſervative and Directions againſt the Infection; the ſaid Orders, Rules, and Medicines, ſhould be again now publiſhed and renewed. And by another Proclamation, dated May 27, The King's Majeſty finding that the Infection of the Plague is at this preſent ſcattered and diſperſed in the Cities of London and Weſtminſter, hath thought fit to Adjourn ſome part of Trinity-Term next from the ſecond Return thereof to the laſt Return of the ſame. This publick Calamity reign'd the whole Summer and Autumn, till his Majeſty by Proclamation dated October 18. commanded a general Faſt to be weekly obſerved throughout the Realm of England, by reaſon of the heavy Judgment of God in his preſent Viſitation in the Cities of London and Weſtminſter, and divers other parts of the Kingdom at this time with the Peſtilence. In the Book of Prayers preſcribed for this Faſt, a Paſſage in a former Collect reflecting on the Abuſe of Faſting by thinking it meritorious, was now left out. This Omiſſion was made an Article againſt the Archbiſhop at his Tryal; to which he pleaded, “ That the Alteration was made not by himſelf, “ but by him that had the ordering of that Book “ for the Preſs: Yet he approved the Reaſon given “ for it, and that without any the leaſt Approbati- “ on of Merit. For in this Age and Kingdom, when “ and where ſet Faſtings of the Church are cried “ down, there can be little fear of that erroneous “ Opinion of placing any Merit in Faſting.”

The Abp. charged with an Omiſſion in a Form of Prayer.

King's Care of the Fleet.

The King's great Care was to have a good Fleet at Sea, to raiſe his Honour abroad, and preſerve the Peace at home, by letting his Subjects ſee a juſt and wiſe Diſpoſal of the Ship-Money. To give countenance to theſe Naval Deſigns, his Majeſty in Council March 26. taking into conſideration a Book lately publiſhed by John Selden Eſq; intituled Mare Clauſum, written by the King's Command, which he had done with great Induſtry, Learning, and Judgment, and hath aſſerted the Right of the Crown of England to the Dominion of the Britiſh Seas; the King requires one of the ſaid Books to be kept in the Council Cheſt, another in the Court of Exchequer, and a third in the Court of Admiralty, as faithful and ſtrong Evidence to the Dominion of the Britiſh Sea. And on April 15. the King farther expreſs'd his Pleaſure, that whereas the ſaid Book had been Printed beyond Sea, and to the ſaid Impreſſion more was added than what was therein Printed at firſt, and the Name of the City of London was falſely put for the Place of the Impreſſion; no Perſon ſhould import, publiſh, or ſet to ſale, any of the ſaid Books of the ſaid foreign Edition, either in Latin or Engliſh. This was an Encouragement not only to Learning, but to the Naval Expedition of this Year, when the King prepared for it by a Proclamation dated May 10, which renew'd an Order of K. James, whereby “ All Perſons, of what Nation or Quality “ ſoever, being not his natural born Subjects, were “ reſtrained from Fiſhing upon any of the Coaſts “ and Seas of Great-Britain, Ireland, and the reſt of “ the Iſles adjacent, without Licenſe firſt obtained “ from the King or his Commiſſioners. And his “ Majeſty now farther declares, that his Reſolution “ is, to keep ſuch a competent Strength of Shipping “ upon his Seas, as may (by God's Bleſſing) be “ ſufficient both to hinder ſuch farther Encroach- “ ment upon his Regalities, and aſſiſt and protect “ thoſe his good Friends and Allies, who ſhall hence- “ forth, by virtue of his Licences firſt obtained, “ endeavour to take the benefit of Fiſhing upon “ his Coaſts and Seas in the Places accuſtomed.”

Reſpect paid to Mr. Selden's Mare Clauſum.

A good Fleet.

Accordingly the King appeared this Year with a formidable Armado in the Narrow Seas, Algernon Earl of Northumberland being Admiral, who with ſixty Sail under his Command ſet out from the Downs toward the North, where the Dutch Buſſes were Fiſhing upon our Coaſts: The Admiral requiring them to forbear, they ſeem'd indiſpoſed to it; upon which, he fired at them: Some of them were taken, others ſunk, and the reſt fled. The Dutch immediately hereupon prevail'd with the Admiral to mediate with the King that they might by his Permiſſion go on this Summer to fiſh upon the Coaſts, and agreed to give the King for this Year thirty thouſand Pounds, which was paid accordingly: And the States expreſſed their Willingneſs to obtain a Grant from the King, for his Permiſſion of their Veſſels to fiſh for the time to come, paying a yearly Tribute.

Diſperſes the Dutch Fiſhers.

Continual Murmurs againſt Ship-Money.

Yet all this honourable Diſpoſal of the Ship-Money, and good Effects of it, could not reconcile the People of England to a new Tax levied without an Act of Parliament. Murmurs and a general Senſe of Oppreſſion went through the Kingdom. In London, one Richard Chambers, Merchant, had peremptorily refuſed to pay, for which he had been committed to Priſon by Sir Edward Bromfield Lord Mayor, againſt whom he commenc'd a Suit for Treſpaſs and falſe Impriſonment; which Caſe was to be argued in this Trinity Term: But Sir Robert Berkley, one of the Juſtices of the Court of King's-Bench, would not ſuffer the Point of Legality of Ship-Money to be argued by Chambers's Council; declaring openly in Court, “ That there was a Rule of Law “ and a Rule of Government, and that many things “ which might not be done by the Rule of Law, “ might be done by the Rule of Government.” But this Diſtinction was thought new and dangerous; and this ſilencing a Cauſe, made People the more to ſuſpect the Merits of it.

Arbitrary Judgment.

The City of London would not yield.

The City of London, who had moſt Ability, and indeed moſt Reaſon to bear the Burden, betrayed ſo much Averſion to it, that the Lords of the Privy-Council wrote to them to adviſe their Submiſſion: but they met with ſuch a ſtout Return, that their Lordſhips were forced to write again on Auguſt 8. to inform the Lord-Mayor and Court, that “ They “ had

1636. 12 Car. I. "had received by ſome of the Aldermen a Denial in "Name of the City, to their late Letter for the "ſetting forth of Shipping, and Excuſes had been "ſince made upon the like occaſion; which they "could not impute to any thing but want of Duty; "and therefore in his Majeſty's Name, and by his "Commandment, their Lordſhips require them to "ſee the Directions of their Letter performed upon "their Allegiance, and as they will anſwer the con-"trary at their Perils." When the City perceived they could not ſhake off the Burden, they deſired however a Mitigation of it; and therefore on Auguſt [illegible] they preſented a Petition, deſiring an Abatement of the twenty Ships rated upon the City unto ten Ships, and two Pinnaces. But this too was denied in a manner that made the Denial more grievous; for Mr. Secretary Cook, by Order of the Privy Council, told them, "That the former Command-"ment was neceſſary, and the Charge upon them "was not immoderate; that Petitions and Pleadings "againſt ſuch Commandment were not to be recei-"ved: And whereas they mentioned Precedents, "they ſhould know, that the Precedents of former "Times were Obedience and not Direction; that "there were alſo Precedents of the Puniſhment of "thoſe that diſobey'd his Majeſty's Commandments "ſignified by the Board in the caſe of the Preſervati-"on of the State." This Anſwer might extort a Submiſſion, but it could not give a Satisfaction. (a)

And therefore the King took a more plauſible Method to ſuffer the Legality of this Tax to be decided by the Judges, putting this Caſe to them in Letters dated Febr. 2. Regn. 12.

Carolus Rex.

Caſe put to the Judges.

When the Good and Safety of the Kingdom in general is concerned, and the whole Kingdom in danger, whether may not the King by Writ, under the Great Seal of England, command all the Subjects of our Kingdom, at their Charge, to provide and furniſh ſuch Number of Ships, with Men, Victuals, and Munition, and for ſuch time as we ſhall think fit, for the Defence and Safeguard of the Kingdom from ſuch Danger and Peril, and by Law compel the doing thereof in caſe of Refuſal or Refractorineſs? And whether, in ſuch a caſe, is not the King the ſole Judge both of the Danger, and when and how the ſame is to be prevented and avoided?

To which the Judges returned this Opinion.

May it pleaſe your moſt excellent Majeſty,

Judges Anſwer.

We have according to your Majeſty's Command, every Man by himſelf, and all of us together, taken into ſerious conſideration the Caſe and Queſtion ſigned by your Majeſty, and incloſed in your Royal Letter; and we are of Opinion, that when the Good and Safety of the Kingdom in general is concerned, and the Kingdom in Danger, your Majeſty may by Writ, under the Great Seal of England, command all your Subjects of this your Kingdom, at their charge to provide and furniſh ſuch a number of Ships with Men, Victuals and Munition: and for ſuch time as your Majeſty ſhall think fit for the defence and ſafeguard of this Kingdom from ſuch Danger and Peril; and that by Law your Majeſty may compel the doing thereof in caſe of Refuſal or Refractorineſs. And we are alſo of Opinion, that in ſuch Caſe your Majeſty is the ſole Judge, both of the Danger, and when, and how the ſame is to be prevented and avoided.

Tho' this Judgment ſolemnly delivered might juſtifie the King, yet it could not acquit the Judges themſelves, who were by many ſuſpected in this Caſe, rather to make Law than to pronounce it; and to have been tempted or aw'd into this extrajudicial Opinion. A Suſpicion that encreaſed the more, becauſe ſome of them betray'd a Surprize to hear their Reſolution openly read by the Lord Keeper in the Court of Star-Chamber, Feb. 14. as if they had meant to deliver it for the private Satisfaction of the King and Council, not for the Knowledge of the whole Nation; and becauſe two of them, Hutton and Crook, did afterward, in the Caſe of Hampden, recede in effect from their own Subſcription. 1636. 12 Car. I. Judges cenſur'd for their Opinion.

The Influence and Effect of this ſtated Opinion may be delivered in theſe Words of the Lord Clarendon. Lord Clarendon's Opinion of Ship-Money.

"It is notoriouſly known, that Preſſure was born "with much more cheerfulneſs before the Judgment "for the King, than ever it was afterward; Men "before pleaſing themſelves with doing ſomewhat "for the King's Service, as a Teſtimony of their Af-"fection, which they were not bound to do.—— "But when they heard this demanded in a Court of "Law as a Right, and found it by ſworn Judges "of the Law adjudged ſo, upon ſuch Grounds and "Reaſons as every ſtander by was able to ſwear was "not Law, and ſo had loſt the Pleaſure and Delight "of being kind and dutiful to the King; and inſtead "of giving were required to pay, and by a Logick "that left no Man any Thing which he might call "his own: They no more looked upon it as the "Caſe of one Man, but the Caſe of the Kingdom; "nor as an Impoſition laid upon them by the King, "but by the Judges, which they thought themſelves "bound in Conſcience to the publick Juſtice not "to ſubmit to. —— The Damage and Miſchief "cannot be expreſſed, that the Crown and State ſuſ-"tained by the deſerved Reproach and Infamy "that attended the Judges by being made uſe of in "this and like Arts of Power, there being no poſſi-"bility to preſerve the Dignity, Reverence and E-"ſtimation of the Laws themſelves, but by the In-"tegrity and Innocency of the Judges, &c."

It was a leſs invidious Opinion which the ſame Judges had delivered in the Caſe of Burton and Baſtwicke, who had been ſo fierce in their Libels againſt the Government, that it was conſider'd by the King's Council how to draw them into an Arraignment of High-Treaſon. For which purpoſe there was a meeting of the Judges at Serjeant's-Inn, before whom the King's Council laboured to prove, that divers Paſſages in the Books of the ſaid Authors did amount to High-Treaſon. But when the Council withdrew, the Judges in Debate among themſelves, came to theſe Reſolutions.

Reſolutions of the Judges in Caſe of Burton and Baſtwicke.

1. That if there were any Thing in the Books that amounted to Treaſon, no Indictment could be found good for Treaſon, unleſs it was grounded upon the Statute of 25 Ed. III. either for compaſſing the King's Death, or imagining the ſame, or elſe for levying of War.

2. That if any Man ſeditiouſly, maliciouſly and of purpoſe to raiſe Rebellion, and to incite Rebellion, did take Arms to reduce the Courſe of Government of the State, either Eccleſiaſtical or Civil, and thereby to compaſs the King's Deſtruction, this was Treaſon.

3. That ſuch Indictment was to be framed upon the ſaid Statute of 25 Ed. III.

This Reſolution being delivered by the Lord Chief Juſtice to the King and Council, had this regular effect, that the ſaid Offenders were not Indicted of High-Treaſon, but proſecuted in a ſofter manner, tho' afterward thought ſevere and arbitrary.

It

1636. It was another unhappineſs to the Government, 12 Car. I. that for want of Parliamentary Supplies ſuited to the occaſional exigencies of Affairs, they were driven upon new Projects for Money, which however fair and juſt in themſelves, were thought but Inventions to make Parliaments the leſs frequent and the leſs ſignificant. Among theſe Projects, one was to erect a Court of Enquiry after Depopulations made by the converſion of Arable Lands to Paſture, ſince the 10th Year of Queen Elizabeth, by which Commiſſion there was brought into the Exchequer above 30000 l. Another Project was, the granting Letters for the ſurveying and ſealing of a Reel, and other Standards to be uſed by all Clothiers and Workers in Cloth and Yarn: with other ways and means by enlarging the Powers of prizing of Wines; by prohibiting the Importation of Gun-powder, and requiring all Subjects to be ſupplied out of his Majeſty's Store-Houſes only.

New Projects for Money.

Foreign Affairs. As to foreign Affairs, Ferdinando the ſecond, Emperor of Germany, finding in himſelf a decay of Health, began to think of ſettling the Succeſſion of the Empire; and ſo called a Dyet to meet at Ratisbon in the middle of September, where the French managed an Intrigue for promoting the Elector of Bavaria; but the Poland Ambaſſador prevailed for Ferdinand the Emperor's Son, already King of Hungary, to be elected King of the Romans, on Decem. 22. who ſucceeded his Father dying in Feb. 15. Our King upon the News of this Change, ſent Thomas Earl of Arundel, Earl Marſhal of England, his Ambaſſador to the new Emperor Ferdinand III. to repreſent the Condition of the Palſgrave now in the Engliſh Court, and to ſollicite the Reſtitution of his Patrimony. The Emperor anſwer'd, that he made no doubt in time it might be conſidered for enjoying the Lower Palatinate; but for the other, it concerned the Duke of Bavaria with whom Conſultation muſt be had on that Affair. Upon ſuch Conſult, Bavaria anſwer'd like a Soldier, That what he had won by the Sword he would maintain by the ſame Power. After which, our Ambaſſador ſo far reſented the Slights and Indignities put upon him, that he came away without taking leave; and made ſuch a Report to the King, that he ſhewed his Diſpleaſure with the Imperial Agent: which more and more obſtructed the King's Endeavours of reſtoring his Nephew.

Pope's Nuncio's. At the latter End of this Year, Seignior Gregorio Panzani, the Pope's Nuncio in England, and Major Bret, our Engliſh Agent at Rome from the Queen, being diſcharged from their Negotiations (a). Seignior Gregorio Con a Scot, was appointed by the Pope to ſucceed Panzani as his Nuncio; and Sir William Hamilton a Scot, was ſent hence Ledger to Rome, where Cardinal Barberini was made Patron and Protector of the Engliſh and Scotch Nations (b). All which ſerv'd but to foment the Fears and Jealouſies of Popery. 1635. 12 Car. I.

Which brings us to the State of Eccleſiaſtical Affairs for this preſent Year 1636. As to the Liturgy deſign'd for Scotland, upon the 19th of April the King thus expreſs'd his Pleaſure. State of Religion.

Charles Rex.

I Gave the Archbiſhop of Canterbury command to make the Alterations expreſſed in this Book, and to fit a Liturgy for the Church of Scotland; and wherefoever they ſhall differ from another Book ſigned by us at Hampton-Court, September 28. 1634. Our pleaſure is to have theſe followed rather than the former, unleſs the Archbiſhop of St. Andrew's, and his Brethren who are upon the Place, ſhall ſee apparent Reaſon to the contrary. King's Order for Scotch Liturgy.

Archbiſhop Laud ſent an Account of this to Wederbourne Biſhop of Dunblain, and Dean of the Royal Chapel at Edinburgh. But there were ſtill found ſome Defects and Errors in this new Liturgy, that required Alteration. And therefore on October 18. the King directed his further Inſtructions to the Abps. and Biſhops of Scotland, "That they ſhould take "care; 1. That the Proclamation to be made for "authorizing the Service-Book ſhould not derogate "in any thing from his Royal Prerogative. 2. That "in their Kalendar they ſhould keep ſuch Catholick "Saints as were in the Engliſh, with ſuch other "Saints as were moſt peculiar to that Kingdom. "3. That in their Book of Ordination in giving Orders to Presbyters, they ſhould keep the Words "of the Engliſh Book without change: Receive the "Holy Ghoſt, &c. 4. That they ſhould inſert among the Leſſons ordinarily to be read in the Service, out of the Book of Wiſdom, the firſt, ſecond, "third, fourth, fifth and ſixth Chapters; and out "of the Book of Eccleſiaſticus the firſt, ſecond, fifth, "eighth, thirty fifth, and forty ninth Chapters. "5. That every Biſhop within his Family twice a "Day cauſe the Service to be read; and that all "the Archbiſhops and Biſhops make all Univerſities "and Colleges within their Dioceſſes to uſe daily "twice a Day the Service. 6. That the Preface to "the Book of Common-Prayer, ſign'd by his Ma- Farther Inſtructions.

(a) Seignior Greg. Panzani, L. L. D. with the Pope's Brief, and Letters from Cardinal Barberini, had arrived at London 25th December, 1634. where he ſaluted the Queen, and afterwards the King alſo, who received and treated him with much Kindneſs, telling him that he was very welcome, &c. He did alſo deſire Conference with the Archbiſhop of Cant. but was put off, &c. He much applied himſelf to Secretary Windebanke, and the Lord Cotington, &c.——The Pope's Nuncio's, or the Negotiation of Seignior Panzani, Seignior Con, &c. 1643. 4*to.*

(b) The ſecret Negotiations of Mr. Con, Papal Legate in England, are beſt told by Information upon Oath in Writing, by unqueſtioned Evidence, Andrew ab Habernfeld, at the Hague, in Sept. 1640. which he had from a good Man who had been bred and born in the Popiſh Religion, and had ſpent many Years in Eccleſiaſtical Dignities; till at length being found fit for the preſent Expedition, by the Advice and Command of Cardinal Barberini, he was adjoined to the aſſiſtance of Maſter Con, and was found diligent in that Office.——To promote their Cauſe, there was a Society erected at Rome, under the Title of the Congregation for Propagating the Faith, under the Pope, and Cardinal Barberini, the Pope's Deputy; that the chief Patron of this Society at London was Maſter Cuneus, or Con, the Pope's Legate, who took care of the Buſineſs, and into whoſe Boſom the ſeveral Tools employ'd did pour all their Intelligences every Week. He was the general Inſtrument of that comb'n'd Society: He ſet upon the chief Men of the Kingdom, and left nothing unattempted to corrupt them all, and bring them over to the Popiſh Intereſt; he tried them with various Baits and Allurements; nay, he ſought to delude the King himſelf with little Preſents of Pictures, Antiquities, Idols, and other Vanities brought from Rome, which yet prevail'd nothing with the King. He entred into Familiarity with the King, and was even importun'd and employ'd by his Majeſty in the Cauſe of the Palatinate, wherein he deceiv'd him. He mov'd every Stone to gain over the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, depending upon the Offer he had to make him; for he had a Command to offer his Grace a Cardinal's Cap in the Name of the Pope of Rome, and even to court him with ſome larger Promiſes, if poſſible, to corrupt his Sincerity.——When he underſtood that as to the Archbiſhop's part he did but labour in vain, then his Malice, and that of the whole Society was inflam'd, and they preſently began to lay Plots and Snares how to take the Archbiſhop together with the King. Nay, Judgment was given againſt the King's Perſon, becauſe they hoped for nothing from Him to promote the Papal Religion; and eſpecially becauſe he had expreſs'd himſelf to be of this Opinion, That every One might be ſav'd in his own Religion, ſo he were an honeſt and pious Man. ——Con himſelf ſhew'd often to me in a boaſting manner, an Indian Nut ſtufft with the acuteſt Poyſon prepared for the King, as a like Poyſon had been practis'd on his Father, &c. See Rome's Maſter-Piece, with the Archbiſhop's Notes, &c. ——The ſaid Legate uſeth a threefold Character or Cypher, in one he Correſponds with all his Fellow Nuncio's, in another with Cardinal Barberini only, and uſes a third in communicating the moſt important Secrets. Whatever he receives Weekly from the Society, or other Spies, he puts up together in one Pacquet, Directed to Monſieur Stravio, Archdeacon of Cambray, by whom they are forwarded to Rome.

The ſame Evidence depoſed, that upon the Offence taken by the Scottiſh Com. Prayer Book, in that heat a certain Scottiſh Earl Maxfield was ſent into Scotland by the Popiſh Party, with whom two other Scots Earls, both Papiſts, did correſpond. His Buſineſs was to ſtir up the People into Inſurrections, and rub the Sore of Grievances, &c.——The ſaid Andrew Habernfeld was a Nobleman of Bohemia.

1636. Car. I. jeſty's Hand, and the Proclamation for authorizing the ſame, ſhould be printed and inſerted in the Book of Common-Prayer."

According to theſe Inſtructions and the ſeveral Corrections, the Scotiſh Liturgy was at laſt finiſhed, and ratified and confirmed by his Majeſty's Royal Declaration, dated at Edin. 20 Dec. Regn. 12.1636.

Offence taken at the Scotch Liturgy.

The great Offence was, that this Liturgy was impoſed by the Civil Power, without being preſented to the Kirk, or tendered to any approbation of the general Aſſembly, as had been done in the Reſtitution of the Epiſcopal Government, and Introduction of the five Articles of Perth. Yet this omiſſion was not owing to Archbiſhop Laud, but it proceeded from the Scotch Biſhops, who dared not truſt the majority of the Clergy, or venture the reception or refuſal of it to a general Vote of the Aſſembly. And indeed this method of enjoining by Civil Authority, without calling in the Church Repreſentative, had been the practice of Reformation in the Church of England, where King Edward VI. and Queen Elizabeth, in fitting and enjoining their ſeveral Liturgies, had acted by their Sovereign Right of Supremacy, not ſubmitting the Books to Convocation, becauſe they could not then depend upon the conſent of the Clergy ſo much Popiſhly affected. Another main Objection among the Scots to the Liturgy was, that it was ſo very near the Engliſh Book, as to look like a diminution of the Liberties of their own Kirk; and yet had ſeveral Alterations from the Engliſh, that were all for the worſe, and tended more to Superſtition. Theſe and other Cenſures paſſed upon the Book were induſtriouſly improved by the Preachers, and fomented ſuch a prejudice among the People, that we muſt expect to hear of the unhappy effects of it.

Abp. of Canterbury claims a Power of viſiting the Univerſities.

There was another load of Envy drawn upon the well-meaning Archbiſhop, by his claiming the Right of viſiting the two Univerſities of Oxford and Cambridge, Jure Metropolitico. Both thoſe learned Bodies denied his Claim, and pleaded they were ſubject only to Royal Viſitation. The Cauſe came to a Hearing before the King and Council at Hampton-Court, June 21. where Sir John Banks, Attorney-General, argued for the Archbiſhop's Right againſt the Royal Prerogative; and Mr. Gardiner, Recorder of London, pleaded their Subjection only to Royal Power, in behalf of the Univerſity of Cambridge, as Serjeant Thin did in behalf of Oxford. The King himſelf argued for the Archbiſhop, and at laſt gave Judgment for him, i. e. againſt his own Crown and Dignity, as moſt People underſtood it. (a)

Moſt of the other Eccleſiaſtical Affairs of any Moment are contained in the Archbiſhop's account of his Province to the King for this Year 1636.

" May it pleaſe your Sacred Majeſty,

Abp's Account of his Province.

"According to your Royal Commands expreſs'd in your late Inſtructions for the good of the Church, I do here moſt humbly preſent my yearly Account for my Dioceſs and Province of Canterbury for this laſt Year, ended at Chriſtmas 1636.

Canterbury.

"And firſt for my own Dioceſs, I have every Year acquainted your Majeſty, and ſo muſt do now, that there are ſtill about Aſhford and Egerton divers Browniſts, and other Separatiſts: But they are ſo very mean and poor People, that we know not what to do with them. They are ſaid to be Diſciples of one Turner and Fenner, who were long ſince Apprehended and Impriſoned, by Order of your Majeſty's High-Commiſſion Court. But how this part came to be ſo infected with ſuch a humour of Separation, I know not, unleſs it were by too much connivance at their firſt beginning: Neither do I ſee any Remedy like to be, unleſs ſome of their chief Seducers be driven to abjure the Kingdom, which muſt be done by the Judges at the Common-Law, but is not in our Power."

The King wrote thus in the Margin, C. R. Inform me of the Particulars, and I ſhall command the Judges to make them Abjure.

1636. 12 Car. I.

"I have received Information from my Officers, that the Walloons, and other Strangers in my Dioceſs, eſpecially at Canterbury, do come orderly to their Pariſh Churches, and there receive the Sacraments, and Marry, &c. according to my Injunctions, with that Limitation which your Majeſty allowed.

"There have been heretofore many in Canterbury that were not conformable to Church Diſcipline, and would not kneel at the Communion; but they are all now very conformable, as I hear expreſly by my Officers; and there is no falling away of any to Recuſancy.

"There hath been a Cuſtom, that ſome Miniſters thereabouts have, under divers pretences, lived for the moſt part at Canterbury, and gone ſeldom to their Benefices; which hath given a double Scandal, both by their abſence from their ſeveral Cures, and by keeping too much Company, and that not in the beſt manner. I have ſeen this remedied in all ſave only one Man; and if he do not preſently conform, I have taken Order for his Suſpenſion.

"In the Dioceſs of London, I find that my Lord the Biſhop there (now by your Majeſty's Grace and Favour Lord High-Treaſurer of England) hath very carefully obſerved thoſe Inſtructions which belong to his own Perſon. And for the Dioceſs, his Lordſhip informs me of three great Miſdemeanours; the one committed by Dr. Cornelius Burgeſs, who in a Latin Sermon before the Clergy of London, utter'd divers inſolent Paſſages againſt the Biſhops and Government of the Church; and refuſed to give his Lordſhip a Copy of the Sermon; ſo there was a neceſſity of calling him into the High-Commiſſion-Court, which is done.

"The ſecond Miſdemeanour is of one Mr. Wharton a Miniſter in Eſſex; who in a Sermon at Chelmesford, uttered many unfit and ſome ſcurrilous things. But for this he hath been convented, and received a Canonical Admonition; and upon his Sorrow and Submiſſion any farther Cenſure is forborn.

"The third Miſdemeanour which my Lord complains of, is the late ſpreading and diſperſing of ſome factious and malitious Pamphlets againſt the Biſhops and Government of the Church of England. And my Lord farther certifies, that he hath reaſonable ground to perſwade him, that thoſe libellous Pamphlets have been contrived or abetted, and diſperſed by ſome of the Clergy of his Dioceſs; and therefore deſires me to uſe the Authority of the High-Commiſſion, for the farther diſcovery of this notorious Practice, to prevent the Miſchiefs which will otherwiſe enſue upon the Government of the Church. This, God willing, I ſhall ſee performed. But if the High-Commiſſion ſhall not have Power enough, becauſe one of thoſe Libels contains ſeditious Matter in it, and that which is very little ſhort of Treaſon, (if any thing at all) then I humbly crave leave to add this to my Lord Treaſurer's Motion, and humbly to deſire, that your Majeſty will call it into a higher Court if you find cauſe: ſince I ſee no likelihood but that theſe Troubles in the Church, if they be permitted, will break out into ſome Sedition in the Common-wealth. [To which the King anſwered in the Margin, C. R. What the High-Commiſſion cannot do in this, I ſhall ſupply, as I ſhall find cauſe, in a more powerful way.]

"My Viſitation is yet depending for this Dioceſs; and by reaſon of the Sickneſs, I could not with ſafety hold it, nor think it fit to gather ſo much People together; but God willing, I ſhall perform that Duty ſo ſoon as conveniently I may, and then 1636. 12 Car. I. "certify your Majeſty at the next Return, what ſhall come under mine own view.

"ger-

Wincheſter. "In this Dioceſs, I find by my Lord's Report from his Officers, that there are divers Recuſants in ſeveral parts of the Country; and that ſome of them have been ſeduced away from the Church of England within theſe two or three Years.

"For all things elſe I receive no complaint thence, ſave only of three or four Miniſters that are negligent in Catechizing, and obſerve it not at all, or but in the Lent only. But I ſhall call upon the Biſhop to ſee this remedied, and to be as vigilant as he can againſt any farther encreaſe of Recuſants.

Bath and Wells. "From Bath and Wells, I have received a very good and happy Certificate, both that all your Majeſty's Inſtructions have been exactly performed throughout that whole Dioceſs; and that by God's Bleſſing, and the well-ordering of Church Affairs, there have been fewer Popiſh Recuſants preſented than formerly, and that the number of them is much decreaſed. And this I cannot but highly approve to your Majeſty, if there be not fewer preſented, either by the over-awing of them which ſhould preſent, or ſome cunning in thoſe which would not be preſented.

Norwich. "For this Dioceſs my Lord hath given me in a very careful and punctual Account, very large, and in all Particulars very conſiderable; and I ſhall return it to your Majeſty as brief as I can reduce it. And firſt, he hath for this Summer, but by your Majeſty's leave, lived (from both his Epiſcopal Houſes) in Ipſwich, partly becauſe he was informed, that that ſide of his Dioceſs did moſt need his preſence, and he found it ſo; and partly becauſe his Chapel at his Houſe in Norwich was poſſeſſed by the French Congregation, and ſo the Biſhoprick left deſtitute: But he hath given them warning to provide themſelves elſewhere by Eaſter next.

"His Lordſhip found a general defect of Catechizing quite thro' his Dioceſs, but hath ſettled it. And in Norwich, where there are 34 Churches, there was no Sermon in the Sunday Morning ſave only in four, but all put off to the Afternoon, and ſo no Catechizing: But now he hath ordered that there ſhall be a Sermon every Morning, and Catechizing in the Afternoon in every Church.

"For Lectures they abounded in Suffolk, and many ſet up by private Gentlemen, even without ſo much as the knowledge of the Ordinary, and without any due obſervation of the Canons, or the Diſcipline of the Church. Divers of theſe his Lordſhip hath carefully regulated according to Order, and eſpecially in St. Edmund's-Bury, and with their very good Content, and ſuſpended no Lecturer of whom he might obtain Conformity; and at Ipſwich it was not unknown unto them, that now Mr. Ward ſtands cenſured in the High Commiſſion and obeys not: Yet the Biſhop was ready to have allowed them another, if they would have ſought him; but they reſolve to have Mr. Ward or none, and that (as is conceived) in deſpite of the Cenſure of the Court.

"At Yarmouth, where there was great Diviſion heretofore for many Years, their Lecturer being cenſur'd in the High-Commiſſion, about 2 Years ſince went into New England, ſince which time there hath been no Lecture, and very much Peace in the Town, and all Eccleſiaſtical Orders well obſerved: But in Norwich one Mr. Bridge, rather than he would conform, hath left his Lecture and two Cures and is gone into Holland. [The King writes in the Margin, Let him go, we are well rid of him.] The Lecturers in the Country generally obſerving no Church Orders at all: And yet the Biſhop hath carried it with that Temper, and upon their promiſe, and his hopes of Conformity, he hath inhibited but three in Norfolk, and as many in Suffolk, of which one is no Graduate, and hath been a common Stage-Player. 1636. 12 C.

"His Lordſhip craves direction what he ſhall do with ſuch Scholars (ſome in Holy Orders and ſome not) as Knights and private Gentlemen keep in their Houſes, under pretence to teach their Children; as alſo with ſome Divines that are Beneficed in Towns, or near, but live in Gentlemens Houſes. For my part, I think it very fit the beneficed Men were punctually commanded to reſide upon their Cures; and for the reſt, your Majeſty's Inſtructions allow none to keep Chaplains but ſuch as are qualified by Law. All which, notwithſtanding, I moſt humbly ſubmit (as the Biſhop doth) to your Majeſty's Judgment. [The King wrote thus, I approve your Judgment in this, I only add, that care muſt be taken, that even thoſe qualified by Law keep none but conformable Men.]

"For Recuſants, whereas formerly there were wont to be but two or three preſented, his Lordſhip hath cauſed above 40 to be Indicted in (a) Norwich at the laſt Seſſions; and at the Aſſizes in Suffolk he delivered a Liſt of ſuch as were preſented upon the Oath of the Church-wardens to the Lord Chief Juſtice, and his Lordſhip to the Grand-Jury: But they ſlighted it, pretending the Biſhop's Certificate to be no Evidence. But the true reaſon is conceived to be, becauſe he had alſo inſerted ſuch as had been preſented to him for Recuſant Separatiſts, as well as Recuſant Romaniſts. [The King wrote in the Margin, Biſhops Certificates in this Caſe muſt be moſt unqueſtionable Evidence.]

"His Ldp's care hath been ſuch, as that tho' there are about 1500 Clergy in that Dioceſs, and many Diſorders; yet there are not thirty Excommunicated or Suſpended; whereof ſome are for contumacy, and will not yet ſubmit; ſome for obſtinate denial to publiſh your Majeſty's Declaration; and ſome for contemning all the Orders and Rites of the Church, and intruding themſelves without Licence from the Ordinary, for many Years together.

"Laſt of all he found, that one half of the Churches in his Dioceſs, had not a Clerk able to read and anſwer the Miniſter in Divine Service; by which means the People were wholly diſuſed from joining with the Prieſt, and in many Places from ſo much as ſaying Amen. But concerning this his Lordſhip hath ſtrictly enjoined a Reformation.

"If this Account, given by my Lord of Norwich, be true, as I believe it is (and ought to believe it, till it can be diſproved) he hath deſerved very well of the Church of England, and hath been very ill rewarded for it. His humble Suit to your Majeſty is, that you will be graciouſly pleaſed in your own good time to hear the Complaints that have been made againſt him, that he may not be overborn by an outcry for doing Service. [The King anſwers, His Suit is granted, and aſſuredly his negative Conſequence ſhall follow.]

"In the Dioceſs of Oxon, I find all your Majeſty's Inſtructions carefully obeyed; and there is but one Lecture in the whole Dioceſs, and that is read at Henly upon Thames by ſome Miniſters of the Dioceſs, conformable Men, and allowed by the Biſhop. Oxford.

(a) Among the new Proſelytes to Popery who multiplied every Year, was Sir Kenelm Digby, beyond the Seas, from whence he wrote a Letter to Archbiſhop Laud, giving the Reaſons that reſolved him to enter again the Communion of the Church of Rome, in which he had been Born and Bred. The Abp. gave him a ſerious and kind Anſwer, wherein he rather exceeds in Softneſs, condoling the Loſs of ſo great a Man, and telling him, he had acquainted his Majeſty with it, who gave a great deal of very good Expreſſion concerning him, and was not a little ſorry to loſe the Service of ſo able a Subject. Ely. “From my Lord of Ely I have received a very fair Account, that his Dioceſs is very orderly and obedient; inſomuch, that he hath not any thing of note to acquaint me with.

Lincoln. “My Lord in his Certificate mentions two Particulars fit for your Majeſty's knowledge. The firſt is, that one of his Clergy in Bedfordſhire, a Learned and Pious Man, as he ſaith, ſet up a Stone upon Pillars of Brick for his Communion Table, believing it to have been the Altar-Stone. And becauſe this appeared to be but a Grave-Stone, and for avoiding of farther Rumours in that Country among the preciſer ſort, his Lordſhip cauſed it to be quietly removed, and the ancient Communion Table placed in the room of it: but did not farther queſtion the Party, becauſe they found him a harmleſs Man, and otherwiſe a deſerver. But how deſerving ſoever he be, I muſt judge it a very bold part in him to attempt this without the Knowledge and Approbation of his Ordinary. [Over againſt this the King wrote the following Note, This may prove a bold part in the Biſhop, and the poor Prieſt in no Fault, as the other Day his Information proved, concerning the Ship Buſineſs at the Council Board; therefore examine this farther.]

“The ſecond is, that there are riſen ſome Differences in the Southern parts of his Dioceſs, about the Miniſters urging the People to receive at the Rails, which his Lordſhip, ſaith he, hath procured to be placed about the Holy Table, and the People in ſome Places refuſing ſo to do. Now becauſe this is not regulated by any Canon of the Church, his Lordſhip is an humble Suitor, that he may have direction therein. And truly, I think, for this Particular, the People will beſt be won by the Decency of the thing it ſelf; and that I ſuppoſe may be compaſſed in a ſhort time. But if your Majeſty ſhall think it fit that a quicker way be held, I ſhall humbly ſubmit. [The King ſubjoin'd, Try your way for ſome time.]

Sarum. “From the Lord Biſhop of this Dioceſs I have received no Particular; but in General thus; that all your Majeſty's Inſtructions are now obſerved there without repugnance, for ought either Chancellour, or any other Officer of his hath informed him.

Worceſter. “My Lord the Biſhop of this See certifies, that your Majeſty's Inſtructions are carefully obſerved, and that there are only two Lecturers in the City of Worceſter, both very conformable, and that they ſhall not longer continue than they are ſo; and that the one of them preaches on Sundays in the Afternoons, after Catechizing and Service in the Pariſh Churches, and ending before Evening Prayers in the Cathedral.

“I may not here forbear to acquaint your Majeſty, that this Sunday Lecture was ever wont to be in the Cathedral; and that it is removed becauſe the City would ſuffer no Prebendary to have it. And Evening Prayers in their Pariſh Churches muſt needs begin betimes, and their Catechizing be ſhort, and the Prayers at the Cathedral begin very late if this Lecture can begin and end in the Space between. But if it can be ſo fitted, I think the Dean and Chapter will not complain of the remove of the Lecture to a Pariſh Church.

Exon, Chicheſter, Peterborough. “For theſe three Dioceſſes, my Lords the Biſhops certifie that all your Majeſty's Inſtructions are carefully obſerv'd; neither do any of them mention any thing amiſs in the general, either for Doctrine or Diſcipline. Only the Biſhop of Exeter hath ſent me up two Copies of the late Libel, intituled, News from Ipſwich, which were ſent thither to a Stationer with blank Covers.

Hereford. “Theſe five Dioceſſes following I have viſited this Year, by my Vicar-General and other Commiſſioners: And for Hereford I find not many things amiſs, tho' the after-change of the Bp. there, which hath of late happen'd, hath done no good among them. But ſome pretenſions there are to certain Cuſtoms, which, I conceive, were better broke than kept: And I ſhall do my beſt to reform them, as I have opportunity, and humbly beg your Majeſty's Aſſiſtance if I want Power. [C. R. Which ye ſhall not want if you need.]

“For St. David's, the Biſhop is now there, and S. David's will take the beſt care he can to ſee all things in Order. But there is one Matthews the Vicar of Penmayn, that preaches againſt the keeping of all Holidays, with divers others as fond or prophane Opinions. The Biſhop hath inhibited him, and if that do not ſerve, I ſhall call him into the High-Commiſſion Court.

“Baronet Rudde is in this Dioceſs, the Son of a late Biſhop there, who is a ſober Gentleman: he hath built him a Chapel, and deſires the Biſhop to Conſecrate it. But his Lordſhip finding one of your Majeſty's Inſtructions to be, that none ſhould keep a Chaplain in his Houſe, but ſuch as are qualified by Law, which he conceives a Baronet is not, hath hitherto forborn to Conſecrate this Chapel, as being to be of ſmall uſe without a Chaplain, and humbly craves Direction herein what he ſhall do. I humbly propoſe to your Majeſty, whether conſidering the Charge this Gentleman hath been at, and the ill Ways which many of them there have to Church, it may not be fit to Conſecrate this Chapel, and then that he may have a Licence to uſe the Miniſter of the Pariſh, or any other lawfully in Orders: Always provided, that he uſe this Chapel but at times of ſome neceſſity, not making himſelf or his Family ſtrangers to the Mother-Church; and that there be a Clauſe expreſſed in the Licence for recalling thereof upon any Abuſe there committed; and that this Licence be taken either from the Biſhop under his Seal, or from the Archbiſhop of the Province. [C. R. Since he hath been at the Charge, and hath ſo good Teſtimony, let him have his Deſire with thoſe Reſtrictions mentioned.]

“For Landaff, there is very little found amiſs; Landaff. only the Biſhop complains, that whereas Mr. Wroth and Mr. Erbury are in the High-Commiſſion for their Schiſmatical Proceedings; the ſlow Proſecution there againſt them, makes both them perſiſt in their By-ways, and their Followers judge them faultleſs. But for this I humbly preſent to your Majeſty this Anſwer, that now the loſs of two Terms by reaſon of the Sickneſs, hath caſt the Proceedings of that Court, as well as of others, behind hand: And there is no Remedy where all things elſe ſtay as well as it.

“In the Dioceſs of St. Aſaph, there is no Com- S. Aſ. plaint but the uſual, that there is great reſort of Recuſants to Holy-Well; and that this Summer the Lady Falkland and her Company came as Pilgrims thither; who were the more obſerv'd, becauſe they travelled on Foot; they diſſembled neither their Quality nor their Errand: And this Boldneſs of theirs is of very ill conſtruction among your Majeſty's People. My humble Suit to your Majeſty is, that whereas I complained of this in open Council in your Majeſty's Preſence, you would now be graciouſly pleaſed, that the Order then reſolved on for her Confinement may be put in execution. [C. R. It is done.]

“For Bangor, I find that Catechiſing was quite Bangor. out of uſe in thoſe remote Parts (the more the pity;) but the Biſhop is now in hope to do much good, and ſees ſome Reformation in that Particular already. And I would ſay for this and the other Dioceſſes in Wales, that much more good might be done there in a Church way, if they were not overborn by the Proceedings of the Court of the Marches there. And this preſent Year in this Dioceſs of Bangor, my Commiſſioners for my Metropolitical Viſitation there complain unto me, that the Power which belongs to my Place,

"hath been in them very much wronged and impeached by that Court. And I do moſt humbly beſeech your Majeſty, in your own good time, to give this my Cauſe a Hearing, if it take not a fair end without that trouble. [C. R. I doubt not but by the Grace of God, to agree theſe Differences by my hearing of them.]

Rocheſter, Glouceſter and Briſtol.

"For Rocheſter, the Biſhop (God comfort him) is very ill of a Palſie, and that I fear hath made him forget his Account. Neither hath the Biſhop of Glouceſter ſent me any, but why I know not; and for Briſtol that See is void.

Coventry and Lichfield.

"For this Dioceſs, I have likewiſe received no Account: But I fear, that whereas the Biſhop was lately complained of to your Majeſty for making waſte of the poor Woods there remaining, he is not over-willing to give an Account of that Particular, nor of the groſs Abuſe committed in the Cathedral Church by the Lady Davis, who I moſt humbly beſeech your Majeſty, may be ſo reſtrained as that ſhe may have no more Power to commit ſuch horrible Prophanations.

"And ſo I moſt humbly ſubmit this my yearly Account of my Province of Canterbury to your Majeſty's Princely Wiſdom."

Many Families transport themſelves to the Weſt-Indies.

Some of the Schiſmatical and factious Spirits, having been ſeverely proſecuted in the Eccleſiaſtical Courts, began to think of taking Refuge in our Foreign Plantations, where their Trade and Humour in Religion might be free to themſelves, till the number of the Families thus Tranſported began to raiſe the Jealouſie of the State, as fearing thoſe Parts of America wherein they propoſed to ſettle, might be ſuch a Receptacle of diſaffected People, as in time to ſet up both for an Eccleſiaſtical and Civil Independence.

A Proclamation to reſtrain them.

Hence April 30. a Proclamation was iſſued forth to reſtrain the diſorderly tranſporting his Majeſty's Subjects to the Plantations within the parts of America, without a Licence from his Majeſty's Commiſſioners, becauſe of the many idle and refractory Humours, whoſe only or principal end was to live without the reach of Authority. And on May 1. an Order was made in Council, "That the Lord Treaſurer of England ſhould take ſpeedy and effectual courſe for the ſtay of eight Ships, now in the River of Thames, prepared to go for New-England; and ſhould likewiſe give Order for the putting on Land all the Paſſengers and Proviſions therein intended for that Voyage." And becauſe ſome of the Clergy under Eccleſiaſtical Cenſures were willing to accept of the ſame Protection and Refuge, therefore another Warrant from the Council was directed to the Lord Admiral "To ſtop all Miniſters unconformable to the Diſcipline and Ceremonies of the Church, who frequently tranſport themſelves to the Summer-Iſlands, and other his Majeſty's Plantations abroad; and that no Clergy Man ſhould be ſuffered to go over without Approbation of the Lords Archbiſhop of Canterbury and Biſhop of London."

This a Grievance.

Now tho' there might ſeem a ſufficient Reaſon of State in theſe Prohibitions, yet they increaſed the Murmurs and Complaints of the People thus reſtrained, and raiſed the Cries of a double Perſecution, to be vexed at home, and not ſuffered to ſeek Peace or Refuge abroad. And there was certainly this unhappy conſequence, that ſome of the principal Refugees holding New-England a Plantation by Patent from the King, drew hither ſuch a Tribe and Colony of their own, that they caſt off all Subjection to the old Engliſh Church, and their Poſterity are not yet reconciled.

Caſe of Baſtwick, Burton & Prynne.

In Trinity Term came on the remarkable Cauſe in Star-Chamber, upon Information of the King's Attorney-General, against John Baſtwick, M. D. Henry Burton, B. D. and William Prynne Bariſter at Law; for writing and publiſhing Seditious, Schiſmatical and Libellous Books againſt the Hierarchy of the Church, and to the Scandal of the Government. The Defendants prepared their Anſwers; but their Council refuſing to ſign them, the Court would not receive them, but ordered that each Perſon ſhould be proceeded againſt pro confeſſo. It was the leſs hardſhip that their Council ſhould decline ſigning thoſe Anſwers which the Parties had drawn up with their own Hands, if we reflect on the want of Temper and Diſcretion in all thoſe Men; and that in Doctor Baſtwick's Anſwer there were theſe Paſſages, The Prelates are Invaders of the King's Prerogative Royal, Contemners and Deſpiſers of the Holy Scriptures, Advancers of Popery, Superſtition, Idolatry and Profaneneſs; they abuſe the King's Authority to the Oppreſſion of his Loyal Subjects, and therein expreſs great Cruelty, Tyranny and Injuſtice; and in the execution of this impious Performance, they ſhew neither Wit, Honeſty nor Temperature; nor are they Servants of God or the King, (as they ought to be indeed) but of the Devil, &c.

Intemperate Men.

Sentence of the Court too ſevere.

The Sentence of the Court was a Fine of 5000 l. upon each Delinquent to the King, with Pillory and Loſs of Ears, and the very Remainder of Ears: After which Suffering, they were committed cloſe Priſoners, one to the Caſtle of Lanceſton in Cornwal, another to the Caſtle of Lancaſter, and a third to Carnarvan Caſtle in Wales; from whence they were afterward remov'd to remote Iſlands, and no Acceſs of Friends allow'd to them. And here, tho' the Inſolence of theſe Men was very great, their Puniſhment was thought extremely to exceed it. Some moderate Penalties might have left them under the Neglect of being bold and impudent Writers. But theſe terrible Blows upon them, raiſed them in the eyes of the People into the Reputation of Sufferers and Confeſſors for the beſt of Cauſes, Religion, Liberty, and Property.

Lord Clarendon's Opinion.

The Lord Clarendon delivers a wiſe and true Opinion of theſe Men, and their Proſecution. "They were three Perſons moſt notorious for their declared Malice againſt the Government of the Church by Biſhops, in their ſeveral Books and Writings, which they had publiſhed to corrupt the People, with Circumſtances very ſcandalous, and in Language very ſcurrilous and impudent; which all Men thought deſerved very exemplary Puniſhment: They were of the three ſeveral Profeſſions which had the moſt Influence upon the People, a Divine, a Common Lawyer, and a Doctor of Phyſick; none of them of Intereſt, or any Eſteem with the worthy part of their ſeveral Profeſſions, having been formerly all look'd upon under Characters of Reproach: yet when they were All ſentenced, and for the execution of that Sentence brought out to be puniſh'd as common and ſignal Rogues, expoſed upon Scaffolds to have their Ears cut off, and their Faces and Foreheads branded with hot Irons (as the pooreſt and moſt mechanick Malefactors uſed to be, when they were not able to redeem themſelves by any Fine for their Treſpaſſes, or to ſatisfie any Damages for the Scandals they had raiſed againſt the good Name and Reputation of others) Men began no more to conſider their Manners, but the Men; and each Profeſſion, with Anger and Indignation enough, thought their Education, and Degrees, and Quality, would have ſecured them from ſuch infamous Judgments, and treaſured up Wrath for the time to come."

Diſcontents in Scotland more inflam'd.

The popular Diſcontents in Scotland were much greater, and ſeem'd owing to theſe Reaſons. Since the Acceſſion of King James to the Crown of England, they ſeem'd to have the Name of Monarchy without a ſingle Perſon; they thought their Prince a ſort of Priſoner in another Kingdom, and their chief Nobility were run away after him: ſo as they had in effect no Court, no Money, no Trade, and therefore no poſſible Content. This (beſide the original Prejudices from their way of Reformation) made

1637. 13 Car. I.

made them now the more averſe to Epiſcopacy and Forms of Prayer, becauſe they were the Rites of the Church of England, from which they were to preſerve themſelves diſtinct and independent. Under theſe jealous Inclinations they had been alarm'd with King James's obtaining an Act for a publick Liturgy in a General Aſſembly at Aberdeen 1616, and ſome Concluſions agreeable to the Engliſh Church in another Aſſembly at Perth 1618, and the bringing their Biſhops to be conſecrated by Engliſh Prelates in 1610, and the inſtituting at that time a High Commiſſion in that Kingdom for the ordering of Cauſes Eccleſiaſtical; and an Abſolution given in England to the Marqueſs of Huntley, who ſtood excommunicate in Scotland; and an Article paſs'd in Parliament 1617, that Whatſoever his Majeſty ſhould determine in the external Government of the Church, with the Advice of the Archbiſhops, Biſhops, and a competent Number of the Miniſtry, ſhould have the Strength of a Law. Theſe Advances toward the Conſtitution of the Church of England in the former Reign, however juſt and reaſonable, had made the People more and more averſe to the Church and Court of England. Under theſe popular Fears and Jealouſies, the King being in Scotland 1633, had committed it to the Care of ſome of the Biſhops there, to provide a Book of Canons and a Liturgy for that Kingdom, to be tranſmitted to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and ſome other Engliſh Biſhops, and after their Approbation, to be confirmed and enjoined by the King (a).

Book of Canons for Scotland.

The Book of Canons, which ſhould have followed the Liturgy (becauſe referring to the Rites and Ceremonies required by it) came prepoſterouſly out before it in 1635, and had many invidious Things in it, ſuch as a Declaration of the unlimited Power, and full perſonal Supremacy, of their Kings; that all Biſhops and Clergy-men ſhould bequeath ſomewhat to the Church; that no Presbyter ſhould reveal any Thing received in Confeſſion; and other Proviſo's very new and odious to the common People, becauſe they could not underſtand 'em. This Diſpoſition of Things and Perſons made it an ill Seaſon for the Reception of the Liturgy that was to be now ſent among them; after it had been compiled in Scotland, and peruſed and amended by three Biſhops in England, and confirmed by the King, and now publiſhed with his Majeſty's Reaſons for enjoining of it, and with Inſtructions to the Biſhops of that Kingdom to proceed with Moderation and Patience in obtaining the good Effects of it.

Firſt Reading of the Common-Prayer in Scotland.

Eaſter-day in this Year had been appointed for the firſt Reading of this Service: but either upon better Conſideration of the Engliſh Court, or rather a ſly Deſign of the Scotch Miniſtry, it was deferred to the 23d of July; on which Day it was begun to be read in the chief Church of St. Giles' in Edinburgh: But immediately the People fell into Clamours and Confuſion, crying out, (b) a Pope, a Pope, Antichriſt, Antichriſt, ſtane him, ſtane him, meaning the Dean of Edinburgh, then reading in the Desk, habited in a Surplice.

Tumult in the Church.

The Biſhop of Edinburgh, who was to preach that Day, ſtept into the Pulpit, and attempted to appeaſe the Tumult; but a Stool was thrown at his Head, diverted by the Hand of one preſent. The Archbiſhop of St. Andrews, and other Lords, could have no Influence on the Mob, till the Provoſt, Bailiffs, and City-Magiſtrates, did with ſome difficulty thruſt out of the Church the chief of the Mutineers, and ſhut the Church Doors againſt them. After which the Dean read the Service, tho' grievouſly interrupted by the Rable, who ſtood knocking at the Doors, and threw in Stones at the Windows, and betrayed all the Fury of an enraged Multitude. The Lords of the Council complained to the King of this Diſorder, and ſpared not to lay the blame of it upon the Biſhops, whoſe late Advances in Power and Revenue, with their Zeal to purſue all Directions from the Engliſh Court, had help'd to make them the more odious to the Commonalty, and indeed the more envied and fear'd by the Nobility and Gentry. Theſe Commotions, tho' inhibited by ſeveral Proclamations, and reſtrained as far as poſſible by the Civil Power, frequently returned with greater Noiſe and Numbers, till they ended at laſt in that Conſpiracy of a Solemn League and Covenant, that was the one great Occaſion of the Civil War.

The ſame Spirit was working hard in England; where, to fall under the Diſpleaſure of the King and the Archbiſhop, was enough to make a Popular Man. This was the Caſe of Williams Bp. of Lincoln, who having highly offended the King, and continually oppoſed Abp. Laud, was the greater Favourite of the Country, and eſpecially of the Puritan Faction; for which Reaſon, and for his Speaking and Writing with a ſingular Freedom, many Reſolutions had been taken at Court to put ſome publick Rebuke upon him.

Caſe of Bp. Williams.

Information had been given in the Court of Star-Chamber, by Sir John Lamb and Dr. Sibthorp, "That "the ſaid Biſhop did give them great Diſcouragement in their Proceedings in the Eccleſiaſtical "Courts againſt the Puritans; and that the Biſhop "asked Sir John Lamb, What kind of People thoſe "Puritans were of whom he complain'd? and whether they did not pay the Loan-Money? To which "Sir John anſwered, that they did indeed conform "in that Point, and paid their Money; but nevertheleſs they were Puritans, not conformable to "the Church. To which the Biſhop replied, If "they pay their Monies ſo readily to the King, the "Puritans are the King's beſt Subjects: And I am "ſure (ſaid the Biſhop) the Puritans will carry "all at laſt." But as to this Information, either the Matter was thought too frivolous, or even ſuch a poor Story wanted ſufficient Teſtimony to ſupport it: And therefore the Attorney-General let fall this firſt Bill, and preferred a ſecond againſt him for Tampering with the King's Witneſſes; and upon that Iſſue the Cauſe came to Hearing on July 11. and held nine Days debate, with a great Concourſe of People who pitied the Biſhop, as a Man mark'd out for a ſacrifice to the Court; and had the greater Veneration for him, when they found the Penalty ſo much exceeding the Offence, as ten thouſand Pounds Fine to the King's Majeſty, and a thouſand Marks to Sir John Mounſon, Suſpenſion from all Office and Benefice, and Impriſonment in the Tower during the King's pleaſure. All which was executed without any Mitigation, till at laſt he was releas'd and reſtor'd to pleaſe the People in the times of Danger. But neither the People, nor he himſelf, could forget, or heartily forgive, the Severities uſed to him.

(b) Mr. *Sam. No, the Deſign was to enter them of the King's Religion, and then they might have had a new Edition of their Common-Prayer Book the next Year; and then the Reaſon of Uniformity holding alike in both Kingdoms, ours ought to be like theirs. But the old Herb Woman at Edinburgh put an End to that Game, for hearing the Archbiſhop, who watched the Rubrick, directing him that Read, to read the Collect for the Day: She made a groſs Miſtake, and cryed, The Diel Collick in the Wemb of thee, and withal threw her Cricket Stool at his Head, which gave a Beginning to the War in Scotland.

No foreign Affairs of this Year had any Influence on England, ſave that the Prince Elector, and his Brother Prince Rupert departed from our Court June 26. for Holland; where getting together a ſmall Army, they march'd into Weſtphalia, and beſieged Lingea, but were fought by the Imperial General Haliſfeld, and received a perfect Defeat, two thouſand ſlain, Prince Rupert and the Lord Craven taken Priſoners, and the Elector himſelf very hardly eſcaping.

State of Religion 1637.

As to the Eccleſiaſtical Matters of this Year: The Proceedings in the Spiritual Courts, not only againſt open Separatiſts and profeſs'd Puritans, but even againſt many true Members of the Church that did not come up to new Meaſures, were ſo ſtrict and ſevere, that it gave occaſion to ſtrike at the Juriſdiction of thoſe Courts, and to plead that they were held illegally, becauſe not kept by Patent under the Broad-Seal, and becauſe the Proceſſes were not in the King's Name. Theſe Objections being publickly made in the Star-Chamber, an Order was there made to have the Opinion of the Judges in this Caſe; who returned the following Certificate into the Star-Chamber, dated primo Julii 1637.

Juriſdiction of Eccleſiaſtical Courts queſtioned.

May it pleaſe your Lordſhips,

• Opinion of the Judges.

ACcording to your Lordſhip's Order made in his Majeſty's Court of Star-Chamber the 12th of May laſt, we have taken Conſideration of the Particulars wherein our Opinions are required by the ſaid Order, aad we have all agreed;

That Proceſſes may iſſue out of the Eccleſiaſtical Courts in the Name of Biſhops; And that a Patent under the Great Seal is not neceſſary for the keeping of the ſaid Eccleſiaſtical Courts, or for the enabling of Citations, Suſpenſions, Excommunications, or other Cenſures of the Church: And that it is not neceſſary that Summons, Citations, or other Proceſſes Eccleſiaſtical in the ſaid Courts, or Inſtitutions or Inductions to Benefices, or Correction of Eccleſiaſtical Offences by Cenſure in thoſe Courts, be in the King's Name, or with the Stile of the King, or under the King's Seal, or that their Seals of Office have in them the King's Arms: And that the Statute of primo Edwardi ſexti cap. 2. which enacted the contrary, is not now in force.

We are alſo of Opinion, That the Biſhops, Archdeacons, and other Eccleſiaſtical Perſons, may keep their Viſitations, as uſually they have done, without Commiſſion under the Great Seal of England ſo to do.

This Certificate was enrolled in the Courts of Exchequer, King's-Bench, and Common-Pleas; and regiſtred in the Courts of High-Commiſſion and Star-Chamber. And then the King iſſued a Proclamation dated Auguſt 18. in the 13th Year of his Reign, that " Whereas in ſome of the libellous Books and Pamphlets lately publiſhed, the moſt Reverend Fathers " in God the Lords Archbiſhops and Biſhops of this " Realm are ſaid to have uſurped upon his Maje- " ſty's Prerogative Royal, and to have proceeded in " the High Commiſſion and other Eccleſiaſtical Courts " contrary to the Laws and Statutes of this Realm: " Therefore his Royal Majeſty hath thought fit, " with Advice of his Council, that a publick De- " claration of theſe the Opinions and Reſolutions " of his Reverend and Learned Judges, being agree- " able to the Judgment and Reſolutions of former " Times, ſhould be made known to all his Subjects, " as well to vindicate the Legal Proceedings of his " Eccleſiaſtical Courts and Miniſters from the un- " juſt and ſcandalous Imputation of invading or in- " trenching on his Royal Prerogative, as to ſettle " the Minds and ſtop the Mouths of all unquiet " Spirits, that for the future they preſume not to " cenſure his Eccleſiaſtical Courts or Miniſters in " theſe their juſt and warranted Proceedings. And " hereof his Majeſty admoniſheth all his Subjects to " take warning, as they ſhall anſwer the contrary " at their Perils."

King's Proclamation to aſſert the Legality of holding Eccleſiaſt. Courts.

Another Popular Outcry againſt Archbiſhop Laud and the Biſhops directed by him, was Innovation in Matters of Religion; few People being willing to diſtinguiſh between arbitrary Alterations and the reſtoring an antecedent Decency and Order: (a) Which latter was undoubtedly the good Archbiſhop's Meaning. This Charge, and the Vindication from it, will beſt appear from Archbiſhop Laud's Speech at the Cenſure of Baſtwick, Burton, and Prynne; in which the Archbiſhop recites the ſeveral Inſtances of Innovation that his Adverſaries had objected to him, and anſwers them with great Strength and Candour.

Charge of Innovation.

The firſt Innovation was, that the laſt Year's Faſt was enjoined to be without Sermons in London, the Suburbs, and other infected Places, contrary to the Orders for other faſts in former times. To which the Archbiſhop anſwered, That it was ſo concluded at the Council-Table, by reaſon that infected Perſons, known in their own Pariſhes, might not take occaſion on thoſe by-days to run to other Churches.

" The ſecond Innovation was, That Wedneſday " was appointed for the Faſt-Day, and that this was done " with this Intention, by the Example of this Faſt with- " out Preaching; to ſuppreſs all the Wedneſday Lectures " in London. To which it was anſwered, that Wed- " neſday was a uſual Day of Faſt, yet the Prelates " named not the Day, but the Lord-Keeper who had " no Intention of ſuppreſſing Wedneſdays Lectures; " nor was one of them yet ſuppreſt.

(a) As Chancellor of Oxford, he was very apprehenſive of the Attempts and Succeſſes of the Jeſuits, in ſeducing of young Scholars, and ſending them beyond the Seas. He endors'd the Copy of a Letter thus. My Letter to the Vice-Chancellor or (Dr. Frewen) for Watchfulneſs againſt Jeſuits. Feb. 7.—You had need be very careful of the Univerſity; for while none of you think of it, the Jeſuits and their Inſtruments are buſie thereabouts. And at this preſent, they have ſeduced a young Youth of Exeter College. I have forgotten his Name, but it begins with a W. [in the Margin his Name is Weale] and the young Organiſt of St. John's, who ſlipt away while the Preſident was at Sarum. I have granted an Attachment againſt them, if they can light upon them before they take Shipping, as alſo againſt Cherriton, for that I hear is his Name who ſeduced them. You had need be very careful in theſe Buſineſſes, for elſe we ſhall very deſervedly hear of it.—— W. Cant. Lambeth Feb. 7. 1638. Hiſtory of Troubles, and Tryal of Archbiſhop Laud. Fol. p. 610.

So likewiſe in another Letter to the Vice-Chancellor, Dr. Bayly dat. Aug. 29. 1637. he charged him to make diſcovery of the unworthy practices, for the ſeducing of Youths in that Univerſity, by lurking Jeſuits.

" The

1637. 13 Car. I.

"The third Innovation was, That the Prayer for ſeaſonable Weather was purged out of this laſt Faſt-Book, which was one cauſe of Shipwrecks and tempeſtuous Weather. Anſwered, when the Book was ſet out, the Weather was very ſeaſonable. And it was not the Cuſtom of the Church, nor fit in it ſelf, to pray for ſeaſonable Weather when we have it, but when we want it.

"The Fourth Innovation was, that there was one very uſeful Collect left out, and a Clauſe omitted in another. Anſwer, the Abp. and Biſhops under the King had Power to put in or leave out whatever they thought fit for the preſent Occaſion; provided nothing were done contrary to the Doctrine or Diſcipline of the Church of England. And there were ſpecial Reaſons at that time to omit the ſaid Collect and Clauſe.

"The Fifth Innovation was, that in the ſixth Order for the Faſt, there was a Paſſage left out concerning the Abuſe of Faſting in relation to merit. Anſwer, that in this Age and Kingdom, there was little Opinion of Meriting by Faſting, rather a Contempt and Scorn upon it.

"The Sixth Innovation was, that the Lady Elizabeth, and her Princely Children were daſhed out of the new Collect, whereas they were in the Collect of the former Book. Anſwer, they were left out of the Collect in latter Editions of the Common-Prayer Book, as well as in the Book for the Faſt, and this by the King's Command.

"The Seventh Innovation was, that theſe Words [who art the Father of thine Elect and of their Seed] are changed in the Preface of that Collect, which is for the Prince and the King's Children. And that this was done by the Prelates to exclude the King's Children out of the Number of God's Elect, which was intolerable Impiety and horrid Treaſon. The Archbiſhop anſwers, that this Alteration was made in his Predeceſſor's time, and that by his Majeſty's ſpecial Direction.

"The Eighth Innovation was, That in the Epiſtle the Sunday before Eaſter, the Prelates have put out IN and made it AT the Name of Jeſus every Knee ſhall bow; which Alteration is directly againſt the Act of Parliament. Anſwered, in the new Tranſlation of King James, and even in the Geneva Bible, printed 1557, it is at the Name, &c.

"The Ninth Innovation was, that two Places are changed in the Prayers ſet forth for the fifth of November, and ordered to be read by Act of Parliament. The firſt place changed thus [Root out that Babyloniſh and Antichriſtian Sect which ſay of Jeruſalem, &c.] into this form of Words [Root out that Babyloniſh and Antichriſtian Sect of them which ſay, &c.] The ſecond place went thus in the old [Cut off theſe workers of Iniquity, whoſe Religion is Rebellion.] But in the Book printed 1635, 'tis thus altered, [Cut off thoſe Workers of Iniquity, who turn Religion into Rebellion.] Anſwer, the Book was never order'd to be read by Act of Parliament; the Act only commanded Prayers and Thankſgivings, but the Form was left to the Church. The Alteration of both thoſe Phraſes was by the King's Warrant, without the Archbiſhops moving for it, and there were very good Reaſons for ſoftning thoſe Expreſſions.

"The Tenth Innovation was, That the Prayer for the Navy is left out of the late Book for the Faſt. Anſwer, with good Reaſon; becauſe the King had then no declared Enemy, nor had he any Navy at Sea.

"The Eleventh Innovation, The reading of the ſecond Service at the Communion Table or the Altar. Anſwer, it was on the ancient Cuſtom alter'd of late by the Emiſſaries of the Faction; and it is agreeable to the Rubrick of the Common-Prayer.

"A Twelfth Innovation, Bowing or doing Reverence at firſt coming into the Church, or at nearer approaches to the Holy Table; wherein People muſt worſhip the Table, or God knows what. Anſwer, it is a decent Act of bodily Worſhip, intended to God alone, and of ancient practice.

"A Thirteenth Innovation, The placing of the Holy Table Altar-wiſe at the upper End of the Chancel, ſetting it North and South, and placing a Rail before it, which was done to advance and uſher in Popery. Anſwer, this is agreeable to the Practice and Command and Canon of the Church of England: Having been ſo in the Royal Chapels, and divers Cathedrals ever ſince the Reformation.

"The Fourteenth and laſt Innovation was ſaid to be, that the Prelates to juſtifie their Proceedings, have forged a new Article of Religion brought from Rome (which gives them full power to alter the Doctrine and Diſcipline of our Church at a Blow) and have foiſted it into the beginning of the twentieth Article; [The Church hath Power to decree Rites and Ceremonies, and Authority in matter of Faith.] a Forgery fit to be examined, and deeply cenſured; for it is not to be found in the Latin or Engliſh Articles of Ed. VI. or Queen Elizabeth. Anſwer, a heavy Charge, but utterly falſe: For this Affirmative Clauſe of the Churches Power is expreſly in the printed and in the original Copy of the Articles agreed on 1563. left out indeed in the printed Articles of 1571. Latin and Engliſh, which could not be done without the malicious Cunning of the oppoſite Faction; for in the Copy to which the Lower-Houſe of Convocation ſubſcribed in 1571. the Clauſe is inſerted, and in moſt Editions ſince that time. Therefore (ſaid the Archbiſhop) I do here openly in the Star-Chamber, charge upon that Pure Sect this foul Corruption of falſifying the Articles of the Church of England, let them take it off as they can."

Force of Prejudice and Faction.

This Account ſumms up all the ſtrength of the Popular Objections againſt the Archbiſhop and Biſhops for their Inclination and Attempts toward Superſtitious Innovations. And when we conſider how poor and frivolous they are, it is a Subject of Wonder how the Leaders of the Faction could improve Feathers and Flies into ſuch dreadful Monſters, and affright People with Shadows as effectually as with the moſt real and ſubſtantial Beings. But ſuch is the Art of Managers in an ill Cauſe; to raiſe Apparitions that terrifie more than living Bodies: And ſuch is the Infirmity of the lower part of Mankind, that they ſooner believe their Imagination than their Eyes; and to apprehend an Evil makes a deeper impreſſion than the very feeling of it. 'Tis certain Archbiſhop Laud and his Brethren meant nothing but Decency and Uniformity; but then indeed they preſſed them with more Zeal than the things deſerved, while not expreſly enjoin'd; and this contending for them with vehemence made People ſuſpect a dangerous deſign in them: ſoft and ſlower Meaſures might have done. We have ſince ſeen moſt of thoſe Externals introduc'd and quietly eſtabliſh'd into Cuſtom; becauſe they have been recommended rather than enforc'd, and Men without impoſition have been allowed to receive them.

Abp. Laud an utter Enemy to Popery.

Nay, Archbiſhop Laud was ſo far from the deſigns of Popery, that he was at this time the great Obſtructer of it (a): The Bigotry of the Queen for her French Religion, and the King's entire Affection for her, had gained the Papiſts ſuch an influence at Court, that they began to be inſolent and very aſſuming; and they would have triumph'd more in their Strength and Number, if the good Abp. had not interpos'd; and at the very Council-Table took the courage to uſe what he himſelf in his Diary calls free Speech to the King, concerning the encreaſing of the Roman Party, the freedom of Denmark Houſe, the Carriage of Mr. Walter Mountague and Sir Toby Mathew: And ſays he, the Queen was acquainted with all that I ſaid that very Night, and highly diſpleaſed, and ſo continues. It is ſaid farther by a Writer of good credit, that "the Archbiſhop preſented a Roll to the King of all the Queen's Officers and other Courtiers, who countenanced and promoted Popery; to which the King profeſſed, that he had it in his Mind to have referred the Conſideration thereof to the Board from his own Obſervation, and commanded them all to ſee it reformed." This bold Integrity of the Archbiſhop had a good Effect, for on December 20. the King iſſued out a Proclamation to ſignify, how Proclamation againſt Popery.

"Finding of late that ſome of his natural born Subjects have abuſed his Majeſty's Princely Goodneſs, through the Eaſe which they enjoy under his gracious and mild Government, by withdrawing ſundry of his Subjects to the Roman Superſtition, and to forſake the Church of England; and likewiſe by reſorting to Maſſes and Service celebrated according to the Rites of the Church of Rome, expreſly contrary to the Law of this Realm: for Prevention whereof for the time to come, and for Preſervation of Religion as it is eſtabliſhed in the Church of England, which his Majeſty is reſolved conſtantly to maintain; the King therefore hath thought fit to ſet forth this Declaration of his Royal Will and Pleaſure, and doth expreſly command all Perſons, Clerks, and Laicks, that they from henceforth forbear to attempt to withdraw any the King's Subjects from the Religion that is now profeſſed. And the King doth declare, That if any of the Roman Party ſhall from henceforth give Scandal by celebrating or hearing of any Maſs or Maſſes, that then his Majeſty will cauſe to be put in Execution againſt ſuch contumacious Perſons, thoſe Penalties which by the Laws are inflicted."

The King heartily averſe to Popery.

This Proclamation, tho' occaſioned by the generous Freedom of Abp. Laud, was agreeable to the Opinion and voluntary Inclinations of the King himſelf. Of whom the Lord Clarendon gives this juſt Character: "The King was always the moſt punctual Obſerver of all Decency in his Devotion, and the ſtricteſt Promoter of the Ceremonies of the Church, as believing in his Soul the Church of England to be inſtituted the neareſt to the Practice of the Apoſtles, and the beſt for the Propagation and Advancement of Chriſtian Religion, of any Church in the World. And on the other hand, no Man was more averſe from the Romiſh Church than he was, nor better underſtood the Motives of their Separation from us, and Animoſity againſt us."

Abp's Account of his Prov. 1637.

The remaining State of Church Affairs for this Year is beſt ſhewn in this Account of his Province given by the Abp. to the King.

"May it pleaſe your moſt gracious Majeſty,

"According to your Commands in your Inſtructions publiſhed for the Good of the Clergy, and my bounden Duty, I here preſent my annual Account for the Province of Canterbury for the Year laſt paſt, 1637.

"And firſt to begin with my own Dioceſs: I muſt give your Majeſty to underſtand, that at and about Aſhford in Kent, the Separatiſts continue to hold their Conventicles, notwithſtanding the Excommunication of ſo many of them as have been diſcovered. They are all of the poorer ſort, very ſimple, ſo that I am utterly to ſeek what to do with them. Two or three of their principal Ringleaders, Brewer, Fenner, and Turner, have long been in Priſon; and it was once thought fit to proceed againſt them by the Statute for Abjuration: But I do much doubt, they are ſo ignorantly wilful, that they will return into the Kingdom, and do a great deal more hurt, before they will again be taken. And not long ſince Brewer ſlipt out of Priſon, and went to Rocheſter and other Parts of Kent, and held Conventicles, and put a great many ſimple People, eſpecially Women, into great Diſtempers againſt the Church. He is taken again, and was called before the High Commiſſion, where he ſtood ſilent, but in ſuch a jeering ſcornful manner, as I ſcarce ever ſaw the like: So in Priſon he remains." [To which the King put this Note] Keep thoſe particular Perſons faſt until ye think what to do with the reſt.

1637. 13 Car. I.

"In the Church-yard of the ſame Town a Butcher's Slaughter-houſe opened, to the great Annoyance of that Place; which I have commanded ſhould be remedied, and the Door ſhut up.

"At Biddenden I have ſuſpended Richard Warren the School-maſter, for refuſing the Oath of Allegiance and of Canonical Obedience, and to Subſcribe to the Articles. Beſides, this preciſe Man will read nothing but Divinity to his Scholars; no not ſo much as the Grammar Rules, unleſs Mars, Bacchus, Apollo, and Pol, Ædepol, may be blotted out.

"The Strangers in Canterbury do not ſo much reſort to their Pariſh-Churches as formerly they did, at my firſt giving of my Injunctions. But Viſiting this Year, I have given a publick and ſtrict Charge that the Delinquents be preſented and puniſhed if they do not their Duty in that behalf.

"There is one dwelling in Addiſham, a married Man, called by the Name of Thomas Jordan: He was formerly called Thomas Mounton, becauſe he was found in the Church-porch in Swadling-Cloaths; left there, in all likelihood, by his Mother, who was ſome Beggar or Strumpet. It is believed he was never Chriſtened: I have therefore given Order that he ſhall be Chriſtened with that Caution which is preſcribed in the Book of Common-Prayer where the Baptiſm is doubtful.

"About Sittingborn there are more Recuſants than in any other part of my Dioceſs: And the Lady Roper Dowager is thought to be a great means of the increaſe of them. But I have given ſtrict Charge that they be carefully preſented according to Law.

"There is ſtill a Remainder of Schiſmaticks in Egerton, and the Pariſhes adjacent: But they are as mean People as thoſe about Aſhford; and I am as much to ſeek what to do with them.

London.

"My Lord Treaſurer complains, that he hath little Aſſiſtance of his Arch-deacons; and I believe it to be true: and ſhall therefore, if your Majeſty think fit, cauſe Letters to be written to them to awake them to their Duties. [C. R. It is moſt fit.]

Diſtractions in Scotland.

The Year 1638. was taken up with the Diſtractions in Scotland, which toward the end of the former Year were grown ſo formidable, that in January his Majeſty ſent the Earl of Roxborough, Lord Privy Seal to Scotland, with certain Inſtructions to the Council, who were to meet at Dalkeith, to conſider of the diſordered Affairs of that Kingdom. The Council were ſo oppreſſed with Crowds of People, and daily Inſults of them, that at Sterling, on Febr. 19. they iſſued a Proclamation for diſperſing the dangerous Tumults there aſſembled, and to aſſure the King's Subjects of his Majeſty's Sincerity toward the Religion eſtabliſhed in that Kingdom. But on the Publication of it, ſeveral of the Noblemen, Barons, Miniſters, and Burgers, ſet out a Proteſtation againſt it, and inſiſted that, "1. They might have immediate Recourſe to their ſacred Sovereign, to preſent their Grievances. 2. That the Archbiſhops and Biſhops Parties complained upon, ſhould not be reputed or eſteemed lawful Judges to ſit in any Judicatory upon any of the Supplicants. 3. That no Act or Proclamation paſs'd in Preſence of the Archbiſhops and Biſhops ſhould be any ways prejudicial to them. 4. That neither They nor their Adherents ſhould incur any Proteſtation.

" Danger in Life or Lands, nor any other Pains, " for not obſerving Acts, Books, Canons, &c. in- " troduced without General Aſſemblies or Acts of " Parliament. 5. That the Inconveniences falling " out upon preſſing the Innovations, ſhould not be " imputed to them, who ſought only for Reforma- " tion. 6. That their Requeſts proceeding from " Conſcience, and a due Reſpect to his Majeſty's " Honour, called only for Redreſs of their preſ- " ſing Grievances." (a)

Tables in Edinburgh. After this Proteſtation, they erected a great number of Tables (as they call'd them) in Edinburgh; Four Principals, One of the Nobility, Another of the Gentry, a Third of the Boroughs, and a Fourth of the Miniſters; with ſubordinate Tables of the Gentry, according to their ſeveral Shires. Theſe diſtinct Tables or Committees did conſult of what they thought fit to be propounded at the General Table, which conſiſted of ſeveral Commiſſioners choſen from the four principal Tables. And in theſe Cabals they proceeded in Framing and Subſcribing of their Covenant, under this Title; The Solemn League and Covenant. Confeſſion of Faith of the Kirk of Scotland, Subſcribed at firſt by the King's Majeſty and his Houſhold in the Year of God 1580; thereafter by Perſons of all Ranks in the Year 1581, by Ordinance of the Lords of the Secret Council, and Acts of the General Aſſembly: Subſcribed again by all ſorts of Perſons in the Year 1590, by a new Ordinance of Council, at the Deſire of the General Aſſembly: with a General Band for Maintenance of the true Religion and the King's Perſon; and now Subſcribed in the Year 1638, by us Noblemen, Barons, Gentlemen, Burgeſſes, Miniſters, and Commons, under ſubſcribing: Together with our Reſolution and Promiſes for the Cauſes after ſpecified, to maintain the ſaid true Religion and the King's Majeſty, according to the Confeſſion aforeſaid, and Acts of Parliament, the Tenure whereof here followeth.

W*E All and every one of us under-written do proteſt, that after long and due Examination of our own Conſciences in Matters of true and falſe Religion, we are now throughly reſolved of the Truth by the Word and Spirit of God*, &c.

Miſchiefs of it. This ſolemn League and Covenant was indeed the Band of Iniquity that confederated all the Malecontents in both Kingdoms into a Civil War. The King's Declaration calls it, The firſt Dung which from theſe Stables was thrown upon the face of Authority and Government, that lewd Covenant and ſeditious Band annexed to it. This Teſt grew ſo very Popular, that it was ſworn to by Multitudes at Edinburgh in February, and ſent away through all the Country to be Subſcribed, according to that Example. The Council, alarm'd at the Heats of the People, appointed a ſolemn Meeting on March 1. at Sterling. But when the Day came, the Lord Chancellour ſent his Excuſe, and the reſt of the Biſhops, except Brechin, declined to come. However, the Lords of the Council agreed upon Inſtructions to Sir John Hamilton, to go to the King and acquaint him with Proceedings, and to declare their Opinion, that the Cauſes of the general Combuſtions in that Country, were the Fears apprehended of Innovation by occaſion of the Service-Book, Book of Canons, and High Commiſſion. And therefore his Majeſty may pleaſe to declare, that he will take Trial of his Subjects Grievances, and in the mean time not preſs or urge them therewith. Theſe Inſtructions given by the whole Council, were ſeconded by a private Letter to the King ſigned by Traquair and Roxborough, ſignifying, that the general Combuſtion was come to ſuch a height, and daily like to encreaſe more and more, that they ſaw no probability of Force or Power to repreſs the Fury, except his Majeſty would be graciouſly pleaſed, by ſome Act of his own, to ſecure them from that which they ſeem'd ſo much to apprehend by the In-bringing of the Books of Common-Prayer and Canons. (b) 1638. 14 Car. I.

And indeed it ſeems probable, that if the King had firſt broke the Storm by that free Compliance to it, he might have made things quiet enough to have gain'd leiſure for a firmer Peace and Settlement. But the Denial of one Requeſt, made them improve into continual new Wants and Deſires; till the Granting at laſt of what was at firſt Refus'd, was thought to be their own Victory, not the King's Conceſſion; and therefore did but fluſh them into more and more Demands of Satisfaction. It ſeems a ſtanding Policy for Princes to gratifie the firſt Petitions for Redreſs of any Grievance, or upon Denial once made to juſtifie that Denial; for, when Subjects find they can extort Favours, they know not when to deſiſt from extorting of them.

Upon Sir John Hamilton's coming to Whitehall, and communicating his Buſineſs, his Majeſty conſulted with a ſelect Council, and reſolved to ſend (c) Marqueſs Hamilton as High Commiſſioner to Scotland, for the Service of quieting the Fury of the People. On May 7. Letters were ſent into Scotland to give notice of taking theſe Meaſures; and on May 16. the Marqueſs received his Inſtructions, and his Commiſſion on May 20. and began his Journey May 26. Coming to Berwick June 3. the Earl of Roxborough met him, and told him the People would not be pacified without the Covenant allowed to them, Articles of Perth annulled, Service-Book and Canons aboliſhed, and Epiſcopacy limited, all to be done in a General Aſſembly and Parliament to be ſuddenly called. The Marqueſs could not think it honourable to come ſo ſoon to any Terms; ſo with very ſmall Attendance he came firſt to Dalkeith, and thence, upon Supplication of the Citizens of Edinburgh, to the King's Palace at Hally-Rood-Houſe, where he offer'd to the Covenanters theſe two Propoſitions: 1. What they ſhould expect to hear in the King's Name for accommodating their Grievances? 2. What might be expected from them for returning to their former Obedience, eſpecially in renouncing and delivering up their late Covenant? To which they would give no other Anſwer, but that the only Method of Satisfaction muſt be a General Aſſembly and Parliament. And thereupon they put themſelves into ſuch a poſture of Defence, that the High Commiſſioner, to avoid Impriſonment in his Palace, was glad to retire to Dalkeith, and to ſend to the King for new Inſtructions. Upon which Terrors, his Majeſty order'd him to publiſh his Royal Declaration, that He would neither now nor hereafter preſs the Practice of the Service-Book, or Canons, or any thing of that nature, but in ſuch a fair and legal way as ſhould ſatisfie all his loving Subjects (d.) And for the High Commiſſion, he would ſo rectifie it, that it ſhould never impugn the Laws, nor be any Grievance. Theſe Promiſes could give no Satisfaction;

Marqueſs of Hamilton ſent High Commiſſioner into Scotland.

(c) It is but a melancholy Story, told upon Oath by Andrew ab Habernfeld to Sir William Boſwell, to be communicated to the King, and the Archbiſhop of Canterbury in September, 1640. that in Commotions of Scotland, the Marqueſs of Hamilton was often ſent hither in the King's Name, and to interpoſe the Royal Authority, toward mitigating the Heats of the People, and came as often back again to no purpoſe. For his Chaplain at that time repaired to his [i. e. a Popiſh Cabal in London] and communicated ſome things in private with Maſter Con, a Scot, the Pope's Legate. I askt him one Day in jeſt, Whether the Jews could agree with the Samaritans? Maſter Con anſwered, I wiſh all Miniſters were ſuch as he is.

(d) Dr. Plume, in the Life of Biſhop Hacket, tells us, his Lordſhip often wiſht that the Service-Book had never been ſent into Scotland, which he would often bewail in the Words of his Learned Friend Mr. Selden, Liturgia infœliciſſime ad Scotiam miſſa.

but

1638. 14 Car.I. but on June 28. they anſwered them with a very bold Proteſtation, that they expected a more gracious and ſatisfactory Anſwer, and would in the mean time adhere to their Confeſſion of Faith and ſolemn Covenant. The Marqueſs finding little hopes of Accommodation, propoſed to go into England, and fetch more immediate Inſtructions from the King. He began his Journey on July 6. and coming directly to Court, he gave a full Account of the Condition of that Kingdom, and of the Strength and Rage of the Covenanters, and of the Fears and Inconſtancy of many of the ſecret Council: And therefore, under theſe Difficulties, he adviſed the King to renew the Confeſſion of Faith ratified in Parliament 1567, and to enlarge his Inſtructions for the indicting a free General Aſſembly, and for diſcharging the Uſe of the Service-Book, Book of Canons, and the Practice of the High Commiſſion. With theſe Powers, and with Letters and Declarations of the King, the Marqueſs comes back to Edinburgh on Aug. 10. where he found things in a much worſe poſture than he had left them: for, the Covenanters had come to publick Reſolutions, "That "they would have a General Aſſembly, that the "Biſhops ſhould have no Vote in it, that Epiſco-"pacy ſhould be aboliſhed, the Articles of Perth "condemned, and all Perſons, under pain of Ex-"communication, ſhould take the Covenant." The Marqueſs endeavoured to convince them, that the Royal Anſwer which he had brought was full of Grace and Goodneſs; and to aſſure them, that immediately upon their Return to Obedience, he would indict an Aſſembly and Parliament. He found them ſo refractory, and ſo preſſing upon him, that on Auguſt 20. he deſired twenty Days time to go again to Court, and bring a fuller Anſwer from his Majeſty: and on Auguſt 25. went toward London, carrying with him Articles of Advice offer'd to the King by three Lords on whoſe Fidelity he moſt depended, Traquair, Roxborough, and Southesk, who propoſed to diſcharge the Service-Book, Canons, and High Commiſſion; to forbear preſſing the five Articles of Perth; to revive the Confeſſion of Faith with a Covenant as ſign'd by King James, and ſo upon the Word of a King to pardon what was paſt. The Marqueſs at Court urged the King to the like Compliance, and obtained new Inſtructions dated Sept. 9. to impower him to do all that was ſo adviſed.

Marqueſs of Hamilton comes back to give the King an Account.

Returns to Scotland.

Finds things worſe.

Goes away again to England.

Prevails with the King for greater Conceſſions.

On Sept. 17. the Marqueſs came back to Haly-Rood-Houſe; and being attended by the Heads of the Covenanters on Sept. 21. he told them, the King had granted them all that they deſired, and more alſo, a free Aſſembly and Parliament, which ſhould be immediately indicted. Upon this gracious Condeſcenſion, they could not but ſeem to be ſatisfied, and yet reſolved to quarrel on; therefore they preſſed the Marqueſs to deſiſt from renewing the Confeſſion of Faith, pretending this would diſſatisfie a great many of their Party. But the Marqueſs calling a Council, found it carried by Vote, that the Confeſſion of Faith ſhould be preſently ſigned, the Proclamation of Grace publiſhed, and a General Aſſembly to meet at Glaſcow 21. Nov. and a Parliament at Edinburgh 15. May following. The Epiſcopal Party foreſaw they ſhould be run down in the General Aſſembly, and therefore preſſed the Marqueſs to prorogue it, who referred the Matter to his Majeſty: the King ſaid his Reputation was concern'd in keeping the Day, and he would by no means alter it. The Covenanters being thus aſſured of their time, boldly moved the High Commiſſioner for a Warrant to cite the Biſhops to appear before the Aſſembly. The Marqueſs declining this, they addreſs'd themſelves to the Presbytery of Edinburgh, who gave Warrant for a Summons ſtuff'd with the moſt abominable Scandals, citing the Biſhops as guilty of Hereſie, Simony, Perjury, Inceſt, Adultery, Fornication, Breach of Sabbath, &c.

The Scots never to be ſatisfied.

The Marqueſs went toward Glaſcow on Nov. 16. and required the King's Advocate to prepare himſelf there to defend Epiſcopacy to be according to the Laws of Scotland: but his Anſwer was, that it went againſt his Conſcience ſo to do; and therefore he was prevail'd with not to go. So potent was the Faction, that the King's neareſt Miniſters and Officers were drawn into it. 1638. 14 Car.I.

The K.'s Advocate would not defend Epiſcopacy.

The General Aſſembly began on the Day appointed Novemb. 21. where the Marqueſs ſitting as King's Commiſſioner on a raiſed Seat, with his Aſſeſſors about him, order'd his Commiſſion to be read dated at Oatland July 29. and the King's Letter to the Aſſembly, dated at Whitehall Oct. 29. and then made a Speech to wipe off the Aſperſions caſt upon the King, and to give Aſſurances of their Religion and Liberties: and then tender'd the Paper containing his Majeſty's gracious Conceſſions to them. Then Mr. Alexander Henderſon was choſen Moderator, and Mr. Archibald Johnſon Clerk Regiſter. The Biſhops cited to the Aſſembly put in their Declinator, which was read Nov. 27. the Marqueſs in a Speech recommending the Neceſſity of it, and the Strength of the Reaſons contained in it. But the Moderator, in return, deplored the hardneſs of the Biſhops hearts; and one of the Clerks of the Seſſion thunder'd out a verbal Proteſtation, that they would purſue their Libel againſt the Biſhops as long as they had Lives and Fortunes. The Marqueſs ſeeing their inſolent Demeanour, declares to the Lords of the Council Nov. 28. his Reſolution to diſſolve the Aſſembly: and accordingly the ſame Day he went to the Church where they ſat, and after a long Speech againſt the Illegality and Nullity of their Proceedings, he concluded with Diſſolving the Aſſembly in his Majeſty's Name, and diſcharging their farther Proceedings under pain of Treaſon. The Moderator and the Earl of Rothes made Anſwer, that they were ſorry he left them, but their Conſciences bore them witneſs they had hitherto done nothing amiſs, and therefore would not deſert the Work of the Lord. Accordingly they form'd A Proteſtation of the General Aſſembly of the Church of Scotland, made in the high Kirk and at the Market Croſs of Glaſcow, Nov. 29. 1638. wherein they declared for a freedom of uninterrupted Sitting; and for his Majeſty to contramand, was to prejudge the Prerogative of Jeſus Chriſt, and the Liberties of the Kirk. So they continued Sitting, and went impetuouſly on, to declare ſix former General Aſſemblies to be null and void; to condemn all Arminian Tenets, without defining what they were; to deprive the Archbiſhop of St. Andrews, and the Biſhops of Galloway and Brechin, &c. to aboliſh Epiſcopal Government, as inconſiſtent with the Law and Church of the Kingdom of Scotland; and many other extravagant and vile things. The King publiſhed a Declaration againſt their illegal Proceedings, dated Decemb. 8. to which the Aſſembly made a long Proteſtation Decemb. 18. and ſet up now for a Sovereign Independent Power.

General Aſſembly meets.

High Commiſſioner diſſolves the General Aſſembly.

But they will not be Diſſolved.

Hamilton, the King's Commiſſioner, ſeeing no hopes in Clemency and Reaſon, had ſent Advice to his Majeſty, that there could be no ways to reduce that Country to Obedience, but by ſending a Fleet of Ships to lie in the Frith, and block up their Trade, and then to follow with a Royal Army. Theſe Meaſures were approv'd in Council, and Reſolutions taken that the King ſhould go in Perſon, and the Nobility attend him at York by the firſt Day of April next enſuing.

No hopes of reducing the Scots but by Force of Arms.

If we now ſtand to look back on the Cauſes of this Scotch Rebellion, it might be enough to aſcribe it to the implacable Spirit of Presbytery: This alone was the Beginning of Troubles, but the Progreſs and Succeſs of them found a great many other Springs and Wheels: The importunate Zeal of many of the Scotch Biſhops in ſeverely executing all Orders receiv'd from the Engliſh Court, and obſequiouſly ſubmitting to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury as if he had been their own Metropolitan; which raiſed the Jealouſie and Indignation of a great part of the Clergy and Laity of that Kingdom. Then the Civil Grievances of Poverty, and Decay of Trade, and ſome late Advances in the Exerciſe of Regal Power, made the Nobility and Gentry ſomewhat cooler and more indifferent for the King and his Miniſters; chuſing as it were to ſtand by and connive at the Covenant and Aſſembly, hoping it would bring on the Opportunities of regaining what they thought their former Liberties. Next, the Popiſh Emiſſaries had certainly a buſie hand in this Work of Rebellion: They found the King and Abp. of Canterbury as much their Adverſaries, as the oppoſite Faction charg'd them to be their Friends; they had no Hopes but in troubled Waters, and ſome new Revolution. And then in England there were many Perſons griev'd and diſcontented, ſome Miniſters depriv'd or otherwiſe cenſur'd; many of the common People ſtrictly proſecuted; a few of the Gentry Fined and Impriſon'd: And in ſhort, all manner of Perſons diſobliged by the Court or the Church, took Pleaſure in the remote Proſpects of Revenge, and blew up thoſe Coals they ſaw kindling in the North. And finally, One great Advantage to the growing Faction was the Irreſolution and Indifference, not to ſay Treachery, of the King's Council and Miniſtry in Scotland: Traquair the Lord Treaſurer, and for a long time the prime Miniſter, was not a right Friend to the Biſhops; and even Hamilton himſelf was thought by the Covenanters to be the Son of a Gude Mother.

Queen Mother comes over to England.

But to return to the Engliſh Affairs of this Year, we find little elſe remarkable; in October, Mary de Medices the Queen Mother of France, by Invitation of the Queen her Daughter, came over into England for Pleaſure and Protection. The Archbiſhop enter'd it thus in his Diary: Oct. 19. News was brought to us as we ſat in the Star-Chamber, that the Queen-Mother of France was landed at Harwich: Many and great Apprehenſions upon this Buſineſs." For indeed the Engliſh People hated her, or ſuſpected her for her own, for her Churches, for her Country's, for her Daughter's ſake; and having ſhifted her Reſidence in other Courts, upon Calamities and Troubles which ſtill purſued her, they thought it her Fate to carry along Misfortunes with her, and ſo dreaded her as an ill-aboding Meteor, wherever ſhe appeared. (a)

Prince Elector.

The Prince Elector, after his defeat in Weſtphalia, was adviſed by the Prince of Orange, to apply himſelf again to his Unkle the King of England, to put him in a condition of purſuing the means of his Reſtauration: The King told him the Difficulty of his own Affairs in Scotland would not at preſent allow him to furniſh him with any Supplies; and therefore all he could now do was to recommend him to the French Ambaſſador, who undertook to make an Intereſt for him with his Maſter and with Cardinal Richlieu. While this was in agitation, the Prince in November paſſed thro' France in diſguiſe, for a nearer Paſſage to the Swediſh Army; but in Lions he was diſcovered and arreſted, and kept long a Priſoner of State, till his hopes for this Year were entirely defeated.

Death of the Lord-Keeper Coventry.

There was ſome Alteration at Court by the Loſs of the Lord Coventry Lord-Keeper, who died at Durham-Houſe in the Strand, 14 Jan. 163$\frac{8}{9}$. This Thomas Coventry, bred in the Inner-Temple, gained a Reputation in the Law to be Recorder of London, and in 14 Jac. to be the King's Sollicitor; and being then Knighted, he was in the Year following made Attorney General. And in 1 Car. Novemb. 1. was advanced to the Office of the Lord-Keeper of the Great-Seal of England, and 4 Car. Apr. 10. was made a Baron of the Realm, by the Title of Lord Coventry of Ailesborough Com. Wigorn. Hear his Character from the Lord Clarendon. "He enjoy'd his Place with a "univerſal Reputation (and ſure Juſtice was never "better adminiſter'd) for the ſpace of about ſixteen "Years. He knew the Temper, Diſpoſition and "Genius of the Kingdom moſt exactly; ſaw their "Spirits grow every Day more Sturdy, Inquiſitive "and Impatient: and therefore naturally abhorred "all Innovations, which he foreſaw would produce "ruinous Effects: Yet many who ſtood at a di"ſtance, thought that he was not active and ſtout "enough in oppoſing thoſe Innovations.——Sel"dom known to ſpeak in Matters of State,—— "though in his Nature he had not only a firm Gra"vity, but a Severity and even ſome Moroſity; yet it "was ſo happily tempered, and his Courteſie and "Affability towards all Men ſo tranſcendent, and "ſo much without affectation that it marvellouſly "recommended him to all Men of all Degrees; and "he was look'd upon as an excellent Courtier, "without receeding from the native Simplicity of "his own Manners. He had, in the plain way of "ſpeaking and delivery, without much ornament "of Elocution, a ſtrange Power of making himſelf "believed, the only juſtifiable Deſign of Elo"quence. ——— He held Diſſimulation to be the "worſt of Lying.—— But then this happy Temper, "and theſe good Faculties, rather preſerv'd him "from having many Enemies, and ſupplied him with "ſome Well-wiſhers, than furniſhed him with any "faſt and unſhaken Friends; who are always pro"cured in Courts by more Ardour and more vehe"ment Profeſſions and Applications than he would "ſuffer himſelf to be intangled with.—— He re"tired within himſelf as much as he could, and "ſtood upon his Defence, without making deſpe"rate Sallies againſt growing Miſchiefs, which he "knew well he had no Power to hinder, and which "might probably end in his own Ruine. To con"clude, his Security conſiſted very much in having "but little Credit with the King; and he died in "a Seaſon moſt opportune, in which a wiſe Man "would have pray'd to have finiſh'd his Courſe, and "which, in truth, crowned his other ſignal Proſpe"rity in the World."

His Character.

State of Religion, 1638.

The Church Affairs of this Year were the leſs conſiderable, becauſe the impending Storms in Scotland made the Archbiſhop and Biſhops more tender and reſerved in their Proceedings here at home; wiſely reſolving not to irritate the Faction here while it was there ſo turbulent and ſtrong.

Wiſdom of Abp. Laud.

The Archbiſhop to open the Eyes of thoſe who looked on him as a Papiſt, and to juſtifie the King from the like Slanders, did now enlarge and reprint his Conference with Fiſher the Jeſuite, and preſented it to the King, Feb. 10. He interpoſed in the Scotch Tumults as far as poſſible to ſuppreſs them, and kept a conſtant Correſpondence with the Marqueſs of Hamilton; and when he ſaw things muſt come to a Rupture, he was forward in procuring an Order of Council, directed to the two Archbiſhops Jan. 29. by which they were required to Write their ſeveral Letters to the Lords Biſhops in their reſpective Provinces, forthwith to conveen before them all the Clergy of Ability in their Dioceſſes, and to incite them by ſuch Ways and Means as ſhould be thought beſt by their Lordſhips, to aid and aſſiſt his Majeſty with their ſpeedy and liberal Contributions and otherwiſe, for defence of his Royal Perſon and Kingdom. And in purſuance of theſe Directions the Archbiſhop of Canterbury wrote to his ſeveral Suffragans, to preſs them, that in Caſe of ſo great Danger, both to the State and Church of England, they and their Clergy would contribute toward the raiſing of ſuch an Army, as by God's Bleſſing and his Majeſty's Care might ſecure this Church and Kingdom from all intended Violence; and hopes every

The King moſt humanely and generouſly receives her, tho' all Men were extremely againſt it; for it was obſerved, that where ever this miſerable old Queen came, there followed immediately after Her Plague, War, or Famine.

The Money raiſed by the Clergy on this occaſion came to a very great Sum. The Dioceſs of Norwich where the Clergy have the meaneſt Proviſion, raiſed above two thouſand Pounds. And yet as every Thing gives Offence to angry People, ſo this Method had Objections made to it: Some pretended it an arbitrary Impoſition on the Clergy, tho' it was only by way of free Benevolence; others ſaid it was a Price paid by the Church-Men for Perſecution and the Blood of the Brethren; and ſome graver Folks ſeeing the Zeal of the Clergy to promote the Expedition into Scotland, began to think it a Religious War. (a)

Abp's Account of his Province 1638.

In the Archbiſhop's Account of his Province to the King for the Year 1638. we'll take out this State of his own Dioceſs of Canterbury.

" May it pleaſe your moſt ſacred Majeſty,

" TO begin with my ſelf and my own Dioceſs, I have been careful to obey all your Majeſty's particular Inſtructions, both for the reſiding upon my Houſes and preſerving of my Woods, &c.

" There was one Bedle a Miniſter of Eſſex came into this Dioceſs, and at Harbledown near Canterbury, (the Curate there being dead) preached very diſorderly three Hours together at a time, and got himſelf many ignorant Followers. But ſo ſoon as ever he was enquired after by my Officers, he fled the Country; and I purpoſe, God willing, to ſpeak with the Chancellour of London concerning him.

" I do not find that there are either any increaſe or decreaſe of Papiſts or Puritans in the Dioceſs: But the Separatiſts about Aſhford are very buſie, miſerably poor, and out of that bold againſt all Church-cenſure; ſo that without ſome temporal Aſſiſtance from the Judges, we know not what to do; and this I have often and humbly repreſented: Yet two notorious Separatiſts being called in queſtion are fled the Country, and one of them broke Priſon.—— [C. R. Demand their (i. e. the Judges) help, and if they refuſe, I ſhall make them aſſiſt you.]

" At Tenterden ſome People are ſomewhat refractory; but the Archdeacon aſſures me, he hath great hope to reduce them; which I ſhall be glad of. The Strangers at Canterbury do reaſonably well obey my Injunctions for coming to our Churches; and I ſhall give them all Encouragement holding it fitting to keep a moderate hand with them."

Royal Army to march into Scotland.

To ſuppreſs the Scotch Rebellion, in the beginning of this Spring the King had got together an Army of near ſix thouſand Horſe, and about that Number of Foot, well diſciplined, under experienc'd Officers. The Earl of Arundel (b) was made General, the Earl of Eſſex Lieutenant-General, and the Earl of Holland General of the Horſe. On March the 27th, his Coronation-day, the King began his Journey Northward, and in three Days came to York, with a glorious Attendance of Nobility and Gentry, ſummon'd in to ſerve the King. It look'd more like the Pomp and Parade of an Eaſtern Prince, than the Expedition of an Engliſh Monarch. The Lord Clarendon obſerves, "If there had been none in the March but Soldiers, it is moſt probable that a noble Peace would have quickly enſu'd, even without fighting; but the Progreſs was more illuſtrious than the March, and the Soldiers were the leaſt part of the Army." The Earl of Eſſex had been ſent before with a Party of Horſe and Foot to poſſeſs himſelf of Berwick, which he enter'd without Oppoſition: And had he march'd on to Edinburgh, followed and ſupported by the Remainder of the Engliſh Army, the War had been ſoon ended; for the Scots had not three thouſand Men together, and as yet wanted Arms and Unity. "But it was the fatal Misfortune of the King, which proceeded from the Excellency of his Nature, and his Tenderneſs of Blood, that he deferr'd ſo long his Reſolution of uſing his Arms; and after he had taken that Reſolution, that it was not proſecuted with more Vigour." And yet ſuch was the Advice of the Lord Deputy of Ireland, who by Letters to the King dated at Dublin April 1. 1639. acquainted his Majeſty, that he had Shipp'd off five hundred Iriſh to be put into Carliſle; and concludes, As to my poor Judgment your Majeſty hath no more to do this Summer, but to ſecure Berwick and Carliſle by ſtrong Garriſons, to exerciſe your Army in the Knowledge of their Arms, prevent their Incurſion into your Kingdom of England, and by all means to avoid fighting this Year. (c)

(b) The Earl of Arundel's Lady was a furious Papiſt: in the Plot diſcovered by Andrew ab Habernfeld, ſhe is repreſented as a ſtrenuous She-Champion of the Popiſh Religion, bending all her Endeavours for the introducing of it. Whatever ſhe hears at Court, ſecretly or openly, of Words or Actions, She imparts to the Pope's Legate, with whom ſhe convers'd at leaſt three times a Day, ſometimes in Arundel Houſe, or at Court, or at Tart-hall. The Earl called to Rome about three Years ſince, ought to go in this Year 1640, to conſult there, no doubt of ſecret Affairs, relating to the Grand Deſign. By his Gifts and Encouragements, the Jeſuits attend their Maſſes. In the Diſcovery made upou Oath by Andrew ab Habernfeld, it is depoſed, that about this time, there arrived at London from Cardinal Richlieu, one Mr. Thomas Chamberlain, his Chaplain and Almoner, by Birth a Scot, who was to aſſiſt the Society or Cabal of Papiſts in London (held under the direction of the Pope's Legate Mr. Con a Scotch-man) who was to leave nothing unattempted to inflame the People of Scotland againſt the Government, for which Service he had the Promiſe of a Biſhoprick, and therefore ſtaid with them four Months, to be able to carry over the better News at his Return into France. See Rome's Maſter Piece, publiſh'd by Mr. Prynne, and again by Mr. Wharton.

That one of the chief Conſpirators was Sir Toby Matthew, an Archbiſhop's Son, a Convert, and Bigot to the Church of Rome. A Jeſuit Prieſt, of the Order of Politicians, one of the chief Leaders, a moſt vigilant Man, to whom his own Bed was never ſo dear, that he would reſt his Head thereon, but refreſh himſelf with Sleep in his Chair for an Hour or two: Neither Day nor Night ſparing his Intriegues and continual Machinations. A Man extremely miſchievous, and the very Plague of the King and Kingdom of England. A moſt impudent Fellow, who frequented all Feaſts and Entertainments, invited or not invited. Never quiet, always in Action, and perpetual Motion. He thruſt himſelf into all Converſations with his Superiours; preſſing familiar Conferences, to fiſh out the Minds of Men, whatever he can thence obſerve, tending to the Intereſt or Prejudice of the conſpiring Party, he communicates to the Pope's Legate: The more ſecret Myſteries he writes to the Pope or Cardinal Barberini. In ſhort, he ſcrews himſelf into every Society; no Word can be ſpoken but what he lays hold on, and accommodates to the Service of his Party. In the mean time, whatever he has fiſhed out, he puts into a ſtated Account, and every Summer carries it to the general Conſiſtory of the Jeſuits, which ſecretly meets together in Wales, where he is an acceptable Gueſt. There Councils and Reſolutions are privately taken, as moſt adapted to the Convulſion of the Eccleſiaſtical and Civil State of both Kingdoms.

Fury of the Covenanters.

The Covenanters, tho' not daring to approach the Borders, had ſhewn their Power and Will at a ſafer diſtance: They forced the Earl of Traquair to ſurrender Dalkeith to them, and carried thence the Regalia in triumph to Edinborough, and ſoon after ſeized the Caſtle of Dunbarton, a place of great ſtrength, and much greater Importance, becauſe deſigned for the landing of the Iriſh Forces as Occaſions ſhould call for 'em: And then the King's Forces near Aberdeen were beaten and diſperſed by Monroe, and Aberdeen taken, with great ſtore of Arms, Ammunition, and Treaſure, ſent thither for the King's Uſe and Service.

A Proteſtation of not correſponding with them.

While the King was at York there was ſuch a Conflux of People, and ſuch a multitude of Scots among them, that it gave Matter of Offence and Jealouſie to the King's Council; who thereupon reſolv'd, That a ſhort Proteſtation ſhould be drawn, in which all Men ſhould profeſs their Loyalty and Obedience to his Majeſty, and diſclaim and renounce the having any Intelligence, or holding any Correſpondence with the Rebels. The Scots who were moſt ſuſpected took the Proteſtation without ſcruple: but when it came to the Engliſh Nobility, the Lords Say and Brook poſitively refus'd it in the King's own Preſence; for which they were at firſt a while reſtrain'd, and then diſmiſs'd and ſent home. This Perverſeneſs and open Affront to the King ſo mildly paſs'd by, gave Advantage to the King's Enemies in his own Court; who perhaps did him more Miſchief than thoſe in the Field. "Indeed (ſays the Lord Clarendon) if the King himſelf had ſtay'd at London, or which had been the next beſt, kept his Court and reſided at York, and ſent the Army on their proper Errand, and left the Matter of the War wholly to them, in all humane Reaſon his Enemies had been ſpeedily ſubdued, and that Kingdom reduced to their Obedience."

Refuſed by ſome Engliſh Lords.

While the King reſided here at York, the Scots, in craft, ſent Letters and Petitions to his Majeſty, pretending, "Their Loyal Hearts had ill Fortune, and that they deſired nothing but to be admitted into the Preſence of their gracious Soveraign, to lay their Grievances at his Royal Feet, and leave the Determination of them entirely to his own Wiſdom and Pleaſure." By which they gain'd their Ends of Time and Popularity, and even Pity from their Enemies. But all the while their Preparations were ſo encreaſing, that the King thought it neceſſary to March toward the Borders of Scotland, by New-Caſtle, to Berwick, where the General had the Army drawn up in Battalia, and the King march'd at the Head of them, till near the Tweed, two Miles Weſt from Berwick, in an open Field called the Berks, the King encamp'd, and lodg'd in his Tent with the Army.

The King marches to the Borders.

May 30. the King had Intelligence that General Leſley, with about 6000 of the Scotch Army, was Quarter'd at Dunce, a Town about ſeven Miles diſtant from the Engliſh Camp: Next day the Earl of Holland march'd thither with a Body of 3000 Horſe and 2000 Foot; and coming thither, he found the Scots drawn up on the ſide of a Hill, where the Front could be only in view, with great Herds of Cattel at a diſtance upon the Hills on either ſide; a Stratagem of Leſley, to make the Appearance of a formidable Body, when there were not above 3000 Men, and they very ill arm'd, moſt Country Fellows brought thus together for a Shew. The Earl of Holland, who by ill Accidents had his Foot and Artillery three or four Miles behind, was ſo frighted with the Apparition of the Scotch Army, that he ſent Orders to his Foot not to advance, and made his Retreat toward them, and ſo moſt ingloriouſly came back to the King's Camp; with another Misfortune of having quarrel'd in the March with the Earl of New-Caſtle, which afterward produc'd a Challenge.

Policy of Leſley.

This mock Attempt was ſeconded by another of no better Conduct or Succeſs: for on Sunday June 2. Information was brought that the Scots were in their Quarters at Kelſey, about ſix Miles diſtance, being not above 1500 Men: whereupon it was reſolved in a Council of War to ſend a Detachment toward 'em. So the next day June 3. the Earl of Holland, with a Body of 2000 Horſe and 2000 Foot marched again over the Tweed toward Kelſey, and came with his Horſe within ſight of the Enemy, while the Foot were ſtill three Miles behind. The Scots ſent a Trumpeter, and immediately drew up their Forces to ſo much Advantage and Surprize, that the Engliſh General again retreated to his Foot, and ſo quietly return'd once more to the Camp. Theſe two Sallies of Bravery, as if only to ſhew and then to diſappear, gave a great Diſcouragement to the King's Army, by keeping them from the Glory and the Reward of Action; and made the Scots more daring, when they ſaw it was likely to be no worſe than the Jeſt of a War.

Earl of Holland inglorious.

Upon this Apprehenſion of their own Safety, the Covenanters from Edinburgh wrote three diſſembling Letters to the three Generals, the Earl of Arundel, the Earl of Eſſex, and the Earl of Holland; all to deſire their Interceſſion with the King for Peace and Protection to them; and all ſo adapted to the Humours of thoſe great Men, that at laſt the Earls of Arundel and Holland began to incline and adviſe to Accommodation.

Diſſembling of the Scots.

Fleet not ſucceſsful.

The Expedition at Sea, under the Marqueſs of Hamilton, came to the like no Effect: The Fleet entred the Frith on May 1. and caſt Anchor in Leith-Road, where the Marqueſs landed ſome Forces only to grow Sick, and ſo to be ſhipp'd again. He ſpent his time in a fruitleſs Correſpondence with the Earl of Rothes, one of the chief Malecontents, and in frequent Viſits from his Mother, a very zealous Woman for the Covenant and Kirk, and from his Brother-in-law the Ld Lindſey; who told him, they would ſooner lay down their Lives than recede from the demand of their juſt Rights and Liberties, for the Defence whereof they had an Army of 25000 Men. This moved the Marqueſs to poſſeſs the King of the Dangers of farther Hoſtility: So that indeed all things conſpired to loſe the Opportunity of Honour and Succeſs in this Royal Expedition. The Generals and Admiral were indifferent, and rather complaiſant in the Matter; the common Soldiers and Seamen were ſick and weary of the Mock-ſhow; the Courtiers and Council of the King thought it wiſer not to carry things to extremity, while there could be any hopes of Submiſſion. And in my Ld Clarendon's Opinion, It was ſuſpected and believed, by thoſe who ſtood neareſt, that his Majeſty himſelf had in truth never any purpoſe to make the War in Blood; but believed that by ſhewing an Army to them, which was able to force them to any Conditions, they would have begged Pardon for the Conteſt they had made, and ſo he ſhould have ſettled the Church, and all things elſe according to his Pleaſure: And ſure he might have done ſo had he had but State Skill, and been conſtant to his own Intereſt, and poſitive in denying their inſolent Demands.

A Mock War.

Treaty and Pacification.

This Diſpoſition in the King and his Miniſters encouraged the Scots to ſome Petitions and Addreſſes; which meeting with civil and ſoft Anſwers, a Treaty was agreed on June 8. and Articles of Pacification ſign'd June 18. with a Declaration of the King for Pardon and Peace, upon disbanding the Scotch Forces, and delivering up his Majeſty's Forts and Ammunition. The King's Army was preſently disbanded, and the Scots returned to Edinburgh with all they deſired; having gotten many more Friends in England than they had before, kept all their Officers, and as many of their Men as they thought fit in pay; and proſecuted all thoſe who had not ſhewed the ſame Zeal in their Covenant, and enter'd a publick Proteſtation againſt the Biſhops, &c. So that by the time the King came to London, it appeared plainly, that the Army was disbanded without any Peace made, and the Scots in equal Inclination, and in more Reputation, to affront his Majeſty than ever. —— The Miſchief that befel the King from this wonderful Atonement cannot be expreſſed, nor was it ever diſcourſed what prevailed over his Majeſty to bring it ſo wofully to paſs: All Men were aſhamed who had contributed to it.

Earl of Traquair made High Commiſſioner.

An Aſſembly and Parliament were to meet in Scotland before the end of Aug. and the Marqueſs of Hamilton was again deſign'd to be his Majeſty's High-Commiſſioner, but he earneſtly excuſed himſelf; upon which the King was forced to employ the Earl of Traquair, and ſigned his Inſtructions at Berwick on July 27. and taking Poſt the next Day came to London Auguſt 1.

Earl of Eſſex diſgrac'd.

The Factions and Animoſities at Court were now greater than ever. The Earl of Eſſex, who had merited very well throughout the whole Affair, and had never made a falſe ſtep in Action or Council, was diſcharged in the Croud without ordinary Ceremony, and was ſoon after denied the Command of the Foreſt of Needwood, which lay at his very Door, and would have been ſo agreeable, that the Denial made the deeper impreſſion.

Earl of Newcaſtle diſguſted.

The Earl of Newcaſtle Governour to the Prince, who at his own Charge had brought in a brave Troop of Horſe againſt the Scots, had been ſo affronted in the Order of March by the Earl of Holland, that he ſent him now a Challenge; and the King upon notice was forced to interpoſe his Authority, not to the ſatisfaction of either Party. The Marqueſs of Hamilton was more and more afraid of his Countrymen, and enter'd upon dark Deſigns that made him ſuſpected on all ſides. The Lieutenant of Ireland, newly made Earl of Strafford, oppoſed the Queen in ſome of her Court Intrigues, and offended her ſo much, that ſhe declared a moſt unſeaſonable Diſpleaſure againſt him. Sir Henry Vane (of whom the Lord Deputy had a contempt and deteſtation) was grown to be the Queen's creature, and by her ſole (a) Intereſt was now made Secretary of State, in the room of Sir John Cook, who for a Sacrifice to the Murmurs of the Court for the late impolitick Treaty, was put out of his Office on a pretence that he had omitted the Writing of what he ought to have done, and inſerted ſomewhat he ought not to have done.

Lord Clarendon's Character of Sir John Cook.

He was now near fourſcore Years of Age, and One for whom no Body cared, rather unendowed with any parts of Vigour and Quickneſs, and unendowed with any notable Virtues, than notorious for any weakneſs or defect of Underſtanding, or tranſported with any vitious Inclinations, Appetite to Money only excepted. His Cardinal Perfection was Induſtry, and his moſt eminent Infirmity Covetouſneſs. His long Experience had informed him well of the State and Affairs of England; but of Foreign Tranſactions, or the common Intereſt of Chriſtian Princes, he was entirely undiſcerning and ignorant.

Scotch Aſſembly and Parliament.

In Auguſt the Aſſembly and Parliament met at Edinburgh, and were both ſo aſſuming that the Earl of Traquair not able to keep to his Inſtructions, prorogued the Parliament to November 14. But the Covenanters proteſted againſt the legality of Prorogation without conſent of Parliament, and ſent away the Earl of Dunfermling and the Lord Loudon as their Deputies to the King at Whitehall, who refuſed them Audience, and in diſdain commanded them home, becauſe they came without Warrant from his Commiſſioner. After this, they ſent another Petition to his Majeſty by one Cunningham, deſiring permiſſion to ſend ſome of their Number for their own Vindication; which his Majeſty granting, the Lords Loudon and Dunfermling were again ſent up; who behaved themſelves like the Miniſters of a Foreign State, had their Audience with a ſolemn Speech, put in their Articles of Requeſt, and when referred for an Anſwer to a Committee of Council, they refuſed to go, alledging that they had Order and Inſtruction to treat with none but his Majeſty himſelf.

Scots inſolent at Home and Abroad.

They carried it the more high upon the continual Encouragements they received from their Brethren in Scotland, who, upon the Honour of making War and Peace with their King, were grown more conſiderable at Home and Abroad. At Home, where the People were ſo fluſh'd with the hopes of what was to be done for them, that their Lives and Fortunes were now at their Leaders Service; and the Tide ſo ſtrong that moſt of the King's Privy-Council and great Miniſters fell into the Faction, and among others the Earl of Argyle, who had the greateſt Obligations imaginable to the King, and yet on the ſuddain became his greateſt Enemy. Abroad, where they enter'd Correſpondence with Holland, and obtained Credit for Arms and Ammunition; and were raiſing Men in Germany and Sweden, and had eſpecial countenance in France, from whence Cardinal Richlieu ſent an Agent privately to Edinburgh, to foment their Rebellion, as the moſt effectual curb to Engliſh Monarchy: And received another Agent from them, who ſollicited Supplies and communicated Counſels, and eſtabliſhed a Correſpondence with the French King himſelf: For a Letter was intercepted endorſed Au Roy, ſubſcribed by the Lords Rothes, Montroſe, Montgomery, Leſley, Marre, Loudon, Forreſter, wrote in French, to ſignify their addreſſing to his Majeſty as the Refuge and Sanctuary of afflicted Princes and States, moſt humbly beſeeching him to give Faith and Credit to Mr. Colvil, whom they had ſent to repreſent the Candour and Ingenuity of their Proceedings, and to aſſure themſelves of an Aſſiſtance equal to his wonted Clemency.

Letter of the Scots to the Fr. King.

This intercepted Letter was brought to the Council at Whitehall, while one of the Subſcribers, Loudon, was here negotiating the Cauſe of his Brethren; who being examined upon it, refuſed to give any other Anſwer, than That it was writ before the Agreement, and thereupon reſerved and never ſent; that if he had committed any Offence, he ought to be queſtioned for it in Scotland and not in England; and inſiſting upon his ſafe Conduct demanded his Liberty to return. But this Treaſon and inſolent excuſe of it raiſed ſuch a juſt abhorrence in the King's Council, that the Ld Loudon and Colvil (who was then apprehended in London) were both committed to the Tower; and had they been brought to a ſpeedy Trial, it might have ſtruck Terror into the Scots, and made their Rebellion more abominable to all the World.

Engliſh Parliament called.

But the King was mild and dilatory, and hoped a ſlow and ſure Expedient would be to call an Engliſh Parliament, which had been now intermitted near twelve Years. So in December the King directed the Lord-Keeper to iſſue out Writs for the Meeting of a

(a) In the Popiſh Cabal againſt the King and Church, held in London, under the Preſidency of the Pope's Legate Seignior Con a Scot, aſſiſted by Cardinal Richlieu's Chaplain Mr. Thomas Chamberlain a Scot, was Captain Read a Scot, of whom it was depoſed upon Oath, and tranſmitted in Writing to the King and Archbiſhop in 1640. that Captain Read a Scot, dwelling in Long-acre near the Angel Tavern, was a ſecular Jeſuit, who for performing a deteſtable Office (that of perverting a Miniſter of the Church of England by ſweetning Incitements to Popery, with his whole Family, and thereupon marrying his Daughter) did for his Reward obtain a Rent or Impoſt upon Butter, to be paid by the Country Farmer, obtained for him of the King by ſome of the chief of that Society. In his Houſe the Buſineſs of the whole Plot was tranſacted, where the Society held their daily Meetings, to manage their Conſpiracy againſt the King and the Archbiſhop, and the whole Kingdom. And on a Poſt Day, or Foreign Mail, they met there in greater Numbers; for then all the Spies and ſecret Agents did aſſemble, and in common Conſult did communicate what every one had fiſhed out that Week; and then, to be without ſuſpicion, they ſent away their Minutes by Sir Toby Matthew, or by Read himſelf to the Pope's Legate Con, who made them up into a Packet, and tranſmitted it to Rome. With the ſame Capt. Read are depoſited the Letters brought from Rome, under feigned Names, which by him are deliver'd out to the Perſons they are deſigned for, he well knowing who they are. Upon the ſame occaſion, Letters are brought hither under the Cover of Father Philips (tho' he knows nothing of them) to be diſtributed in like manner. There is in this Houſe a Popiſh Chapel, wherein a Jeſuit officiates, and reſides there.

This Captain Read was one of thoſe Popiſh Conſpirators who confederated with the Dutcheſs of Buckingham, and others, to plot an univerſal Rebellion, Surprizal and Maſſacre of all the Proteſtants in that Kingdom; he was afterward taken in the Field in actual Rebellion in Ireland, and brought over and committed Priſoner to the Tower of London, &c. Prynne's Rome's Maſter-piece.

Affairs in Ireland.

Such was the Reſult of this Year in relation to Scotland: As to Ireland, there was an unhappy Quarrel between Wentworth Lord-Deputy and Loftus Lord Chancellour, which produc'd a Complaint and a Hearing at the Council-Board Nov. 26. 1639. where his Majeſty and Council juſtified the Conduct of the Ld. Deputy, and cenſur'd the Lord Loftus as unfit to hold the Office of Lord-Chancellour of that Kingdom. The Lord-Deputy was then himſelf in the Engliſh Court, and appeared in greater Favour with the King, who took him into his moſt ſecret Counſels, and gave him extraordinary marks of Favour, creating him Earl of Strafford, Lord Lieutenant of the Kingdom of Ireland, and Knight of the Garter. He was a Man of extraordinary Abilities, and of moſt faithful Affection to the King: He ſaw now the Neceſſity of reducing the Scots by Force of Arms, and did all that was poſſible to promote another Expedition againſt them. In the Subſcription of a Loan at the Council-Board for that Service, he began firſt, and for Example ſubſcribed 20000 l. He returned to Dublin March 18. (a) at the end of this Year, and met the Parliament which he had before ſummon'd; and for the King's Supply obtained from them four entire Subſidies; and in the Preamble of the Act had publick Thanks given to the King for providing and placing over them ſo Juſt, Wiſe, Vigilant and Profitable a Governour, &c. (b)

Spaniſh Fleet.

About the middle of September, there appeared upon the Engliſh Coaſts an unexpected Fleet from Spain, conſiſting of above ſeventy Sail of Ships, commanded by Don Antonio D'oquendo. The Dutch Fleet of not above twenty five Sail ſet upon them, and forced them into the Downs, where the Spaniards expected to be ſafe under the King of England's Protection: For both Parties being our Allies, it was thought a Law of Nations, that our Shores and Harbours ſhould be a Refuge to protect the Weaker; but at laſt Van-Trump the Dutch Admiral, fell upon the Spaniards without the Ceremony of asking leave, and burnt, and ſunk and drove on ſhore a great part of their Navy. This, tho' not juſtified at Court, upon the Rules of Honour, was yet pleaſing enough to the common People, who hated the appearance of a Spaniſh Armado, and had indeed Reaſons to ſuſpect their Deſign: For tho' they pretended only to carry Recruits and Money to Dunkirk; yet that alone did not require ſo many Ships or Men. The Expedition did ſeem to be meant for ſome greater purpoſe; and by ſome Evidences ſince recovered, it is plain the Project was much the ſame with that in eighty eight. And in the beginning of the following Parliament a Book was produc'd in the Houſe of Commons, containing, that The Papiſts ſhould fiſh in troubled Waters whilſt the King was at War with the Scots, with Prayers in it for the Holy Martyrs that ſuffered in the Fleet ſent againſt the Hereticks in England, Anno 1639. (c)

State of Religion 1639.

As to the Eccleſiaſtical Affairs of this Year, Abp. Laud was wiſely conſidering how, if poſſible, to appeaſe the Religious Feuds in Scotland. To which purpoſe, he took Order for tranſlating the Scottiſh Liturgy into the Latin Tongue, and drew up an Apology to be publiſhed with it, to give Satisfaction to the learned World of the excellency of the Book, and of the Piety and Juſtice of the King in enjoining the uſe of it. This Work was finiſhed, but the Diſtemper of the times hinder'd the publication of it. Next, he conſidered how to aſſert the Rights of Epiſcopacy, which with ſo much violence had been voted down in the Aſſemblies of the Kirk, and even one of the Biſhops frighted into an (d) Abjuration of his Order; he therefore recommended to Biſhop Hall of Exeter, the drawing up A Defence of the Divine Right of Epiſcopacy; who accordingly applied himſelf to that Work, and ſent the Abp. the Model of it in theſe two Propoſitions, 1. That Epiſcopacy is a lawful, moſt antient, holy and divine Inſtitution (as it is joined with imparity and ſuperiority of Juriſdiction) and therefore where it hath through God's Providence obtained, cannot by any humane Power be abdicated, without a manifeſt Violation of God's Ordinance. 2. That the Presbyterian Government, however vindicated under the glorious Names of Chriſt's Kingdom and Ordinance, hath no true Footing either in Scripture or the Practice of the Church in all Ages from Chriſt's time to the preſent; and that howſoever it may be of uſe in ſome Cities, or Territories, wherein Epiſcopal Government through Iniquity of Times cannot be had; yet to obtrude it upon a Church otherwiſe ſettled under an acknowledged Monarchy is utterly incongruous and unjuſtifiable. Theſe Propoſitions were attended with ſeveral Poſtulata, as, 1. That Government which was of Apoſtolical Inſtitution cannot be denied to be of Divine Right. 2. Not only that Government which was directly commanded and enacted, but alſo that which was practiſed and recommended by the Apoſtles to the Church, muſt juſtly paſs for an Apoſtolical Inſtitution, &c.

Bp. Hall employ'd to defend Epiſcopacy.

Model of his Work.

The Archbiſhop read over the projected Scheme, and freely offered his own Thoughts in ſuggeſting ſome Amendments, in theſe Words: "You ſay that "Epiſcopacy is an ancient, holy and divine Inſtitution; "it muſt needs be ancient and holy, if divine. Would "it not be more full went it thus? So ancient as that "it is of divine Inſtitution. Next you define Epiſ"copacy by being joined with Imparity and Superio"rity of Juriſdiction, but this ſeems ſhort; for every "Archpresb's or Archd's Place is ſo.—— I draw the "Superiority not from the Juriſdiction which is at"tributed to Biſhops Jure Poſitivo in their Audience "of Eccleſiaſtical Matters, but from that which is "Intrinſical and Original in the Power of Excom"munication: Again, You ſay, that where Epiſco"pacy hath obtained, it cannot be abdicated without vi"olation of God's Ordinance. This Propoſition I con"ceive is inter minus habentes, for never was there "any Church yet where it hath not obtained.—— "In your ſecond Head you grant, that the Presbyte"rian Government may be of uſe where Epiſcopacy may "not be had. Pray conſider, Whether this Conceſ"ſion be not needleſs here, and in it ſelf of a dan"gerous Conſequence? &c. Concerning your Po"ſtulata, I ſhall pray you to allow me the like free"dom; among which the two firſt are true, but as "expreſs'd too reſtrictive: For Epiſcopacy is not "ſo to be aſſerted unto Apoſtolical Inſtitution as to "bar it from looking higher, and from fetching it "materially and originally, in the Ground and In"tention of it, from Chriſt himſelf, tho' perhaps "the Apoſtles formaliz'd it, &c." The Learned and Pious Biſhop ſubmitted to theſe Cenſures and Advices, and ſoon after publiſhed his Book un-

1639. 15 Car. I. der the Title of Epiſcopacy by Divine Right, and defended it with incomparable Strength and Temper againſt all the Attacks of a Club of Writers. This peaceable Prelate moved the Archbiſhop by Letter, Sept. 28. 1639. to mediate with the King for calling a General Synod of the whole three Kingdoms, wherein all the Reverend Biſhops and chief of the Learned and Dignified Clergy, and the Profeſſors and ſome other eminent Doctors of all the Univerſities, might be aſſembled to paſs their Judgment (after free and full Examination) of thoſe Schiſmatical Points determined thus proudly and raſhly by our Northern Neighbours, &c. The Archbiſhop ſeems to have received this Propoſal with good Approbation of it; but the growing Confuſion of the Times would not allow any ſuch Practice. (a)

Puritans in England encourag'd by the Scots. The Puritanical Spirit in England was much animated by the Storms in Scotland, and took this Advantage to exert their unconformable Humour. This gave occaſion to the Archbiſhop to complain to the King in his Account of this Year, that theſe were broken Times; that many who were brought to good Order, are now of late fallen off, &c. And it was this ſame Diſtraction of the Times that gave Encouragement to Mr. Bagſhaw of the Middle Temple to begin his Readings Feb. 24. on the Statute 25 *Edw.*III. cap. 7. and to ſtate theſe Queſtions; 1. Whether it be a good Act of Parliament without the Aſſent of the Lords Spiritual? which he held Affirmatively. 2. Whether any beneficed Clerk were capable of Temporal Juriſdiction at the time of making that Law? which he held in the Negative. 3. Whether a Biſhop, without calling a Synod, have Power, as Dioceſan, to convict an Heretick? which he maintained alſo in the Negative. The Noiſe of this coming to the Archbiſhop's Ears, he informed the King; who order'd the Lord Keeper to interdict his farther Reading. (b)

Bagſhaw's Reading.

State of the Dioceſs of Canterbury. The State of the Dioceſs of Canterbury is thus repreſented in the Archbiſhop's Account of his Province. "The great thing which is amiſs there, and "beyond my Power to remedy, is the Stiffneſs of "divers Anabaptiſts and Separatiſts from the Church "of England, eſpecially in and about the Parts near "Aſhford. And I do not find, either by my own "Experience, or by any Advice from my Officers, "that this is like to be remedied, unleſs the Statute "concerning Abjuration of your Kingdom, or ſome "other way, by the Power of the Temporal Law "or State, be thought upon. But how fit that may "be to be done for the preſent, eſpecially in theſe "broken Times, I humbly ſubmit to your Majeſty's "Wiſdom, having often complained of this before. "[C. R. It were not amiſs to ſpeak with the Keeper "about this.]"

"Many that were brought to good Order for receiving of the Holy Communion where the Rails "ſtand before the Table, are now of late fall'n off, "and refuſe to come up thither to receive: but this, "God willing, I ſhall take care of, and order as "well as I can, and with as much ſpeed. And the "ſame is now commonly fall'n out in divers other "Dioceſſes. There was, about half a Year ſince, "one that pretended himſelf a Miniſter, who got "many Followers in Sandwich, and ſome neighbouring Pariſhes; but at laſt was found to have gone "under three Names, Enoch, Swan, and Grey, and "in as ſeveral Habits, of a Miniſter, an ordinary "Lay-man, and a Royſter. And this being diſcovered, he fled the Country before any of my Officers could lay hold on him. Upon this occaſion I have commanded my Commiſſary and Archdeacon to give Charge, in my Name, to all Parſons and Vicars of my Dioceſs, that they ſuffer "no Man to preach in their Cures, but ſuch as for "whom they will anſwer, as well otherwiſe as for "the point of Conformity; which, I hope, will "prevent the like Abuſe hereafter."

1640. 16 Car. I. Call of a new Parliament. The Reſolutions for a Parliament had been taken on the 5th of December laſt; and it was obſervable, that the firſt Movers to it were the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, the Lord Deputy of Ireland, and the Marqueſs of Hamilton. And at the ſame time in Council, as the Archbiſhop words it in his Diary, a Reſolution was voted at the Board, to aſſiſt the King in extraordinary ways, if the Parliament ſhould prove peeviſh and refuſe. Which tho' meant only of Loans and voluntary Contributions, yet was afterward interpreted a Deſign of the moſt arbitrary Power. 'Tis certain, as the Reſolution was never executed, ſo it had been happier if never made: Perhaps the Parliament had ſate longer to diſpatch the ordinary Aid, if the King had not too much depended on theſe extraordinary Supplies.

Unhappy Reſolution for extraordinary Supplies.

An Army againſt Scotland. Before the Opening of the Parliament, the King had begun his raiſing an Army to reduce Scotland; of which Army the Earl of Northumberland was made General, the Earl of Strafford Lieutenant-General, and the Lord Conway General of the Horſe. So that none of the Generals, and few of the chief Officers, who had been employed before, were now made uſe of; which gave a Diſtaſte, and an ill blood, very prejudicial to the publick Intereſt.

Parliament meets. On Monday April 13. the Parliament opened, and the King ſpoke thus to them.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

King's Speech. There was never a King that had a more great and weighty Cauſe to call his People together than my ſelf: I will not trouble you with the Particulars; I have informed my Lord Keeper, and command him to ſpeak, and deſire your Attention.

Lord Keeper's Speech. After which Sir John Finch, Lord Keeper, delivered a long Harangue, in an Eloquence peculiar to the Times, or to himſelf. —— Says he, "His Majeſty's Kingly Reſolutions are ſeated in the Ark "of his ſacred Breaſt, and it were a Preſumption of "too high a nature, for any Uzzah, uncall'd, to "touch it: Yet his Majeſty is now pleaſed to lay "by the ſhining Beams of Majeſty, as Phœbus did "to Phaeton, that the diſtance between Soveraignty "and Subjection ſhould not bar you of that filial "freedom of Acceſs to his Perſon and Counſels; "only let us beware how, with the Son of Clymene, "we aim not at the guiding of the Chariot; as if "that were the only Teſtimony of Fatherly Affection: and let us ever remember, that though the "King ſometimes lays by the Beams and Rays of "Majeſty, he never lays by Majeſty it ſelf."

The Senſe of what he told them in glorious Words was to this effect; That his Majeſty was reſolv'd to reduce his diſaffected Subjects in Scotland; that he would by no means admit their Mediation; but before they entred on any other Debates, he expected their immediate Aid, and afterward would give them time for conſidering of any juſt Grievances to be heard and redreſs'd.

Then the King ſpoke thus:

The King reſumes his Speech. My Lords, "You ſhall ſee he hath ſpoken nothing hyperbolically, or nothing but what I ſhall "make good one way or other. And becauſe he did "mention a Letter by my Subjects in Scotland, who "did ſeek to draw in foreign Power for Aid, here "is the original Letter, which I ſhall command "him to read unto you. And becauſe it may touch "a Neighbour of mine, whom I will ſay nothing of "but that which is juſt, (God forbid I ſhould) "for my part I think it was never accepted by "him: Indeed it was a Letter to the French King, "but I know not that ever he had it: for by chance "I intercepted it, as it was going unto him: and

After the Lord-Keeper had read the original Letter, and a Tranſlation of it, and had firſt made a Remark on the Superſcription of it, the King added,

Mr. Serjeant Glanvil choſen Speaker.

The Commons returning to their Houſe, choſe Mr. Serjeant Glanvil for their Speaker; who being preſented to the King on Wedneſday Apr. 15. made a dutiful and proper Speech, and was approved and confirm'd by his Majeſty.

Grievances.

April. 16. the Commons deſired the Lords to move his Majeſty to appoint a Faſt. Then ſeveral Petitions were read complaining of Ship-Money, Projects, Monopolies, Star-Chamber, High Commiſſion-Courts, &c. then Harbottle Grimſton, Eſq; ſpoke upon the Subject of Grievances, arguing, That the Dangers at Home were greater than thoſe from Abroad; and the Diſeaſes and Diſtempers in our Bodies Politick were grown to that height, that they prayed for and importun'd a Cure. Then Sir Benjamin Rudyard ſpoke againſt the diſcontinuance of Parliaments, and that during this vacation of thoſe Meetings, many Diſorders had been committed, which muſt be now ſet right, to vindicate God in his Religion, the King in his Honour, and the Common-wealth in its gaſping Extremities.

Mr. Pym's Speech.

April 17. The Commons fell again upon the Debate of Grievances, and Mr. Pym made an elaborate Speech againſt them, reducing them to three Heads. " 1. Thoſe Grievances which during theſe eleven " Years Interval of Parliaments were againſt the Li- " berties and Privileges of Parliament. 2. Innova- " tions in Matters of Religion. 3. Grievances a- " gainſt the Propriety of our Goods." Concluding with this Propoſal; " For the Remedy of theſe Grie- " vances, I adviſe to preſent them to the Houſe of " Peers, that they may join with us to go to the " King, and pray that theſe Grievances, being clear " in Fact, may be voted; if any thing in the Vote " be ſtuck upon, that it may be debated and drawn " according to the courſe of the Houſe into a Re- " monſtrance, with an humble Petition of both " Houſes for Redreſs. And I hope the Wiſdom " of this Houſe will prepare ſuch a Remedy, as " will make the King a great King, and the People " Happy."

On Saturday and Monday following, the Houſe proceeded in voting the Grievances of the Members impriſon'd 3, 4 Car. and of Sir John Finch then Speaker, refuſing to obey the Commands of the Houſe, &c. So that on Tueſday April 21. the King not enduring that his main Buſineſs ſhould be neglected or deferred commanded the Lords and Commons to attend him in the Banquetting-Houſe; where he ordered the Lord-Keeper to acquaint them, that " The Cauſe of " calling this Parliament was for the Aſſiſtance and " Supply of his Majeſty; that if the Supply were " not ſpeedy it would be of no uſe at all, for the " Army was now marching, and did ſtand his Ma- " jeſty in at leaſt one hundred thouſand Pounds a " Month; and if there were not means uſed to go " on with this as was fitting, his Majeſty's Deſign " would be loſt, and the Charge all caſt away. That " this Supply being granted, his Majeſty would give " them Scope and Liberty to preſent their juſt Grie- " vances unto him, and would hear them with a " gracious Ear, and give them ſuch an Anſwer as " they and all the Kingdom ſhould have reaſon to- " joy therein."

Waller's Motion.

April 22. On a Report made in the Houſe of Commons of the King's Speech in the Banquetting-Houſe, Edmund Waller, Eſq; made a ſevere Speech, ending with this Motion, " That there may be an Order " preſently made, that the firſt thing this Houſe will " conſider of, ſhall be the reſtoring of this Nation " in general to the fundamental and vital Liberties, " and then to conſider of the Supply deſired."

Lds preſs for a ſpeedy Supply.

While the Commons were thus reſolving on the redreſs of Grievances, his Majeſty came to the Lords Houſe, and expreſſed ſo great Concern for a ſpeedy Supply, that the Lords deſired a Conference with the Commons upon this Subject, and there urged them to truſt his Majeſty, and to begin with a preſent Supply. But this Advice of the Lords, in matter of Aid, was thought to be ſo irregular, that on April 27. it brought on this Reſolution in the Houſe Commons more averſe to it.

of Commons, that " The Lords voting the propoun- " ding and declaring Matter of Supply, before it " was moved from the Houſe of Commons was a " breach of the Privilege of the ſaid Houſe; and " therefore the Commons deſire their Lordſhips in " their Wiſdom to find out ſome way for the repa- " ration of their Privileges broken by that Matter, " and to prevent the like Infringement for the fu- " ture."

King's Meſſage for Supply.

May 2. When his Majeſty ſaw the Interceſſion of the Lords did but irritate the Commons, he took another Method of ſending a Meſſage to them by Sir Henry Vane, " That his Majeſty had ſeveral ways " acquainted the Houſe with the urgent Danger of " loſing Time, and had yet received no Anſwer, " though he had before told them, that a Delay " would be as deſtructive as a Denial; therefore a- " gain deſires them to give him a preſent Anſwer " concerning his Supply; his Majeſty being ſtill re- " ſolved on his Part, to make good his Promiſe " made by himſelf and the Lord-Keeper." The Houſe turning themſelves into a grand Committee debated upon this Meſſage, and would come to no Reſolution upon it.

A ſecond Meſſage.

Monday May 4. Sir Henry Vane brought a ſecond Meſſage to the Houſe of Commons, That upon their granting twelve Subſidies, his Majeſty would give way to the utter aboliſhing of Ship-Money; and for their Grievances would give them as much time as might be now, and another Seſſion at Michaelmas. The Houſe again debated upon this Meſſage in a Grand Committee, but deferred their Reſolution.

May 5. The King ſo ill reſented the Delays of the Commons, and was ſo impatient of advancing toward Scotland, that he unhappily determin'd to diſſolve the Parliament, and ſo parted with the two Houſes in this following Speech.

King diſſolves the Parliament.

" M Lords,

" THere can no Occaſion of my coming to this " Houſe be ſo unpleaſing unto me as this at this " time. The Fear of doing that which I am to do " this Day, made me not long ſince come into this " Houſe, where I expreſt as well my Fears as the " Remedy which I thought neceſſary for the eſchew- " ing of what is to follow.

" I muſt confeſs and acknowledge, that you, my " Lords, of the Higher Houſe, did give me ſo wil- " ling an Ear, and with ſuch an Affection did ſhew " your ſelves, that certainly I may ſay, that if there " had been any means to have given an happy End " to this Parliament, you took it; ſo that it was " neither your Ldſhip's Fault nor mine that it is not " ſo. Therefore, in the firſt place, I muſt thank " you, my Lords, for your good Endeavours.

" My Lords, I hope you remember what the firſt " Day of the Parliament, my Lord-Keeper ſaid to " you in my Name, and what likewiſe he ſaid in " the Banquetting-Houſe in White-Hall, and what " lately I ſaid unto you, in this Place my ſelf. I " name all this unto you, not doubting that you " do not well remember it, but to ſhew you that I " never ſaid any thing in way of Favour to my Peo-

" ple

1640. 16 Car. I.

" ple, but (by the Grace of God) I will punctually " and really perform it.

" I know that they have inſiſted very much on " Grievances; I will not ſay but there may be " ſome, though I will confidently affirm, that there " are not by many degrees ſo many as the publick " Voice doth make them. Wherefore I deſire you " to take notice, now eſpecially at this time, that " out of Parliament I ſhall be as ready (if not more " willing) to hear and redreſs any juſt Gievances " as in Parliament.

" There is one Thing much ſpoken of, I mean as " to Matters of Religion; concerning which, albeit " I expreſſed my ſelf fully the laſt Day in this Place, " yet I think it fit again on this Occaſion to tell you, " that as I am concerned, ſo I ſhall be moſt careful to " preſerve that purity of Religion, which I thank " God is ſo well eſtabliſh'd in the Church of England, " and that as well out of, as in Parliament.

" My Lords,

" I ſhall not trouble you long with Words, it be- " ing not my faſhion; wherefore to conclude, what " I offered the laſt Day to the Houſe of Commons, " I think it is very well known to you all; as like- " wiſe how they accepted it, which I deſire not to " remember, but wiſh they had remember'd, how at " firſt they were told by my Lord-Keeper, that De- " lay was the worſt kind of Denial; yet I will not " lay this Fault on the whole Houſe of Commons: I " will not judge ſo uncharitably of thoſe whom for " the moſt part I take to be Loyal and well Affected " Subjects, but it hath been the malicious Cunning " of ſome few ſeditiouſly affected Men, that hath " been the Cauſe of this Miſunderſtanding.

" I ſhall now end as I have begun, in giving you " thanks for your Affections ſhewn to me at this " time, deſiring you to go on and aſſiſt me in the " maintaining of that Regal Power that is truly " mine. As for the Liberty of the People, that they " now ſo much ſtartle at, know, my Lords, that " no King in the World ſhall be more careful in the " Propriety of their Goods, Liberty of their Perſons " and true Religion, than I ſhall.

" And now, my Lord-Keeper, do as I have com- " manded you."

Upon which the Lord-Keeper pronounced the Parliament diſſolved: And his Majeſty ſoon after publiſhed a Declaration to all his loving Subjects of the Cauſes which moved him to diſſolve the laſt Parliament; which however plauſible, did not ſatisfie the Engliſh Subject: And indeed when Princes are forc'd upon Apologies to their People, it rather implies a Miſgovernment, and renews the Suſpicions of it. This abrupt parting with a Parliament, in a Speech that made no Application to the Commons, and yet hard Reflections on them, (a) was undoubtedly a falſe and fatal ſtep. The more unhappy, becauſe it was only a formal diſpute of Precedency, which ſhould go firſt, Redreſs of Grievances or Grant of Taxes. The King was willing to Redreſs, and the Commons to Grant; the Queſtion was, in whom the Truſt ſhould be repoſed? The King thought it his Honour to be firſt ſerv'd; the Commons thought it their Right to be firſt ſatisfied: However, the King and his Friends were ſoon ſenſible of the Error of diſſolving; for the great States-man and Hiſtorian tells us, The King when he had better reflected upon what was like to fall out, and was better informed of the Temper and Duty of the Houſe of Commons, and that they had voted a Supply, if Sir Henry Vane had not hinder'd it, by ſo poſitive a declaration that his Majeſty would refuſe it, was heartily ſorry for what he had done, declared with great Anger, that he had never given him ſuch Authority.——He conſulted the ſame Day or the next, whether he might by his Proclamation recal them to meet together again; but he found that impoſſible.

Unhappy ſteps.

1640. 16 Car. I.

Ld. Clarendon's Opinion.

And yet the King ſhewed too much Anger againſt the leading Members, if ever he deſigned to meet them again. The Lord Brooks his Study, Cabinets, and Pockets were ſearched for Papers: Henry Bellaſis, Eſq; Sir John Hotham, Knight and Baronet, and John Crew, Eſq; were impriſoned, and ſome occaſional Rebukes were given to many others. The King's greateſt difficulty was to raiſe himſelf that Aſſiſtance that he loſt in Parliament: And many of the Lords and Gentlemen were ſo ſenſible of his publick Neceſſities, that by voluntary Loan in leſs than three Weeks, there was three hundred thouſand Pounds paid into the Exchequer.

King offended with the leading Members.

Upon this Fund and the hopes of other Projects, the King was reſolved to carry on the Reduction of Scotland. Orders had been ſent March 26. to the Lords Lieutenants of the ſeveral Counties to provide Horſes and Carters for the Train of Artillery and Ammunition, to be ready at Newcaſtle on June 15. where the general Rendezvous was, now by freſh Orders deferred to Aug. 5. The Lord Conway was there before with a conſiderable Body of Men, and in the beginning of July received an Alarm from Carliſle, that the Scots were within a few Days of Dumfrieſe, meaning to fall into Cumberland: This haſtened the March of the King's Army, who were now advanc'd into the County of York; where being quartered in private Houſes, it produced a Petition of the Gentry to the King againſt this Grievance in the Aſſizes at York July 28. The Lord Conway (b) ſent Intelligence Aug. 15. that the Scotch Army was juſt ready to break in; upon which, Aug, 20. the King began his Journey from London towards the North in ſome haſte, publiſhing the ſame Day a Proclamation, Declaring all Scots entring into England in an hoſtile manner, and their Adherents to be Traitors; but promiſing a Pardon if they ſhould return to Obedience. On that very Day the Scotch Army came over the Tweed, the Vantguard commanded by the Earl of Montroſs; publiſhing Six Conſiderations of the lawfulneſs of their Expedition into England manifeſted; and by ſlow Marches encamped Aug. 27. at Newbourn upon Tine, four Miles Weſt from Newcaſtle. Upon which the King's Forces in Newcaſtle, 3000 Horſe and 1500 Foot were drawn into a Meadow called Newbourn Haugh, to hinder the Scots from paſſing the River; next Day a Skirmiſh began, which brought on a fierce Engagement, in which the Engliſh had ſo much diſadvan-

Purſues the War with Scotland.

King goes toward Scotland.

(a) It is certain, the Papiſts were now at work in diſguiſe, to open a War for the Deſtruction of the Church of England. A Letter from Sir William Boſwel, Ambaſſador at the Hague, to Archbiſhop Laud, Dat. Hague June 12. 1640. tells him.—— Be you aſſured, the Romiſh Clergy have gull'd the miſled Party of our Engliſh Nation, and that under a Puritanical Dreſs; for which the ſeveral Fraternities in that Church have lately received Indulgence from the See of Rome, and Council of Cardinals, to educate ſeveral of the young Fry of the Church of Rome, who be Natives of his Majeſties Realms and Dominions, and inſtruct them in all manner of Principles and Tenets, contrary to the Epiſcopacy of the Church of England. There be in the Town of Hague, to my certain Knowledge, two dangerous Impoſtors, of whom I have given notice to the Prince of Orange, who have large Indulgences granted them, and known to be of the Church of Rome, although they ſeem Puritans, and do converſe with ſeveral of our Engliſh Factors, the one James Murray a Scotch-man, and the other John Napper a Yorkſhire Blade. The main Drift of theſe Intentions, is to pull down the Engliſh Epiſcopacy, as being the chief Support of the Imperial Crown of our Nation; for which purpoſe, above ſixty Romiſh Clergy-men are gone within theſe two Years, out of the Monaſteries of the French King's Dominions, to preach up the Scotch Covenant, and Mr. Knox his Deſcriptions and Rules within that Kirk, and to ſpread the ſame about the Northern Coaſts of England, &c. See Append. to Life and Letters of Archbiſhop Uſher. Fol.

(b) The Lord Conway was a faſt Friend to Archbiſhop Laud, and kept a conſtant Correſpondence with him. I have ſeen an Original Letter of his Lordſhip to the Archbiſhop, Dated from Newcaſtle June 8. 1640.——— I aſſure my ſelf, that there is not any Man leſs your Friend than my Lord of Holland, and I believe, that at all times, you ought to take heed of your ſelf with him; and I think, that at any time, there is not any great Danger in him, if the King be well with you. My Lord of Warwick is the Temporal Head of the Puritans, and my Lord of Holland is the Spiritual Head: Or rather the One is their Viſible Head, the other their Inviſible Head. Collect. MSS. Teniſon. Vol. I. p. 697.

tage, that they retreated in confuſion, and the Lord Conway in a Council of War at Midnight, reſolved to retire with his Forces to Durham, and ſo quitted Newcaſtle, which immediately fell into the Scots hands. The King was come from York as far as North-Allerton, hoping to have reacht his Army at Newcaſtle before any Engagement; but meeting the ill News, he haſtened back Aug. 29. to York, and iſſued his Writs dated Sept. 7. to all the Peers to meet at a great Council at York on Sept. 24. which occaſioned many Petitions for a Parliament, that was ſummon'd to meet Nov. 3. (a)

Calls a great Council.

King's Speech.

In the mean time, at the opening of the great Council in the Dean's Houſe at York Sept. 24. the King in a Speech declared to the Peers, "That upon "ſudden Invaſions it had been the practice of his "Predeceſſors to aſſemble a like Council for Advice "and Aſſiſtance; that he deſired nothing more than "to be rightly underſtood of his People; to which "end he had of himſelf reſolved to call a Parliament, but in the mean time muſt deſire their Advice in two Points; 1. What Anſwer to give to "the Petition of the Rebels, and in what manner "to treat with them. 2. How his Army ſhould "be kept on foot and maintained until the Supplies "of a Parliament might be had." Then the Petition and Letters, and other Proceedings, were laid before the Lords; who as to the firſt Point reſolv'd, That ſixteen Engliſh Lords, with ſome Aſſiſtants, ſhould be ſent to treat with Commiſſioners of the Scots. And as to the ſecond Point, Reſolv'd, That a Letter ſhould be written to the City of London, ſubſcribed by all the Peers preſent for lending the Sum of two hundred thouſand Pounds to keep the Army together for three Months.

Engl. and Scotch Commiſſioners.

The Meeting of the Commiſſioners was appointed to be at Rippon on Thurſday Oct. 1. where after much Altercation it was agreed Oct. 26. that there ſhould be a Ceſſation of Arms; both Parties to retain during the Treaty what they poſſeſſed at time of Ceſſation. The County of Northumberland and Biſhoprick of Durham to be the Limits of the Scotch Army, who ſhould have a Contribution of 850 l. a Day. Theſe Articles were confirmed by the King, with Advice of his great Council Oct. 27. and the continuation of the Treaty depending was adjourned to London, to which Place the King and Lords immediately returned.

Falſe Steps.

There ſeem to have been two falſe Steps in this Expedition; firſt, that the whole Royal Army was not time enough at Newcaſtle to have repulſed the Scots, before they were fluſh'd with the defeat of too ſmall a Party of the Engliſh. And ſecondly, that a Treaty was allowed, and a Ceſſation granted to declared Rebels, who ſhould rather have been gratified in their Demands by the King's free Mercy, or ſhould have been purſued to their own Submiſſion. And ſays a late Stateſman, The laſt and moſt confounding Error was, the removing the Treaty to London, and upon any Terms conſenting, that the Scotch Commiſſioners ſhould reſide there before a Peace concluded.

Parliament meets.

On Novemb. 3. the Parliament met, the King not riding to Weſtminſter in the accuſtomed State, but going privately in his Barge, as if under melancholy Apprehenſions; he made this Speech with leſs Spirit than uſual.

King's Speech.

"My Lords,

"THE knowledge I had of the Deſires of my "Scotiſh Subjects, was the cauſe of my calling "the laſt Aſſembly of Parliament; wherein had I "been believed, I ſincerely think, that things had "not fallen out as now we ſee. But it is no wonder, ſince Men are ſo ſlow to believe that ſo great a "Sedition ſhould be raiſed on ſo little Ground. But "now, my Lords and Gentlemen, the Honour and "Safety of this Kingdom lying ſo near at the Stake, "I am reſolved to put my ſelf freely and clearly on "the Love and Affection of my Engliſh Subjects, as "theſe of my Lords as did wait on me at York very "well remember I there declared.

"Therefore, my Lords, I ſhall not mention mine "own Intereſt, or that Support I might juſtly expect from you, till the Common Safety be ſecured; "though I muſt tell you, I am not aſhamed to ſay, "thoſe Charges I have been at, have been meerly "for the ſecuring and good of this Kingdom; tho' "the Succeſs hath not been anſwerable to my Deſires: Therefore I ſhall only deſire you to conſider the beſt way, both for the Safety and Security of this Kingdom, wherein there are two parts "chiefly conſiderable; firſt, the chaſtizing out of "the Rebels, and ſecondly, that other in ſatisfying "your juſt Grievances, wherein I ſhall promiſe you "to concur ſo heartily and clearly with you, that "all the World may ſee my Intentions have ever "been, and ſhall be, to make this a glorious and "flouriſhing Kingdom.

"There are only two things that I ſhall mention "to you; firſt, the one is to tell you, that the Loan "of Money which I lately had from the City of "London, wherein the Lords that waited on me at "York aſſiſted me, will only maintain my Army for "two Months, from the beginning of that time it "was granted. Now, my Lords and Gentlemen, "I leave it to your Conſiderations, what Diſhonour "and Miſchief it might be, in caſe for want of Money my Army be diſbanded before the Rebels be "put out of this Kingdom. Secondly, the ſecuring the "Calamities the Northern People endure at this time "and ſo long as the Treaty is on foot. And in "this, I may ſay, not only they but all this Kingdom will ſuffer the harm: Therefore I leave this "alſo to your Conſideration, for the ordering of "theſe great Affairs, whereof you are to treat at this "time. I am ſo confident of your Love to me, and "that your care is for the Honour and Safety of the "Kingdom, that I ſhall freely and willingly leave "to you where to begin; only this, that you may "the better know the State of all the Affairs, I have "commanded my Lord-Keeper to give you a ſhort "and free Account of theſe things that have happen'd "in this interim, with this Proteſtation, that if "this Account be not ſatisfactory as it ought to be, "I ſhall, whenſoever you deſire, give you a full "and perfect Account of every Particular.

"One thing more I deſire of you, as one of the "greateſt Means to make this a happy Parliament, "that you on your parts, as I on mine, lay aſide "all Suſpicion of one another, as I promiſed my "Lords at York, it ſhall not be my Fault if this be "not a happy and good Parliament."

The King had deſigned Sir Thomas Gardiner, Recorder of London, to have been Speaker in this Houſe of Commons; and for that very reaſon the Enemies of the Court had prevented his Election for the City, and for all other Places: So that Mr. Lenthal, a Bencher of Lincoln's-Inn (a Lawyer of competent Practice, and no ill Reputation for his Affection to the Government both of Church and State) was pitch'd upon by the King, and with very great difficulty rather prevailed with than perſwaded to accept the Charge; and no doubt a worſe could not have been deputed of all that Profeſſion who were then return'd; for he was a Man of a very narrow, timorous Nature, and of no Experience or Converſation in the Affairs of the Kingdom, beyond what the very drudgery in his Profeſſion (in which all his Deſign was to make himſelf Rich) engaged him in. In a word, he was in all reſpects very unequal to the Work, and not knowing how to preſerve his own Dignity, or to reſtrain the Licence and Exorbitance of others, his Weakneſs contributed as much to the growing Miſchiefs, as the Malice of the principal Contrivers.

On Nov. 5. the King declared his approbation of the Speaker; (a) and becauſe great Offence had been taken by the Scots and their Well-wiſhers, that the King in his Speech the Day before, had twice called them Rebels, while he was under Treaty with them, his Majeſty choſe now to explain himſelf, I told you that the Rebels muſt be put out of this Kingdom; it's true, I muſt needs call them ſo, ſo long as they have an Army that do invade us: And although I am under Treaty with them, and I under my Great-Seal do call them my Subjects, and ſo they are too.

King explains his calling the Scots Rebels.

Grievances.

On Saturday Novemb. 7. the Scene of Complaints opened; Tragical Petitions were preferr'd to the Houſe of Commons in behalf of the chief Sufferers for Sedition, Mr. Prynne, Dr. Baſtwick, Mr. Burton, John Lilburn, Alexander Leighton, &c. Then the particular Grievances of the ſeveral Counties were repreſented; of Hertfordſhire by Arthur Capel, Eſq; of York by Mr. Bellaſis and the Lord Fairfax, of Lincolnſhire by Sir John Wray, of Weſtmorland by Sir Philip Muſgrave, of Wilts by Sir Francis Seymour, of Worceſterſhire by Sir John Packington, of Rutland by Sir Guy Palmes, of Norfolk by Sir Edmund Montford, of Eſſex by Sir Thomas Barrington, of Kent by Sir John Culpeper, and of other Counties and Towns by other Knights and Burgeſſes. After which Mr. Pym made an Harangue upon the general Grievances of the Nation, under three Heads. 1. Againſt the Privilege of Parliament. 2. To the Prejudice of Religion. 3. Againſt the Liberty of the Subject. Then Sir Benjamin Rudyard delivered a Speech againſt the Innovations in Religion, and let fall this ſeaſonable Expreſſion; The King is reduced to great Straits, wherein it were Undutifulneſs beyond Inhumanity to take Advantage of him; let us rather make it an Advantage for him to do him beſt Service when he hath moſt need. Mr. Bagſhaw ſpoke ſeverely, concluding thus; Let the woful Violation of the Statute of Monopolies, and the Petition of Right, be made Felony or Premunire at the leaſt; but yet, in the interim, let them be made Examples of Puniſhment who have been the Authors of all theſe Miſeries, according to the Counſel of Solomon: Take away the Wicked from before the King, and his Throne ſhall be eſtabliſhed in Righteouſneſs. Sir John Holland ſpoke next with more Modeſty and Temper; he touch'd upon the Grievances, and recommended a Redreſs of them, and then, ſays he, Touching ſupplying his Majeſty's Wants, I do humbly deſire we may proceed therein within its due time, and that with as much Loyal Duty and Liberality as ever any People expreſſed towards their Prince. —— Let us remove the Scotiſh Army with a ſoft and gentle hand of Mediation, Pacification, and Reconciliation, if poſſible it may be wrought with his Majeſty's Honour and the Kingdom's Safety; if not, then to repel and repulſe them with ſtout and reſolute Spirits, with valiant and united Hearts and Hands, &c.

Speeches.

Lord Digby againſt Ship-Money.

Novemb. 9. the Lord Digby made a Speech againſt the great and intolerable burden of Ship-Money; the Abuſes in preſſing Soldiers, and raiſing Monies for the Maintenance of them; the multitude of Monopolies, the new Canons and Oath, the Oath to Church Officers for preſenting upon new and unuſual Articles; the Impoſition of the new Oath upon Miniſters, and the Benevolence rais'd by Convocation; and concluded with a Motion, "That a "ſelect Committee might be appointed to draw "up ſuch a Remonſtrance as ſhould be a faith"ful and lively Repreſentation to his Majeſty of "the deplorable State of the Kingdom; for which "a Committee of twenty four was accordingly ap"pointed."

1640. 16 Car. I.

Novemb. 10. Sir Edward Dering made a zealous Invective againſt the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, concluding, "That he hop'd before the Year ran round, "his Grace would either have more Grace or no "Grace at all: For our manifold Griefs do fill a "mighty and vaſt Circumference; yet ſo that from "every part our Lines of Sorrow do lead unto Him, "and point at him the Centre, from whence our Mi"ſeries in this Church, and many of them in the "Commonwealth do flow."

Sir Edw. Dering againſt the Abp. of Canterbury.

Novemb. 11. Mr. Pym inform'd the Houſe, that there were ſeveral Perſons who had given Information, that there was a good ground for Accuſing Thomas Earl of Strafford of High-Treaſon; for which a ſelect Committee was appointed, who brought in this Report, That they did find juſt Cauſe to accuſe the Earl of Strafford of High-Treaſon; and that the Houſe would deſire the Lords that he may be Sequeſtred from Parliament and Committed; and that within ſome convenient time this Houſe will reſort to their Lordſhips with particular Accuſations and Articles againſt him. Mr. Pym carried the Meſſage to the Lords, who returned Anſwer by the two chief Juſtices, that they had taken into ſerious Conſideration the Accuſation ſent from this Houſe againſt the Earl of Strafford, that they had Sequeſtred him from the Houſe, and committed him into ſafe Cuſtody to the Gentleman-Uſher of their Houſe, &c. It was afterward reflected on as a Raſhneſs fatal to this great Miniſter, that when he was at the Head of the King's Army in the North, he ſhould leave his ſafe Poſt, and come to a Parliament which he knew would be incens'd againſt him; when if he had paſs'd over into his own Government of Ireland, or ſent over for the Forces which there waited his Orders, he might have ſerv'd the King and ſav'd himſelf.

Mr. Pym againſt the Earl of Strafford.

Ill Conduct of the Earl.

Novemb. 21. Sir Edward Dering at the Grand Committee for Religion, made a very provoking Speech, ſaying, that God's true Religion was violently invaded by two ſeeming Enemies, but indeed (like Herod and Pilate) faſt Friends for the deſtruction of Truth, the Papiſts for one Party, and the Prelating Faction for the other; declaring, He had rather ſerve one as far off as Tiber, than to have him come ſo near as the Thames; a Pope at Rome would do him leſs hurt than a Patriarch might do at Lambeth; concluding with a Motion "To ſelect a Committee of a few, and to impower "them for the diſcovery of the Numbers of oppreſ"ſed Miniſters under the Biſhops Tyranny for theſe "ten Years laſt paſt."

Innovations in Religion.

Decemb. 7. upon the Debate concerning Ship-Money, the Lord Falkland made a vehement Speech againſt it; and it was reſolv'd upon the Queſtion, Nemine contradicente, "That the Charge impoſed upon "the Subjects for the providing and furniſhing "Ships, and the Aſſeſſments for raiſing of Money for "that purpoſe, commonly called Ship-Money, are "againſt the Laws of the Realm, the Subjects "Right of Property, and contrary to the former "Reſolutions in Parliament, and to the Petition of "Right."

Reſolution againſt Ship-Money.

Decemb. 10. Mr. Secretary Windebank (b), who had been declared the greateſt Promoter of Popery, upon a Secretary Windebank flies beyond Sea.

(a) See Mr. Speaker his Speech to his Majeſty in the High-Court of Parliament the 5th of November, 1640. Printed MDCXL. 4*to.*

(b) He has this Character given in the Narrative of the Plot diſcover'd by Andrew ab Habernfeld; Mr. Secretary Windebank a moſt fierce Papiſt, the moſt unfaithful to the King of all Men, who not only betrays the King's Secrets, but imparts all Councils to ſerve the Popiſh Cauſe. He is at leaſt thrice a Week in Midnight Conſults with the Pope's Legate, and informs him of every thing fit to be known. For which purpoſe he hir'd a Houſe near the ſaid Legate's; and went to it frequently thro' a Garden-Door. The ſaid Secretary is bound to the Society of Popiſh Conſpirators by Gifts and Bribes, and is ſupported by them, to do good Offices for them. He ſent his own Son directly to Rome, to inſinuate himſelf to the Roman Pontiff.

Other Popiſh Servants about the King are thus deſcribed in the ſame authentick Paper. Mr. Porter of the King's Bed-Chamber is one moſt addicted to the Popiſh Religion, a bitter Enemy of the King, he reveals all Secrets to the Pope's Legate, tho' he ſeldom converſes with him; yet his Wife meets oftner with the Legate, and tells him all Stories of which her Husband informs on a peremptory Summons to appear before the Houſe of Commons, fled beyond Sea; which muſt needs make an Impreſſion upon the King, that he muſt be aſſaulted on the one hand, and deſerted on the other; becauſe not able to Protect his Miniſters, nor they able to vindicate themſelves. The late Hiſtorian makes this Remark on the Flight of Windebank: "I could never yet learn the true Reaſon why they ſuffered Secretary Windebank to eſcape their Juſtice (for the Lord Finch, it was "viſible he was in their Favour, and they would "gladly have preſerved him in the Place) againſt "whom they had more pregnant Teſtimony of Offences within the verge of the Law, than againſt "any Perſon they have accuſed ſince this Parliament, and of ſome that it may be might have proved Capital, and ſo their Appetite of Blood might "have been ſatisfied."

Proceedings againſt the Abp. of Canterbury.

December. 16. After voting the late Canons made in Convocation to be illegal, &c. a Committee was appointed to conſider how far in particular the Lord Archbiſhop of Canterbury had been an Actor in the great Deſign of the Subverſion of the Laws of the Realm, and of the Religion, and to draw up a Charge againſt him. The ſame Day the Scots Commiſſioners accuſed the Archbiſhop, and the next Morning exhibited to the Houſe of Lords a long Charge of his being the Author of all their Troubles. December 18. Mr. Harbottle Grimſtone made a bitter Invective againſt the Archbiſhop, calling him The Sty of all Peſtilential Filth;——The great and common Enemy of all Goodneſs and Good Men;—— A Viper near his Majeſty's Perſon to diſtil Poyſon into his ſacred Ears, &c. At the End of this wrathful Speech, the Archbiſhop was voted to be a Traitor, and Mr. Hollis was ſent to the Lords to accuſe him of High-Treaſon; upon which he was committed to the Cuſtody of the Gentleman Uſher, and Sequeſtred from ſitting in Parliament, till he cleared himſelf of this Accuſation. (a)

Againſt the Lord-Keeper Finch.

December 21. the Lord-Keeper Finch was the next obnoxious Man; who being threatened with an Impeachment, deſired leave to ſpeak for himſelf in the Houſe of Commons, and did ſo in a very Eloquent Speech, delivered with an excellent Grace and Geſture; but was voted a Traitor, 1. For refuſing to read the Remonſtrance againſt the Lord Treaſurer Weſton, 4 Car. when the Parliament deſired it. 2. For ſolliciting, perſwading and threatning the Judges to deliver their Opinion for the Levying of Ship-Money. 3. For ſeveral illegal Actions in Foreſt Matters. 4. For ill Offices done in making the King to diſſolve the laſt Parliament, and cauſing his Declaration thereupon to be put forth: Upon which he got up early the next Morning and eſcaped into Holland. Sir Edward Littleton, Chief Juſtice of the Common Pleas, being made Lord-Keeper in his Place; the late Writer of the Hiſtory of Rebellion, makes it viſible, that the Lord Finch was in the Favour of the Houſe of Commons, and that they would have gladly preſerved him in the Place, and that they uſed Artifices to give him all Advantages, tho' (ſays he) if their Rule were true, that an Endeavour to alter the Government by Law, and to introduce an arbitrary Power were Treaſon, He was the moſt notoriouſly and unexcuſably guilty of that Crime of any Man that can be named. This Cenſure ſeems a little too ſevere, but Mr. Hide was an Aſſiſtant for reading the Articles of Impeachment carried up to the Lords againſt him, on January 14. following, and had the Thanks of the Houſe for his Service.

Frequent Parliaments.

January 19. the Lord Digby made a Speech for the frequency of Parliaments, whereupon the Bill for the preventing of Inconveniences happening by the long intermiſſion of Parliaments was paſſed, and carried up to the Lords by the ſaid Lord Digby. And the Majority of the Commons purged their Houſe of ſeveral Members diſaffected to their Proceeding, Mr. William Sandys Burgeſs for Eveſham, Sir John Jacob, Mr. Thomas Web, and Mr. Edmund Windham.

Commons correſpond with the Scots.

It muſt be charged upon the Houſe of Commons, that inſtead of driving out the Scots, they depended upon the countenance of their Army, as a Terror to bring the King to comply with every Thing they ſhould propoſe to him; and therefore they renewed the Treaty, and held a very kind correſpondence with their Commiſſioners, and even deſcended to this diſhonourable Vote, Jan. 22. That a friendly Aſſiſtance and Relief ſhould be given towards ſupply of the Loſſes and Neceſſities of the Scots, and that in due time the Houſe would take into conſideration the Meaſure and Manner of it. It is certain the King had carried it with great Patience and Temper, and to all their occaſional Applications to them, had given very calm and kind Anſwers. His diſpoſition to Peace and Settlement was farther ſhewn in this Speech to both Houſes, Jan. 25.

King's healing Speech.

"My Lords, and you the Knights, Citizens, and Burgeſſes,

"THE principal Cauſe of my coming here at "this Time, is by reaſon of the ſlow proceedings in Parliament, touching which is a great "deal of Inconvenience: Therefore I think it very "neceſſary to lay before you the State of my Affairs, "as now they ſtand, thereby to haſten not to interrupt your Proceedings.

"Firſt, I muſt remember you, that there are two "Armies in the Kingdom in a manner maintained "by you; the very naming of which doth more "clearly ſhew the Inconvenience thereof, than a "better Tongue than mine can expreſs. Therefore, "in the firſt Place, I ſhall recommend unto you the "quick diſpatch of that Buſineſs.

"In the next place, I muſt recommend unto you "the State of my Navy and Forts, the Condition "of both which is ſo well known unto you that I "need not tell you the Particulars; only thus much, "they are the Walls and Defence of this Kingdom, "which if out of Order, all Men may eaſily judge "what Encouragement it will be to our Enemies, "and what diſheartening to our Friends.

"Laſt of all (and not the leaſt to be conſidered) "I muſt lay before you the diſtractions that are at "this preſent occaſion'd thro' the Connivance of Parliament; for there are ſome Men that more maliciouſly than ignorantly, will put no difference "between Reformation and Alteration of Govern-informs her. In all his Actions he is nothing inferiour to Sir Toby Matthews; it is unſpeakable how diligent he is in their Buſineſs. His Sons are ſecretly inſtructed in the Popiſh Religion, tho' they openly profeſs the Reformed; the eldeſt is to ſucceed in his Father's Office; the other is to have a Cardinal's Hat, if Matters go well.—— He is a Patron of the Jeſuits, for whom he provides Chapels at home and abroad for the free exerciſe of their Religion. The Chevalier Digby, Chevalier Winter, Mr. Mountague the younger, who has been at Rome, my Lord Sterling, a Couſin of the Earl of Arundel's, a Knight, the Counteſs of Newport, the Dutcheſs of Buckingham, and many others.

(a) The Scots had drawn up a very ſevere Libel againſt Archbiſhop Laud and his Friends, and diſperſt great Numbers of the printed Copy, intituled, The Canterburians Self-Conviction, or, An evident Demonſtration of the avowed Arminianiſm, Popery, and Tyranny of that Faction by their own Confeſſions.——Written in March, Reviſed according to the Ordinance of the General Aſſembly at Edinburgh, 1. Apr. and then publiſht 1640. 4*to.*

It is certain the Papiſts were as much the Archbiſhop's Enemies as the Scots Presbyterians could poſſibly be. Sir William Boſwell ſent over a Diſcovery, and one would think a Prophecy, that the Papiſts had already plotted and reſolved upon the Deſtruction and Death of the King and the Archbiſhop; depoſed upon Oath, in the Words of a noble Foreigner, Andreas ab Habernfeld, 6. Sept. 1640. 1. Regiam Majeſtatem & Dominum Archiepiſcopum utrumque in magno diſcrimine vitæ conſtitutum. 2. Totam Rempublicam hoc nomine periclitari, niſi propere occurretur malo. 3. Turbas iſtas Scoticas in eum finem eſſe concitatas, ut ſub iſto prætextu Rex & Dominus Archiepiſcopus perimeretur.——6. Conſpiraſſe certam Societatem quæ Regi & Domino Archiepiſcopo molitur Necem, totiuſq; Regni convulſionem.

1640. 16*Car.* I. "ment. Hence it cometh, that Divine Service is "irreverently interrupted, and Petitions in an ill "way given in, neither diſputed nor denied. But "I will enter into no more Particulars, but ſhew "you a way of Remedy, by ſhewing you my clear "Intentions, and ſome Rocks that may hinder this "good Work.

"I ſhall willingly and chearfully concur with you, "for the Reformation of all Innovations both in "Church and Common-wealth; and conſequently "that all Courts of Juſtice may be reformed accor- "ding to Law, for my Intention is clearly to reduce "all Things to the beſt and pureſt Time, as they "were in the time of Queen Elizabeth. Moreover, "whatſoever part of my Revenue ſhall be found "illegal, or heavy to my Subjects, I ſhall be "willing to lay it down, truſting in their Affe- "ctions.

"Having thus clearly and ſhortly ſet down my "Intentions, I will ſhew you ſome Rubbs, and muſt "needs take notice of ſome very ſtrange (I know "not what Term to give them) Petitions given in "the Names of divers Counties, againſt the preſent "eſtabliſhed Government, and of the great Threat- "nings againſt the Biſhops, that they will make "them to be but Cyphers, or at leaſt their Voices "to be taken away.

"Now I muſt tell you, that I make a great dif- "ference between Reformation and Alteration of "Government; tho' I am for the firſt, I cannot "give way to the latter. If ſome of them have "over-ſtretch'd their Power, and encroach'd too "much upon the Temporality, if it be ſo, I ſhall "not be unwilling theſe Things ſhould be redreſſed "and reformed, as all other Abuſes, according to "the Wiſdom of former Times, ſo far I ſhall go "with you; nay, farther, if upon ſerious Debate "you ſhall ſhew me that Biſhops have ſome Tempo- "ral Authority inconvenient to the State, and not "ſo neceſſary for the Government of the Church, "and upholding Epiſcopal Juriſdiction, I ſhall not "be unwilling to deſire them to lay it down. But "this muſt not be underſtood, that I ſhall any way "conſent that their Voices in Parliament ſhould be "taken away; for in all the times of my Predeceſ- "ſors, ſince the Conqueſt and before, they have en- "joy'd it, and I am bound to maintain them in it, "as one of the fundamental Conſtitutions of this "Kingdom.

"There is another Rock you are on, not in Sub- "ſtance but in Form; yet the Form is ſo eſſential, "that unleſs it be Reformed it will mar the Sub- "ſtance. This is a Bill lately put in concerning "Parliaments: The Thing I like well to have fre- "quent Parliaments; but to give Power to Sheriffs "and Conſtables, and I know not whom, to uſe "my Authority, that I cannot yield unto. But to "ſhew you that I am deſirous to give you content "in Forms which deſtroy not the Subſtance, you "ſhall have a Bill for this purpoſe, ſo that it trench "not againſt my Honour, nor againſt the ancient Pre- "rogative of the Crown concerning Parliaments; "to which purpoſe I have commanded my Learned "Council to wait upon you, my Lords, with ſuch "Propoſitions as I hope will give you content. "For I ingenuouſly confeſs, that frequent Parlia- "ments are the beſt Means to keep a right under- "ſtanding betwixt me and my People, which I ſo "much deſire.

"To conclude, I have now ſhown you the State "of my Affairs, my own clear Intentions, and the "Rocks I wiſh you to eſchew. In all which you "may perceive the Deſire I have to give you Con- "tent, as you ſhall find alſo by thoſe Miniſters I "have, or ſhall have about me, for the effecting of "theſe my good Intentions; which I doubt not will "bring Peace and Happineſs to my Subjects, and "Contentment to you all. Concerning the Confe- "rence you ſhall have a direct Anſwer, which ſhall "give you Satisfaction."

This Speech if it had been deliver'd in the preceeding Parliament, had hardly failed of the Bleſſings of Unity and Peace: For the Conceſſions of it were indeed ſufficient to have reconciled all Things. But the Proſpect of the Scotch Army in the North, and the Influence of the Scotch Commiſſioners in Town, made the leading Members too proud of their Advantage over the King's Neceſſities: So that inſtead of Thanks for this Speech, and Conſideration of it, a Remonſtrance of the two Houſes was delivered to his Majeſty Jan. 29. againſt the Impunity of Papiſts and the Pardon of Goodman, humbly deſiring, "That "a ſpeedy courſe may be taken for the due execu- "tion of the Laws againſt the Prieſts and Jeſuits:" To which his Majeſty anſwered the two Houſes in a gracious Speech Feb. 3. That he took in good part their Care of the true Religion eſtabliſhed in this Kingdom, from which he would never depart; That it was againſt his Mind that Popery or Superſtition ſhould any way increaſe; and he would reſtrain the ſame, by cauſing the Laws to be put in execution; for which he would ſpeedily publiſh a Proclamation. And that the Reaſon why he repriev'd Goodman the Prieſt, was, that neither Queen Elizabeth, nor his Father, did ever avow, that any Prieſt in their Times was executed merely for Religion: However, he would remit the Cauſe to the two Houſes, and deſire them to conſider the Inconveniencies that might fall on his Subjects and other Proteſtants Abroad by ſo great Severity.

(1640. 16 Car. I. — margin: This excellent Speech came too late. — Remonſtrance.)

But neither could this yielding to the Stream put any ſtop to it: The leading Majority depended on the Scots; and for a tacit Condition of Help encouraged all their inſolent Demands, and expelled a worthy Member from their Houſe, Mr. Jarvis Hollis, becauſe he ſpoke thus; Our younger Brother of Scotland, like Jacob, ſeemeth to ſupplant us, and take away our Birthright. No Man had a more charitable Conſtruction of their Intentions than I had, while they made their Addreſſes in humble diſtance as befitted Subjects to their Sovereign;—— but now, Sir, when I ſee them ſwell in their Demands, beyond all proportion; when I hear them enlarge upon their firſt Propoſitions, and require Things unfit for a King to grant, and diſhonourable for this Nation to ſuffer, I cannot but fix a Mark of danger upon them; I fear we have nouriſhed in our Boſom thoſe that will ſting us to Death: And then proceeded to this Reſolution, "This Houſe doth conceive the "Sum of three hundred thouſand Pounds a fit pro- "portion for the friendly Aſſiſtance and Relief, "thought fit to be made towards the Loſſes and Ne- "ceſſities of our Brethren of Scotland;" and in fine, accepted the Thanks of the Scots Commiſſioners, for the ſaid Aſſiſtance and for the Style of Brethren given them in the Vote of the Houſe. And indeed this dear Correſpondence between the Scots in Arms, and the Commons of England in Parliament, was the Combination that deſtroy'd the King. The Commons looked upon the Scots as their Protectors, and the Scots look'd back upon the Commons as their Pay-Maſters, and would no longer value the King's calling them Rebels when the Parliament called them Friends and Brethren.

(Margin: Commons influenc'd by the Scots Rebellion. — Give them friendly Aſſiſtance.)

Feb. 15. An Act for Relief of his Majeſty's Army and the Northern Parts, being a Grant of four Subſidies; and the Act for Triennial Parliaments were paſſed by the King with this following Speech.

(Margin: King's Speech.)

"My Lords, and you the Knights, Citizens, and Burgeſſes "of the Houſe of Commons,

"YOU may remember when both Houſes were "with me at the Banquetting-Houſe at White- "hall, I did declare unto you two Rocks I wiſhed "you to eſchew; this is one of them, and of that con- "ſequence that I think never Bill paſſed here in this "Houſe of more favour to the Subjects than this is. "And if the other Rock be as happily paſſed over as "this ſhall be at this time, I do not know what you "can aſk, for ought I can ſee at this time, that I "can make any queſtion to yield unto. Therefore I "mention this to ſhew unto you the Senſe that I "have

16 Car. I.

" have of this Bill, and the Obligation, as I may ſay, " that you have to me for it: For hitherto, to ſpeak " freely, I have had no great Encouragement to " do it. If I ſhould look to the outward Face of " your Actions or Proceedings, and not look to the " inward Intentions of your Hearts, I might make " queſtion of doing it.

" Hitherto you have gone on in that which con- " cerns your ſelves to amend, and not in thoſe " Things that nearly concern the Strength of this " Kingdom, neither for the State nor for my own " Particular.

" This I mention not to reproach you, but to " ſhew you the State of Things as they are. You " have taken the Government all in Pieces, and I " may ſay it is almoſt off the Hinges. A ſkilful " Watch-maker to make clean his Watch will take " it aſunder, and when it is put together it will " go the better, ſo that he leave not out one Pin of " it. Now, as I have done all this on my part, " you know what to do on yours; and I hope " you ſhall ſee clearly, that I have performed really " what I expreſſed to you at the beginning of this " Parliament, of the great Truſt I have in your Af- " fections to me: For this is the greateſt Expreſſion " of Truſt, that before you do any Thing for me, I " do put ſuch a Confidence in you."

Satisfaction of both Houſes.

There was a great Joy and Satisfaction in the two Houſes at the paſſing of theſe Bills. They agreed to wait on the King and return their Thanks by the Mouth of the Lord-Keeper, for having now ſufficiently provided for the ſecurity of the Common-wealth; and that there remained nothing to be done but ſuch a Return of Duty and Gratitude to his Majeſty, as might teſtify their Devotions to him, and that their only End was to make him a glorious King.

Continuance of this Parliament a great Error.

Had his Majeſty now diſſolved the Parliament when he had took off the Fears of long Intermiſſion, and applied the Money to the Uſes of the Bill for ſettling the North, and conferred the great Offices upon the leading Men deſigned for them; as the Treaſury on the Earl of Bedford, the Chancellorſhip of the Exchequer on Mr. Pym, the Maſterſhip of the Wards on the Lord Say, a Secretary's place on Denzil Hollis, &c. the King in one or two Years might have prepared a way for an amicable meeting. But as the haſty diſſolution of the laſt Parliament was one great Error, ſo the longer continuance of this does ſeem a greater.

Warm Proceedings of the Commons.

For the next Day after their Addreſs of Thanks, the Commons received the Bundles of Petitions that had been induſtriouſly prepared againſt Innovations in the Church, and againſt Epiſcopacy it ſelf; and Feb, 17. they fell to adjuſting their Method of Proceedings in the Impeachment of the Earl of Strafford; and had ſoon after the Articles read and carried up to the Lords againſt the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and had the Pacification with the Scots renewed from time to time, without concluding upon the Articles of Peace; whereby, in effect, they retained them in Pay againſt the King.

State of Religion.

The Affairs of the Church, as diſtinct from thoſe of the State, begin with the Convocation open'd Apr. 14. with a Sermon preach'd by Dr. Thomas Turner, Reſidentiary of St. Paul's, on Matt. 10. 16. after which Dr. Richard Steward Dean of Chicheſter, was choſen Prolocutor, who being preſented to the Abp. by Dr. Gilbert Sheldon at the next Seſſion Apr. 17. his Grace in a Latin Speech moſt affectionately bemoan'd the Dangers threatned to the Church, owing to the decay of Diſcipline and the growth of Errors; and then commended the ſpecial Favour of his Majeſty in granting them a Commiſſion (which he produced and ordered to be read) authorizing them to propoſe, confer, treat, debate, conſider, conſult and agree upon the Expoſition or Alteration of any Canon or Canons now in force, and of and upon any ſuch other new Canons, Orders, Ordinances and Conſtitutions, as they the ſaid Lord Archbiſhop, Preſident of the ſaid Convocation, and the reſt of the ſaid Biſhops, and other the Clergy of the ſame Province, or the greater number of them (whereof the ſaid Lord Archbiſhop of Canterbury, Preſident of the ſaid Convocation to be one) ſhall think neceſſary, fit and convenient, for the Honour and Service of Almighty God, the Good and Quiet of the Church, and the better Government thereof.

Royal Commiſſion.

In the third Seſſion, April 22. his Grace ſending for the Prolocutor and Lower Houſe, informed them " of the extraordinary Expences which lay upon his " Majeſty, and the imminent Dangers which at this " time threatned the whole Kingdom: for which " reaſon he and his Brethren had treated and agreed " upon ſix Subſidies (or more, if it appeared upon " the Regiſters that More had been ever at once " granted by the Prelates and Clergy of this Pro- " vince) at the rate of four Shillings in the Pound; " deſiring them that, for a Teſtimony of their ſin- " gular Obedience and Duty to the King, they " would give their aſſent, debating it among them- " ſelves, and then giving in their Anſwer." After which the Prolocutor and Clergy returned to their Houſe, and after a little time came back, and the Prolocutor reported to his Grace, that they had unanimouſly agreed to the ſaid Grant (a). Then the Archbiſhop had ſome Diſcourſe with them concerning the making of Canons, and ſaid, that he and his Brethren had already agreed upon two ſeveral Conſtitutions for ſuppreſſing of Popery.

The Abp. propoſes a Supply.

April 25. A Form of Prayer, (b) compoſed by the Archbiſhop's Chaplains, for God's Bleſſing upon the Parliament then aſſembled, was preſented by the Prolocutor to his Grace and the Biſhops, who approv'd it with the addition of one Word; and order'd it to be read daily in Convocation, immediately before the Benediction. It was farther order'd that no Biſhop, or any other of the Clergy, ſhould preſume to copy out, or talk abroad of any Canon, till it was finally agreed to and approved by the King. The Archbiſhop by Schedule, as uſually, prorogued to Wedneſday April 29. On which Day the Biſhop of Bath and Wells, by Commiſſion from the Preſident, prorogued to Saturday May 2. And on that Day the Biſhop of St. Aſaph, by a like Commiſſion, prorogued to Tueſday May 5. On which Day the Parliament was diſſolved.

Form of Prayer for the Parliament.

It having been the uſual Practice for the Convocation to be diſſolved the Day after the Parliament, (tho' no ſuch neceſſary Concurrence in the Conſtitution of thoſe two Bodies) they met the next Day, May 6. in expectation to be diſmiſs'd. And the Archbiſhop himſelf, not knowing of the King's Thoughts to continue their Sitting, " had ſent (he " ſays) to diſſolve the Convocation; Haſte and " Trouble of theſe Buſineſſes making him forget " that he was to have the King's Writ for the diſ- " miſſing as well as the convening of it. Word was " brought me of this from the Convocation-Houſe, " while I was ſitting in Council, and his Majeſty " preſent. Hereupon, when the Council roſe, I " moved his Majeſty for a Writ: His Majeſty gave " me an unlook'd-for Reply; namely, that he was " willing to have the Subſidies which we had grant- " ed him, and that we ſhould go on with the fi- " niſhing of thoſe Canons which he had given us " Power, under the Broad Seal of England, to make. " And when I replied, it would be excepted againſt " in all likelihood by divers, and deſired his Maje- " ſty to adviſe well about it; the King anſwered me " preſently, That he had ſpoken with the Lord-Keeper, Convocation uſually diſſolv'd with the Parliament.

Now continued.

(b) In the Houſe of Commons there was a Prayer read by the Speaker each Morning, and in the Afternoon alſo, during the Earl of Strafford's Tryal, with a Clauſe of Thankſgiving afterward added by Order of the Houſe, during the ſecond Parliament of 1640. D'Ewe's Journal of Commons. Upon this I was commanded to " ſit and go on with the Convocation."

Heylin's Animad. on Fuller's Church Hiſt. p. 129.

Under theſe Reaſons beſt delivered in the Archbiſhop's own Words: While the Lower Houſe were on the ſaid 6th of April expecting a Writ of Diſſolution, Dr. Heylin, then a Member, tells us, that there came an Order from the Archbiſhop to the Prolocutor to adjourn till Saturday, which was the next Synodical Meeting of the Upper Houſe. So that indeed there was no room for thoſe intermediate Seſſions of the Lower Houſe which have been lately urged from miſtaken Minutes.

Troubles and Trial, p. 80.

Members diſſatisfied.

Saturday May 9th, Nothing done in the Upper Houſe; the Archbiſhop not appearing, but by Commiſſion prorogued to Wedneſday May 13. In the Lower Houſe, the Archbiſhop obſerves, that at firſt ſome little Exception was taken there by two or three Members, whether we might ſit or no. Dr. Fuller takes the Liberty to ſay, that Dr. Brownrig, Dr. Hacket, Dr. Holdſworth, &c. to the number of thirty ſix, earneſtly proteſted againſt the Continuance of the Convocation. But Dr. Heylin, an equal Witneſs, aſſures us, there was no oral Proteſtation heard, and none reduced into Writing. However, there was ſome Demur and Diſſatisfaction in it, as there might well be among thoſe who had not heard the Opinion in Law upon which the King proceeded: And therefore to take away all ſcruple, before the next Seſſion, the Archbiſhop ſays, He acquainted his Majeſty with this Doubt, and humbly beſought him, that his learned Council, and other Perſons of Honour, well acquainted with the Laws of the Realm, might deliver their Judgment upon it.

Accordingly Wedneſday May 13. the Archbiſhop communicated to both Houſes this ſolemn Opinion thus ſubſcribed.

Opinion of the Judges.

THE Convocation being called by the King's Writ, under the Great Seal, doth continue until it be diſſolv'd by Writ or Commiſſion under the Great Seal, notwithſtanding the Parliament be diſſolved.

" The Judgment of theſe great Lawyers (ſays " the Archbiſhop) ſettled both Houſes of Convoca- " tion. So we proceeded according to the Power " given us under the Broad Seal, as is required by " the Statute 25 Hen. VIII. cap. 19." For, becauſe the firſt Commiſſion determined with the Parliament, a new Commiſſion, dated May 12. was produc'd by his Grace this Day, not differing from the former of April 15. ſaving in a Clauſe repealing the old Commiſſion, and in altering the Force and Continuance of this new one: for whereas the Licence and Power were before to treat and conclude from time to time during the preſent Parliament, it was now altered into during our Will and Pleaſure.

A new Commiſſion.

King ſends a Meſſage to the Convocation.

In the next Seſſion, May 15. Sir Henry Vane, one of the principal Secretaries of State, was ſent from his Majeſty with a Meſſage, " That his Majeſty " had granted a Commiſſion to this Synod for the " making of Canons and Conſtitutions Eccleſiaſti- " cal; and that the Lords of the Council had una- " nimouſly agreed, that this Synod ought to pro- " ceed in the ſame, as being highly neceſſary; and " that therefore he was ſent in his Majeſty's Name " to exhort them with all expedition to make ſuch " Canons as the preſent ſtate and exigency of Af- " fairs required: And that it was his Majeſty's far- " ther Pleaſure, that none of the ſaid Prelates or " Clergy ſhould withdraw themſelves from the ſaid " Synod or Convocation, till the Affairs they had " in Command from the King were perfected and " finiſhed."

Benevolence to the King.

Invidious because not confirm'd by Parliam.

May 16. the Form of a Grant of free Benevolence, or Contribution of four Shillings in the Pound for ſix Years following, according to the Valuation of the firſt-fruits, was unanimouſly agreed to in the Lower Houſe, with the Proviſions for raiſing of it, under the Penalty of Eccleſiaſtical Cenſures (a). But becauſe the Grants of the Clergy in Convocation had been uſually confirmed by an Act of Parliament, the Benevolence thus granted without the Civil Legiſlature gave great Offence: And yet by original Conſtitution the Clergy had certainly the power of giving away their own Money independently on the Lay Lords and Commons; and even ſince the Reformation there had been a Precedent of it. The Archbiſhop therefore is right in repreſenting the Fact and the Law in this manner. " We made up our " Act perfect for the Gift of ſix Subſidies, accord- " ing to antient Form in that behalf, and deliver- " ed it under Seal to his Majeſty. This paſſed ne- " mine reſragante, as may appear apud acta. And " we followed a Precedent in my Lord Archbiſhop " Whitgift's time, Ann. 1586. who was known to be " a pious and a prudent Prelate, and a Man not gi- " ven to do boiſterous things againſt the Laws of " the Realm, or the Prerogative of the Crown; but " one that went juſt and fair ways to both. Nor did " this Grant lie dead and uſeleſs; for divers Pro- " ceſſes are yet to be ſeen, for the fetching in of " that which was ſo granted to the Queen's uſe, in " caſe any Man refuſed Payment."

Troubles and Trial of Abp. Laud, p. 80.

King recommends a Canon againſt Popery.

May 18. the Archbiſhop communicated a Letter from his Majeſty, to will and require them to propoſe, treat, and conclude upon ſuch a Canon as might ſecure him and all his loving Subjects againſt all Growth and Increaſe of Popery in this Kingdom; as alſo of any Heretical or Schiſmatical Opinions to the prejudice of the Doctrine or Diſcipline of the Church of England eſtabliſh'd by Law; with an Oath to be taken by All in Holy Orders, that they ſhall adhere conſtantly to the Doctrine and Diſcipline here eſtabliſhed, and never give way (for ſo much as can any way concern them) to any Innovation or Alteration thereof. Accordingly, a Canon was made for ſuppreſſing the Growth of Popery by private Conferences, by publick Cenſures of the Church, by certifying to the Judges in their Circuit the Names of all Recuſants, by taking care for the Education of Recuſants Children, and by the Biſhops returning every Year into the Court of Chancery a Significavit of all Recuſants who have ſtood excommunicate beyond the Time limited by Law. And then the Oath enjoined for preventing Innovations, was in this Form.

Oath enjoined by Convocation.

" I A. B. do ſwear, that I do approve the Doctrine " and Diſcipline or Government eſtabliſhed in " the Church of England, as containing all things " neceſſary to Salvation. And that I will not en- " deavour, by my ſelf or any other, directly or in- " directly, to bring in any Popiſh Doctrine, con- " trary to that which is ſo eſtabliſhed: Nor will I " ever give my Conſent to alter the Government of " this Church by Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Deans, and Abp.'s Account of Proceedings in this Convocation.

The manner of paſſing theſe Canons, and Subſcription to them, is thus deliver'd by the Archbp. "In the Debates concerning theſe Canons, I dare "be bold to ſay, Never any Synod ſate in Chriſtendom, that allow'd more freedom either of Speech "or Vote. The Canons which we made, were in "number ſeventeen; and at the time of the Sub-"ſcription, no Man refuſed, or ſo much as checked "at any one Canon, or any one Branch in any one "of them; ſaving a Canoniſt or two, who excep-"ted againſt two or three Clauſes in ſome of the "laſt of the Canons, which concerned their Profit, "and their Carriage towards the Clergy, in which "they were publickly, and by joint Conſent, over-"ruled in the Houſe; and excepting Godfrey Goodman Lord Biſhop of Glouceſter, who was ſtartled "at the firſt Canon about the Proceedings againſt "the Papiſts——Yet he at laſt ſubſcribed in open "Convocation."

Heylyn's Animad. on Fuller's Ch. Hiſt. p. 240.

Before theſe Canons were ſubſcribed, they were imparted to the King by the Archbiſhop, and by the King laid before the Lords of his Privy Council, who calling to them the Aſſiſtance of the Judges, and ſome of the King's Counſel, learned in the Laws of this Realm, did cauſe the ſaid Canons to be read and conſidered of in preſence of the King: By all which, upon due and mature Deliberation the Canons were approv'd; and being ſo approv'd, were ſent back to the Clergy in Convocation, and by them ſubſcribed (b). And that Work ended, the Convocation was diſſolv'd by the Archbiſhop in purſuance of his Majeſty's Writ for that purpoſe, on Friday May the 29th.

Canons publiſh'd.

Theſe Canons were immediately Printed, and at their firſt Publication (ſays the Archbiſhop) "they "were generally approved in all Parts of the King-"dom; and I had Letters from the remoteſt Parts "of it, full of Approbation: Inſomuch, that not "my ſelf only, but my Brethren which lived near "theſe Parts, and which were not yet gone down, "were very much joyed at it. But about a Month "after their Printing, there began ſome Whiſper-"ings againſt them by ſome Miniſters in London, "and their Exceptions were ſpread in Writing "againſt them:" And this ſet others on work, &c. Nay, Dr. Heylyn farther tells us, "That theſe Ca-"nons found great Approbation from the Mouths "of ſome, from whom it had been leaſt expected; "particularly from Juſtice Crook,——of whom I "have been told, by a Perſon of great Worth and "Credit, that having read over the Book of Ca-"nons when it firſt came out, he lifted up his "hands, and gave hearty Thanks to Almighty "God, that he had lived to ſee ſuch good Effects "of a Convocation." Scots and Puritans againſt them.

It was however the Intereſt of the Covenanting Scots, and all their Well-wiſhers in England, to raiſe Objections and Clamours againſt theſe new Canons. And for this purpoſe the diſaffected London Miniſters had many ſecret Meetings, and particularly at the Houſe of Dr. Downham of St. Bartholomew Exchange, where they drew up Reaſons, and obtain'd Hands to a Petition againſt the Oath. And their Example ſoon infected the Country: For on Tueſday Aug. 25. there was an Aſſembly of Miniſters at Kettering in Northamptonſhire, where they concluded againſt the Oath, and agreed not to take it. And from Botheby-Paynel in Lincolnſhire, Dr. Sanderſon, by Letter to the Archbiſhop Septemb. 13. inform'd him, "That he found, to his great grief (as well by the "Speeches of ſome in thoſe Parts as by Letters "from others farther off) that great Diſtaſte was "generally taken in the Kingdom at the Oath en-"joined by the late Canons. And that he had exa-"min'd the Exceptions, and could find no juſt Scru-"ple; and ſhould endeavour to remove the Scru-"ples of others. But that divers Papers paſſed ſe-"cretly from hand to hand, containing large Col-"lections of ſundry Reaſons againſt the taking the "ſaid Oath." For preventing the encreaſe of Diſaffection, and the encouragement to the Scotiſh Rebels, and other Inconveniences, he ſuggeſts, "That "his Majeſty ſhould give ſpecial Direction to for-"bear preſſing the Oath for a time; or that ſome "ſhort Explanation of ſuch Paſſages in the ſaid "Oath, as by reaſon of their Ambiguity are moſt "ſubject to Cavil and Miſconſtruction, ſhould "be ſent to all the ſeveral Perſons that ſhall have "power to adminiſter the ſame, to be publickly "read before the Tendry of the ſaid Oath." The Advice of this judicious Man was taken by Archbiſhop Laud: He employ'd the Biſhop of Exeter to draw up a Paper, entitled, A clear Explanation of the Clauſes which are ſtuck at in the Oath appointed by the late Synod, according to the true ſenſe of the Canon. And he himſelf ſeems to have adviſ'd the King to ſend his Commands for ſuſpending the Oath till the next Convocation; as was done by this Letter from Mr. Secretary Vane:

Abp.'s Orders to forbear the Oath.

In obedience to theſe Inſtructions, his Grace ſent out his Circular Letters dated Octob. 6. to the Suffragans of his Province, totally to forbear the Oath both at Ordinations and Inſtitutions as well as otherwiſe, till the next enſuing Convocation. But all this Caution and Temper, however they juſtified the Wiſdom and Integrity of the King and Archbiſhop, yet, like all other occaſions, they made the factious Spirits but the bolder to extort more and more from the Crown and the Church. Next Parliament declaims againſt the Convocation. Lord Digby.

When the Parliament began Nov. 3. it was made a popular Topick among the Commons to declaim againſt the Benevolence, Canons, and Oath. The Lord Digby, in his Speech Nov. 9. ſaid, "The granting of Subſidies under ſo prepoſterous a Name as "of a Benevolence, was a Malevolence indeed. A "Malevolence in thoſe that granted it againſt Parliaments; and a Malevolence in thoſe that refuſed it "againſt thoſe that granted it, to ſee wreſted from "them what they were not willing to part with "under no leſs a Penalty than the loſs both of Heaven and Earth; of Heaven by Excommunication, "and of the Earth by Deprivation, and this without Redemption by Appeal. And that no good "Chriſtian could think with Patience of the enſnaring Oath by the new Canons enjoined; where, "beſides the ſwearing ſuch Impertinence, as that "things neceſſary to Salvation are contained in "Diſcipline; beſides the ſwearing thoſe to be of "Divine Right, which amongſt the Learned never "pretended to it, as the Arch things in our Hierarchy; beſides the ſwearing not to conſent to "the Change of that, which the State may upon "great reaſon think fit to alter; beſides the bottomleſs Perjury of an, &c. Men muſt ſwear "that they ſwear freely and voluntarily what they "are compelled unto; and laſtly, that they ſwear "that Oath in the literal Senſe, whereof no two of "the Makers themſelves could ever agree in the "underſtanding." On the ſame Day Sir John Culpeper argued theſe Canons to be a Grievance; "1. In "reſpect of the Matter, beſides the &c. Oath. 2. In "reſpect of the Makers, choſen to ſerve in a Convocation, that falling with the Parliament, the "Scene was alter'd; the ſame Men, without any "new Election ſhuffled into a ſacred Synod. 3. In "reſpect of the Conſequence, which in this Age, "when the ſecond ill Preſident becomes a Law, is "full of Danger. The Clergy, without Confirmation of a Parliament, have aſſumed unto themſelves Power to make Laws, to grant Relief by "the Name of Benevolence, and to intermeddle "with our Freehold by Suſpenſions and Deprivations. This (ſays he) is a Grievance of a high "nature." And then Mr. Harbottle Grimſton ſpoke thus to the ſame Point. "Mr. Speaker, There hath "been ſince the laſt Parliament a Synod, and in "that Synod a new Oath hath been made and framed, and enjoined to be taken. They might as "well have made a new Law, and enjoined the Execution of that, as enjoined and urged the taking "of the other, not being eſtabliſhed by Act of Parliament.——Exception is to be taken to the Matter of the Oath; They would have us at the very firſt daſh ſwear in a damnable Hereſie, that "Matters neceſſary to Salvation are contained in "the Diſcipline of our Church; whereas it hath "ever been the Tenet of our Church, that all things "neceſſary to Salvation are comprehended in the "Doctrine of our Church only. And for Prevention in caſe the Wiſdom of the State in this great "Council ſhould at any time think fit to alter any "thing in the Government of our Church, they "would anticipate and foreſtall our Judgments by "making us ſwear before-hand, that we would never give our Conſent to any Alteration. Nay, "Mr. Speaker, they go a little farther, for they "would have us ſwear, that the Government of "the Church by Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Deans, Archdeacons, &c. is Jure divino; their Words are, As "of Right it ought to ſtand; whereas we meet not "with the Name of an Archbiſhop, or a Dean, or "an Archdeacon, in all the New Teſtament: And "whatſoever may be ſaid of the Function of Biſhops "it is one thing; but for their Juriſdiction, it is "meerly humanâ inſtitutione, and they muſt thank "the King for it. As for their groſs, abſurd, &c. "wherein they would have them ſwear they know "neither what, nor how many Fathom deep, there "is neither Divinity nor Charity in it; and yet "they would put that upon us.—— They have "likewiſe in this Synod granted a Benevolence; "but the Nature of the thing agrees not with the "Name; for in plain Engliſh it is ſix Subſidies to "be paid by the Clergy in ſix Years: and the Penalty they have impoſed upon the Refuſers for "Non-payment, is, to be deprived of their Functions, to be ſtripped of their Freehold, and to be "Excommunicated: And this Act of their Synod is "not publiſhed amongſt their Canons, for which "they might have ſome colourable ſeeming Authority; but it comes out in a Book alone by it ſelf "in the Latin Tongue, ſuppoſing, as I conceive, "that Lay-men are as ignorant as they would have "them."

Warm Debates.

Theſe Debates about the Book of Canons ended in an Order for Mr. Selden, Sir Tho. Widdrington, and Mr. Whiſtler, to get the Warrants by which the Convocation was held after the Parliament, and the Letters Patents of the Benevolence. And when this Subject came to be afterwards reaſſum'd in the Houſe, there were many other ſevere Speeches, by Mr. Bagſhaw, Mr. Nath. Fienes, Sir Edward Dering, and others, that ſeem to have no new Matter, but what is before recited. Only that Mr. Bagſhaw laboured to prove it Law, that the Biſhops and Clergy who held the late Synod were in a Præmunire for holding of it, and were ſubject to the Pains and Penalties of a Præmunire. But the Zeal of the Houſe could be carried no farther than theſe two Votes and Reſolutions, Decemb. 16.

"Matters tending to Sedition, and of dangerous Conſequence.

"Reſolved, That the ſeveral Grants of the Benevolence or Contribution granted to his moſt excellent Majeſty by the Clergy of the Provinces of Canterbury and York, in the ſeveral Convocations or Synods holden at London and York 1640, are contrary to the Laws, and ought not to bind the Clergy."

Made a Charge againſt Abp. Laud.

The farther Senſe of the Houſe upon this Matter, was put into the fifth Article of Impeachment carried up againſt Archbiſhop Laud; running thus.

"He hath traiterouſly cauſed a Book of Canons to be compoſed and publiſhed, and thoſe Canons to be put in execution without any lawful Warrant and Authority in that behalf. In which pretended Canons many Matters are contained contrary to the King's Prerogative, to the fundamental Laws and Statutes of this Realm, to the Rights of Parliament, to the Property and Liberty of the Subjects, and Matters tending to Sedition, and of dangerous Conſequence; and to the eſtabliſhment of a vaſt unlawful and preſumptuous Power in himſelf and his Succeſſors. Many of the which Canons, by the Practice of the ſaid Archbiſhop, were ſurreptitiouſly paſſed in the laſt Convocation, without due Conſideration and Debate: Others by Fear and Compulſion were ſubſcrib'd to by the Prelates and Clerks there aſſembled, which had never been voted and paſſed in the Convocation as they ought to have been. And the ſaid Archbiſhop hath contriv'd and endeavour'd to aſſure and confirm the unlawful and exorbitant Power which he hath uſurped and exerciſed over his Majeſty's Subjects by a wicked and ungodly Oath, in one of the ſaid pretended Canons, enjoined to be taken by all the Clergy, and many of the Laity of this Kingdom."

Abp.'s Anſwer.

To which Charge the Archbiſhop plainly anſwer'd, "I compoſed no Book of Canons; the whole Convocation did it with unanimous Conſent: So either I muſt be free, or that whole Body muſt be guilty of High Treaſon; for in that Crime all are Principals that are Guilty, Acceſſory there is none.

"Neither did I Publiſh or put in Execution thoſe Canons, or any of them, but by lawful Authority. And, I do humbly conceive, and verily believe, there is nothing in thoſe Canons contrary either to the King's Prerogative, the fundamental Laws of the Realm, the Rights of Parliament, the Propriety and Liberty of the Subjects, or any Matter tending to Sedition, or of dangerous Conſequence, or to the Eſtabliſhment of any vaſt or unlawful Power in my ſelf and my Succeſſors; neither was there any Canon in that Convocation ſurreptitiouſly paſſed by any Practice of mine, or without due Conſideration and Debate; neither was there any thing in that Convocation but what was Voted firſt, and Subſcribed after, without Fear or Compulſion in any kind. And I am verily perſwaded, there never ſate any Synod in Chriſtendom wherein the Votes paſſed with more freedom or leſs practice than they did in this. And for the Oath injoin'd in the ſixth Canon, as it was never made to confirm any unlawful or exorbitant Power over his Majeſty's Subjects, ſo I do humbly conceive that it is no wicked or ungodly Oath in any Reſpect. And I hope I am able to make it good in any learned Aſſembly in Chriſtendom, that this Oath and all thoſe Canons (then made and here before recited) and every Branch in them, are Juſt, and Orthodox, and Moderate, and moſt Neceſſary for the preſent Condition of the Church of England, how unwelcome ſoever to the preſent Diſtemper."

Enquiry into the validity of theſe Canons.

And yet theſe publick Cenſures of the Canons, however grounded on Prejudice and Faction, have made them ever ſince reputed null and void, tho' it is hard to find any defect of Legality in the making of them, or any juſt Authority that did afterward annul them. It is true the Act 13 Car. II. Cap. 12. would not confirm them, but ſo neither did it repeal them; they are left with the ſame force they had from the Beginning. There was indeed a Reſolution made in the Houſe of Commons December 15. 1640. That the Clergy of England, convented in any Convocation, or Synod, or otherwiſe, have no Power to make any Conſtitutions, Canons or Acts whatſoever, in Matter of Doctrine, Diſcipline, or otherwiſe to bind the Clergy or the Laity of the Land without common conſent of Parliament. But as this was a warm Vote, contrary to the Stream of Cuſtom and Statutes: ſo the Houſe it ſelf ſeem'd to receed from it by forming their Reſolutions the next Day to a different Senſe. And indeed if the King's Licenſe and Confirmation does not make the Canons regularly paſs'd in Convocation to be binding without Parliament, we have had no proper Canons ſince the Reformation: Thoſe of 1603, are as invalid as theſe of 1640. Some Writers have ſuggeſted, that their Invalidity ariſes from their paſſing in a Convocation ſitting after the Parliament: But this cannot be a Reaſon in the true Conſtitution of Parliaments and Synods, which may certainly act independently on one another. But whatever Reaſons of State have combin'd to let theſe Canons ſink into a dead letter; yet it muſt be confeſſed, that in very much of Doctrine and Diſcipline they would be a good Example to any future Convocation: and we can hardly hope for Unity and any tolerable Regularity, without ſome Conſtitutions of the like Nature, if poſſible to be had with leſs Offence.

2d Convocation.

There was another (a) Convocation this Year that met with the ſecond Parliament, and open'd in the Church of St. Paul's Novemb. 4. The Sermon was preach'd by Dr. Iſaac Bargrave Dean of Canterbury, and Dr. Stewart Dean of Chicheſter, was again choſen Prolocutor. (a) This ſecond Parliament in Novemb. 1640. began in Heats and Tumults; however ſome Hope there was, that upon Moderation ſhewn, Matters might be peaceably compoſed; whereupon the Houſe of Lords appointed a Committee out of their own Members for ſettling Peace in the Church in March following; at the ſame time the Lords appointed a Sub-Committee to prepare Matters for their cognizance. The Biſhop of Lincoln Dr. Williams had the Chair in both, and was authorized to call together divers Biſhops, and other Divines, to conſult for Correction of what was amiſs, and to ſettle Peace. Of the Sub-Committee thoſe that appeared and conſulted together at the Jeruſalem-Chamber (ſome others were named) were theſe only, the Biſhop of Lincoln, the Primate of Armagh, the Biſhop of Durham, Biſhop Hall then of Exeter; Dr. Ward, Dr. Prideaux, Dr. Twiſs, Dr. Sanderſon, Dr. Featley, Dr. Brownrig, Dr. Holdſworth, Dr. Hacket, Dr. Burgeſs, Mr. Marſhall, Mr. Calamy, Mr. Hill. Many things for ſix ſeveral Meetings were propounded, but in the midſt of May, while in order to Settlement divers things were upon the Loom, the Bill call'd Root and Branch was brought into the Houſe of Commons, and that like Atropos cut off all the threads of this Proceeding, ſo that the whole Matter prov'd abortive and came to nothing. Dr. Plume's Life of Biſhop Hacket. Their Abatements and Conceſſions were ſoon printed in one Sheet, 4*to.* but they met only with theſe melancholy Reflections, that neither Side would be ſatisfied with them. Had the Epiſcopal Men made the like Compliances when they were in full Power, they had prevented the Miſchiefs now growing on them. And had they who call'd for Alterations been content with theſe few, the War could never have broke out with ſuch Fury of Enthuſiaſm. The ſame Author writes, that the Committee condeſcended to print the Liturgick Pſalms in King James's Tranſlation, to expunge all Apocryphal Leſſons, and alter ſome Paſſages in the Body of the Book of Common-Prayer, and certain other things, which divers of the Presbyterian Divines ſaid were ſatisfactory, ſave that the furious Party of them put the Commons upon the violent way. In particular, old Mr. John White told many of the Party, who ſtill preſſed at Conferences for further Abatements of Conformity and the Laws eſtabliſhed, Time would come when they would wiſh, they had been content with what was offered.

1640. 16 Car. I. Duties, and not to be wanting to themſelves, or the cauſe of Religion, as far forth as they were concerned in their ſeveral Places. There was no Commiſſion granted, and therefore no Buſineſs propoſed: But ſome of the Lower-Houſe began to be afraid of the Popular Offence taken againſt their Proceedings in the laſt Convocation; and therefore Mr. Thomas Warmiſtre one of the Clerks for the Dioceſs of Worceſter, made a Motion to this effect, "That they ſhould endeavour, according to the Levitical Law, To cover the Pit which they had opened; and to prevent their Adverſaries Intention by condemning ſuch offenſive Canons as were made in the laſt Convocation." But the Houſe were of no ſuch Opinion as to think the Canons obnoxious to juſt Cenſure; nor had they that meanneſs of Spirit as to condemn themſelves before they were accuſed. So that Mr. Warmiſtre, in a very irregular manner, ſeem'd to appeal from his Brethren to the People, by printing a long Speech as deliver'd on this Occaſion, Bitter enough againſt ſome Canons and Proceedings in the former Seſſion, but ſuch as could not ſave him from a Sequeſtration, when the reſt of the Clergy were brought under the ſame Condition. The Houſe of Commons were diſpos'd to ſhew them no Favour; and therefore when Dr. Layfield Archdeacon of Eſſex, was complained of for Innovations in his Church of Allhallows Berking, he inſiſted upon his Privilege declared by Statute 8. Hen. VI. Cap. 1. The Committee for Religion were of Opinion, that Though he were a Member of the Convocation Houſe, yet he ſhould be ſent for as a Delinquent. And it was accordingly order'd by the Houſe Novemb. 25. "That Dr. Layfield Vicar of St. Alhallows Berking, be forthwith ſent for as a Delinquent, by the Serjeant at Arms attending on this Houſe, notwithſtanding he is a Member of the Convocation Houſe." All that related more to the Convocation was an Order on Friday March 19. "That Mr. Treaſurer and Mr. Comptroller move his Majeſty to grant a Commiſſion to the Convocation, to treat about the granting of Subſidies to the Clergy."

No Commiſſion and therefore no Buſineſs.

Privilege of Convocation over-ruled by the Commons

But this came to no effect, for by the Archbiſhop's Impriſonment the regular Seſſions broke off, the Bps diſcontinued their Meeting, and the Lower-Houſe by degrees dwindled away. And indeed there was by this time no occaſion for Synodical Meetings: for there was not only one very buſie Committee for Religion in the Houſe of Commons, but on Monday Mar. 15. there was another ſettled in the Houſe of Lords, to conſiſt of ten Earls, ten Barons, and ten Biſhops; on which the Archbiſhop made this Reflection, This Committee (wherein the Lay Votes will be double to the Clergy) will meddle with Doctrine as well as Ceremonies, and will call ſome Divines to them to conſider of the Buſineſs; as appears by a Letter hereto annexed, ſent by the Lord Biſhop of Lincoln to ſome Divines to attend this Service. Upon the whole Matter, I believe this Committee will prove the National Synod of England, to the great Diſhonour of this Church. And what elſe may follow upon it, God knoweth. The Divines called to be Aſſiſtants, were Dr. Brownrig, Dr. Featly, Dr. Hacket, Dr. Weſtfield, Dr. Burges, Mr. Shute, Mr. Calamy, Mr. White, Mr. Marſhal. This was laying a Foundation for an Aſſembly of Divines.

Diary of Abp. Laud.

The prevailing Party in the Houſe of Commons betray'd a great Diſaffection to the Rites and Ceremonies of the Church, by holding their ſolemn Faſts on Tueſdays; by ordering the Communion-Table to be remov'd from the Chancel to the middle of the Church at the time of their Receiving the Sacrament, as a Houſe; by troubling and puniſhing thoſe Divines who had been moſt zealous for Conformity, as Dr. Coſins, Dr. Pocklington, Dr. Belcanquail, Dr. Layfield, Dr. Brag, Dr. Couſen, &c. by chuſing out the moſt diſaffected Miniſters to Preach before them, as Mr. Marſhal, Mr. Calamy, &c. by countenancing and reſtoring thoſe Miniſters who had ſuffer'd any Eccleſiaſtical Cenſures, as Mr. Burton, Mr. Smart, Mr. Wilſon, &c. by receiving and juſtifying a Petition of the Refuſe of the People in and about London, on December 11, that the Government of Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Deans, &c. with all its Dependencies, Roots and Branches, may be aboliſhed, &c. by Ordering January 23. "That Commiſſions be ſent into all Counties, for the defacing and demoliſhing, and quite taking away out of Churches and Chapels, all Images, Altars, or Tables turned Altarwiſe, Crucifixes, ſuperſtitious Pictures, Monuments, and Reliques of Idolatry. By ordering Febr. 5. that the Lord Keeper be deſired to leave out the Clergy in England and Wales at the renewing of the Commiſſion of the Peace. By reſolving upon the Queſtion, That the Legiſlative and Judicial Power of Biſhops in the Houſe of Peers in Parliament, is a great Hindrance to the Diſcharge of their Spiritual Function, prejudicial to the Commonwealth, and fit to be taken away by Bill; and that a Bill be drawn to that purpoſe. And farther reſolving, March the 11th, That for Biſhops or any other Clergy-man whatſoever to be in the Commiſſion of the Peace, or to have any judicial Power in the Star-Chamber, or in any Civil Court, is a great Hindrance to the Diſcharge of their Spiritual Function, prejudicial to the Commonwealth, and fit to be taken away by Bill." And indeed the Diſpoſition of the Houſe did ſo much abet and encourage the Schiſmatical and Enthuſiaſtick People, that they broke into the moſt inſolent Rudeneſs; of which a Complaint and Proof being made in the Houſe, they reſolv'd that this Order following ſhould be read publickly in all the Pariſh-Churches of London, Weſtminſter, and the Borough of Southwark and the Liberties, "That the Divine Service be performed as it is appointed by the Acts of Parliament of this Realm: And that all ſuch as ſhall diſturb this wholſome Order, ſhall be ſeverely puniſhed according to Law; and that the Parſons, Vicars, and Curates, in the ſeveral Pariſhes, ſhall forbear to introduce any Rites or Ceremonies that may give Offence, otherwiſe than thoſe which are eſtabliſhed by the Laws of the Land."

Commons ſhew greater Diſaffection to the Chur.

They encourage the Mob,

Till forc'd to reſtrain them.

The King was ſo well pleas'd, as to return the Houſe Thanks for this Order; not ſo much conſidering, that the Reading it in Churches ſhould have been rather enjoin'd by his own Prerogative, or the Juriſdiction of the Ordinary; nor believing that, ſoon after when the chief Offenders were brought to the Houſe and convicted of denying the Act 35 Elizabeth to be a true Law becauſe it was made by Biſhops; of refuſing to go to their Pariſh-Churches, becauſe they were not true Churches; of ſaying, the King could not make a perfect Law, becauſe he was not a perfect Man, &c. Yet the Houſe diſmiſs'd them with a ſoft Admonition only; by which one might ſuſpect, that they retain'd the Sectaries as they did the Scots, for ſome future Uſe and Service.

Yet they ſtill countenance them.

The Storm againſt the Church fell with greateſt Violence on the Archbiſhop of Canterbury. May the 11th at Midnight, his Palace at Lambeth was beſet with five hundred of the Raſcally Mob, who for two hours were aſſaulting the Gates and Walls to enter; but were repulſed, and one of them hanged (a). And again October the 22d the High-Commiſſion ſitting at St. Paul's as a Place of the greateſt Safety, the Archbiſhop being ſuppoſed to be preſent, two thouſand of the Sectaries made a Tumult at the End of the Court, tore down all the Benches in the Conſiſtory, and cried out, They would have no Biſhop, and no High Commiſſion (a). But the Blows of the Parliament were heavier than thoſe of the People. Upon Voting down the Canons and Benevolence December the 16th a Committee was appointed to conſider in particular, How far the Archbiſhop of Canterbury had been an Actor in thoſe Proceedings, and in the great Deſign of the Subverſion of the Laws of the Realm and of Religion; and to draw up a Charge againſt him: And even ſome Members ſtood up to have him accuſed of High Treaſon. The next Day the Earl of Briſtol acquainted the Houſe of Lords, that the Scotch Commiſſioners had preſented ſome Papers concerning the Lord Archbiſhop of Canterbury, which were read that Day at a Conference of the two Houſes: And on December the 18th the Debate ariſing in the Houſe of Commons, Mr. Grimſton made an aggravating Speech (b), and concluded with a Motion, To ſtrike while the Iron was hot, and to go up to the Lords in the Name of the Commons, and to accuſe him of High Treaſon, and to deſire their Lordſhips his Perſon may be ſequeſtred; and that in convenient time they would bring up his Charge. And accordingly Mr. Denzil Hollis went up to the Lords and delivered the ſaid Charge. Upon which the Archbiſhop was commanded to withdraw; but deſiring firſt the liberty of Speaking, he ſpoke to this Effect: "That he was heartily ſorry for the "Offence taken againſt him; and that he was moſt "unhappy to have his Eyes open to ſee that Day, "and his Ears to hear ſuch a Charge; but humbly "deſired their Lordſhips to look upon the whole "courſe of his Life, which was ſuch, as that he did "verily perſuade himſelf, not one Man in the Houſe "of Commons did believe in his Heart, that he was "a Traitor." At which the Earl of Eſſex interrupted him, and ſaid, That Speech of his was a Scandal put upon the whole Houſe of Commons, that they ſhould charge him with ſo high a Crime which themſelves did not believe. He then humbly deſired, "that he might be "proceeded with in the ancient Parliamentary way "of England." To this the Lord Say excepted, as if he would preſcribe them how they ſhould proceed. So he withdrew; and being called in again to the Bar, was delivered to the Uſher of the Black Rod, to be kept in ſafe Cuſtody, till the Houſe of Commons ſhould farther Impeach him. On December the 21ſt he was condemned, by an Order of the Houſe of Lords, to pay Five hundred Pounds to Sir Robert Howard for falſe Impriſonment, by a Decree of the High Commiſſion. After ten Weeks Reſtraint in the Uſher's Houſe, the Charge was brought up to the Lords, by Sir Henry Vane junior, on February the 26th, conſiſting of Fourteen General Articles. Upon which he was brought to the Houſe; and after the Articles were read, he ſpoke to this Effect: "That "it was a great and heavy Charge, and he muſt "be unworthy to live if it could be made good "againſt him. However, it was yet but in Gene-"rals, and Generals made a great Noiſe, but no "Proof. For humane Frailties he could not acquit "himſelf: But for Corruption in the leaſt degree, "he feared no Accuſer that would ſpeak Truth. "But that which went neareſt to him was, that "he ſhould be thought foul and falſe in the Profeſ-"ſion of his Religion; as if he ſhould profeſs with "the Church of England, and have his Heart at "Rome." This, he confeſs'd, troubled him exceedingly. Then he beſought their Lordſhips that he might enlarge himſelf, and ſo made his Vindication to every Article with great Eloquence and Strength of Argument. But he was to be a Sacrifice to an Army and to the People: And therefore on Monday March 1. he was carried in Mr. Maxwell's Coach through the City to the Tower. All was quiet till he came to Cheapſide: "There (ſays he) ſome one "Prentice firſt hallowed out, and more and more "followed the Coach (the Number ſtill encreaſing "as they went) till by that time I came to the "Exchange the Shouting was exceeding great. And "ſo they followed me with Clamour and Revilings "even beyond Barbarity it ſelf, not giving over "till the Coach was entered in at the Tower-gate. "Mr. Maxwell, out of his Love and Care, was ex-"tremely troubled at it; but, I bleſs God for it, "my Patience was not moved: I looked upon a "higher Cauſe than the Tongues of Shimei and his "Children."

Outrage of the People.

It appears plain, that though the Archbiſhop had ſome hopes to reconcile the more moderate Papiſts by a ſeeming Compliance in ſome innocent matters, yet he was in his Judgment and Reſolutions moſt averſe to Popery, and was indeed well known by that Faction to be their greateſt Enemy. And therefore there was a Treaſon plotted by Signior Con and his Complices in England, wherein they reſolved that the Life of the Archbiſhop muſt be firſt taken away, before they could hope to get their Will of the King. This Plot was diſcovered to Sir William Boſwell his Majeſty's Agent in Holland; and the Letters and Papers ſent over, which are all now publiſhed, and are a Demonſtration that the Papiſts, who knew their own Intereſt, did know that the Archbiſhop was the greateſt Obſtructor of it. "Now this (ſays he) is a hard Strait into "which I am caſt: The Pope's Agent plots my "Death becauſe I will not be wrought upon to "help to bring in the Roman Superſtition; and the "Parliament, on the other ſide, Articles to over-"throw me, out of a Jealouſie that I go about to "bring it in." 1641.

This Year 1641. muſt begin with the Fall of the greateſt Stateſman and Soldier of the Age, Thomas Earl of Strafford, who at the opening of the Parliament in November laſt was at the Head of the King's Army in the North, while the Scots were labouring to take him Priſoner at Weſtminſter. For this Plot, many Iriſh People were encouraged to prefer their Complaints to the Houſe of Commons in England, and to ſue for Relief from Oppreſſion and Male-Government. This Practice, that was now laid for a Snare to this great Man, turn'd by Divine Juſtice into a Prejudice to the whole Kingdom of Ireland, by Appeals and Reviews, and including Powers that made their Courts and very Parliaments more depending. Upon this Complaint of the Subjects in Ireland, Nov. 6. a Grand Committee was appointed to conſider of that Grievance. The Friends of the Lord Strafford knew the Meaning, and ſent him notice of it, leaving to his own Prudence, whether he would ſtay at the Head of the Army, or come up to the Houſe. Thoſe about him diſſwaded him from expoſing himſelf to a confederate Malice, adviſed him to keep in his Poſt of Command in the Engliſh Army, or ſtep over to his Army in Ireland, or retire into foreign Parts, till Things were more calm and cool. But a ſenſe of Honour and his own Innocence made him reſolve to go directly to Parliament, and ſtand the Storm that was there riſing againſt him. He took one Method of Defence that wanted nothing but Expedition; for he had got good Evidence in the North, that the Scots came in by Invitation and Confederacy between the Heads of the Covenanters and ſome of the Engliſh Members of both Houſes: Which Intelligence he had almoſt digeſted into the Form of an Impeachment, and intended to preſent it to the Houſe of Peers. But the leading Commons were too quick for him; for on November 11, Mr. Pym carried up an Impeachment of High Treaſon, and the Lords ſequeſtred him from their Houſe, and committed him to Cuſtody. And then came the Scotiſh Commiſſioners with a moſt bitter and virulent Declaration againſt him, preſſing vehemently the Trial of him, and intimating there could be no Treaty of Peace between the two Kingdoms, before exemplary Juſtice was done upon that Earl.

Too confident of his own Innocence.

Had more againſt his Enemies than they againſt him.

Scots implacable againſt him.

In this impetuous Haſte, two exorbitant Steps were taken to expedite the Trial: The Firſt, For a Committee to be ſettled of both Houſes for the taking Preparatory Examinations; which was indeed an Inquiſition contrary to the Practice of former times, and capable of extorting Evidence in any other crafty Proſecution of innocent Men: The Second was, For the examining upon Oath Privy Counſellors, upon ſuch Matters as had paſſed at the Council Table. This indeed could not have been without the Conſent of the King and his Council: They, conſcious of no ill Myſteries that would not bear the Light, did unhappily conſent. "The Damage (ſays a Stateſman) was not to be expreſs'd, and the Ruin that Act brought to the King was irreparable; for beſides that it ſerved their Turn to prove thoſe Words againſt the Earl which Sir Harry Vane ſo punctually remembred; and beſides that it was matter of Horror to the Counſellors, to find that they might be arraigned for every raſh Word they had uſed there; it baniſhed for ever all future freedom from that Board, &c."

Extraordinary Methods of Proceeding againſt him.

Clar. Hiſt. of Rebell.

On Monday March the 22d the Earl was brought to his Trial in Weſtminſter-hall; and next Day Mr. Pym began to open the Evidence with great Indignation. The Trial laſted eighteen Days; in all which time, "The Earl behaved himſelf with great ſhew of Humility and Submiſſion; and in truth made his Defence with all imaginable Dexterity; anſwering this Charge, and evading that, with all poſſible Skill and Eloquence: And though he knew not till he came to the Bar, upon what Parts of his Charge they would proceed againſt him, or what Evidence they would produce, he took very little time to recollect himſelf, and left nothing unſaid that might make for his own Juſtification."

Trial begins.

The Earl makes a good Defence.

The moſt terrible (yet malicious and falſe) Allegation againſt him, was the Evidence given by Sir Harry Vane Secretary of State, "That upon Diſſolution of the laſt Parliament the King adviſ'd with his Cabinet Council what Courſe he ſhould now take, ſince he fail'd of the Aſſiſtance he expected by Subſidies. The E. of Strafford anſwered, Sir, you have now done your Duty, and your Subjects have fail'd in theirs; and therefore you are abſolved from the Rules of Government, and may ſupply your ſelf by extraordinary ways: You have an Army in Ireland with which you may reduce this Kingdom." The Earl poſitively deny'd the Words; and the other Privy Counſellors examined to them did all upon Oath declare, that they did not hear thoſe Words: Nay, and the Lord Digby in the Houſe of Commons, a ſufficient Adverſary to the Earl, did afterward, in a pathetical Speech, obſerve, that thoſe Words upon which the Impeachment was principally grounded, were ſo far from being prov'd by two Witneſſes, that he could not acknowledge it to be by one; ſince he could not admit Sir Harry Vane to be a competent Witneſs, who being firſt examined, denied that the Earl ſpoke theſe Words; and at his ſecond Examination remember'd ſome, and at his third the reſt of 'em.

Malicious Evidence.

Nay, the proſecuting Party were ſo conſcious of the Earl's Innocence, at leaſt of their Defect of Evidence againſt him, that they were forced to change their Impeachment into a Bill of Attainder, which April 19. was paſſed in the Houſe of Commons, No's 59, Yea's 204, and carried to the Lords, who agreed to hear the Matter of Law pleaded by the Council of Commons, among whom Mr. Sollicitor St. Johns offered two inſufferable Arguments; 1. That tho' Teſtimony was not ſo clear, yet in this way of Bill, private Satisfaction to each Man's Conſcience was ſufficient, although no Evidence had been given in at all. 2. That the Earl had no Title to plead Law, becauſe he had broke the Law. It's true (ſays he) we give Laws to Hares and Deers, becauſe they be Beaſts of Chaſe; but it was never accounted either Cruelty or foul Play to knock Foxes and Wolves on the Head as they can be found, becauſe theſe be Beaſts of Prey.

Impeachment chang'd into a Bill of Attainder.

Shameful Arguments of the Sollicitor General.

This Bill was depending and ſticking in the Houſe of Lords, when the King came, and ſending for the Commons, told both Houſes, "That he could not in Conſcience condemn the Earl of High Treaſon; for he muſt tell them three great Truths, 1. That he never had any Intention of bringing over the Iriſh Army into England, nor ever was adviſed by any Body ſo to do. 2. That there never was any Debate before him, neither in publick Council, nor at private Committee, of the Diſloyalty and Diſaffection of his Engliſh Subjects, nor had he ever any ſuſpicion of them. 3. That he was never counſell'd by any to alter the leaſt of any of the Laws of England, much leſs to alter all the Laws. Yet he ſhould be content to have the Earl condemn'd for Miſdemeanour, and made incapable to ſerve in any Place of Truſt." (a)

King's Speech for the Earl.

This Speech did but more inflame the ſworn Enemies of the Earl, who pretended to diſcover Plots for his Eſcape; and enter into a Proteſtation taken by the Speaker and moſt of the Members; and encouraged Petitions and Clamours for Juſtice; and a Black Liſt of the Straffordians to be poſted up, and cry'd about Streets; till many of the Lords, for fear of Violence, abſented from their own Houſes; and the Biſhops declined voting in the Act, as well as appearing in the Trial: tho' it was not believed (ſays the Hiſtorian) now the former Tryal and way of Judicature was waved, the Biſhops would ſo ſtupidly (to ſay no worſe) exclude themſelves from voting in a Law which was to be an Act of Parliament. So that in an Afternoon, when of the Fourſcore who had been preſent at the Trial, there were only Six and forty Lords in the Houſe, (the People crying at the doors for Juſtice) the Bill paſs'd, with the Diſſent only of eleven Peers.

Unhappy Diſtinction.

E. deſires the K. to paſs the Bill,

While the King was under infinite Perplexities in his own Mind, and under the moſt imminent Dangers of Aſſaults of the Rabble in his own Palace, who were taught the Word Juſtice, Juſtice; the Earl wrote a Letter May 4. from the Tower to his Majeſty, to offer up his Life for a Sacrifice to the Publick,—— "With much ſadneſs I am come "to a Reſolution of that which I take to be the beſt "becoming me, and to look upon it as that which "is moſt principal in it ſelf, which doubtleſs is the "Proſperity of your ſacred Perſon and the Commonwealth, Things infinitely before any private "Man's Intereſt. And therefore in few Words, as "I put my ſelf wholly upon the Honour and Juſtice "of my Peers, ſo clearly as to wiſh your Majeſty "might pleaſe to have ſpared that Declaration of "yours on Saturday laſt, and entirely to have left "me to their Lordſhips; ſo now, to ſet your Majeſty's Conſcience at liberty, I do moſt humbly "beſeech your Majeſty, for Prevention of Evils "which may happen by your Refuſal, to paſs this "Bill: and by this means to remove (praiſed be "God) I cannot ſay this accurſed, but (I confeſs) "this unfortunate Thing forth of the way towards "that bleſſed Agreement which God (I truſt) ſhall "ever eſtabliſh between you and your Subjects. "Sir, My Conſent ſhall more acquit you herein to "God, than all the World can do beſides: To a "willing Man there is no Injury done: And as by "God's Grace I forgive all the World with a Calmneſs and Meekneſs of infinite Contentment to my "diſlodging Soul; ſo, Sir, to you I can give the "Life of this World with all the chearfulneſs imaginable in the juſt Acknowledgment of your exceeding Favours, and only beg that in your Goodneſs you would vouchſafe to caſt your gracious "Regard upon my poor Son and his three Siſters, "leſs or more, and no otherwiſe than as their (in "preſent) unfortunate Father may hereafter appear "more or leſs guilty of this Death. God long preſerve your Majeſty." (b)

In an admirable Letter.

King paſſes the Bill by Commiſſion.

On Friday May 7. the Lords paſſed the Bill of Attainder, with the like unreaſonable and more fatal Bill for Continuance of the preſent Parliament. Next Day the Commons deſired the Lords to join with them to move his Majeſty for his Conſent. And the Day following, being Sunday May 9. the King conſulted with his Privy Council, and Judges, and Biſhops; and in fine, with the utmoſt Reluctancy, the King commiſſioned the Earl of Arundel, the Lord Privy Seal, and two other Peers, to paſs the two Bills; which was accordingly done May 10. The King next Day betrayed the Affliction of his Conſcience by writing a Letter to the Lords, and ſending it by the Prince.

Then interceeds for the Earl by Letter to the Lords.

"My Lords,

"I Did yeſterday ſatisfie the Juſtice of this Kingdom by paſſing the Bill of Attainder againſt "the Earl of Strafford: But Mercy being as inherent and inſeparable to a King as Juſtice, I deſire "at this time in ſome meaſure to ſhew That likewiſe, by ſuffering that unfortunate Man to fulfill "the natural courſe of his Life in a cloſe Impriſonment: Yet ſo, if ever he make the leaſt Offer to "eſcape, or offer directly or indirectly to meddle "in any ſort of publick Buſineſs, eſpecially with "Me, either by Meſſage or Letter, it ſhall coſt him "his Life without farther Proceſs. This, if it may "be done without the Diſcontentment of my People, will be an unſpeakable Contentment to me. "To which end, as in the firſt place, I by this Letter do earneſtly deſire your Approbation, and to "endear it more, have choſen him to carry it that "of all your Houſe is moſt dear to me; ſo I deſire, that by a Conference you will endeavour to "give the Houſe of Commons Contentment, aſſuring you that the Exerciſe of Mercy is not more "pleaſing to me, than to ſee both Houſes of Parliament conſent for my ſake, that I ſhould moderate the ſeverity of the Law in ſo important "a Caſe.

"I will not ſay that your complying with me in "this my intended Mercy, ſhall make me more willing; but certainly 'twill make me more chearful "in granting your juſt Grievances: But if no leſs "than his Life can ſatisfie my People, I muſt ſay, "Fiat Juſtitia. Thus again recommending the conſideration of my Intention to you, I reſt PS. "If he muſt die it were Charity "to reprieve him till Saturday."

On Wedneſday May 12, the Earl was brought to the Scaffold upon Tower-hill; as he paſſed near the Lodgings of the Archbiſhop of Canterbury (whom he had deſired by a Meſſage to be at the Window and to Bleſs him as he went to Execution) he look'd up, and bowing ſaid, My Lord, your Prayers and your Bleſſing. The Archbiſhop lift up his Hands for the ſign of beſtowing both, but was ſo overcome with Grief that he fell back in a ſwoon; the Earl bowed again, and ſaid, Farewel, my Lord, God protect your Innocency. Many of the Spectators obſerved, that he walked more like a General, at the Head of an Army, than like a condemn'd Man. The Lieutenant deſir'd him to take Coach, for fear the People ſhould ruſh in upon him and tear him in Pieces: No, (ſaid he) Maſter Lieutenant, I dare look Death in the Face, and I hope the People too. Have you a care that I do not eſcape, and I care not how I die, whether by the Hand of the Executioner, or the Madneſs and Fury of the People if that may give them better Content; it is all one to me. Upon the Scaffold attended by the Archbiſhop of Armagh, the Earl of Cleveland, his Brother Sir George Wentworth, and his own Chaplain, he delivered his Speech with a very compos'd and courageous Air; the chief Parts were as follow.

Brought to the Scaffold.

His dying Speech.

——"I ſpeak in the preſence of Almighty "God, before whom I ſtand, that there is not a diſpleaſing Thought that ariſeth in me againſt any "Man: I thank God, I ſay truly, my Conſcience "bears me Witneſs, that in all the Honour I had to "ſerve his Majeſty, I had not any Intention in "my Heart but what did aim at the joint and individual Proſperity of the King and his People.— "I was ſo far from being againſt Parliaments, that "I did always think Parliaments in England to be "the happieſt Conſtitution of the Kingdom and "Nation, and the beſt Means, under God, to make "the King and his People happy.—— I profeſs "heartily my Apprehenſion, and do humbly recommend it to you, and wiſh that every Man "would lay his Hand on his Heart and conſider ſerioully,

1641. 17 Car. I. "rioſly, whether the beginning of the Peoples "Happineſs ſhould be written in Letters of Blood; I "fear they are in a wrong way. I deſire Almighty "God, that no one drop of my Blood riſe up in "Judgment againſt them; I have but one Word "more, and that is for my Religion. My Lord of "Armagh, I do profeſs my ſelf ſeriouſly, faithfully "and truly to be an Obedient Son of the Church "of England. In that Church I was born and bred, "in that Religion I have lived, and now in that I "die: Proſperity and Happineſs be ever to it.— "The Lord ſtrengthen my Faith, and give me Con-"fidence and Aſſurance in the Merits of Chriſt Je-"ſus. I truſt in God we ſhall All meet to live eter-"nally in Heaven, and receive the Accompliſhment "of all Happineſs; where every Tear ſhall be "wiped off from our Eyes, and ſad Thoughts from "our Hearts: And ſo God bleſs this Kingdom, "and Jeſus have Mercy on my Soul."

After this Speech he pray'd out of the Common Prayer-Book, laid by his Chaplain before him; and then uſed ſome private Devotions, concluding with the Lord's-Prayer; then taking leave of his Brother, he ſaid, Brother, we muſt part; Remember me to my Siſter and to my Wife; and carry my Bleſſing to my eldeſt Son, and charge him from me that he fear God, and continue an obedient Son of the Church of England, and that he approve himſelf a faithful Subject of the King; and tell him, that he ſhould not have any private Grudge or Revenge towards any concerning me; and bid him beware to meddle with Church-Livings, for that will prove a Moth and Canker to him in his Eſtate; and wiſh him to content himſelf to be a Servant to his Country, as a Juſtice of Peace in his County, not aiming at higher Preferments, &c.

The Executioner ſtruck off his Head at one blow: and ſo fell this noble Earl, who if his Maſter could have ſaved him, might have been able to ſave his Maſter: This was indeed the blow that by degrees reached up to the King's own Head. Take his Character thus given by the Lord Clarendon. Thus fell the greateſt Subject in Power, and little inferiour to any in Fortune, that was at that Time in any of the three Kingdoms; who could well remember the Time when he led thoſe People who then purſued him to his Grave. He was a Man of great Parts, and extraordinary Endowments of Nature, not unadorn'd with ſome addition of Art and Learning. But to return to the courſe of other Affairs. While the two Houſes were enter'd upon meaſures ſo apparently againſt the Inclination and the Intereſt of the King, they had reaſon to fear, that he might truſt to his Armies rather than to his Parliament. Two Armies he yet had, one in Ireland and the other in the North againſt the Scots. And therefore the Care of the leading Members was to deprive the King of any ſuch laſt Reſort. Hence April 6. the Commons reſolved, "That during the "Seſſion of this Parliament, neither the King's Ar-"my nor any of the Train'd-Bands of Yorkſhire, "ſhould march or advance without ſpecial Order of "his Majeſty, with the Advice and Conſent of both "Houſes of Parliament, except in Caſe the Scotiſh "Army ſhould paſs the Limits appointed by the "Treaty." And for the Iriſh Army, of which they were more afraid, becauſe the Officers were leſs at their Devotion; they importun'd the King for a ſpeedy diſbanding of it, and prevailed with him ſo to diſable himſelf, after he had thus ſpoke to the two Houſes on Wedneſday Apr. 28.

King's Speech. "FOR the Iriſh Army, you muſt underſtand, I "am already upon conſultation how to diſband "it, but I find many Difficulties in it. Therefore "I hold it not only fit to wiſh it, but to ſhew the "way how it may be conveniently done. This is "not all I deſire; but ſince you have mentioned the "diſbanding of Armies, it is my Duty to my Coun-"try to wiſh for diſbanding of all Armies, and to "reſtore the ſame Peace to all my three Kingdoms "that the King, my Father, did leave them in: "And I conjure you, as you will anſwer the ſame, "to God and to the Country, to join with me hear-"tily and ſpeedily, for the diſbanding of the two "Armies in England; to which end there are two "Things requiſite, Money and the Concluſion of "the Scots Treaty."

But indeed the Managers in the Parliament intended to keep the Scots Army as in their own Pay and Service, and therefore from time to time renewed the Pacification without concluding the Treaty. And they ſo applied themſelves to the Engliſh Army, as if it muſt now enter into the new Service of the two Houſes. For a formal Letter was drawn up by a Committee, and ſent by Mr. Ruſhworth to the Army, with promiſe of Proviſion and all ſuitable Supplies. And to make the Combination perfect, there was a ſolemn Form of Proteſtation drawn up; for promiſing, vowing and proteſting to maintain and defend, with Life, Power and Eſtate, the true Reformed Proteſtant Religion, expreſſed in the Doctrine of the Church of England, againſt all Popery and Popiſh Innovation, &c. taken by the Houſe of Commons, May 3. and carried up next Day to the Lords with a deſire of their Concurrence, who generally took it, and ſet a Preſident for the Solemn League and Covenant that came ſoon after. (For keeping up the Scots Army.)

They had little now to fear, but that the King would exert his Prerogative in proroguing or diſſolving the Parliament; they had gained the Point for frequent Seſſions, but it would be now better to make this one Seſſion perpetual; and therefore May 7, the Commons ſent up to the Lords a Continuance-Bill, or An Act to prevent Inconveniences that may happen by the untimely Adjourning, Proroguing and Diſſolving this preſent Parliament, which was agreed to, and paſs'd by Commiſſion the Royal Aſſent May 10, on which Day Mr. Treaſurer brought a kind Meſſage to the Commons, and ſaid, By this you may ſee how ready his Majeſty is to ſatisfie all our juſt Requeſts, and is reſolv'd to repoſe himſelf upon the Affections of his People. (Moſt fatal Bill.)

On May 13. the King in Perſon gave his Conſent to three other Bills. 1. For the Abbreviation of Michaelmas Term. 2. For the Preſſing Mariners for the King's Ships. 3. For the Remainder of the ſix entire Subſidies.

May 17. Reſolved by the Commons, "That this "Houſe doth approve of the Affection of their Bre-"thren of Scotland, in their deſire of a Conformity "in Church-Government between the two Nations, "and doth give them Thanks for the ſame." So as the Conſpiracy of the Malecontents in both Kingdoms began now to diſcover it ſelf againſt Epiſcopacy and Monarchy. Hence a Paper, called the Scots Belief, was referred to the Committee for Printing May 18, and next Day the Bill was read to take away the Biſhops Votes in Parliament. And upon this proſpect of Confuſion, Dr. Juxon Biſhop of London, reſigned his Treaſurer's Staff, and that Office was put into Commiſſion. (Commons in a perfect Conſpiracy with the Scots.)

May 21. Upon a Meſſage from the Lords for diſbanding the Armies, Mr. Treaſurer reported, that there was in Arrear due to the Scots 120000 l. beſides the 300000 l. and it was voted by both Houſes, that the two Armies ſhould be diſbanded and ſatisfied next Month. In the Debate upon raiſing Money for this purpoſe June 2. it was found that no leſs than eight hundred thouſand Pounds would ſuffice. And becauſe the King was preparing for another Progreſs into Scotland, for fear he ſhould in his Paſſage thither influence the Armies that lay upon his Road, it was reſolved June 16. "That both Houſes be hum-"ble Suitors to his Majeſty, that the Armies may "be diſbanded before the King's going into the "North, and all parts of the Kingdom put into a "poſture of Defence." Upon which the Earl of Holland General, was ſent down to diſband the Engliſh Army. And on June 19. it was concluded that the Scots ſhould have three hundred thouſand Pounds paid for a Condition of their diſbanding. (Engliſh Army diſbanded.)

June

1641. 17 Car. I. June 21, Sir Edward Deering, a leading Member, did in a Speech acknowledge, that the King had yet denied them nothing; ſays he, We are all bound unto the Goodneſs of his ſacred Majeſty (God preſerve him and his for it) none of all our Bills, none of our Petitions this Parliament, have miſcarried in his Royal Hand, but have been compleated all with the Royal Aſſent. And indeed the Compliance of the King to all the Reſolutions of his Parliament did abundantly demonſtrate, that he yet thought of no future War with them. If he had meant Fighting, or could have foreſeen it, he would never have ſo diſarm'd himſelf and diſabled his Friends.

Compliance of the King confeſt by his Enemies.

June 22. the Commons having condemn'd the taking of the old cuſtomary Tonnage and Poundage without conſent of Parliament, drew up a Bill to ſettle it as a Gift of the two Houſes to the King, who at the paſſing of it made this Speech.

King's Speech at paſſing the Bill for Tonnage and Poundage.

"I Do very willingly accept your Offer made at "this time, as a Teſtimony of your Love, and "beginning of your dutiful Affections to me: and "I no way doubt but that you will perform that "which you have intimated unto me, and that in "due time you will perform the reſt when you have "leiſure.

"I doubt not likewiſe, but that in paſſing this "Bill, you will ſee a Teſtimony of the Truſt and "Confidence I have in your Affections; as alſo that "I omit no occaſion whereby I may ſhew that Af"fection to my People that I deſire my People "would ſhew to me; as in this Parliament hither"to no Body can ſay, but that I have ſought occa"ſions, both to ſhew my Affections unto them and "to remove Diſputes.

"And therefore in this particular Bill I hope you "will know, that I do freely and frankly give over "the Right which my Predeceſſors have ever chal"lenged unto them (though I confeſs diſputed, but "yet they did never yield it in their Times) there"fore you will underſtand this but as a Mark of my "Confidence, to put my ſelf wholly upon the Love "and Affection of my People for my Subſiſtence; "and therefore I hope that in proſecution of this you "will go on as you have ſaid. And tho' you have "rumours of Jealouſies, and Suſpicions by flying "and idle Diſcourſes that have come to my Ears, con"cerning the Extraordinary Way, I confeſs I never "underſtood it otherwiſe than as having relation "to the Scotiſh Army, and preventing Inſurrection, "which vaniſhed as ſoon as they were born.

"And therefore now you ſee my Clearneſs, I "will leave that to you, and will not meddle with "it one way or other; for I never had other De"ſign, but to win the Affections of my People by "my Juſtice in my Government."

The Parliament afraid of the King's going to Scotland.

The two Houſes were ſtill afraid of the King's intended Journey to Scotland, and therefore made ſeveral Propoſitions to retard it; which was likely to have created ſome Difference between the Engliſh and Scotch Brethren. For June 26, the Scots Commiſſioners acquaint the Commons, that they having heard as if the Parliament would endeavour to diſſuade his Majeſty from his Royal Intentions of going into Scotland, they found themſelves obliged to ſay, that the ſame would be a great Prejudice to them. However on this ſame Day the Commons thought fit to move the Lords, to join in Petitioning his Majeſty, that he would be pleaſed not to begin his Journey into Scotland till the 12th of Auguſt.

But he was not to go in Peace without paſſing the two Bills prepared for taking away the High-Commiſſion Court and the Star-Chamber, which were ancient Courts that had indeed of late exceeded their original Juriſdiction, and might want to be reformed; but nothing would ſatisfy without aboliſhing of them. And therefore on July 5. the King aſſented with this Speech.

1641. 17 Car. I.

King's Speech at paſſing the Bills againſt High Commiſſion and Star-Chamber Courts.

"I Am come to do the Office which I did defer "on Saturday laſt, to give determination to theſe "two Bills; but before I do it I muſt tell you, that "I cannot but be very ſenſible of thoſe Reports of "Diſcontent that I hear ſome have taken, for my "not giving my conſent on Saturday. Methinks it "ſeems ſtrange that any one ſhould think I could "paſs two Bills of that importance as theſe were, "without taking ſome fit time to conſider of them: "For it is no leſs than to alter in a great meaſure "thoſe fundamental Laws Eccleſiaſtical and Civil, "which many of my Predeceſſors have eſtabliſhed.

"If you conſider what I have done this Parlia"ment, diſcontent will not ſit in your Hearts: For "I hope you remember I have granted, that the "Judges hereafter ſhall hold their Places Quamdiu "bene ſe geſſerint. I have bounded the Foreſts not "according to my Right, but according to late "Cuſtoms. I have eſtabliſhed the Property of the "Subjects, as witneſs the free giving, not the ta"king away of Ship-money. I have eſtabliſhed by "Act of Parliament the Property of the Subject in "Tonnage and Poundage, which never was done in "any of my Predeceſſors time. I have granted a "Law for a Triennial Parliament; and given way "to an Act for the ſecuring of Moneys advanced "for the Diſbanding of the Armies. I have given "free courſe of Juſtice againſt Delinquents. I have "put the Laws in execution againſt the Papiſts. "Nay, I have given way to every thing that you "have asked of me; and therefore methinks you "ſhould not wonder, if in ſome things I begin to "refuſe: But I hope it ſhall not hinder your Pro"greſs in your great Affairs, and I will not ſtick "upon trivial Matters to give you Content. I hope "you are ſenſible of theſe beneficial Favours be"ſtowed on you at this time.

"To conclude, You know by your Conſent, there "is a prefixed time ſet for my going into Scotland, "and there is an abſolute Neceſſity for it. I do "not know, but things may ſo fall out, that it "may be ſhortned: therefore I hope you will haſten "the diſpatching of thoſe great Buſineſſes that now "are neceſſary to be done, and leave trivial and "ſuperficial Matters to another Meeting.

"For my part, I ſhall omit nothing that may "give you juſt Contentment, and ſtudy nothing "more than your Happineſs. And therefore I hope "you ſhall ſee a very good Teſtimony of it by "Paſſing theſe two Bills."

Abuſe of the King's Goodneſs.

But indeed the Condeſcenſions of the King did but elevate the Faction, who thought every Royal Conceſſion to be an Argument of their own Power, rather than of the King's Juſtice or Mercy. And therefore tho' his Majeſty favour'd the two Houſes by a Manifeſto approv'd by them in the Cauſe of the Palatinate; yet on July 6, the Commons proceeded in their Charge againſt the Judges, and carried up Articles of Impeachment againſt Sir Robert Berkley one of the Juſtices of the King's-Bench, and againſt Sir Francis Crawley one of the Juſtices of the Common-Pleas, and againſt the Lord Chief Baron Davenport, Baron Weſton, and Baron Trevor: and appointed a Committee to receive Complaints againſt any other Miniſter of Juſtice, by which they gain'd this Advantage at leaſt, to keep many of the King's Friends under Dread and Silence.

Charge againſt the Judges.

July 28, the King ſent another Meſſage of his intended Journey toward Scotland Aug. 10, which the Commons labour'd to retard, by deſiring at a Conference with the Lords, that his Majeſty might be requeſted to appoint a Cuſtos Regni during his Abſence, and Commiſſion him to give the Royal Aſſent to Bills in Parliament. A Propoſal extravagant and illegal.

On Aug. 7. at another Conference with the Lords, Mr. Hollis offer'd Reaſons to move the King to ſtay his Journey: which brought the King the ſame Day to the Houſe of Lords; where, in a ſhort Speech, he

1641. 17 Car. I.

he urged the Neceſſity of his ſpeedy Going. This raiſed greater Heats and Paſſions, and the Commons reſolved (and prevailed with the Lords to do the like) to ſit next Day, being Sunday, thinking fit to excuſe it by a ſhort Declaration, that it ſhould not be drawn into Precedent.

On Monday Aug. 2, the King again told the Houſe of Peers, That his Faith was engaged to be in his Kingdom of Scotland, that he could not but go, that the Condition of Affairs in that Kingdom required his Preſence, &c. So that on Tueſday Morning the King came again to the Houſe, and gave his Aſſent to an Act for the Treaty between the two Kingdoms; to a Bill for the prevention of vexatious Proceedings touching the Order of Knighthood; and to a Bill for regulating the Clerks of the Market: and ſign'd a limited Commiſſion to ſome Lords for paſſing Bills in his Abſence: and ſo took Leave of the two Houſes in a ſhort Speech, and began his Journey about Two that Afternoon.

King goes for Scotland.

The leading Members were ſtill afraid to truſt the King out of their own Sight; and therefore order'd, that a Committee of Lords and Commoners ſhould be ſent to the Parliament in Scotland, to remain there, and maintain a Correſpondence between the two Nations. Accordingly the Lord Howard, Mr. Hampden, and Sir Philip Stapleton, were ſent to be as it were Ambaſſadors from the Parliament, and Spies upon the King. (a)

Parliam. ſet Spies upon him.

When his Majeſty came to York, he found no part of either Army disbanded, becauſe the Money was not yet return'd. While his Majeſty ſtaid at York, the E. of Holland, Lord General, made a Suit to the King for the Favour of making a Baron; which being denied by the King, the Earl turn'd a Malecontent; and as ſoon as ever the King was gone, he enter'd into a Correſpondence with the oppoſite Party, betray'd the King's Secrets, and became his moſt ungrateful and unfaithful Adverſary.

E. of Holland deſerts the King.

His Majeſty came ſafe to Edinburgh, and on Auguſt 19, made this Speech to the Parliament of Scotland.

"My Lords and Gentlemen,

King's Speech to Scots Parliament.

"THere hath been nothing ſo diſpleaſing to me, " as thoſe unlucky Differences which have " happen'd between Me and my People; and no" thing that I have more deſired, than to ſee this " Day, wherein I hope not only to ſettle theſe un" happy Miſtakings, but rightly to know and to " be known to my Native Country.

" I need not tell you (for I think it is well " known to moſt) what Difficulties I have paſſed " through and overcome, to be here at this preſent. " Yet this I will ſay, If Love to my Native Coun" try had not been a chief Motive to this Journey, " other Reſpects might eaſily have found a ſhift to " do that by a Commiſſion, which I am come to " perform my ſelf.

" And this conſidered, I cannot doubt of ſuch " real Teſtimonies of your Affections for the Main" tenance of that Royal Power which I enjoy af" ter an hundred and eight Deſcents; and which " you have profeſſed to maintain; and to which your " own National Oath doth oblige you; that I ſhall " not think any Pains ill beſtow'd.

" Now the End of my Coming is ſhortly this; " To perfect whatſoever I have promiſed, and with" all to quiet the Diſtractions which have and may " fall out amongſt you: And this I mind not ſuper" ficially but fully and chearfully to perform. For " I aſſure you, that I can do nothing with more " Chearfulneſs, than to give my People a general " Satisfaction. Wherefore not offering to endear " my ſelf unto you in Words (which indeed is not " my Way) I deſire in the firſt place to ſettle that " which concerns the Religion and juſt Liberties of " this my Native Country, before I proceed to any " other Act."

Theſe are the moſt material things done in the Scots Parliament. Auguſt 26. Act anent the Ratifications of the Articles of Treaty, &c. Sept. 2. Act anent incovenanting Patrons. Nov. 6. Act in favour of Prince Elector Palatine, for ten thouſand Foot to be ſent into Germany. Novemb. 17. Act appointing the next Parliament to conveen the firſt Tueſday of June 1644.

The Engliſh Parliament ſitting without their King, were much more uneaſie. Aug. 16. the Lords receiving a perfidious Letter from the Earl of Holland Lord General, with obſcure Intimation as if there were new Practices and Deſigns againſt the Parliament, held a Conference with the Commons upon this Subject-matter: and the Commons to improve the Fears and Jealouſies, appointed a Committee to conſider of putting the Kingdom into a poſture of Defence. And to prepare a way for inveſting the two Houſes with the Legiſlature, on Auguſt 27. they made what they called an Ordinance of Parliament for a Day of Publick Thankſgiving, for the Peace between England and Scotland on Tueſday Sept. 7. And within twenty Days after the King's remove, the Houſe of Peers being reduced to not above twenty Lords, and the Houſe of Commons to little more than a hundred Members, and thoſe all Zealots for the new Cauſe; they made many exorbitant Votes and Declarations, till being weary and almoſt aſhamed, on Sept. 9, the two Houſes Adjourn'd to Octob. 20. but not without irregularly (for the like had never been before practis'd) making a Committee of each Houſe to meet twice a Week, and oftner if they ſaw Cauſe, during the Receſs, and to tranſact ſuch Buſineſs as they were authoriz'd to do by their Inſtructions.

Engliſh Parliament.

Receſs of the two Houſes.

Lord Clarendon's Hiſt. of Rebel. B. iv. p. 233.

When the two Houſes after their Receſs met again, they got the Train'd-Bands of Weſtminſter to attend with their Arms in the Palace-yard; and proceeded in Speeches and Votes and Bills againſt the Biſhops, againſt Ceremonies, againſt the Liturgy, and to draw up a Remonſtrance of the State of the Kingdom.

Meet again with Guards.

While in Scotland the King had reaſon to be weary of the Place, for he found all things propoſed to him as to a vanquiſhed Perſon, without conſideration of his Honour or his Intereſt; having not one Counſellor about him but the Duke of Lenox, and very few Followers who had either Affection to his Perſon or Reſpect of his Honour. But whatever Acts they were pleaſed to preſent to him concerning Church or State, the King confirmed, and then gratified the Promoters of them. He made the Lord Lowdon who had been the principal Manager of the Rebellion, an Earl, and Chancellor of Scotland; he created the Earl of Argyle a Marqueſs; their General Leſly Earl of Leven, and their Lieutenant-General Earl of Calender; and conferred other Honours and Offices upon his greateſt Enemies, in hopes to reconcile and retain them. So that he ſeemed to have made that Progreſs into Scotland, only that he might make a perfect Deed of Gift of that Kingdom, which he could never have done ſo abſolutely without going thither. And ſo having nothing more to do there, he began his Journey towards England about the middle of November.

King weary of Scotland.

Where in effect he gave away the Kingdom.

But to compleat the King's Misfortunes, and give him particular Plagues in every one of his three Kingdoms; about the middle of October came the Iriſh Rebellion.

(a) And in many things the Engliſh Parliament ignobly ſubmitted to a ſervile Compliance with their Brethren, as they now call'd them in Scotland. See, An Ordinance of Parliament for a Day of Publick Thankſgiving for the Peace concluded between England and Scotland, to be obſerved on Tueſday the 7th of September next, that we may join with our Brethren in Scotland, who have deſigned the ſame Day for that Duty, Die Veneris 27 Aug. 1641.—— The Day of Thankſgiving kept by the Commons at Lincoln's-Inn Chapel, becauſe the Biſhop of Lincoln had framed a Set Form of Prayer to be uſed at St. Margaret's Church. Ruſhworth iii. p. 385.

News

1641. 17 Car. I.

News of the Iriſh Rebellion: For the Papiſts and old Natives taking advantage of the King's Neceſſities, and of the Army disbanding, and of the Earl of Leiceſter Lord Lieutenant's Abſence in England, conſpired to deſtroy the Engliſh Proteſtants, and to ſecure the Kingdom in their own Hands. Their Deſign upon Dublin was miraculouſly diſcovered the Night before it was to be executed, and ſo the ſurprizal of that Caſtle prevented, and the principal Conſpirators apprehended. But in other parts they obſerv'd the Time appointed, and made their Inſurrection in ſuch an inhumane and barbarous manner, that there were forty or fifty thouſand Engliſh Proteſtants murther'd before they ſuſpected themſelves to be in Danger, or could provide for their Defence. (a)

King deſires to ſuppreſs it.

The King wrote from Scotland to the two Houſes, that he was ſatisfied this was no raſh Inſurrection, but a formed Rebellion, which muſt be ſuppreſt by a declared War, the Management of which he would leave to their Care and Wiſdom. This occaſioned a Committee of both Houſes to conſider of the Affairs of Ireland, and to provide for ſuppreſſing that Rebellion. And this Reference gave the Houſes another conſiderable Step to a ſeparate Power; acting in this Matter without the King, and enforcing ſeveral Orders with as much effect as if they had been legal Statutes; beſide the borrowing Monies and conferring Offices, and doing other Acts that gave them Poſſeſſion of a large Power and Dependance, the Miſchief whereof, tho' in the beginning little taken notice of, was afterwards felt by the King very ſenſibly: Nay, and ſome of the artificial Managers took all occaſions to inſinuate, "That this Rebellion in Ireland was contrived and fomented by the King, or at leaſt by the Queen, for the advancement of Popery; and that the Rebels publiſh'd and declar'd, that they had the King's Authority for all they did;" which Calumny, though without the leaſt ſhadow or colour of Truth, made great impreſſion upon the Minds of ſober and moderate Men. The Iriſh Rebels did indeed pretend a Commiſſion under the Great Seal, dated at Edinburgh Octob. 1. 1641. but the Impudence of this Calumny was proteſted againſt by the Lords Juſtices and Council in Ireland; and the whole Trick was afterward confeſt, how they forged the Commiſſion, and affix'd a Broad Seal to it which they had taken off from an old Patent.

Lord Clarendon.

Pretended Commiſſion.

Bitter Remonſtrance.

But theſe and other vain Fears gave a better opportunity to a Committee in the Houſe of Commons, to draw up a Remonſtrance of the State of the Kingdom, and report it to the Houſe, in order to prepare it for the King's reception, who was now returning home. "It contained a very bitter Repreſentation of things, with all the ſharp Reflections that could be made, and all unreaſonable Jealouſies, &c. In a Word, they left not any Error or Misfortune in Government, or any paſſionate exerciſe of Power unmentioned or unpreſs'd; with the ſharpeſt and moſt pathetical Expreſſions to affect the People, that the general Obſervation of the Wiſeſt, or the particular Animoſity of the moſt Diſobliged, or ill affected Perſons could ſuggeſt to the diſadvantage of the King, from the Death of his Father to the unhappy beginning of the preſent Parliament." The Houſe ſeemed generally to miſlike it, and many argued that it was both Unneceſſary and Unſeaſonable; Unneceſſary, all thoſe Grievances being already redreſs'd, and as good Security being given for the future as could poſſibly be done: And Unſeaſonable, after the King had gratified them in every thing they deſired, and after ſo long abſence in the ſettling the Diſorders in another Kingdom, which he had happily compos'd, to be now welcom'd home with ſuch a volume of Reproaches for what others had done amiſs, and which he himſelf had reformed. Sir Edward Deering (b) ſpoke bluntly againſt it, Mr. Palmer and others proteſted againſt it. But after all the Oppoſition, by ſitting late and quarreling much, it was at laſt carried in the Affirmative by nine Voices, and ordered to be printed. 'Tis obſervable, that the greateſt Stickler for it was Oliver Cromwell, a Member hitherto obſcure, who ſollicited the Cauſe with vehement Applications, and after the paſſing, told the Lord Falkland with ſome Aſſeveration, that If the Remonſtrance had been rejected, he would have ſold all he had the next Morning, and never have ſeen England more; and he knew there were many other honeſt Men of the ſame Reſolution. So near was the poor Kingdom at that time to its Deliverance or to its Deſtruction.

Oppos'd in vain.

King returns.

On Thurſday November 25, the King paſſed thro' London, in his Return from Scotland, and was received and entertained by the Lord-Mayor, Sheriffs and Aldermen, with ſuch extraordinary Reſpect and Joy, that the King in anſwer to the Recorder's Speech thank'd the good Citizens for their hearty Expreſſions of Love to him, and ſaid, "He could not expreſs the Contentment he received herein, becauſe he now ſaw that all thoſe Tumults and Diſorders had only riſen from the meaner ſort of People, and that the Affections of the better and main part of the City had been ever Loyal and Affectionate to his Perſon and Government."

King pleaſed with the City.

K. diſmiſs the Guards of the two Houſes.

The King commanded the Guards that had been attending on the two Houſes to be diſmiſſed: This diſpleaſed thoſe Members who thought it a piece of State, and pretended it to be a needful Security: So the King was petitioned to continue them; to which when the King anſwered November 27. that he would order ſome Train'd-Bands to wait for a few Days, tho' he knew no cauſe they had of Fears, and it was a great trouble to his Subjects to perform that Service, and gave ſtrange Apprehenſions and Jealouſies to the People. They appointed a Committee to draw up Reaſons for a Guard, and deſired ſuch Guard might be under the Command of the Earl of Eſſex, which indeed foreboded the raiſing of an Army, and the chuſing of their own General.

Remonſtrance delivered.

Decemb. 1, a Committee of the Houſe of Commons waited on the King at Hampton-Court, and delivered the Petition, and the large Remonſtrance, read over to his Majeſty by Sir Ralph Hopton, the King was much concerned at the Harſhneſs of it, but promiſed an Anſwer, as ſoon as the weight of the Buſineſs would permit; and deſired there ſhould be no publiſhing that Declaration, till they had received his Anſwer to it. But they did publiſh it, and that by Order of the Houſe; and the King in his Anſwer complained of his being ſenſible of that Diſreſpect; but however promiſed and aſſured them that he would do all that was poſſible for the Comfort and Happineſs of his People.

Decemb. 2. the King came to the Houſe of Lords and paſſed the Bill for Tonnage and Poundage with this Speech.

King's Speech.

"My Lords and Gentlemen,

"I Think it fit after ſo long abſence at this firſt occaſion, to ſpeak a few Words unto you, but no ways in Anſwer to Mr. Speaker's learned Speech. Albeit I have ſtaid longer than I expected to have done when I went away, yet in this I have kept my Promiſe with you, that I have made all the haſte back again that the ſettling my Scotch Affairs could any ways permit. In which I have had ſo good Succeſs, that I will confidently affirm to you, that I have left that Nation a moſt peaceable and contented People; ſo that although I have a little miſreckon'd in Time, yet I was not deceived in my End.

(a) On Saturday 23. Octob. 1641. a Day dedicated to S. Ignatius, a fit Patron for ſuch a Villainy, broke out the dreadful Rebellion and Maſſacre in Ireland. Cox Hiſt. Irel. P. ii. p. 72. to the loſs of about an hundred and forty thouſand Proteſtants Lives, as carefully computed.

1641. 17 Car. I.

"But if I have deceived your Expectations a little in the time of my Return, I am aſſured that my Expectation is as much and more deceived in the Condition wherein I hoped to have found Buſineſs at my Return. For ſince that before my going, I ſettled the Liberties of my Subjects, and gave the Laws a free and orderly Courſe, I expected to have found my People reaping the Fruits of theſe Benefits by living in quietneſs and ſatisfaction of Mind; but inſtead of this, I find them diſturb'd with Jealouſies, Frights and Alarms of dangerous Deſigns and Plots; in conſequence of which, Guards have been ſet to defend both Houſes. I ſay not this as in doubt that my Subjects Affections are any way leſſen'd to me in this time of my abſence: For I cannot but remember to my great comfort the joyful Reception I had now at my entry into London; but rather, as I hope, that my Preſence will eaſily diſperſe theſe Fears: For I bring as perfect and true Affections to my People, as ever Prince did, or as good Subjects can poſſibly deſire. And I am ſo far from Repenting me of any Act done in this Seſſion for the good of my People, that I proteſt if it were to do again I would do it, and will yet grant what elſe can be juſtly deſired for ſatisfaction in point of Liberties, or in maintenance of the true Religion that is here eſtabliſhed.

"Now I have but one Particular to recommend unto you at this time; it is Ireland, for which tho' I doubt not your Care, yet methinks the Preparations for it go but ſlowly on. The occaſion is the fitter for me now to mention, becauſe of the arrival of two Lords from Scotland, who came inſtructed from my Council there (who now by Act of Parliament have full Power for that purpoſe) to anſwer that Demand which it pleaſed both Houſes to make me, by way of Petition, that met me at Berwick, and which the Duke of Richmond ſent back by my Command to my Scotch Council. Therefore my Deſire is, that both Houſes would appoint a ſelect Committee to end this Buſineſs with theſe Noblemen. I muſt conclude in telling you, that I ſeek my People's Happineſs; for their flouriſhing is my greateſt Glory, and their Affections my greateſt Strength."

Another Speech.

On Decemb. 14. the King made another Speech to both Houſes, to recommend the diſpatch of reducing the Iriſh Nation to their true and wonted Obedience, and to take notice of the Bill for preſſing of Soldiers now depending among them, declaring He would paſs it, if it did not infringe or diminiſh his Prerogative; and offering to avoid Debate, that the Bill might paſs with a Salvo Jure both for King and People. But this gave another occaſion of quarreling to them who lay catching at occaſions: And ſo a Remonſtrance under the name of a Petition of the Lords and Commons in Parliament, was preſented to the King, ſetting forth, That it is their ancient and undoubted Right, that his Majeſty ought not to take notice of any Matter in agitation and Debate in either Houſe of Parliament, but by their Information and Agreement, and ought not to propound any Condition, Proviſion or Limitation to any Bill or Act in Debate or Preparation; and declaring that theſe their Privileges had been broken to their great Sorrow and Grievance by his Majeſty's Speech on Tueſday laſt Decemb. 14. and finally deſiring to know the Names of the Perſons who had given that evil Council, that they might receive condign Puniſhment.

Another Remonſtrance.

Commons for confiding Men.

Decemb. 23, the King removed Sir Will. Balfore from the Lieutenancy of the Tower, and placed Col. Lunsford in that important Truſt. The Majority of the Commons were afraid of him, and drew up Reaſons of his being unfit for that Place, and would recommend Sir John Coniers to it. The Lords refuſed to join in any ſuch Addreſs, becauſe they conceived it an Intrenchment upon his Majeſty's Prerogative. Upon which the Commons make a ſeparate Declaration of Col. Lunsford's being unfit to be Lieutenant of the Tower, as being a Perſon whom the Commons of England could not confide in; and enter'd a Proteſtation againſt the Lords refuſal to join with them; and ſent two of their own Members to the Earl of Newport Conſtable of the Tower, to deſire him to reſide there and take Cuſtody of it, and encouraged and read in their Houſe a Petition of the Apprentices of London for the ſecurity of the Tower, and let the Lord Mayor acquaint the King, that the Apprentices would riſe if Lunsford were not remov'd; ſo that the King was forc'd to diſplace him on Sunday Night Decemb. 26. The Day following came the Mob to Weſtminſter, crying, No Biſhops, no Biſhops; and made ſo great a Tumult, that the Lords in a Conference with the Commons inſiſted upon the ſpeedy ſuppreſſing of theſe tumultuous Aſſemblies, and required a Declaration to be publiſhed for that purpoſe. The Commons only anſwered, "That their Houſe would agree to all good and lawful Ways and Means for preventing of Tumults and Routs, that ſhall be againſt the Safety and Privilege of Parliament; but for Printing a particular Declaration the ſame was a Matter that would require ſome time to be conſidered of." By which Anſwer they betray'd what was afterward ſufficiently known, that the Apprentices and Mob were prepared and managed and invited by ſome leading Members. So as the King's Proclamation againſt Tumults, dated Decemb. 23. could have no effect but to encreaſe them, becauſe the King was againſt them (a). Nay, and the Commons made this Concourſe and Mutinies (which they artfully fomented) to be a new Argument of their own Fears; and on Decemb. 31. addreſs'd to the King for a Guard, and demanded an Anſwer without Delay. The King did anſwer, "That he was wholly ignorant of the grounds of their Apprehenſions; that he would take as much care of them, as he would of the preſervation of himſelf and his Children; but if this general Aſſurance would not ſuffice, he would command a Guard to wait upon them."

Laſt reſort to the Mob.

Commons refuſe to ſuppreſs them.

King's Declaration againſt them to no purpoſe.

His Majeſty now finding that there could be no underſtanding between him and his Parliament, without detecting and proſecuting thoſe whom he thought the prime Leaders of the Faction. He order'd Sir Edward Herbert his Attorney-General to prefer Articles, in the Houſe of Lords, of High-Treaſon and other Miſdemeanours, againſt the Lord Kimbolton, Mr. Denzil Hollis, Sir Arthur Haſlerig, Mr. John Pym, Mr. John Hampden and Mr. William Stroud. This was accordingly done Jan. 3. and after reading the Articles, the Attorney deſired on his Majeſty's behalf, that a ſelect Committee, under a command of Secrecy, might be appointed to take the Examination of ſuch Witneſſes as the King ſhould produce. Upon this News, the Commons reſolv'd to ſtand by their Members, and order'd that if any Perſons whatſoever ſhould Seal up their Trunks or Papers, or offer to ſeize upon their Perſons, it ſhould be lawful for ſuch Members to ſtand upon his Defence and make Reſiſtance. Soon after a Serjeant at Arms delivered this Meſſage at the Bar of the Commons, I am commanded by the King's Majeſty my Maſter, upon my Allegiance, that I ſhould come and repair to the Houſe of Commons, and require of Mr. Speaker five Gentlemen Members of the Houſe of Commons, and thoſe Gentlemen being deliver'd, I am commanded to arreſt them in his Majeſty's name of High-Treaſon. To which Demand the Houſe ſent Word to the King by ſome of their Members, that they would take the Matter into ſerious Conſideration, and then give an Anſwer. The next Day Jan. 5. after Noon, the King attended by his own Guard and ſome few Gentlemen, went to the Houſe of Commons, and leaving his Attendants at the Door, went into the Houſe and took the Speaker's Chair, and ſaid thus.

King prefers Articles of Treaſon againſt 5 Members.

King goes to the Houſe of Commons and demands the five Members.

(a) See the Petition of the London Apprentices read in the Houſe of Commons 23. Decemb. 1641. for rooting out Prelacy, and carrying on Reformation. Ruſhworth iii. p. 462.

"Gentlemen,

1641.
17 Car. I.

"Gentlemen,

"I Am ſorry for this occaſion of coming unto you; "yeſterday I ſent a Serjeant at Arms upon a very "important occaſion to apprehend ſome that by my "Command were accuſed of High-Treaſon; whereunto I did expect Obedience and not a Meſſage. "And I muſt declare unto you here, that albeit no "King that ever was in England ſhall be more careful of your Privileges, to maintain them to the "uttermoſt of his Power than I ſhall be; yet you "muſt know, that in Caſes of Treaſon no Perſon hath "a Privilege: And therefore I am come to know if "any of theſe Perſons that were accuſed are here. "For I muſt tell you, Gentlemen, that ſo long as "theſe Perſons that I have accuſed (for no ſlight "Crime, but for Treaſon) are here, I cannot expect that this Houſe will be in the right way that "I do heartily wiſh it. Therefore I am come to "tell you, that I muſt have them wherever I find "them.

"Well! ſince I ſee all the Birds are flown, I do "expect from you that you ſhall ſend them unto me, "as ſoon as they return hither. But I aſſure you, "in the Word of a King, I never did intend any "Force, but ſhall proceed againſt them in a legal "and fair way, for I never meant any other.

"And now ſince I ſee I cannot do what I came "for, I think this no unfit occaſion to repeat what "I have ſaid formerly, that whatſoever I have done "in Favour and to the good of my Subjects, I do "mean to maintain it.

"I will trouble you no more, but tell you I do "expect as ſoon as they come to the Houſe, you "will ſend them to me, otherwiſe I muſt take my "own courſe to find them."

Unhappy ſtep.

The five Members had withdrawn by Order of the Houſe. The King, when he had done his Speech, ask'd the Speaker, Where thoſe Perſons were? The Speaker excuſed his making any Anſwer, and the King went out, ſeveral of the Members crying out, Privilege, Privilege: The King in this ſurprizing Viſit was no doubt moſt welcome to his greateſt Enemies, becauſe they knew their Advantage in it. His Friends were amaz'd: and 'tis thought no one Perſon was appriſed of it, but the Lord Digby who gave the Council, whoſe Integrity in this Matter might be as well ſuſpected as his Wiſdom: For he let it be betrayed to the Houſe of Commons, and diſſembled his Knowledge of it in the Houſe of Lords; and under the fatal effects of it deſerted the King and went over into Holland.

Nothing could have been more prejudicial to the King's Intereſt and Honour than this one imprudent Action, which if it had ſucceeded would have ſerv'd no purpoſe but that of blackening the King for breaking the ordinary Courſe of Law and Juſtice; and being diaſppointed was the more popular ſuggeſtion to Self-defence and open War. The Commons fell immediately upon remonſtrating againſt this breach of Privilege; and to prevent ſuch farther Aſſaults at Weſtminſter, they ſate in a Committee at Guildhall, and ſo work'd the City, and eſpecially the Apprentices and Rabble, into Diſorders and Tumults, that on Jan. 10. the King with his Royal Family were forc'd for their own Safety to remove from White-hall to Hampton-court, thence to Windſor, and by degrees to York, coming no more to Weſtminſter till he was ingloriouſly brought thither a Priſoner and as a Malefactor.

Commons make their advantage of it.

King repents of it.

This one act of entring the Houſe of Commons would never be forgiven, tho' the good King did all that was poſſible to attone for this Raſhneſs. For on Jan. 12. his Majeſty ſent a gracious Meſſage to the Houſe, that He would wave his Proceedings againſt the five Members, and be as careful of their Privileges as of his own Life or Crown; and gave them freſh Aſſurances Jan. 14, and offer'd a general Pardon Feb. 2, yet nothing would do, they made a large Declaration againſt it; they encouraged Petitions out of the Country in abhorrence of it; they impeached the Attorney-General for preferring the Articles; and got a Sentence from the Lords to diſable him from being Member, Aſſiſtant or Pleader in either Houſe, and to commit him to Priſon during the Houſes pleaſure.

17 Car. I.

And now in the King's abſence the majority of the two Houſes thought themſelves poſſeſſed both of the Legiſlature and of the Executive Power. They order'd a Guard to be ſet about the Tower, and took the Lieutenancy from Sir John Biron; drew in the Scotch Commiſſioners to offer a Mediation, or rather to offer their Service for the Parliament againſt the King; extorted the Militia out of the King's Hands into their own; and ſent out repeated Declarations that did ſufficiently proclaim a War againſt him. While he acted with great Calmneſs and Moderation, ſending Meſſages, Anſwers and Replies, drawn up with admirable Reaſon and Temper; and making Propoſitions for the remedy of all Evils on Jan. 20, wherein he concludes, "How ready he will be to "exceed the greateſt Examples of the moſt indulgent "Princes in their Acts of Grace and Favour to their "People. So that if all the preſent Diſtractions "(which ſo apparently threaten the Ruin of this "Kingdom) do not by the Bleſſing of Almighty "God, end in a happy and bleſſed Accomodation, "his Majeſty will be ready to call Heaven and "Earth, God and Man to witneſs, that it hath not "fail'd on his part." And when on March 9, a Committee preſented to him at New-Market a Declaration of both Houſes, he made a moſt pathetical Speech to them,—— What would you have? Have I violated your Laws? Have I denied to paſs any Bill for the Eaſe and Security of my Subjects? I do not ask you what you have done for me. Have any of my People been tranſported with Fears and Apprehenſions? I have offered as free and general a Pardon as your ſelves can deviſe. All this conſidered, there is a Judgment from Heaven upon this Nation, if theſe Diſtractions continue. God ſo deal with me and mine, as all my Thoughts and Intentions are upright for the maintenance of the true Proteſtant Profeſſion, and for the obſervation and preſervation of the Laws of this Land; and I hope God will bleſs and aſſiſt thoſe Laws for my Preſervation.

Two Houſes without a King.

King's Pathetical Speech.

As to Eccleſiaſtical Matters in this Year, they ought to have been interwoven with the Civil: for the whole Buſineſs of Religion was got within the Parliament; nothing done by the Supremacy of the King, or by the ordinary Juriſdiction of the Biſhops. The Houſe of Commons were the Church Repreſentative, and were buſie in deſtroying the Conſtitution of it.

March 30. a Bill for the more free Paſſage of the Goſpel, and a Bill to reſtrain Biſhops and others in Holy Orders from intermeddling with Secular Affairs. Soon after, a Bill for repeal of a Statute 1 Eliz. concerning Commiſſions for Cauſes Eccleſiaſtical. And to terrifie the Convocation from daring to aſſert their Right, they ordered a Bill to be brought in for puniſhing and fining of the Members of the late Convocation of the Province of Canterbury; putting into the Bill the expreſs Fines ſet upon each Member, the Archbiſhop of Canterbury twenty thouſand Pounds, the Dean of Canterbury 1000 l. each Proctor 100 l. and ſo for every Dioceſs upon each Member of it, at ſuch a very exorbitant rate that the Penalty ſhould have been ten times greater than what the Clergy ſuffered for their Premunire under Hen. VIII.

Commons the ſole Judges of Religion.

Bills to alter the Conſtitution of the Church.

Then they proceeded to rob the Church as well as the Clergy; they prepared a Bill to take away the Deans and Chapters Lands; and tho' for a ſhew of Juſtice they admitted Dr. Hacket to plead againſt the Bill May 12 (a), and received Petitions of the two

And to take away the Revenues.

Univerſities againſt it, yet they would never drop or diſmiſs it; but kept it in reſerve for a Power to enforce it. They declared for Presbytery by reſolving May 17, that this Houſe doth approve of the Affection of their Brethren in Scotland, in their deſire of a Conformity in Church Government between the two Nations. So that May 19. they read the Bill to take away the Biſhop's Votes in Parliament; and the next Day order'd, that no Miniſter be forced hereafter to take any Oath at his Induction but ſuch as ſhall be warranted by Scripture. And becauſe the Lords after Conference and Debates had reſolved, that The Biſhops ought to retain their Votes in Parliament, therefore they brought in another Bill to aboliſh Epiſcopacy, "As a great Impediment to the perfect Reformation and growth of Religion, and very prejudicial to the State and Government of this Kingdom." And that the Biſhop's Perſons might make their Order criminal, they carried up Articles of Impeachment July 20. againſt Biſhop Wren of Ely, with a very aggravating Speech delivered by Sir Thomas Widdrington. (a)

And to aboliſh Epiſcopacy.

But to make a ſhorter Work, they ſent up Serjeant Wild to impeach thirteen Biſhops at once of Crimes and Miſdemeanors for contriving, making and promulging ſeveral Conſtitutions and Canons Eccleſiaſtical, contrary to the King's Prerogative, to the fundamental Laws and Statutes of the Realm, to the Rights of Parliament, to the Propriety and Liberty of the Subjects, and Matters tending to Sedition, and of dangerous Conſequence; and by granting a Benevolence contrary to Law. (b)

On Sept. 1. they had ſuch warm Debates againſt the Common-Prayer, that the Lords found it neceſſary to declare, that The Book of Common-Prayer ſhould be obſerved in all Churches, without any Omiſſion or Alteration; and that none ſhould offer any Contempt at the uſe of it. But in a return of Zeal the Commons made a Declaration September 9. for ſuppreſſing Innovations, by removing the Communion Table from the Eaſt End, taking away the Rails, levelling the Chancels, forbidding to bow at the Name of Jeſus, &c. Octob. 23. Sir Edward Deering obſerv'd in a Speech, that there had long been in ſome hand within that Houſe, a Bill for a National Synod ready drawn, which he deſired might be now read, as the only Remedy for the ſad Miſeries of our diſtracted Church. The ſame Perſon, in another Speech againſt the Remonſtrance Novemb. 22. excepted with a paſſionate Reſentment againſt the Paſſage of Idolatry introduced by command of the Biſhops, told them, "They could not prove that any one of all the Biſhops had iſſued forth any one Command for Idolatry; that the Learned, Pious and Painful Biſhop of Durham, had fought in Front againſt Roman Superſtition and Idolatry; that the Biſhop of Lincoln was the firſt of note who gave check to our Papal Miſleaders and Altarian Innovators; that the Biſhop of Exeter had ever the repute of a good Man and a good Biſhop; and that there could be no Superſtition proved upon the ſeveral Biſhops of London, Wincheſter, Cheſter, Carliſle and Chicheſter." But the Commons went on, and their Proceedings gave ſo much countenance to Separation and Confuſion, that the King thought himſelf obliged to publiſh his Proclamation Decemb. 10, to require Obedience to the Laws and Statutes ordain'd for eſtabliſhing the true Religion in this Kingdom; and that Divine Service ſhould be regularly performed, &c. but to little purpoſe, when his Majeſty was already deprived of his legal Power to execute any Laws.

And to take away the Liturgy.

The King for Conformity in vain.

1641. 17 Car. I.

The Biſhops who had been driven and kept from the Houſe of Peers, by the Awe of Impeachments and Popular Tumults, by the Advice of Dr. Williams Archbiſhop of York, made the following Proteſtation, delivered into the Houſe of Lords Decemb. 30.

Proteſtation of the Biſhops.

"To the King's moſt excellent Majeſty, and the Lords and Peers now aſſembled in Parliament.

"The Humble Petition and Proteſtation of all the Biſhops and Prelates now called by his Majeſty's Writs to attend the Parliament, and preſent about London and Weſtminſter for that Service.

"THat whereas the Petitioners are called up by ſeveral and reſpective Writs, and under great Penalties to attend in Parliament, and have a clear and indubitable Right to Vote in Bills and other Matters whatſoever debateable in Parliament, by the ancient Cuſtoms, Laws and Statutes of this Realm, and ought to be protected by your Majeſty quietly to attend and proſecute that great Service.

"They humbly remonſtrate and proteſt, before God, your Majeſty, and the noble Lords and Peers now aſſembled in Parliament, that as they have an indubitable Right to Sit and Vote in the Houſe of Lords, ſo are they (if they may be protected from Force and Violence) moſt ready and willing to perform their Duties accordingly; and that they do abominate all Actions or Opinions tending to Popery and the maintenance thereof; as alſo all Propenſion and Inclination to any malignant Party, or any other Side or Party whatſoever, to the which their own Reaſons and Conſcience ſhall not move them to adhere.

"But whereas they have been at ſeveral times violently Menac'd, Affronted and Aſſaulted by multitudes of People, in their coming to perform their Services in that Honourable Houſe, and lately chaſed away and put in danger of their Lives, and can find no Redreſs or Protection, upon ſundry Complaints made to both Houſes in theſe Particulars.

"They likewiſe humbly proteſt before your Majeſty and the noble Houſe of Peers, that ſaving unto themſelves all their Rights and Intereſts of ſitting and voting in that Houſe at other times, they dare not Sit and Vote in the Houſe of Peers, untill your Majeſty ſhall farther ſecure them from all Affronts, Indignities and Dangers in the Premiſſes.

"Laſtly, whereas their Fears are not built upon Phantaſies and Conceits, but upon ſuch Grounds and Objects as may well terrifie Men of good Reſolutions and much Conſtancy: They do in all Duty and Humility Proteſt, before your Majeſty and the Peers of that moſt Honourable Houſe of Parliament, againſt all Laws, Orders, Votes, Reſolutions and Determinations, as in themſelves null and of none effect, which in their Abſence, ſince the 27th of this inſtant Month Decemb. have already paſſed; as likewiſe againſt all ſuch as ſhall hereafter paſs in that moſt Honourable Houſe; during the time of this their forced and violent

A Speech of Sir Benjamin Rudyard, for reforming, not aboliſhing Epiſcopacy, Mr. Grimſton, &c.

(b) Many wiſe Men had foreſeen the fall of the Church of England. Biſhop Hacket, then Rector of St. Andrew Holbourn, is ſaid to have diſcourſed of it from the Prediction of many Learned and Holy Men, and wondred that Cardinal Bellarmine, Mr. Hooker, and Mr. Mead, after both, ſhould all agree, that the Eſtabliſhment of the Church of England was not like to continue above ſeventy or eighty Years, the Age of a Man; and he would tell how the late Biſhop of Chicheſter had ſaid unto him, his Father foretold the ſame: And Biſhop Wren ſaid the ſame from Biſhop Andrews. But above all Mr. John Shearman Regiſter to my Lord of Canterbury told him, that he heard Archbiſhop Abbot before his Death, at a ſolemn meeting before many Friends, with many Tears, foretell the ſame.

New Matter of Offence.

Archbiſhop Williams who drew up the Form, carried it to the King, who delivered it to the Lord-Keeper, who read it in the Houſe of Lords; and they at an immediate Conference did communicate it to the Houſe of Commons, as a Matter concerning the whole Parliament, and intrenching upon the Fundamental Privileges and Being of Parliaments. The Commons were quick in their Reſolution, to accuſe theſe twelve Biſhops of High-Treaſon, for endeavouring to ſubvert the fundamental Laws and Being of Parliaments; and ſent Mr. Glynne to make the Charge at the Lord's Bar, and to deſire that they might be forthwith ſequeſter'd from Parliament and put into ſafe Cuſtody. And accordingly the Biſhops of Durham and Litchfield were committed to the Uſher of the Black Rod, and the other Ten ſent directly to the Tower.

Biſhop's charged with Treaſon.

On Jan. 15. they were all ſeverally brought to the Lords Bar, and put in their reſpective Anſwers; and being remanded into Cuſtody had no farther Trial, becauſe the meaning of all was anſwer'd, when it was carried in the Houſe of Lords Feb. 6. That the Biſhops ſhould have no Votes in Parliament. And this being thought a Satisfaction, the Houſe of Lords releaſed them upon Bail Feb. 16. but the Houſe of Commons had them recommitted to the Tower, to be ſafe till the Bill of their Excluſion paſſed, than which nothing could be more ſevere and arbitrary. (a)

Some hard Reflections are made upon this Act of the Biſhops in vindication of their Parliamentary Rights, in the late Hiſtory of the Rebellion. But whatever Paſſion there might be in Archbiſhop Williams the Penner of it, and however improper to purge themſelves of Inclination to any malignant Party, and however indiſcreet to make the King perſonally concerned in the conveyance of it to the Lords, and however conſcious they themſelves might be, that at this Juncture of Violence it could have no good Effect; yet it was certainly their Duty in Honour and Conſcience, to make ſome ſuch publick Proteſtation of their lawful Rights; eſpecially when their Lordſhips had already too much ſuffered in their Reputation by Silence and Abſence, and a voluntary Receſs from voting in the Lord Strafford's Bill.

Archbp. Laud not concerned in this Matter.

Their Metropolitan, Archbiſhop Laud, was before impriſoned in the Tower, and had no opportunity ſo much as to adviſe his Brethren. In tenderneſs to the Univerſity of Oxford (to which he had been an incomparable Benefactor) he reſign'd his Office of Chancellor, and the Earl of Pembroke was choſen to ſucceed him July 1. For this great Prelate ſaw that the Storms againſt him were not likely to abate; for on June 2. Information being given to the Houſe of Commons, that the Archbiſhop of Canterbury did uſe his Epiſcopal Power in Ordaining Miniſters, &c. within the Tower, it was moved that there might be an Order to reſtrain the ſame: But it was generally thought more fit for Prevention, to haſten the Proceedings for his Tryal. And the Houſe of Lords made an Order Oct 23, to ſequeſter the Archbiſhop's Juriſdiction, and to put it into the Hands of his inferiour Officers; and that he ſhould beſtow no Benefice without firſt acquainting the Houſe and taking their Approbation. (b) 1642.

The Lords and Commons ſent a Petition to the King at York on March 26, 1642, to juſtify their Declaration which had been delivered at New-Market; and to deſire him to return and to cloſe with the Council and Deſire of his Parliament. To which his Majeſty returned Anſwer, that they ought not to look upon him as Gone but Driven from them; that if they could not make his Reſidence in London ſafe, he would be content the Parliament ſhould be adjourned to ſuch a Place, where he might be fitly and ſafely with them. For though he was not pleaſed to be at that diſtance, yet they are not to expect his Preſence till they ſhould ſecure him againſt his juſt Apprehenſions of tumultuary Inſolencies, and likewiſe give him Satisfaction for thoſe inſupportable and inſolent Scandals that were raiſed upon him.

The King driven from the Parliament.

March 28. the Lords and Commons began now to act, as a ſeparate and independent State, with the King, as an Ally, threatening a Rupture with him. For they told him in an expreſs Meſſage, "That the "Lords and Commons in this preſent Parliament aſ- "ſembled, had found it neceſſary to provide and "ſet to Sea a ſtrong and powerful Navy, the Charge "whereof was to be born by the Common-wealth; "and taking notice of the Indiſpoſition of the Lord "Admiral, they had recommended the Earl of War- "wick to ſupply his room; and deſired his Majeſty "that he would withdraw his Pleaſure of giving "that Command to Sir John Pennington." Having thus gained Poſſeſſion of the Navy, they were entering upon the Militia; and having drawn up a Bill to put it entirely into the Hands of their own Creatures, they ſent it to his Majeſty for his Royal Aſſent, which he juſtly refuſed, and gave his Reaſons in a Meſſage to the two Houſes April 28. You have by this Bill now tendered to us (without taking notice of us) put the Power of the whole Kingdom, the Life and Liberties of the Subjects of all Degrees and Qualities into the Hands of particular Men for two Years. Can you imagine we will truſt ſuch an abſolute Power in the Hands of particular Perſons, which we refuſed to commit to both Houſes of Parliament? Nay, is not the Power it ſelf too abſolute, too unlimited, to be committed to any private Hands? Hath not Sir John Hotham's high Inſolence ſhewed us what we may expect from an exorbitant legal Power, when he by a Power not warranted by Law, dares venture upon a treaſonable Diſobedience? —— This Repulſe that Sir John Hotham gave the King was indeed the firſt Hoſtile Act, and was thus occaſioned.

(b) In ſome MSS. Notes of the Rector of Ducklington in Oxfordſhire, taken by him upon his own Obſervation, the Matter of the Biſhops is thus repreſented. The Biſhops ſent to the Tower in this Month of January, and a diſorderly Multitude under the Name of Apprentices, abuſed them; and any one that they asked, whether they would have Biſhops, if they ſaid, yea, they would beat and abuſe them. The Biſhop of Coventry and Litchfield, and of Durham under the Black Rod, to whom they paid 5 l. a Day. Dr. Prideaux Elect. of Worceſter, was ſent for up to Parliament, and much abuſed of the Multitudes, becauſe he was (as they thought) againſt Biſhops. and yet now would be a Biſhop. The Two ancient Biſhops Dr. Wright, and Dr. Moreton, were delivered from the Black Rod in March, but not freed till May 1642, and then went under Bail.

In

1642. 18 Car.I. In the late Expedition againſt the Scots, Hull was made the common Magazine, and had great ſtore of Arms and Ammunition ſtill preſerved in it. This Place would be of the greateſt importance to his Majeſty's Service, and therefore the Parliament ſent down Sir John Hotham to take poſſeſſion of it, and to be Governour in their Name, not only without the King's Commiſſion but expreſsly againſt it; for the King had given the Government of that Garriſon to the Earl of Newcaſtle. Upon this Invaſion of the Rights of King and Subject, his Majeſty with about three hundred Horſe on April 23. came to Hull, and having the Gates ſhut againſt him, commanded them to be opened; but Sir John Hotham anſwered, that He was intruſted by the Parliament to ſecure that Town for his Majeſty's Honour and the Kingdom's Uſe, and he intended by God's Help ſo to do. Upon reiterated Demands and Denials, the King was content to proclaim Sir John Hotham a Traitor, and ſo retire; and to ſend a Meſſage to the two Houſes on Apr. 24. To demand Juſtice of his Parliament againſt the ſaid Sir John Hotham, to be exemplarily inflicted upon him according to the Laws. But this only begat Anſwers and Replies to no purpoſe, but to ſhew the Power of the Parliament, and the Weakneſs of the King. Had his Majeſty, with the Forces of the Gentry and Nobility which he could have then commanded, boldly attack'd the Town, and gain'd a Surrendry of it, with a generous Mercy to the Inhabitants and ſmall Garriſon, and an exemplary Juſtice upon Sir John Hotham, it had been the moſt proper time to begin the War, and might have put a ſpeedy End to it.

Caſe of Hull.

The King found it was now time to think of an Army, tho' he had not yet ſo much as a Guard about him. He ſummoned the Gentry of Yorkſhire to appear before him May 12, and complaining of the Parliament's Commiſſioners, who ſtaid there to watch him when he had expreſly commanded them to return. He told them, You ſee my Magazine is going to be taken from me (being my own proper Goods) directly againſt my Will: the Militia, againſt Law and my Conſent, is going to be put in execution: and laſtly, Sir John Hotham*'s Treaſon is countenanced. All this conſidered, none can blame me to apprehend Danger. Therefore I have thought fit (upon theſe real Grounds) to tell you, that I am reſolved to have a Guard (the Parliament having had one all this while upon imaginary Jealouſies) only to ſecure my Perſon; in which I deſire your Concurrence and Aſſiſtance, and that I may be able to protect You, the Laws, and the true Proteſtant Profeſſion, from any Affront or Injury that may be offer'd: Which I mean to maintain my ſelf, without Charge to the Country, intending no longer to keep them on foot, than I ſhall be ſecured from my juſt Apprehenſions by having Satisfaction in the Particulars before mentioned.*

K. forced to raiſe an Army.

But to deprive the King of all manner of Aſſiſtance and Protection, on May 19, the Lords and Commons publiſhed a Declaration, That it was againſt the Laws and Liberties of the Kingdom, for any of the Subjects to be commanded by the King to attend him at his pleaſure: And that whoſoever, upon pretence of his Majeſty's Command, ſhall take Arms, ſhall be eſteem'd Diſturbers of the publick Peace. And farther, to diveſt him of Arms and Ammunition, they order'd May 20. That the Magazines of the ſeveral Counties in England and Wales ſhould be forthwith put into the Power of the Lords Lieutenants of the ſaid Counties reſpectively, being ſuch as the Parliament doth confide in.

2 Houſes declare againſt it.

The King ſoon publiſhed a very rational and elegant Anſwer to the Parliament's Declaration, accounting for all their particular Complaints, and concluding thus, We have been the longer (to our very great Pain) in this Anſwer, that we might give the World Satisfaction, even in the moſt trivial Particulars which have been objected againſt us, and that we may not be again reproached with any more prudent Omiſſions. If we have been compelled to ſharper Language than we affect, let it be conſidered how vile, how inſufferable, our Provocations have been: And except to repel Force be to aſſault, and to give punctual and neceſſary Anſwers to rough and inſolent Demands be to make Invectives, we are confident the World will accuſe us of too much Mildneſs, and all our good Subjects will think we are not well dealt with, and will judge of us, and of their own Happineſs and Security in us by our Actions; which we deſire may no longer proſper, or have a Bleſſing of God upon them and us, than they ſhall be directed to the Glory of God, in the Maintenance of the true Proteſtant Profeſſion, to the Preſervation of the Property and the Liberty of the Subject, in the Obſervation of the Laws, and to the Maintenance of the Rights and Freedom of Parliament, in the Allowance and Protection of all their juſt Privileges.

King's Anſwer.

1642. 18 Car.I. The Parliament, who were now reſolv'd upon the War, made it one Statagem to throw all the Cauſe and Odium on the King. So on May 20, the Commons vote, "1. That it appears, that the King "ſeduc'd by wicked Counſel, intends to make War "againſt the Parliament. 2. That whenſoever the "King maketh War upon the Parliament, it is a "breach of the Truſt repoſed in him by his People, "contrary to his Oath, and tending to the Diſſolution of this Government. 3. That whoſoever "ſhall ſerve or aſſiſt him in ſuch Wars, are Traitors "by the fundamental Laws of this Kingdom." On May 23. the two Houſes ſent a Petition to the King, to disband his Guard, and all other Forces, by his Command aſſembled. And having received his Majeſty's Anſwer, that his raiſing of a Guard was a legal Action, and was with no other Deſign than the Safety of his Perſon; they made one Order to all Sheriffs to ſuppreſs the Raiſing or Meeting of any Soldiers by any Warrant from the King, without the Advice and Conſent of the Lords and Commons in Parliament; and another Order to all Civil Officers to make Stay of all Arms and Ammunition carrying toward York. And having thus diveſted the King of all Aid and Aſſiſtance, on June 2, they ſent a humble Petition and Advice with Nineteen Propoſitions, as the moſt neceſſary and effectual Means of removing the Jealouſies and Differences which had unhappily fallen betwixt him and his People. To which his Majeſty anſwered, That their Profeſſion of Peace joined to ſuch Propoſitions did but appear a Mockery and a Scorn, the Demands being ſuch, as tho' he were unworthy of the Truſt repoſed in him by the Law, and of his Deſcent from ſo many great and famous Anceſtors; and the Contrivers of them could have no Intention of ſettling any firm Accommodation, but to increaſe thoſe Jealouſies, and widen that Diviſion, which had now fallen (not by his fault) between him and both Houſes. (a)

Parliament make the War.

19 Propoſitions.

The Breach was now ſo wide, that ſeveral of the Lords, and ſome few Commons, and even the Lord Keeper Littleton with the Great Seal, found it high time to withdraw from the Parliament, and to attend the King at York. And tho' this Receſs of the King's Friends put his Enemies into an abſolute Poſſeſſion of the two Houſes, and left no Oppoſition to the Torrent that was breaking forth; yet it was a mighty Comfort to the diſtreſſed King to begin to ſee himſelf attended by ſo many of his Nobility and Gentry: And by their Advice, as the laſt Reſort, he proclaimed that he would ſet up his Standard at Nottingham on Monday Aug. 22. which accordingly was done with Sound of Trumpet, and a Proclamation that the Ground and Cauſe of it was to ſuppreſs the Rebellion of the Earl of Eſſex, to which he required the Aid and Aſſiſtance of all his loving Subjects. It appear'd to be a Caſe of utmoſt Neceſſity; therefore we are told, "That melancholly Men obſerved many ill Preſages about that "time: There was not one Regiment of Foot yet "brought thither, ſo that the Train'd-Bands, which "the Sheriff had drawn together, were all the "Strength the King had for his Perſon, and the "Guard of the Standard. There appear'd no Conflux of Men in obedience to the Proclamation: "The Arms and Ammunition were not yet come "from York, and a general Sadneſs cover'd the "whole Town: The Standard was blown down the "ſame Night it had been ſet up, by a very ſtrong "and unruly Wind, and could not be fix'd again "in a Day or two, till the Tempeſt was allay'd. K. ſends a Meſſage for Peace.

Aug. 25, his Majeſty ſent a Meſſage to both Houſes of Parliament by the Earls of Southampton and Dorſet, Sir John Culpeper, and Sir William Uvedale, in order to a Treaty for Peace, to be tranſacted by Commiſſioners on each ſide. To which Meſſage the Lords and Commons anſwer'd, "That they could "receive no Propoſal till his Majeſty ſhould recall "thoſe Proclamations and Declarations, whereby "the Earl of Eſſex, and both Houſes of Parliament, "and their Adherents and Aſſiſtants, are declared "Traitors, or otherwiſe Delinquents; and until "the Standard ſet up in purſuance of the ſaid Proclamations were taken down." To which the King replied, "We never did declare, nor never intended to declare both our Houſes of Parliament "Traitors, or ſet up our Standard againſt them; "and much leſs to put them and this Kingdom out "of our Protection: We utterly profeſs againſt it "before God and the World. And farther, to remove all poſſible Scruples which may hinder the "Treaty ſo much deſired by us, we hereby promiſe "(ſo that a Day be appointed by you for the revoking of your Declarations againſt all Perſons as "Traitors or other ways for aſſiſting us) we ſhall "with all chearfulneſs upon the ſame Day recall our "Proclamations and Declarations, and take down "our Standard." To which the Lords and Commons anſwer, "That they believed there was no "other way to make himſelf happy, and the Kingdom ſafe, but by leaving his Forces, and returning to his Parliament, and receiving their faithful Advice." After ſome other ineffectual Meſſages, his Majeſty publiſhed a Declaration to all his loving Subjects Sept. 27, ſetting forth the good Intention of his late Meſſages to both Houſes of Parliament, and complaining of their Refuſal to treat with him for the Peace of the Kingdom. To which the two Houſes were diſpoſed to give Anſwer at the Head of an Army, to be commanded by the Earl of Eſſex, who Sept. 9, ſet out of London, attended in great State by ſeveral Members of both Houſes, toward his Head-Quarters at St. Albans, and thence to Northampton, where the main Body met him, and made up fifteen thouſand Men (a).

1642. 18 Car. I.

The King had march'd from Nottingham to Derby, Stafford, and Leiceſter, and ſo to Wales; and at Shrewsbury he found his Army encreaſed to a conſiderable Body. In his Paſſage through the ſeveral Counties, upon Reſort of the Gentry and People, the King had his Orders of Military Diſcipline and this Proteſtation read to them.

His Majeſty's Proteſtation.

K.'s Proteſtation for Peace, and Governing by Law.

I Do promiſe in the Preſence of Almighty God, and as I hope for his Bleſſing and Protection, that I will, to the utmoſt of my Power, defend and maintain the true Reformed Proteſtant Religion eſtabliſh'd in the Church of England, and by the Grace of God in the ſame will live and die.

I deſire to govern by the known Laws of the Land, and that the Liberty and Property of the Subject may be by them preſerved with the ſame care as my own juſt Rights. And if it pleaſe God, by a Bleſſing upon this Army raiſed for my neceſſary Defence, to preſerve me from this Rebellion; I do ſolemnly and faithfully promiſe in the ſight of God, to maintain the juſt Privileges and Freedom of Parliament, and to govern by the known Laws of the Land to my utmoſt power, and particularly to obſerve inviolably the Laws conſented to by me this Parliament.

In the mean while, if this Time of War, and the great Neceſſity and Straits I am now driven to, beget any Violation of thoſe, I hope it ſhall be imputed by God and Man to the Authors of this War, and not to me, who have ſo earneſtly laboured for the Preſervation of the Peace of this Kingdom.

When I willingly fail in theſe Particulars, I will expect no Aid or Relief from any Man, or Protection from Heaven: But in this Reſolution I hope for the chearful Aſſiſtance of all Good Men, and am confident of God's Bleſſing.

First Rencounter.

The firſt Rencounter was at Powick-Bridge near Worceſter, Sept. 22. The Earl of Eſſex was on his March with his Army toward Worceſter, intending that Place for a Head-Quarter, wherein lay Sir John Biron with ſome of the King's Forces; and Prince Rupert, with a good Body of Horſe, came to ſecure their Retreat from the Town, before the Parliament Army reach'd to it. When the Prince was advanced within two Miles of Worceſter, he was charg'd by a Party of Horſe commanded by Colonel Sandys, but he and Major Douglas were both ſlain, four Colours taken, and the Defeat ſo entirely given, that the Prince opened a clear Paſſage for the King's Forces to march away from Worceſter, before Eſſex with his Army enter'd.

King enclined to march for London.

The King having greatly augmented his Forces, did ſeem reſolved to leave Eſſex behind him, and to march directly for London. This Apprehenſion put the Parliament into ſo much Terror, that they ſent expreſs Orders to their General the Earl of Eſſex to haſten after the King, and interrupt his March. Which Orders were ſo well executed, that while the King was ſummoning Banbury in Oxfordſhire to Surrender to him, he received Advice on Sunday Morning Octob. 23, that the Army of the Rebels was advanced to Keynton in Warwickſhire; upon which the King gave immediate Order for his whole Army to march with all Expedition to Edge-hill (b) three Miles Edge-hill Fight.

(a) One of the greateſt Troubles to the King was the Ingratitude and Falſehood of ſome Perſons whom he had oblig'd with Honours and Preferments, who now revolted from him. The King himſelf told one Story of this kind to Sir John Bowring, who was ſuing to his Majeſty in the Iſle of Wight for a Pardon, and ſome ſpecial Favour to Sir John Gell, who (he ſaid) exceedingly repented his former Miſcarriages to his Majeſty. Sir John Gell, anſwers his Majeſty, I believe I know him better than You do.——He got his Baronetſhip of Me by Diſſembling, and pretending in like manner that he was ſorry, that ever he had been againſt Me in the Ship-Money; but for his Repentance, if I would be pleaſed to harbour a better Opinion of him, and grant him ſome Mark of Favour and Honour, he would bring into my Aſſiſtance a Troop or Regiment of Horſe, and he would prevail with ſome of the Gentlemen of the County of Derby where he lived, to do as much. Whereupon, in hopes he would do this good Service to me, I made him a Baronet. Immediately after, within a Week, he went to Northampton unto my Lord of Eſſex, who before thought him not worthy to be Captain of a Foot Company, ſhews Eſſex his Warrant that had made him a Baronet, and upon that Eſſex gave him a Commiſſion to be a Colonel, and to raiſe a Regiment. And thus he continued againſt Me ſhrewdly all this War, and kept Derby Garriſon'd againſt Me all the time of the War.——Collection of Private Papers. 1703 8*vo.*

1642. 18 Car. I. from Keynton: When they came about Noon to the Top of the Hill, they could ſee the other Army drawing into Battalia in Keynton-Field, and ſo went down the Hill to receive them. The Ordnance play'd ſome time, beginning from the Parliament Army: The Charge began between the two Wings of Horſe; that of the King's broke, and purſued that of the Parliament with great execution for three Miles together. But when the Bodies of Foot engaged; a Reſerve of the Parliament Horſe charg'd the Flank of the King's Foot; who wanting the Support of the Horſe (who had too far purſued the Rebels, and thought the Day their own) was in great Danger, till the Horſe rallied and reliev'd them: and the Night coming on, both Armies retreated, and the next Day look'd one upon another, till the Earl of Eſſex firſt withdrew to Warwick, and then the King return'd to Banbury, and forced that Garriſon to Surrender to him. Two different Relations of this Battle were publiſh'd, one by his Majeſty's Command at Oxford, the other by an Order of the Commons at London, both Sides aſſuming the Honour of a Victory, when it could not be ſo call'd on either Side; yet the King was much better intitled to the Credit of it, by killing the greater Numbers, and taking the greater Spoil, and ſeeing the Enemy break up and retire, while he immediately took a Garriſon which had juſt before refuſed to yield to him.

Death and Character of E. of Lindſey.

Yet the King loſt the General of his Army, the Earl of Lindſey, of whom the Lord Clarendon gives this good Character, "He was a Man of a very noble Extraction, and inherited a great Fortune from his "Anceſtors; which tho' he did not manage with ſo "great care as if he deſired much to improve, yet "he left it in a very fair Condition to his Family, "which more intended the increaſe of it. He was "a Man of great Honour, and ſpent his Youth and "vigour of his Age in Military Actions and Commands abroad; and albeit he indulg'd himſelf "great Liberties of Life, yet he ſtill preſerved a very "good Reputation with all Men, and a very great "Intereſt in his Country, as appeared by the Supplies he and his Son brought to the King's Army; "the ſeveral Companies of his own Regiment of "Foot being commanded by the principal Knights "and Gentlemen of Lincolnſhire, who engaged themſelves in the Service principally out of their perſonal Affection to him. He was of a very generous Nature, and punctual in what he undertook, "and in exacting what was due to him; which made "him bear that reſtriction ſo heavily which was put "upon him by the Commiſſion granted to Prince "Rupert, and by the King's preferring the Prince's "Opinion in all Matters relating to the War before "his. Nor did he conceal his Reſentment; the "Day before the Battle he ſaid to ſome Friends, "with whom he had uſed freedom, That he did not "look upon himſelf as General, and therefore he was "reſolved, when the Day of Battle ſhould come, that "he would be in the Head of his Regiment as a private "Colonel, where he would die. He was carried out of "the Field to the next Village, and if he could "then have procured Surgeons, it was thought his "Wound would not have proved Mortal. And as "ſoon as the other Army was compoſed by the "coming on of the Night, the Earl of Eſſex about "Midnight ſent Sir William Balfour, and ſome other "Officers to ſee him, and to offer him all Offices, "and meant himſelf to have viſited him. They "found him upon a little Straw in a poor Houſe, "where they had laid him in his Blood, which had "run from him in great abundance, no Surgeon having been yet with him, only he had great vivacity in his Looks; and told them, he was ſorry 1642. 18 Car. I.
"to ſee ſo many Gentlemen, ſome whereof were his "old Friends, engaged in ſo foul a Rebellion; and "principally directed his Diſcourſe to Sir William "Balfour, whom he put in mind of the great Obligations he had to the King; how much his Majeſty had diſoblig'd the whole Engliſh Nation by putting him into the Command of the Tower; and "that it was the moſt odious Ingratitude in him to "make him that return. K.'s Declaration of Thankſgiving for his Safety.

His Majeſty publiſh'd a Declaration, and commanded it to be read in all Churches and Chapels, To attribute the Preſervation of himſelf and his Children in the late Bloody Battle with the Rebels, to the Mercy and Goodneſs of Almighty God. —— In a Word, as whoever knows what danger our Perſon was in on Sunday Octob. 23. can never believe that the Army which gave us Battle, was raiſed for our Defence and Preſervation; ſo when they conſider how much the Liberty of the Subject is invaded by their Rapine and Impriſoning; and that four parts at leaſt of five of the Members of both Houſes, are by violence driven from being preſent in that Council; that the Book of Common-Prayer is rejected, and no countenance given but to Anabaptiſts and Browniſts, they will eaſily find the Pretences of Care of the Proteſtant Religion, the Liberty of the Subject, and of the Privilege of Parliament to be as vain and pretended as thoſe which refer to the Safety of our Perſon, and the Preſervation of our Poſterity. (a)

King advances toward London.

The King march'd from Banbury to Oxford(b), thence to Reading, and ſo in nearer approaches toward London. At Colebrook on Nov. 11, he received a Petition of the two Houſes for a Treaty, toward which he had granted a ſafe Conduct to the Earls of Northumberland and Pembroke, to Viſcount Wenman, Mr. Pierpoint and Sir John Hippeſley. The E. of Eſſex had been called to London to guard the Parliam. and City, and to that purpoſe had quarter'd his Army in the adjacent Towns, ſome at Windſor, ſome at Kingſton, at Acton, at Brainford, &c. The King being informed that the Earl of Eſſex was coming out of London with a Train of Ordnance and great Forces, reſolved in a Council of War to beat up the Quarters of Colonel Hollis's Regiment in Brainford, and accordingly Novemb. 12. the King marching ſlowly ſurprized Brainford, and beat out the Forces quarter'd in it; and had he marched reſolutely on to London, 'tis probable the Conſternation of Eſſex and the two Houſes, had given him advantage to take Poſſeſſion of the City. But the King immediately quitted Brainford and retreated toward Reading, and ſo back to Oxford, leaving the Parliament at liberty to recruit and augment their Army, and to throw the Action at Brainford as a breach of Honour upon the King, while there was a Treaty in agitation.

Parliament inſult the King.

Novemb. 24, the two Houſes preſented another Petition to the King at Oxford; to return to his Parliament with his Royal not Martial Attendance, to the end that Religion, Laws and Liberties might be ſettled and ſecur'd by their Advice. The King took this as a Scorn and Inſult upon him, as it really was: And from this time the mutual Meſſages were more rare and more ſharp. (a)

Loyalty of the Earl of Newcaſtle.

About the end of November the Earl of Newcaſtle had aſſociated the Counties of Northumberland, Cumberland, Weſtmoreland, the Biſhoprick of Durham and Newcaſtle for the Defence and Aſſiſtance of the King, and was marching at the Head of a conſiderable Army toward York, and at Piercebrig beat a Party of the L. Fairfax's Horſe commanded by Capt. Hotham, and enter'd York, and had his Commiſſion enlarg'd to govern that and other Counties. Upon which by a Declaration of the two Houſes, the Earl of Eſſex ſent a Commiſſion to the Lord Fairfax to command in chief for the Parliament in the Northern Parts.

Decemb. 1. Sir William Waller with a Party of Horſe took Farnham Caſtle, from the Poſſeſſion of Mr. Denham High-Sheriff, and other Commiſſioners of Array for the King. And Decemb. 5. the Lord Digby with ſome Troops of Horſe took Marlborough, which had been fortified, and was defended by the Parliament Forces. Decemb. 13. Sir William Waller recovered Wincheſter for the Parliament, and December 18, Colonel Ruthin Commander of the Garriſon of Plymouth for the Parliament, ſurpriz'd the High-Sheriff of Devonſhire, and other Commiſſioners of Array, and ſent them Priſoners to London. And in moſt Parts of England, Skirmiſhes, Aſſaults and Sallies were ſo frequent and ſo fierce, that all People dreaded the ſad Effects of a Civil War.

City of London for Peace.

Under this Diſpoſition the Mayor, Aldermen, and Commons of the City of London, by the hands of ſome of the chief Citizens, preſented a Petition to the King at Oxford, "To wipe off all Suſpicion of "their Diſloyalty, and to beſeech his Majeſty to re- "turn to his Parliament, that a Peace may be ob- "tained." The King gave Anſwer, "That he did "not entertain any miſapprehenſion of the Love "and Loyalty of the City of London, and that no "good Citizen could more deſire the Eſtabliſhment "of the particular Peace and Proſperity of that Place "by his Majeſty's Acceſs thither than he himſelf "doth. But he could have no hope of Safety there "whilſt Aderman Pennington their pretended Lord "Mayor, Ven, Foulke and Mainwaring did commit "ſuch Outrages in oppreſſing, robbing, and impri- "ſoning the beſt of his Majeſty's loving Subjects.— "He deſires the good Citizens to gather up Cou- "rage and Reſolution to join with his Majeſty in "Defence of that Religion, Law and Liberty, which "hitherto hath, and only can make themſelves, his "Majeſty, and his Kingdom happy." This Anſwer was read at a Common-Hall on Friday Jan. 13. but to prevent the Influence of it, a Committee of the Lords and Commons were order'd to be preſent at Guild-hall; of whom the Earl of Mancheſter and Mr. Pym made ſuch artificial Speeches (b), as ſecured the governing part of the City entirely to the Parliament. His Majeſty ſent another Letter and Declaration to the Sheriffs and City of London Jan. 17. but the Parliament forbid the Reading of it, and took effectual Care to prevent all farther Correſpondence between the King and the City.

Cirenceſter taken.

Feb. 2. the Town of Cirenceſter, a ſtrong Garriſon for the Parliament, was taken by Prince Rupert, and the Earl of Stamford's Regiment put to the Sword, and great Numbers of Priſoners brought to Oxford in an ignominious manner: which was made uſe of to improve the Scandal of Pride and Cruelty on the King's ſide.

Death of Ld. Brook.

March 1. Lichfield being held for the King by the Lord Cheſterfield, was aſſaulted by the Lord Brook, who gain'd the Town, but in Storming the Cloſe and Church loſt his Life by a Bullet in the Left Eye. Many look'd upon it as Providential, that this profeſs'd Enemy to Cathedrals, Clergy, and Liturgy, ſhould be kill'd on the Day of St. Chad, Patron of the Cathedral ſtorm'd by him, by the hand of a Clergyman's Son, with a ſudden Death, which Expreſſion in the Litany he had vehemently condemn'd. His Character is thus given by the Lord Clarendon. "There were many Diſcourſes "and Obſervations upon his Death, that it ſhould "be upon St. Chad's Day (being the ſecond Day "of March:) And it was reported, That in his "Prayer that very Morning (for he uſed to pray "publickly tho' his Chaplain were in the Preſence) "he wiſh'd, That if the Cauſe he was in were not "right and juſt, he might be preſently cut off. They "who were acquainted with him believ'd him to be "well-natur'd and juſt, and rather ſeduced and "corrupted in his Underſtanding, than perverſe "and malicious. Whether his Paſſions or Conſci- "ence ſway'd him, he was undoubtedly one of "thoſe who could have been with moſt difficulty "reconciled to the Government of Church or State: "And therefore his Death was look'd upon as no ill "Omen to Peace, and was exceedingly lamented "by his Party, which had ſcarce a more abſolute "Confidence in any Man than in him." Earl of Northampton ſlain.

March 19, there was a ſharp Fight at Salt Heath near Stafford, between the King's Forces commanded by the Earl of Northampton and Colonel Haſtings, and the Parliament's under Conduct of Sir John Gell, and Sir William Brereton. The King's Forces, at firſt victorious, were in effect defeated by the ſingle Loſs of their General the valiant Earl of Northampton; of whom the Earl of Clarendon gives this Account. "In the ſecond Charge the Earl of Northampton, "being engaged on the Execution, very near or a- "mong their Foot, had his Horſe killed under him; "ſo that his own Horſe (according to their unhap- "py practice) with too much Fury purſuing the "Chace, he was left encompaſſed by his Enemies. "What his Behaviour was afterwards, and their "Carriage towards him, can be known only by the "Teſtimony of the Rebels; who confeſs'd, that af- "ter he was on his Feet, he kill'd with his own "Hand the Colonel of Foot who made firſt Haſte "to him; and that after his Head-piece was ſtrick- "en off with the Butt-end of a Musket, they offer'd "him Quarter, which they ſay he refuſed, anſwer- "ing, That he ſcorn'd to take Quarter from ſuch baſe "Rogues and Rebels as they were. After which, he "was ſlain by a Blow with a Halbert on the hinder Witneſs the many Speeches in Parliament they made, as of the Lord Faulkland, Sir Benjamin Rudyer, Digby, and others, with whom good and honeſt Biſhops join'd. That the Lords and Commons in 1642, and 43, were all in perfect Conformity to the Church of England; ſo was the Army too that they raiſed, the General, the main Body of the Army. The Officers and Captains both by Land and Sea, were all conformable to the Church of England, and none of them Puritans, Presbyterians, Independents, Anabaptiſts, Sectaries or Conventiclers. That likewiſe the Aſſembly of Divines in Weſtminſter choſen by the Parliament were all Conformiſts, and none of them ſo much as Silenc'd Miniſters, except 8 or 9, and 4 Scots. That the Change or Subverſion of Government, the taking away the Biſhops, the Lords Houſe, and excluding the greateſt Part of the Houſe of Commons, and laſt of all the taking away the King, and all the Confuſions and Diſorders that happen'd thereupon did ariſe from a third Party, viz. from the Army, that was neither for the King, nor for the Parliament, neither for Conformiſts nor for Nonconformiſts, but was an Enemy to them all.

The Queen had been ſome time in Holland ſolliciting Aid and providing Supplies for the King. But however, the Queen, with great Diligence and Importunity, had procured ſeveral Ships of Arms and Ammunition, and on Feb. 22. landed at Burlington in the Eaſt-Riding of Yorkſhire; and being received there by the Earl of Newcaſtle's Army, was conducted to York, to the great Improvement of his Majeſty's Intereſt in thoſe Parts.

The Action at Brainford had interrupted a Treaty that was then under Agitation, and that was now renew'd by the two Houſes, at whoſe Deſire the King granted a ſafe Conduct to their Commiſſioners to come to Oxford, and deliver to him Febr. 1. the humble Deſires and Propoſitions of the Lords and Commons in Parliament aſſembled. To which his Majeſty gave Anſwer Febr. 3. “That if “he had not given up all the Faculties of his Soul “to an earneſt Endeavour of a Peace and Reconci-“liation with his People, or if he would ſuffer him-“ſelf by any Provocation to be drawn to a Sharp-“neſs of Language at a time when there ſeems “ſomewhat like an Overture of Accommodation, “he could not but reſent the heavy Charges upon “him, &c. To which the Parliament again made Additions and Alterations, and the King farther Exceptions. So that all that could be done this Year, was for the Parliament to grant Leave for their Commiſſioners to treat, tho' the Ceſſation was not agreed upon. King's Anſwer.

No Ceſſation.

As to Matters of Religion, there was no longer the Face of a Church; for, the Biſhops had not only loſt their Votes in the Houſe of Lords, but all their ordinary Juriſdiction in their reſpective Dioceſſes, and lay impriſon'd in the Tower upon a moſt illegal Commitment by the Commons, till May 5. the Peers, without conſulting the other Houſe, releas'd them upon Bail: But even their Liberty gave them no Property, nor Safety; none of them could find Protection in their own Palaces, but were forced to fly from Plunder and Seizure; and the Biſhop of Ely, who flatter'd himſelf with a ſafe Retirement in his Houſe at Downham, was apprehended by a Party of Soldiers, and brought back again to the Tower, where he continued till the End of the Year 1659, without any Charge or Accuſation form'd againſt him.

No Face of an eſtabliſh'd Church.

Biſhops Flight or Impriſonment.

Theſe ſad Confuſions in the Church, and Obſtruction of all the publick Offices and Service, open'd the Eyes of many good Chriſtians, and put them upon Petitions and Remonſtrances againſt the growing Hypocriſie and Profaneneſs. Many of theſe pious Addreſſes were preſented to the King; two from the County of Cheſter, two from Cornwal, from both Univerſities, from the Dioceſs of Exeter, from the ſix Counties of North-Wales, from the Counties of Nottingham, Huntingdon, Somerſet, Rutland, Stafford, Lancaſter, Oxford, and Hereford (a). All which were to the ſame effect with one from Kent, wherein the Gentry, Clergy, and Freeholders, ſet forth to the two Houſes themſelves, “That notwithſtanding “this Kingdom hath, by the ſingular Providence of “Almighty God, for many Years laſt paſt happily “flouriſhed above all other Nations in the Chriſtian “World, under the Religion and Government by “Law eſtabliſhed; yet it hath been of late moſt “miſerably diſtracted, through the ſiniſter Practi-“ces of ſome private Perſons ill-affected to them “both: By whoſe means the preſent Government is “diſgraced and traduced, the Houſes of God are “profaned and in part defaced, the Miniſters of “Chriſt are contemned and deſpiſed, the Ornaments “and many Utenſils of the Church are abuſed, the “Liturgy and Book of Common-Prayer are depra-“ved and neglected, that abſolute Model of Pray-“er (the Lord's Prayer) vilified, the Sacraments “of the Goſpel in ſome Places unduly adminiſtred, “in other Places omitted, ſolemn Days of Faſting “obſerved and appointed by private Perſons, Mar-“riages illegally ſolemnized, Burials uncharitably “performed, and the very Fundamentals of Reli-“gion ſubverted by the Publication of a new Creed, “and teaching the Abrogation of the Moral Law; “for which purpoſe many offenſive Sermons are “daily preached, and many impious Pamphlets “printed. Many Petitions.

Setting forth the Iniquity of the Times.

But the two Houſes well knowing that theſe Petitions were but loud Reflexions upon them and their Proceedings, not only rejected them, and ſhew'd their Diſpleaſure to all that preſum'd to make them, but they even complain'd to his Majeſty for his receiving of them, and pretended 'em to be mutinous and malignant; and this in their ſolemn Declaration or Remonſtrance May 19. To which the King, with a rational Zeal, thus anſwer'd. “That Declarati-“on tells you of a preſent deſperate and malicious “Plot of the Malignant Party, now acting under “the plauſible Notions of ſtirring Men up to a care “of preſerving the King's Prerogative, maintaining Anſwer'd by the King.

(a) See, A Collection of ſundry Petitions preſented to the King; As alſo to the two Houſes by the Gentry, Miniſtry, and Freeholders of ſeveral Counties in behalf of Epiſcopacy, the Liturgy, and Church Government. Ordered by the King to be Publiſhed 20 May, 1642. 4*to*.

“the Diſcipline of the Church, upholding and continuing the Reverence and Solemnity of God's Service, and encouraging Learning; and that upon theſe Grounds divers mutinous Petitions have been framed in London, Kent, and other Places. Upon what Grounds would theſe Men have Petitions framed? Have ſo many Petitions (even againſt the Form and Conſtitution of the Kingdom, and the Laws eſtabliſhed) been joyfully received and accepted, and ſhall Petitions framed upon theſe Grounds be called Mutinous? Hath a multitude of mean, unknown, inconſiderable, contemptible Perſons, about the City and Suburbs of London, had Liberty to petition againſt the Government of the Church, againſt the Book of Common Prayer, againſt the Freedom and Privilege of Parliament, and been thank'd for it; and ſhall it be called Mutiny in the graveſt and beſt Citizens of London, in the Gentry and Commonalty of Kent, to frame Petitions upon theſe Grounds, and to deſire to be governed by the known Laws of the Land, not by Orders or Votes of either or both Houſes? Can this be thought the Wiſdom and Juſtice of both Houſes of Parliament? Is it not evidently the Work of a Faction, within or without both Houſes, who deceive the Truſt repoſed in them, and have now told us what Mutiny is? To ſtir up Men to a Care of preſerving our Prerogative, maintaining the Diſcipline of the Church, upholding and continuing the Reverence and Solemnity of God's Service, encouraging of Learning, is Mutiny. Let Heaven and Earth, God and Man, judge between us and theſe Men.”

This is certain, that not only the diſaffected Divines and the moderate Presbyterians went in by Intereſt and Inclination to the Parliament; but all the moſt violent Schiſmaticks and Enthuſiaſts of every wild Denomination, ran into the ſame Cauſe. And it muſt be to tempt over and ſecure theſe Men, that the two Houſes did now apparently threaten the whole Conſtitution of the Church. Their firſt Clamours were only againſt Popery and Innovation; but to ſilence all Pretences of this kind, the King offered an abſolute Satisfaction in his Anſwer to their Nineteen Propoſitions delivered June 2.

King's Anſwer to Matters of Religion.

“For the ſixth Demand, concerning the Laws in Force againſt Jeſuits, Prieſts, and Popiſh Recuſants, We have by many of our Meſſages to you, by our voluntary Promiſe to you ſo ſolemnly made never to pardon any Popiſh Prieſt, by our ſtrict Proclamations (a) lately publiſh'd in this Point, and by the publick Examples which we have made in that caſe ſince our Reſidence in York, and before at London, ſufficiently expreſſed our Zeal herein. Why do ye then ask that in which our own Inclination hath prevented you? And if you can yet find any more effectual Courſe to diſable them from diſturbing the State, or eluding the Law by Truſts or otherwiſe, we ſhall willingly give our Conſent to it.

“For the ſeventh Demand, concerning the Votes of the Popiſh Lords, we underſtand that they in Diſcretion have withdrawn themſelves from the Service of the Houſe of Peers, and though we do not conceive that ſuch a poſitive Law againſt the Votes of any whoſe Blood gives them that Right, is ſo proper in regard of the Privilege of Parliament; yet we are content, that ſo long as they ſhall not be conformable to the Doctrine and Diſcipline of the Church of England, they ſhall not be admitted to ſit in the Houſe of Peers, but only to give their Proxies to ſuch Proteſtant Lords as they ſhall chuſe, who are to diſpoſe of them as they themſelves ſhall think fit, without any Reference at all to the Giver.

“As to the Deſires for a Bill for the Education of Papiſts by Proteſtants in Proteſtant Profeſſion, many about us can witneſs with us, that we have often delivered our Opinion, that ſuch a Courſe (with God's Bleſſing upon it) would be the moſt effectual for the rooting Popery out of this Kingdom. We ſhall therefore thank you for it, and encourage you in it, and when it comes unto us, do our Duty: And we heartily wiſh for the publick Good, that the time you have ſpent in making Ordinances without us, had been employed in preparing this and other good Bills for us.

“For the Eighth, touching the Reformation to be made of the Church-Government and Liturgy; We hoped that what we had formerly declared concerning the ſame, had been ſo ſufficiently underſtood by you and all good Subjects, that we ſhould not need to have expreſſed Our ſelf farther in it. We told you in our Anſwer to your Petition preſented to us the firſt of December, That for any illegal Innovations which may have crept in, we ſhould willingly concur in the Removal of them; That if our Parliament ſhould adviſe us to call a National Synod which may duly examine ſuch Ceremonies as give juſt Cauſe of Offence to any, we ſhould take it into Conſideration, and apply Our ſelf to give due Satisfaction therein; That we were perſuaded in our Conſcience, that no Church could be found upon the Earth, that profeſſeth the true Religion with more Purity of Doctrine than the Church of England doth, nor where the Government and Diſcipline are jointly more beautified and free from Superſtition, than as they are here eſtabliſhed by Law; which by the Grace of God, we will conſtantly maintain (while we live) in their Purity and Glory, not only againſt all Innovations of Popery, but alſo from the Irreverence of thoſe many Schiſmaticks and Separatiſts wherewith of late this Kingdom and our City of London abounds, to the great Diſhonour and Hazard both of Church and State; for the Suppreſſion of whom we required your timely and active Aſſiſtance. We told you in our firſt Declaration, printed by the Advice of our Privy Council, that for Differences amongſt Our ſelves for Matters indifferent in their own Nature concerning Religion, we ſhould in Tenderneſs to any number of our loving Subjects, very willingly comply with the Advice of our Parliament, that ſome Law might be made for the Exemption of tender Conſciences from Puniſhment or Perſecution for ſuch Ceremonies, and in ſuch Caſes which by the Judgment of moſt Men are held to be Matters indifferent, and of ſome to be abſolutely unlawful: Provided that this Eaſe ſhould be attempted and purſued with that Modeſty, Temper, and Submiſſion, that in the mean time the Peace and Quiet of the Kingdom be not diſturbed, the Decency and Comelineſs of God's Service diſcountenanced, nor the pious, ſober, devout Actions of thoſe Reverend Prelates who were the firſt Labourers in the bleſſed Reformation, or of that time, be ſcandalized and defamed. And we heartily wiſh, that others whom it concerned had been as ready as their Duty bound them, tho' they had not received it from us, to have purſued this Caution; as we were and ſtill are willing and ready to make good every Particular of that Promiſe. Nor did we only appear willing to join in ſo good a Work when it ſhould be brought us, but preſs'd and urg'd you to it by our Meſſage of the 14th of Febr. in theſe Words: And becauſe his Majeſty obſerves great " Advancement of Piety and Learning."

King refutes the Slanders of Popery.

And farther (if poſſible) to take away all the Jealouſies of Popery, the King, by Proclamation at York Aug. 10. declared his expreſs Command, that no Popiſh Recuſant, nor any other, who ſhould refuſe to take the two Oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy, ſhould be liſted or retained in his Service (a). And in his Declaration of October 22. his Majeſty utterly diſowns the Slanders caſt upon him of encouraging Popery, and ſays, For that continued diſhoneſt Accuſation of our Inclination to the Papiſts, which the Authors of it in their own Conſciences (which will one day be dreadful to them) know to be moſt unjuſt and groundleſs; We can ſay no more, and We can do no more to the Satisfaction of the World.

Parliament aſſociates with their Brethren of Scotland.

But the two Houſes deſired now to be remembred by their Brethren in Scotland; and in their Declaration of October 22. they told his Majeſty, We expect our Brethren of Scotland, according to the Act of Pacification, whereby the two Kingdoms are mutually bound to ſuppreſs all Debates and Differences to the Diſturbance of the publick Peace, that they will help and aſſiſt us in Defence of the Cauſe, which, if the Popiſh Party prevail, muſt either involve them in that Alteration of Religion which will be made here, or engage them in a War againſt this Kingdom to defend their own Religion and Liberty. They had good Grounds to threaten his Majeſty with a new Storm from Scotland: For they had entred a Correſpondence, and received Aſſurance of Aid. There had been A Declaration of the Lords and Commons aſſembled in Parliament ſent to the General Aſſembly of the Church of Scotland; and An Anſwer of the General Aſſembly of the Kirk of Scotland to the Declaration ſent by the Parliament of England the 25th of Auguſt 1642. And farther, A Letter ſent by ſome Brethren of the Miniſters of the Church of England to the General Aſſembly of the Church of Scotland, dated at London the 22d of July. And An Anſwer of the General Aſſembly to the Letter ſent by the Miniſters of England, dated the 5th of Auguſt 1642. And tho' his Majeſty, to hinder the Effects of this Confederacy, ſent his Letter to the General Aſſembly of the Church of Scotland, given at Leiceſter the 23d of July; and had in Return, The hearty Thankſgiving and humble Petition of the General Aſſembly met at St. Andrews, to the King's moſt excellent Majeſty, the 27th of July 1642. yet the Vein of theſe Papers did ſufficiently abode, that the Kirk of Scotland would ſhew forth all her Power to help to deſtroy Epiſcopacy, Liturgy, and all the eſtabliſh'd Order in England. 1642. 18 Car. I.

Presbyterian Divines aſſiſt the Parliam.

And indeed ſome of the Presbyterian Divines had by this time got a powerful Influence over the two Houſes, and began to pen for them their Publick Ordinances of Religion, in ſuch a canting Stile, and with ſuch a broad Hypocriſie, that the Members of Senſe and Sobriety could not but bluſh at Reading their own Acts (b). For Example, on February the 15th there was an Ordinance of the Lords and Commons exhorting to the Duty of Repentance as the only Remedy to prevent Calamities. And it began thus,

And draw up their publick Inſtruments.

" That flouriſhing Kingdoms have been ruin'd by " Sacred Story doth plainly tell us: And how near

" Strokes of God yet ſeven times more, it is our " Duty to accept the Puniſhment of our Iniquity,
" and to ſay, Righteous art thou, O Lord, and juſt
" are thy Judgments! Yet becauſe the Lord who is
" juſt is alſo merciful, and in his infinite Mercy
" hath left the excellent and ſucceſsful Remedy of " Repentance to Nations brought near to the Gates

" only and unfailing Remedy of Repentance; free-

" with deepeſt Humiliation, godly Sorrow, and
" Deteſtation, &c."

Then they come to the preſcribing a Confeſſion of National Sins; and that the Devotion might be a Libel upon the King and the Church, they chuſe out for National Sins, Idolatry and Bloodſhed. " That

And ſoon after a Meſſage from Nottingham to the two Houſes, Aug. 25. 1642. aſſuring them, that Nothing ſhall be wanting on his Part, that may advance the true Proteſtant Religion, oppoſe Popery and Superſtition, and ſecure the Law of the Land. And again in his Majeſty's Reply to the Anſwer of the two Houſes, Sept. 17th 1642. God ſo deal with us and our Poſterity, as we deſire the Preſervation and Advancement of the true Proteſtant Religion.

(b) Upon theſe unhappy Feuds, Letters from both Sides were ſent to the Proteſtant Divines, to obtain their Judgment in them; tho' moſt of them were ſo wiſe as not to meddle at firſt, unleſs in declaring their Opinion for the Lawfulneſs of continuing in Conformity to the Church of England. Dr. Plume in his Life of Biſhop Hacket writes thus. Letters were written by them (the King's Friends) to many Foreign Divines, to try their Affection in that Day of Need. Blondel, Voſſius, Hornbeck, and Salmaſius were ſent to in vain, tho' afterwards that great Scholar came off from his rigour, and made ample amends for his Error. Voſſius contained himſelf for fear of the Parliament, and of loſing his Prebend of Canterbury in their Poſſeſſion. Deodat wrote firm for Epiſcopal Government from Geneva, and accuſed the Presbyterians of Schiſm. Hugo Grotius ſaid, nothing happen'd, but what the wiſe King James had foretold, and he now beheld with great Horrors. Epiſcopius much pitied the Sufferings of the King's Divines, and particularly of Dr. Ward, whom he accounted the moſt learned Member of the Synod of Dort. Monſieur Amyrald declared himſelf a Friend to Epiſcopacy in a ſelect Tract ſent hither, which one of that Party borrowed, and would never reſtore, ſo it could not be printed.

The Church to be utterly diſſolv'd.

When once the two Houſes could deſcend to have ſuch fulſome Penitential Forms put upon them, for them to adopt and to obtrude in their Name upon the Nation; it was a ſure ſign, that All that was ſound and decent in Faith and Worſhip was now to be commanded into Enthuſiaſm and endleſs Schiſm. And to this purpoſe, their Votes, and Orders, and Bills, by degrees came up to an utter Diſſolution of the Church. To recite the Particulars is the leſs needful, becauſe they are ſumm'd up into one of their Humble Deſires and Propoſitions tender'd to his Majeſty Febr. 1. when the Commiſſioners carried five Bills along with them, and preſs'd the Paſſing of them in this 4th Propoſition.

"IV. That your Majeſty will be pleaſed to give your Royal Aſſent unto the Bill for taking away Superſtitious Innovations; to the Bill for the utter aboliſhing and taking away of all Archbiſhops, Biſhops, their Chancellors and Commiſſaries, Deans, Sub-deans, Deans and Chapters, Arch-deacons, Canons, and Prebendaries, and all Chantors, Chancellors, Treaſurers, Sub-Treaſurers, Succentors, and Sacriſts, and all Vicars Choral and Choiriſters, old Vicars and new Vicars of any Cathedral or Collegiate Church, and all other their Under-officers, out of the Church of England; to the Bill againſt Scandalous Miniſters; to the Bill againſt Pluralities; and to the Bill for Conſultation to be had with Godly, Religious, and Learned Divines; that your Majeſty will be pleaſed to promiſe to paſs ſuch other good Bills for ſettling of Church-Government, as upon Conſultation with the Aſſembly of the ſaid Divines ſhall be reſolved on by both Houſes of Parliament, and by them be preſented to your Majeſty."

Sad Confuſions.

And though they could not hope for the legal paſſing of theſe Bills, yet they had already come to the arbitrary Execution of them: For on October 15, it was Reſolved upon the Queſtion, "That the Fines, Rents, and Profits of Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Deans and Chapters, and of ſuch notorious Delinquents who have taken up Arms againſt the Parliament, or have been active in the Commiſſion of Array, ſhall be ſequeſtred for the Uſe and Service of the Commonwealth." The Organs, and painted Glaſs, and very Monuments of the Dead, were defaced; Tithes were denied to them who read the Common-Prayer; and theſe old regular Divines were plunder'd, ſequeſtred, and driven away, to make room for all the angry Men, who had been by Epiſcopal Authority ſuſpended or deprived; and for all the new little Creatures that began now to cover the Land.

Sufferings of Abp. Laud.

The good Archbiſhop lay ſtill in the Tower, and his Sufferings there may be beſt known from his own Words. "Having broke the Sinew of my right Leg, it was two Months before I could go out of my Chamber. On Monday May 15, I made ſhift, between my Man and my Staff, to go to Church: There one Mr. Joſlin preached, with Vehemency becoming Bedlam, with Treaſon ſufficient to hang him in any other State, and with ſuch particular Abuſe to me, that Women and Boys ſtood up in the Church, to ſee how I could bear it. I humbly thank God for my Patience,—— Nov. 3. ſeventy eight Pounds of my Rents taken from my Comptroller by Mr. Holland and Mr. Aſhurſt, which they ſaid was for Maintenance of the King's Children.—— Nov. 9. Wedneſday-morning five of the Clock, Captain Brown and his Company entered my Houſe at Lambeth, to keep it for publick Service. The Lords, upon my Petition to them, denyed they knew of any ſuch Order, and ſo did the Committee; yet ſuch an Order there was, and divers Lords Hands to it: but upon my Petition they made an Order, That my Books ſhould be ſecured, and my Goods. ——Nov. 24. the Soldiers at Lambeth-Houſe brake open the Chapel-door, and offer'd Violence to the Organ, &c.——Decemb. 21. I Petitioned for my Chaplain Mr. William Blackſtone; refuſed, yet no Exception taken. That Day in the Morning, my young Dun Horſes were taken away by Warrant under the Hands of Sir John Evelyn, Mr. Pym, and Mr. Martin.——Decemb. 23. Dr. Layton came with a Warrant from the Houſe of Commons for the Keys of my Houſe to be delivered to him, and more Priſoners to be brought thither.——Jan. 5. a final Order from both Houſes for ſettling of Lambeth Priſon. All my Wood and Coals ſpent and to be ſpent there, not reſerving in the Order that I ſhould have any for my own Uſe; nor would that Motion be hearken'd to.——Mar. 24. Friday, one Mr. Ford told me (he is a Suffolk Man) that there was a Plot to ſend me and Biſhop Wren as Delinquents to New England within fourteen Days."

Account of Foreign Proteſtants.

The Foreign Proteſtants in England had been too much incenſed by the ſevere Proceedings of Abp. Laud, and ſome other Prelates, againſt them. The Account may be beſt taken from the late Hiſtory of the Rebellion. "When the Reformation of Religion firſt began in England in the time of K. Ed. VI. very many out of Germany and France left their Countries, where the Reformation was ſeverely proſecuted, and tranſplanted themſelves, their Families, and Eſtates, into England, where they were received very hoſpitably: And that King, with great Piety and Policy, by ſeveral Acts of State granted them many Indempnities, and the free Uſe of Churches in London for the exerciſe of their Religion; whereby the Number of them encreaſed, and the Benefit to the Kingdom by ſuch an Acceſs of Trade and Improvement of Manufactures, was very conſiderable. Which Q. Elizabeth finding, and well knowing that other notable Uſes of them might be made, enlarged their Privileges by new Conceſſions; drawing, by all means, great Numbers over, and ſuffering them to erect Churches, and to enjoy the Exerciſe of their Religion after their own Manner, and according to their own Ceremonies, in all Places where, for the Conveniency of their Trade, they choſe to reſide. And ſo they had Churches in Norwich, Canterbury, and other Places of the Kingdom, as well as in London; whereby the Wealth of thoſe Places marvellouſly encreaſed. And beſides the Benefit from thence, the Queen made uſe of them in her great Tranſactions of State in France and the Low-Countries; and by the Mediation and Interpoſition of thoſe People, kept an uſeful Intereſt in that Party in all the foreign Dominions where they were tolerated. The ſame Charters of Liberty were continued and granted to them during the peaceable Reign of K. James, and in the Beginning of this King's Reign, altho' it may be, the politick Conſiderations in thoſe Conceſſions and Connivances, were neither made uſe of, nor underſtood.

"Some few Years before theſe Troubles, when the Power of Church-men grew more tranſcendent, and indeed the Faculties and Underſtandings of the Lay Counſellors more dull, lazy, and (a) This Hypocriſy and Tyranny of the prevailing Faction began to open the Eyes of ſome ſober Men, who had gone along with them, as appeared in the Speeches of Members in both Houſes; particularly in a printed Speech made in the Houſe of Peers, on Monday the 19th of December 1642. by the Earl of Pembroke, for Accommodation with the King. My Lords, We were told this time twelve-month if we would put out the Biſhops of the Lord's Houſe, no further Attempt ſhould be made upon the Church.——When I told them, it was reported that they meant to take away Epiſcopacy, and the Book of Common-Prayer, they proteſted to the contrary, &c.

1642. 18 Car. I. "unactive (for without the laſt, the firſt could "have done no hurt) the Biſhops grew jealous "that the countenancing another Diſcipline of the "Church here, by Order of the State (for thoſe "Foreign Congregations were govern'd by a "Presbytery, according to the Cuſtom and Con- "ſtitution of thoſe Parts of which they had "been Natives; the French, Dutch, and Walloons, had the free Uſe of ſeveral Churches "according to their own Diſcipline) would at "leaſt diminiſh the Reputation and Dignity of "the Epiſcopal Government, and give ſome coun- "tenance to the factious and ſchiſmatical Party in "England to hope for ſuch a Toleration.

"Then there wanted not ſome fiery, turbulent, "and contentious Perſons of the Congregations, "who upon private Difference and Conteſts, were "ready to inform againſt their Brethren, and to diſ- "cover what they thought might prove of moſt "prejudice to them: ſo that, upon pretence that "they far exceeded the Liberties which were gran- "ted to them, and that under the Notion of Fo- "reigners many Engliſh ſeparated themſelves from "the Church, and joined themſelves to thoſe Con- "gregations (which poſſibly was in part true) the "Council-board connived at, or interpoſed not, "whilſt the Biſhops did ſome Acts of Reſtraint, "with which thoſe Congregations grew generally "diſcontented, and thought the Liberty of their "Conſciences to be taken from them; which cauſed "in London much complaining of this kind, but "much more in the Dioceſs of Norwich, where Dr. "Wren, the Biſhop there, paſſionately and warmly "proceeded againſt them: ſo that many left the "Kingdom, to the leſſening the wealthy Manufa- "cture there of Kerſeys and narrow Cloths; and, "which was worſe, tranſporting that Myſtery into "Foreign Parts.

"And that this might be ſure to look like more "than what was neceſſary to the Civil Policy of the "Kingdom; Whereas in all former times the Am- "baſſadors and all foreign Miniſters of State em- "ployed from England into any Parts where the "Reformed Religion was exercis'd, frequented their "Churches, gave all poſſible Countenance to their "Profeſſion, and held Correſpondence with the moſt "active and powerful Perſons of that Religion; and "particularly, the Ambaſſador Lieger at Paris, had "diligently and conſtantly frequented the Church "at Charenton, and held a fair Intercourſe with "thoſe of that Religion throughout the Kingdom, "by which they had ſtill received Advantage, That "People being induſtrious and active to get into "the Secrets of the State, and ſo deriving all ne- "ceſſary Intelligence to thoſe whom they deſired to "gratify: The contrary to this was now with great "Induſtry practis'd, and ſome Advertiſements, if "not Inſtructions, given to the Ambaſſadors there, "to forbear any extraordinary Commerce with the "Men of that Profeſſion. And the Lord Scudamore, "who was the laſt Ordinary Ambaſſador there be- "fore the Beginning of this Parliament, whether by "the Inclinations of his own Nature, or by Advice "from others, not only declined going to Charenton, but furniſhed his own Chapel in his Houſe "with ſuch Ornaments (as Candles upon the Com- "munion-Table and the like) as gave great Offence "and Umbrage to thoſe of the Reformation there, "who had not ſeen the like: beſides that, he was "careful to publiſh upon all Occaſions, by himſelf, "and thoſe who had the neareſt Relation to him, "That the Church of England look'd not on the Hugonots as a part of their Communion: which was like- "wiſe too much, and too induſtriouſly, diſcourſed "at home. 1642. 18 Car. I.

"They of the Church of England who committed "the greateſt Errors this way, had undoubtedly not "the leaſt Thoughts of making Alterations in it "towards the countenancing of Popery, as hath "been uncharitably conceived; but (having too "juſt Cauſe given them to diſlike the Paſſion and "Licence that was taken by ſome Perſons in the "Reformed Churches, under the Notion of Conſci- "ence and Religion, to the Diſturbance of the Peace "of Kingdoms) unſkilfully believed, that the total "declining the Intereſt of that Party, where it ex- "ceeded the neceſſary Bounds of Reformation, "would make this Church of England looked upon "with more Reverence, and that thereby the com- "mon Adverſary, the Papiſt, would abate ſome- "what of his Arrogance and Superciliouſneſs; and "that both Parties, piouſly conſidering the Charity "which Religion ſhould beget, might, if not unite, "yet refrain from the Bitterneſs and Uncharitable- "neſs of Contention in Matters of Opinion, and "agree in the practical Duties of Chriſtians and "Subjects. Thus, contracting their Conſiderations "into too narrow a compaſs, theſe Men contented "themſelves with their pious Intentions, without "duly weighing Objections, or the Circumſtances of "Policy. And ſome of our own Communion who "differed with them in Opinion in this Point, tho' "they were in the right, not giving, and it may be "not knowing the right Reaſons, rather confirm'd "than reform'd them in their Inclinations: neither "of them diſcerning the true and ſubſtantial "Grounds of that Policy upon which that good "Correſpondence had been founded which they "were now about to change. And ſo the Church "of England, not giving the ſame Countenance to "thoſe of the Religion in foreign Parts which it "had formerly done, no ſooner was diſcerned to be "under a Cloud at home, but thoſe of the Religion "abroad were glad of the Occaſion to publiſh their "Malice againſt her, and to enter into the ſame Con- "ſpiracy againſt the Crown, without which they "could have done little Hurt to the Church. (a)

This Year began with the Proſecution of the Treaty lately commenc'd between the Commiſſioners from the Parliament and the King in Perſon at Oxford, managed with ſeveral Inſtructions, Propoſitions, Anſwers, Replies, and other Papers, recited at large in the Collections of Mr. Ruſhworth. The Manner of Treating is thus repreſented by Mr. Bulſtrode Whitlock, who was one of the Parliament's Commiſſioners. 1643. Treaty continu'd at Oxford.

"The King uſed them (i. e. the Parliament's "Commiſſioners) with great Favour and Civility; "and his General Ruthen, and divers of his Lords "and Officers, came frequently to their Table, and "they had very friendly Diſcourſes and Treat- "ments together. The King himſelf did them the "Honour ſometimes to accept of part of their Wine "and Proviſions which the Earl ſent to him when "they had any thing extraordinary. The Commiſ- "ſioners finding Whitlock's Pen uſeful in the Ser- "vice, did put him upon drawing of all their Pa- "pers, which were tranſcribed afterwards by their "Secretaries. Their Inſtructions were very ſtrict, "and tied them up to treat with none but the King "himſelf, whom they often attended at his Lodg- "ings in Chriſt-Church, and had Acceſs at all times "when they deſired it, and were allowed by his Ma- "jeſty a very free Debate with him. He had com- "monly waiting on him, when he treated with "them, Prince Rupert and the Lord Keeper Little-

(a) And great Advantage was taken againſt thoſe Biſhops and Divines who had gone into new Doctrines or Explications of them, beyond the ſettled Tenets of our Church, and out of the way of our firſt Reformers, and their Succeſſors, till now in this Reign. Within this Year was publiſh'd The Engliſh Pope, or a Diſcourſe wherein the late Myſtical Intelligence betwixt the Court of England and the Court of Rome, is in fact diſcovered, London 1643. 4*to*. Wherein after many Inſtances of Innovation, the Author complains, that Sparrow had paved the way for Auricular Confeſſion; Watts for Penance, Heylin for Altar-Worſhip, Mountague for Saint-Worſhip; Laud for the Maſs, &c.

1643. 19 Car. I. " ton, the Earl of Southampton, the Lord Chief Ju-
" ſtice Banks, and ſeveral Lords of his Council,
" who never debated any Matters with them, but " gave their Opinion to the King in thoſe things
" which he demanded of them, and ſometimes would " put the King in mind of ſome particular Things,
" but otherwiſe they did not ſpeak at all. In this " Treaty the King manifeſted his great Parts and " Abilities, Strength of Reaſon, and Quickneſs of " Apprehenſion, with much Patience hearing what " was objected againſt him; wherein he allowed all
" freedom, and would himſelf ſum up the Argu-
" ments, and give a moſt clear Judgment upon " them. His Unhappineſs was, that he had a bet" ter Opinion of others Judgments than of his own,
" tho' they were weaker than his own; and of this
" the Parliament's Commiſſioners had Experience,
" to their great Trouble. They were often wait" ing on the King, and debating ſome Points of the " Treaty with him until Midnight before they came " to a Concluſion. Upon one of the moſt material
" Points they preſſed his Majeſty with their Reaſons
" and beſt Arguments they could uſe to grant what
" they deſired. The King ſaid, He was fully ſatis-
" fied; and promiſed to give them his Anſwer in Wri-
" ting according to their Deſire; but becauſe it was " then paſt Midnight, and too late to put it into " Writing, he would have it drawn up next Morn" ing (when he commanded them to wait on him
" again) and then he would give them his Anſwer
" in Writing, as it was now agreed upon. They " went to their Lodgings full of joyful Hopes to " receive this Anſwer the next Morning; and which
" being given, would have much conduced to a hap" py Iſſue and Succeſs of this Treaty; and they had
" the King's Word for it; and they waited on him
" the next Morning at the Hour appointed. But in-
" ſtead of that Anſwer which they expected and " were promiſed, the King gave them a Paper quite
" contrary to what was concluded the Night before,
" and very much tending to the breach of the Trea" ty. They did humbly expoſtulate this with his
" Majeſty, and preſs'd him upon his Royal Word,
" and the ill Conſequences which they feared would " follow upon this his new Paper: But the King
" told them, He had alter'd his Mind, and that this " Paper which he now gave them was his Anſwer, which " he was now reſolv'd to make upon their laſt Debate.
" And they could obtain no other from him, which " occaſioned much Sadneſs and Trouble to them.
" Some of his own Friends, of whom the Commiſ-
" ſioners enquir'd touching this Paſſage, informed
" them, that after they were gone from the King,
" and that his Council alſo were gone away, ſome
" of his Bed-chamber (and they went higher) hea" ring from him what Anſwer he had promiſed, and " doubting that it would tend to ſuch an Iſſue of the " Treaty as they did not wiſh, they being rather " for the continuance of the War, they never left
" preſſing and perſwading of the King, till they had " prevailed with him to change his former Reſolu-
" tions, and to give Order for his Anſwer to be " drawn as it was now delivered."

Allowing this Relation of one of the Commiſſioners themſelves to be true and candid, we cannot but lament the unhappineſs of the good King, that ſome of his moſt intimate Confidents were againſt his concluding a Peace; and ſome others, or perhaps the ſame, were againſt his obtaining an abſolute Victory: Afraid he ſhould comply, leaſt his Prerogative might be not great enough to protect them; and yet afraid he ſhould conquer, leaſt he might be then tempted to aſſume an Arbitrary Power.

But indeed in the preſent Caſe, 'tis poſſible, that the Friends whom he conſulted did really apprehend, that the more he yielded the more burthen was preſſed upon him; and therefore might well endeavour to prevail, that he ſhould never recede from an Authority ſufficient to reſtore himſelf, and defend thoſe who had faithfully adher'd to him. For the Anſwer to which Mr. Whitlock refers, and which was ſent in a Meſſage to both Houſes April 12. was only this. 1643. 19 Car. I.

" Adjourn'd."

Treaty broke off.

As ſoon as the two Houſes had receiv'd this Anſwer, they immediately recall'd their Commiſſioners from Oxford; and ſo the Treaty having continued from the 4th of March to the 15th of April, was broke off without effect; tho' the main Articles ſeem'd eaſy enough to be adjuſted, and the only Queſtion was, Who ſhould be firſt and moſt truſted in the performance of them?

War proſecuted with greater Fury.

The War was to be now proſecuted with the greater Fury; the moſt active Raiſer of Forces for the Parliament was Sir William Waller, who on March 19. had advanced from Briſtol, and forc'd the Town of Malmsbury (Garriſon'd for the King, and commanded by Colonel Herbert Lunsford) to ſurrender. After which he defeated a great Body of Welſh near Glouceſter, raiſed and led by the Lord Herbert, Son to the Marqueſs of Worceſter. Thence he march'd and took Chepſtow, Monmouth and Hereford, and ſo victoriouſly on, till at Round way Down in Wiltſhire he was ſhamefully beat, and forc'd to poſt up to London.

Siege of Reading.

The Earl of Eſſex with the Parliament's main Army beſieged Reading on Apr. 15. commanded by Sir Arthur Aſton, who being Wounded in the Batteries, was forced to ſubſtitute Colonel Fielding; he hung out a Flag, and enter'd upon a Treaty of Surrender; but while it was depending, the King in Perſon march'd from Walingford to raiſe the Siege; but not able to gain the Paſs at Caveſham bridge, he retired, and Fielding Surrender'd the Town upon Articles on April 26. for which he was ſhortly after by a Council of War at Oxford ſentenc'd to Die; but by his Majeſty's Favour was repriev'd.

The Town Surrender'd.

King deſires to renew the Treaty for Peace.

May 20. his Majeſty ſent a Meſſage to the two Houſes to renew a Treaty of Peace —— "And he requires them as they will anſwer to God, to himſelf, and all the World, that they will no longer ſuffer their fellow Subjects to welter in each others Blood; that they would remember by whoſe Authority, and to what end they met in the Council; and ſend ſuch an Anſwer to his Majeſty as may open a Door to let in a firm Peace and Security to the whole Kingdom." But the Houſes thought they could now depend upon their own Strength: So on April 1. they made an Ordinance for Sequeſtring the Eſtates of notorious Delinquents. And it was but in vain that the King iſſued his Proclamation April 7. To prohibit the Aſſeſſing, Collecting, or Paying any weekly Taxes, and Seizing or Sequeſtring the Rents or Eſtates of his good Subjects, by colour of any Orders or pretended Ordinances of one or both Houſes of Parliament. And the Commons cut off all Correſpondence between the King and them, by an Order of April 10. to prevent Spies and Intelligencers; and on May 23. they reſolv'd to impeach the Queen of High-Treaſon, and Mr. Pym carried up the Charge to the Bar of the Lords, and died ſoon after, leaving this Character given by the Lord Clarendon. "Mr. Pym was look'd upon as the Man of greateſt Experience in Parliament, where he had ſerv'd very long, and was always a Man of Buſineſs, being an Officer in the Exchequer, and of a good Reputation generally; though known to be inclin'd to the Puritan Faction, yet not of thoſe furious Reſolutions againſt the Church as the other leading Men were, and wholly devoted to the Earl of Bedford who had nothing of that Spirit." (a)

Pym's Death and Character

His Funeral Sermon was Preach'd and Printed by Mr. Stephen Marſhal, who compar'd him to John the Baptiſt, For that he was taken away violently, after but two or three Years work. On occaſion of his Death the Character of him was thus continued by the ſame Noble Peer; "About this time the Councils at Weſtminſter loſt a principal Supporter by the Death of John Pym; who died with great Torment and Agony of a Diſeaſe unuſual, and therefore the more ſpoken of, Morbus Pediculoſus, as was reported, which render'd him an Object very loathſome to thoſe who had been moſt delighted with him. No Man had more to anſwer for the Miſeries of the Kingdom, or had his Hand or Head deeper in their Contrivance: And yet, I believe, they grew much higher even in his Life than he deſign'd. He was a Man of a private Quality and Condition of Life; his Education in the Office of the Exchequer, where he had been a Clerk, and his Parts rather acquir'd by Induſtry than ſupplied by Nature, or adorn'd by Art. He had been well known in former Parliaments, and was one of thoſe few who had ſate in many; the long intermiſſion of Parliaments having worn out moſt of thoſe who had been acquainted with the Rules and Orders obſerv'd in thoſe Conventions: This gave him ſome Reputation and Reverence amongſt thoſe who were but new introduc'd.

"He had been moſt taken notice of for being concern'd and paſſionate in the Jealouſies of Religion, and much troubled with the Countenance which had been given to thoſe Opinions that had been imputed to Arminius; and this gave him great Authority and Intereſt with thoſe who were not pleaſed with the Government of the Church, or the growing Power of the Clergy; yet himſelf Induſtriouſly took care to be believ'd, and he profeſs'd to be very entire to the Doctrine and Diſcipline of the Church of England. In the ſhort Parliament before this, he ſpoke much, and appeared to be the moſt leading Man; for beſides the exact Knowledge of the Forms and Orders of that Council, which few Men had, he had a very comely and grave way of expreſſing himſelf, with great volubility of Words, natural and proper, and underſtood the Temper and Affections of the Kingdom as well as any Man; and had obſerv'd the Errors and Miſtakes in Government, and knew well how to make them appear greater than they were. After the unhappy Diſſolution of that Parliament, he continued for the moſt part about London, in Converſation and great Repute amongſt thoſe Lords who were moſt Strangers to the Court, and were believed moſt averſe to it; in whom he improv'd all imaginable Jealouſies and Diſcontents towards the State; and as ſoon as this Parliament was reſolv'd to be ſummon'd, he was as diligent to procure ſuch Perſons to be elected as he knew to be moſt inclin'd to the way he meant to take.

"At the firſt opening of this Parliament, he appear'd paſſionate and prepared againſt the Earl of Strafford; and though in private deſigning he was much govern'd by Mr. Hambden and Mr. St. John, yet he ſeem'd to all Men to have the greateſt Influence upon the Houſe of Commons of any Man; and, in truth, I think he was at that time, and ſome Months after, the moſt popular Man, and the moſt able to do hurt, that hath lived in any time. Upon the firſt Deſign of ſoftning and obliging the powerful Perſons in both Houſes, when it was reſolv'd to make the Earl of Bedford Lord High Treaſurer of England, the King likewiſe intended to make Mr. Pym Chancellor of the Exchequer; for which he received his Majeſty's Promiſe, and made a return of a ſuitable profeſſion of his Service and Devotion; and thereupon, the other being no ſecret, ſomewhat declined from that ſharpneſs in the Houſe which was more Popular than any Man's, and made ſome Overtures to provide for the Glory and Splendor of the Crown; in which he had ſo ill Succeſs, that his Intereſt and Reputation there viſibly abated, and he found that he was much better able to do hurt than good, which wrought very much upon him to Melancholly, and complaint of the violence and diſcompoſure of the Peoples Affections and Inclinations. In the end, whether, upon the Death of the Earl of Bedford, he deſpaired of that Preferment, or whether he was guilty of any thing, which upon his converſion to the Court, he thought might be diſcover'd to his Damage, or for pure want of Courage, he ſuffer'd himſelf to be carried by thoſe who would not follow him, and ſo continued in the Head of thoſe who made the moſt deſperate Propoſitions.

"In the Proſecution of the Earl of Strafford, his Carriage and Language was ſuch as expreſſed much perſonal Animoſities; and he was accuſed of having practis'd ſome Arts in it not worthy a good Man, as an Iriſhman of very mean and low Condition afterwards acknowledg'd, that being brought "to him as an Evidence of one part of the Charge "againſt the Lord Lieutenant, in a particular of "which a Perſon of ſo vile a Quality would not be "reaſonably thought a competent Informer; Mr. "Pym gave him Money to buy him a Sattin Suit "and Cloak, in which Equipage he appeared at the "Trial, and gave his Evidence; which, if true, may "make many other things which were confidently "reported afterwards of him to be believed; as "that he received a great Sum of Money from the "French Ambaſſadour (which hath been before "mention'd) to hinder the Tranſportation of thoſe "Regiments of Ireland into Flanders upon the diſ-"banding that Army there, which had been pre-"pared by the Earl of Strafford for the Buſineſs of "Scotland; in which, if his Majeſty's Directions "and Commands had not been diverted and con-"tradicted by the Houſes, many do believe the Re-"bellion in Ireland had not happen'd.

"Certain it is, that his power of doing ſhrewd "Turns was extraordinary, and no leſs in doing "good Offices for particular Perſons; and that he "did preſerve many from Cenſure who were under "the ſevere Diſpleaſure of the Houſes, and look'd "upon as eminent Delinquents; and the Quality "of many of them made it believ'd, that he had "ſold that Protection for valuable Conſiderations. "From the time of his being accuſed of High Trea-"ſon by the King, with the Lord Kimbolton, and "the other Members, he never entertain'd Thoughts "of Moderation, but always oppoſed all Overtures "of Peace and Accommodation; and when the E. "of Eſſex was diſpoſed, the laſt Summer, by thoſe "Lords to an Inclination towards a Treaty, as is "before remember'd, Mr. Pym's Power and Dexte-"rity wholly changed him, and wrought him to "that Temper which he afterwards ſwerv'd not "from. He was wonderfully ſollicitous for the "Scots coming in to their Aſſiſtance, tho' his Indiſ-"poſition of Body was ſo great, that it might well "have made another Impreſſion upon his Mind. "During his Sickneſs he was a very ſad Spectacle; "but none being admitted to him who had not "concurr'd with him, it is not known what his laſt "Thoughts and Conſiderations were. He died to-"wards the end of December, before the Scots en-"ter'd; and was buried with wonderful Pomp and "Magnificence, in that Place where the Bones of "our Engliſh Kings and Princes are committed to "their Reſt."

Soon after died another Leader of the Houſe of Commons, Mr. Hampden, who went out with a Party of the Buckinghamſhire Forces to oppoſe Prince Rupert, who made frequent Incurſions into the Parliament Quarters; and engaging with him in Chalgrave-Field, was routed and wounded June 18, and died of his Wounds June 24. His Character is thus given by the ſame Author. "Mr. Hampden was a "Man of much greater Cunning, and it may be of "the moſt diſcerning Spirit, and of the greateſt "Addreſs and Inſinuation to bring any thing to "paſs which he deſired, of any Man of that time, "and who laid the Deſign deepeſt. He was a Gen-"tleman of a good Extraction and a fair Fortune, "who, from a Life of great Pleaſure and Licence, "had on a ſudden retired to extraordinary Sobriety "and Strictneſs, and yet retain'd his uſual Chear-"fulneſs and Affability; which, together with the "Opinion of his Wiſdom and Juſtice, and the Cou-"rage he had ſhew'd in oppoſing the Ship-Money, "rais'd his Reputation to a very great height, not "only in Buckinghamſhire where he lived, but gene-"rally throughout the Kingdom. He was not a "Man of many Words, and rarely began the Diſ-"courſe, or made the firſt Entrance upon any Buſi-"neſs that was aſſumed; but a very weighty Spea-"ker: and after he had heard a full Debate, and "obſerved how the Houſe was like to be inclined, "took up the Argument, and ſhortly, and clearly, "and craftily ſo ſtated it, that he commonly con-"ducted it to the Concluſion he deſired: and if he "found he could not do that, he was never with-"out the Dexterity to divert the Debate to another "time, and to prevent the determining any thing "in the Negative which might prove inconvenient "in the future. He made ſo great a ſhew of Civi-"lity, and Modeſty, and Humility, and always of "miſtruſting his own Judgment, and eſteeming his "with whom he conferr'd for the preſent, that he "ſeem'd to have no Opinions or Reſolutions, but "ſuch as he contracted from the Information and "Inſtruction he receiv'd upon the Diſcourſes of "others, whom he had a wonderful Art of Govern-"ing, and leading into his Principles and Inclina-"tions, while they believed that he wholly depen-"ded upon their Counſel and Advice. No Man "had ever a greater Power over himſelf, or was leſs "the Man that he ſeem'd to be; which ſhortly af-"ter appear'd to every Body, when he cared leſs "to keep on the Maſque." His Death is thus reported, and his Character thus farther continued by the ſame noble Author: "Mr. Hampden being ſhot "into the Shoulder with a Brace of Bullets, which "brake the Bone, within three Weeks after died "with extraordinary Pain, to as great a Conſterna-"tion of all that Party, as if their whole Party had "been defeated or cut off. Many Men obſerved, "that the Field in which the Skirmiſh was, and "upon which Mr. Hampden received his Death's "Wound, Chalgrave-Field, was the ſame Place in "which he had firſt executed the Ordinance of the "Militia, and engaged that County, in which his "Reputation was very great in this Rebellion: and "it was confeſs'd by the Priſoners that were taken "that Day, and acknowledged by all, that upon "the Alarm that Morning, after their Quarters "were beaten up, he was exceeding ſollicitous to "draw Forces together to purſue the Enemy; and "being a Colonel of Foot, put himſelf among thoſe "Horſe as a Volunteer, who were firſt ready; and "that when the Prince made a Stand, all the Offi-"cers were of opinion to ſtay till their Body came "up, and he alone (being ſecond to none but the "General himſelf in the Obſervance and Applicati-"on of all Men) perſwaded and prevailed with "them to advance; ſo violently did his Fate carry "him to pay the Mulct in the Place where he had "committed the Tranſgreſſion about a Year be-"fore.

Hampden's Death and Character

"He was a Gentleman of a good Family in Buck-"inghamſhire, and born to a fair Fortune, and of a "moſt civil and affable Deportment. In his En-"trance into the World, he indulged to himſelf all "the Licence in Sports and Exerciſes, and Compa-"ny, which were uſed by Men of the moſt jolly "Converſation. Afterwards he retir'd to a more "reſerv'd and melancholy Society, yet preſerving "his own natural Chearfulneſs and Vivacity, and "above all, a flowing Courteſie to all Men: Tho' "they who converſed nearly with him found him "growing into a Diſlike of the Eccleſiaſtical Go-"vernment of the Church, yet moſt believ'd it ra-"ther a Diſlike of ſome Church-men, and of ſome "Introducements of theirs, which he apprehended "might diſquiet the publick Peace. He was rather "of Reputation in his own Country, than of pub-"lick Diſcourſe or Fame in the Kingdom, before "the buſineſs of Ship-money; but then he grew the "Argument of all Tongues, every Man enquiring "Who and What he was that durſt, at his own "Charge, ſupport the Liberty and Property of the "Kingdom, and reſcue his Country, as he thought, "from being made a Prey to the Court. His Car-"riage, throughout this Agitation, was with that "rare Temper and Modeſty, that they who watch'd "him narrowly to find ſome Advantage againſt "his Perſon, to make him leſs reſolute in his Cauſe, "were compell'd to give him a juſt Teſtimony: "And the Judgment that was given againſt him in-"finitely more advanced him than the Service for which it was given. When this Parliament began (being return'd Knight of the Shire for the County where he liv'd) the Eyes of all Men were fixed upon him as their Patriæ Pater, and the Pilot that muſt ſteer the Veſſel through the Tempeſts and Rocks which threatned it. And I am perſwaded his Power and Intereſt at that time was greater to do Good or Hurt than any Man's in the Kingdom, or than any Man of his Rank hath had in any time: for his Reputation of Honeſty was univerſal, and his Affections ſeem'd ſo publickly guided, that no corrupt or private Ends could byaſs them.

"He was of that rare Affability and Temper in Debate, and of that ſeeming Humility and Submiſſion of Judgment, as if he brought no Opinion of his own with him but a Deſire of Information and Inſtruction; yet he had ſo ſubtle a way of Interrogating, and, under the Notions of Doubts, inſinuating his Objections, that he infuſed his own Opinions into thoſe from whom he pretended to learn, and receive them. And even with them who were able to preſerve themſelves from his Infuſions, and diſcern'd thoſe Opinions to be fix'd in him with which they could not comply, he always left the Character of an ingenious and conſcientious Perſon. He was indeed a very wiſe Man, and of great Parts, and poſſeſs'd with the moſt abſolute Spirit of Popularity, and the moſt abſolute Faculties to govern the People, of any Man I ever knew. For the firſt Year of the Parliament, he ſeem'd rather to moderate and ſoften the violent and diſtemper'd Humours, than to inflame them. But wiſe and diſpaſſion'd Men plainly diſcern'd, that that Moderation proceeded from Prudence, and Obſervation that the Seaſon was not ripe, rather than that he approv'd of the Moderation, and that he begat many Opinions and Motions, the Education whereof he committed to other Men; ſo far diſguiſing his own Deſigns, that he ſeem'd ſeldom to wiſh more than was concluded; and in many groſs Concluſions, which would hereafter contribute to Deſigns not yet ſet on foot, when he found them ſufficiently back'd by majority of Voices, he would withdraw himſelf before the Queſtion, that he might ſeem not to conſent to ſo much viſible unreaſonableneſs, which produc'd as great a Doubt in ſome as it did Approbation in others of his Integrity. What Combination ſoever had been originally with the Scots for the Invaſion of England, and what farther was enter'd into afterwards in favour of them, and to advance any Alteration of the Government in Parliament, no Man doubts was at leaſt with the Privity of this Gentleman.

"After he was among thoſe Members accuſed by the King of High-Treaſon he was much alter'd; his Nature and Carriage ſeeming fiercer than it did before: And without queſtion, when he firſt drew his Sword he threw away the Scabbard; for he paſſionately oppoſed the Overture made by the King for a Treaty from Nottingham, and as eminently all Expedients that might have produced any Accommodations in this that was at Oxford; and was principally relied on to prevent any Infuſions which might be made into the Earl of Eſſex towards Peace, or to render them ineffectual if they were made; and was indeed much more relied on by that Party than the General himſelf. In the firſt entrance into the Troubles, he undertook the Command of a Regiment of Foot, and performed the Duty of a Colonel upon all occaſions moſt punctually. He was very temperate in Diet, and a ſupreme Governour over all his Paſſions and Affections, and had thereby a great Power over other Mens. He was of an Induſtry and Vigilance not to be tired out or wearied by the moſt laborious; and of Parts not to be impoſed upon by the moſt Subtle or Sharp, and of a perſonal Courage equal to his beſt Parts; ſo that he was an Enemy not to be wiſh'd wherever he might have been made a Friend, and as much to be apprehended where he was ſo as any Man could deſerve to be: And therefore his Death was no leſs pleaſing to the one Party than it was condoled in the other. In a word, What was ſaid of Cinna might well be applied to him; he had a Head to contrive, and a Tongue to perſwade, and a Hand to execute any Miſchief. His Death therefore ſeem'd to be a great Deliverance to the Nation."

King and Queen meet.

Her Majeſty after her Arrival from Holland had lain ſome time at York, ſending Arms and Ammunition to Oxford, and reſolv'd now to go thither to attend her Royal Conſort, by whom ſhe was met at Edgehill July 13, having been abſent from him ever ſince Feb. 23, 1641.

Battle of Lanſ-down.

On July 5, there had been a Battle at Lanſdown, between the King's Forces commanded by Prince Maurice and the Earl of Carnarvan, and the Parliament's led by Sir Will. Waller. Either Party was ſufficiently tired and batter'd; Waller in the Night march'd away to Bath, and in the Morning the King's Army found themſelves poſſeſſed entirely of the Field and the Dead, and all other Enſigns of Victory. The Lord Clarendon obſerves, "That in this Battle, on the King's part, there were more Officers and Gentlemen of Quality ſlain than common Men, and more hurt than ſlain. That which would have clouded any Victory, and made the Loſs of others leſs ſpoken of, was the Death of Sir Bevil Greenvil: He was indeed an excellent Perſon, whoſe Activity, Intereſt and Reputation, was the Foundation of what had been done in Cornwal; and his Temper and Affections ſo publick, that no Accident which happen'd could make any Impreſſions in him; and his Example kept others from taking any thing ill, or at leaſt ſeeming to do ſo. In a Word, a brighter Courage and a gentler Diſpoſition were never mixed together to make the moſt chearful and innocent Converſation."

Death and Character of Sir Bevil Greenvil.

The K.'s Enemies reconcil'd to him.

Many of thoſe who ſided with the Parliament, ſeeing the ſad Effects of Civil War, began now to deſert them, and to reconcile themſelves to his Majeſty's Favour and Service, as Colonel Goring at Portſmouth, Sir Hugh Cholmley Governour of Scarborough, and even Sir John Hotham Governour of Hull, who had been ſoften'd to the Royal Intereſt by the Addreſſes of the Lord Digby; and by degrees he and his Son Captain Hotham were more and more ſuſpected by the Parliament, and were both ſeized and carried to the Tower, and without Mercy both beheaded. It was thought a Judgment on Sir John Hotham that being the firſt Man declared Traytor by the King, he was the firſt Man put to Death for a Traytor to the Parliament. His Character is thus deliver'd. "The Man was of a fearful Nature and perplexed Underſtanding, and could better reſolve upon deliberation than on a ſudden; and many were of opinion, that if he had been prepared dexterouſly before-hand, and in confidence he would have conformed to the King's Pleaſure; for he was Maſter of a noble Fortune in Land, and rich in Money; of a very ancient Family and well allied; his Affections to the Government very good; and no Man leſs deſired to ſee the Nation involved in a Civil War than he; and when he accepted this Imployment from the Parliament, he never imagined it would engage him in Rebellion, but believed that the King would find it neceſſary to comply with the Advice of his two Houſes, and that the preſerving that Magazine from being poſſeſſed by him, would likewiſe prevent any poſſible Rupture into Arms."——When he ſtood on the Wall of Hull and talked with the King who demanded Poſſeſſion, the King telling him, "That this act of Diſobedience in him would probably bring many Miſeries upon the Kingdom and much loſs of Blood, which it ſhould lie upon his Conſcience to prevent." Sir John with much diſtraction in his Character of Sir Jo. Hotham.

Good Deſign of Waller, &c.

Mr. Waller, Tompkins, Challoner and others, had enter'd into a more expeditious Deſign to ſeize ſome leading Members, to ſurprize the City, and bring up the King to diſſolve the Parliament. But they were all unhappily diſcovered, tried and condemn'd; Tompkins and Challoner were hang'd, but Mr. Waller having been a Member well affected to the Cauſe, and one of the Commiſſioners in the Treaty at Oxford, was reprieved by General Eſſex, and after a Year's Impriſonment purchas'd his Pardon for ten thouſand Pounds; and travelling into France improv'd himſelf in good Letters, and for the reſt of his Life, which was very long, he choſe rather to be admir'd for a Poet, than to be envied for a Politician. And ſeveral of the greateſt Lords as well as Commons, came over to the King; but many of them thinking themſelves to be ſlighted or ſuſpected, again cool'd in their Loyalty, and return'd to be Enemies or Neuters. The two potent Earls of Holland and Bedford receeded from the Parliament about Auguſt 25, and waited on the King at Oxford, with great profeſſions of Duty and Allegiance; yet ſoon after they deſerted the King, and took refuge again at Weſtminſter. The Earl of Clare did the ſame.

The two Houſes to ſtrengthen themſelves againſt the growing Intereſt of the King, reſolv'd to ſend for Aſſiſtance into Scotland, by Commiſſioners choſe out of both Houſes, to go and negotiate a Treaty of Alliance, who came to Edinburgh Aug. 7, and brought with them a Declaration of the Lords and Commons of the Parliament of England to the Kingdom and Eſtates of Scotland, and another to the General Aſſembly of the Church of Scotland (a). They promiſed to aid their Brethren in England upon Condition of a ſolemn League and Covenant, and tranſmitted a Form of it to the two Houſes at Weſtminſter, where it was conſented to Aug. 28, order'd to be printed and publiſh'd Sept. 21, and the next Day taken by the Houſe of Commons and Aſſembly of Divines. And tho' his Majeſty publiſh'd a Proclamation againſt taking of it, dated Octob. 19, it was by degrees impoſed and rigorouſly exacted of all People, as they would eſcape the Brand and the Penalty of Malignants. And upon this Confederacy the Scots Army enter'd England at Berwick Jan. 15. and ſoon after was publiſh'd The Declaration of the Kingdoms of England and Scotland joined in Arms for the Vindication and Defence of their Religion, Liberties and Laws againſt the Popiſh Prelatical and Malignant Party, by the Honourable Houſes of Parliament in England, and the Honourable Convention of Eſtates of the Kingdom of Scotland.

Solemn League and Covenant.

Siege of Briſtol.

In the mean time the chief Actions in the Field were the Siege of Briſtol by Prince Rupert, who attack'd it with ſo much Bravery, that he brought the Governour Colonel Fienes to a Parley and a Surrender upon Articles July 22. Upon this encouragement the King beſieged Glouceſter Aug. 10, which was obſtinately defended till on Sept. 5, upon the advance of Eſſex's recruited Army, the King was forced to raiſe the Siege with great loſs of Time, Men and Honour. And at Newberry Sept. 20, the Earl of Eſſex fell on the King's Army, who maintain'd the Fight from ſeven in the Morning till eight at Night, when the King ſuffering much the greater Loſs, drew off his Forces and marched to Oxford, having loſt three excellent Perſons of Quality, the Earl of Carnarvan, the Earl of Sunderland and the Lord Viſcount Faukland. Their Characters are thus drawn by the admirable Hand of the Lord Clarendon. "Here fell "the Earl of Sunderland, a Lord of great Fortune, "tender Years (being not above three and twenty "Years of Age) and an early Judgment; who having no Command in the Army, attended upon the King's Perſon, under the obligation of Honour, and putting himſelf that Day in the King's Troop a Voluntier, before they came to Charge was taken away by a Canon Bullet.

"This Day alſo fell the Earl of Carnarvan, who after he had charg'd and routed a Body of the Enemies Horſe, coming careleſly back by ſome of the ſcatter'd Troopers, was by one of them who knew him, run through the Body with a Sword, of which he died within an Hour. He was a Perſon with whoſe great Parts and Virtue the World was not enough acquainted. Before the War, tho' his Education was adorn'd by Travel, and an exact obſervation of the Manners of more Nations than our common Travellers uſe to viſit (for he had, after the View of Spain, France and moſt parts of Italy, ſpent ſome time in Turky and thoſe Eaſtern Countries), he ſeemed to be wholly delighted with thoſe looſer Exerciſes of Pleaſure, Hunting, Hawking, and the like; in which the Nobility of that time too much delighted to excel. After the Troubles began, having the Command of the firſt or ſecond Regiment of Horſe that was raiſed for the King's Service, he wholly gave himſelf up to the Office and Duty of a Soldier, no Man more diligently Obeying or more dexterouſly Commanding; for he was not only of a very keen Courage in the expoſing his Perſon, but an excellent Diſcerner and Purſuer of Advantage upon his Enemy. He had a Mind and Underſtanding very preſent in the Article of Danger, which is a rare benefit in that Profeſſion. Thoſe Infirmities and that Licence which he had formerly indulg'd to himſelf, he put off with Severity, when others thought them excuſable under the Notion of a Soldier. He was a great Lover of Juſtice, and practis'd it then moſt deliberately when he had Power to do wrong; and ſo ſtrict in the obſervation of his Word and Promiſe, as a Commander, that he could not be perſwaded to ſtay in the Weſt, when he found it not in his Power to perform the Agreement he had made with Dorcheſter and Weymouth. If he had lived, he would have proved a great Ornament to that Profeſſion, and an excellent Soldier, and by his Death the King found a ſenſible weakneſs in his Army."

The Lord Falkland was diſſwaded from expoſing himſelf in the Battle, being only a Civil Officer; but he ſaid he was weary of the Times, foreſaw they would be worſe, and believed he ſhould be happily delivered from them. In the Morning he called for a clean Shirt, ſaying jocoſely, that If his Body fell the Rebels ſhould not find it in foul Linnen. His Character was thus drawn by the Lord Clarendon. "The Lord "Falkland was wonderfully belov'd by all that knew him, as a Man of excellent Parts, of a Wit ſo ſharp and a Nature ſo ſincere, that nothing could be more lovely. The King knew him to be of good Eſteem in the Houſe, and good Affections to his Service and the Quiet of the Kingdom. No Man could be more ſurpriz'd than he was, when the firſt Intimation was made to him of the King's Purpoſe. (i. e. to make him Secretary of State) He had never propoſed any ſuch thing to himſelf, nor had any veneration for the Court, but only ſuch a Loyalty to the King as the Law required from him. And he had naturally a wonderful Reverence for Parliaments, as believing them moſt ſollicitous for Juſtice, the Violation whereof in the leaſt degree he could not forgive any mortal Power; and it was only his Obſervation of the Diſingenuity and want of Integrity in this Parliament which leſſened that Reverence to it, and had

Character of Lord Falkland.

(a) See Order of the Houſe of Commons to the Aſſembly of Divines, Recommending it to them to draw up a Letter to the General Aſſembly of the Church of Scotland, taking notice of the Pious and Good Expreſſions to this Church and State, certified in the late Anſwer of the ſaid General Aſſembly. dat. 17. July 1643. 1643. 19 Car. I. " diſpoſed him to croſs and oppoſe their Deſigns. " He was ſo totally unacquainted with Buſineſs and " the Forms of it, that he did believe really he could " not execute the Office with any ſufficiency. But " there were two Conſiderations that made moſt " Impreſſion upon him; the one, leaſt the World " ſhould believe, that his own Ambition had pro- " cured this Promotion, and that he had therefore " appear'd ſignally in the Houſe to oppoſe thoſe Pro- " ceedings, that he might thereby render himſelf " Gracious to the Court; the other, leaſt the King " ſhould expect ſuch a Submiſſion and Reſignation " of himſelf, and his own Reaſon and Judgment to " his Commands, as he ſhould never give or pretend " to forgive: For he was ſo ſevere an Adorer of " Truth, that he could as eaſily have given himſelf " leave to ſteal as to diſſemble, or to ſuffer any " Man to think that he would do any thing which " he reſolved not to do, which he thought " a more miſchievous kind of Lying than a poſi- " tive Averring what could be moſt eaſily contra- " dicted."

On the occaſion of his Death his Character was thus continued by the ſame excellent Writer. " In " this unhappy Battle was ſlain the Lord Viſcount " Falkland, a Perſon of ſuch prodigious Parts, of " Learning and Knowledge, of that inimitable " ſweetneſs and delight in Converſation, of ſo flow- " ing and obliging a Humanity and Goodneſs to " Mankind, and of that primitive Simplicity and " Integrity of Life, that if there were no other " Brand upon this odious and accurſed Civil War " than that ſingle Loſs, it muſt be moſt infamous " and execrable to all Poſterity.

Turpe mori, poſt te, ſolo non poſſe dolore.

" Before this Parliament, his Condition of Life was " ſo happy, that it was hardly capable of improve- " ment. Before he came to be twenty Years of " Age, he was Maſter of a noble Fortune, which de- " ſcended to him by the Gift of a Grandfather, " without paſſing through his Father or Mother " who were then both alive, and not well enough " contented to find themſelves paſſed by in the " Deſcent. His Education for ſome Years had been " in Ireland, where his Father was Lord Deputy; " ſo that when he returned into England, to the poſ- " ſeſſion of his Fortune, he was unintangled with " any Acquaintance or Friends which uſually grow " up by the cuſtom of Converſation, and therefore " was to make a pure election of his Company; " which he choſe by other Rules than were preſcri- " bed to the young Nobility of that Time. And it " cannot be denied, though he admitted ſome few " to his Friendſhip for the agreeableneſs of their " Natures, and their undoubted Affection to him, " that his Familiarity and Friendſhip, for the moſt " part, was with Men of the moſt eminent and ſub- " lime Parts, and of untouched Reputation in point " of Integrity, and ſuch Men had a Title to his Boſom.

" He was a great Cheriſher of Wit, and Fancy, " and good Parts in any Man; and if he found them " clouded with Poverty or Want, a moſt liberal " and bountiful Patron towards them, even above " his Fortune; of which, in thoſe Adminiſtrations " he was ſuch a Diſpencer, as if he had been truſted " with it to ſuch Uſes, and if there had been the " leaſt of Vice in his Expence he might have been " thought too prodigal. He was conſtant and per- " tinacious in whatſoever he reſolved to do, and not " to be wearied by any pains that were neceſſary to " that end. And therefore having once reſolv'd not " to ſee London, which he loved above all places, " till he had perfectly learn'd the Greek Tongue, he " went to his own Houſe in the Country, and pur- " ſued it with that indefatigable Induſtry, that it " will not be believ'd in how ſhort a time he was " Maſter of it, and accurately read all the Greek " Hiſtorians.

" In this time, his Houſe being within little more 1643. 19 Car. I. " than ten Miles of Oxford, he contracted familiari- " ty and friendſhip with the moſt polite and accurate " Men of that Univerſity; who found ſuch an im- " menſeneſs of Wit, and ſuch a ſolidity of Judgment " in him, ſo infinite a Fancy, bound in by a moſt " Logical Ratiocination, ſuch a vaſt Knowledge that " he was not ignorant in any thing, yet ſuch an ex- " ceſſive Humility as if he had known nothing, that " they frequently reſorted and dwelt with him as in " a College ſituated in a purer Air; ſo that his " Houſe was a Univerſity in a leſs Volume, whi- " ther they came not ſo much for Repoſe as Study, " and to examine and refine thoſe groſſer Propoſiti- " ons which Lazineſs and Conſent made current in " vulgar Converſation.

" Many Attempts were made upon him by the in- " ſtigation of his Mother (who was a Lady of ano- " ther Perſwaſion in Religion, and of a moſt maſ- " culine Underſtanding, allay'd with the Paſſion " and Infirmities of her own Sex) to pervert him " in his Piety to the Church of England, and to re- " concile him to that of Rome; which they proſecu- " ted with the more confidence, becauſe he declin'd " no opportunity or occaſion of Conference with " thoſe of that Religion, whether Prieſts or Laicks, " having diligently ſtudied the Controverſies, and " exactly read all, or the choiceſt of the Greek " and Latin Fathers, and having a Memory ſo ſtu- " pendious that he remember'd on all Occaſions " whatſoever he read. And he was ſo great an E- " nemy to that Paſſion and Uncharitableneſs which " he ſaw produced by difference of Opinion, in Mat- " ters of Religion, that in all thoſe Diſputations " with Prieſts, and others of the Roman Church, he " affected to manifeſt all poſſible Civility to their " Perſons and Eſtimation of their Parts; which " made them retain ſtill ſome hope of his Reducti- " on, even when they had given over offering far- " ther Reaſons to him to that purpoſe. But this " Charity towards them was much leſſened, and any " Correſpondence with them quite declined, when, " by ſiniſter Arts, they had corrupted his two " younger Brothers, being both Children, and ſtolen " them from his Houſe, and Tranſported them " beyond Seas, and perverted his Siſters; upon " which occaſion he writ two large Diſcourſes a- " gainſt the principal Poſitions of that Religion, " with that ſharpneſs of Style, and full weight of " Reaſon, that the Church is deprived of great " Jewels in the concealment of them, and that they " are not publiſh'd to the World.

" He was ſuperiour to all thoſe Paſſions and Af- " fections which attend vulgar Minds, and was " guilty of no other Ambition than of Knowledge, " and to be reputed a Lover of all good Men, and " that made him too much a Contemner of thoſe " Arts, which muſt be indulged in the Tranſacti- " ons of Humane Affairs. In the laſt ſhort Parlia- " ment he was a Burgeſs in the Houſe of Commons; " and from the Debates which were there managed " with all imaginable Gravity and Sobriety, he con- " tracted ſuch a Reverence to Parliaments, that he " thought it really impoſſible they could ever pro- " duce Miſchief or Inconvenience to the Kingdom, " or that the Kingdom could be tolerably happy in " the Intermiſſion of them. And from the unhap- " py and unſeaſonable Diſſolution of that Conven- " tion, he harboured, it may be, ſome jealouſie and " prejudice to the Court, towards which he was " not before immoderately inclin'd; his Father ha- " ving waſted a full Fortune there, in thoſe Offices " and Employments by which other Men uſed to ob- " tain a greater. He was choſen again this Parlia- " ment to ſerve in the ſame Place, and in the be- " ginning of it, declared himſelf very ſharply and " ſeverely againſt thoſe Exorbitances which had been " moſt grievous to the State; for he was ſo rigid an " obſerver of eſtabliſhed Laws and Rules, that he " could not endure the leaſt breach or deviation from them; and thought no miſchief ſo intolerable as the Preſumption of Miniſters of State, to break poſitive Rules for Reaſons of State, or Judges to tranſgreſs known Laws upon the Title of Conveniency or Neceſſity; which made him ſo ſevere againſt the Earl of Strafford and the Lord Finch, contrary to his natural Gentleneſs and Temper; inſomuch, as they who did not know his Compoſition to be as free from Revenge as it was from Pride, thought that the Sharpneſs to the former, might proceed from the Memory of ſome Unkindeſſes, not without a mixture of Injuſtice from him towards his Father. But without doubt he was free from thoſe Temptations, and in both Caſes was only miſled by the Authority of thoſe who he believed underſtood the Laws perfectly; of which himſelf was utterly ignorant; and if the aſſumption, which was then ſcarce controverted had been true, That an Endeavour to overthrow the Fundamental Laws of the Kingdom was Treaſon, a ſtrict Underſtanding might make reaſonable Concluſions to ſatisfy his own Judgment, from the exorbitant parts of their ſeveral Charges.

“ The great Opinion he had of the Uprightneſs and Integrity of thoſe Perſons who appear'd moſt Active, eſpecially of Mr. Hambden, kept him longer from ſuſpecting any Deſign againſt the Peace of the Kingdom; and tho' he differed from them commonly in Concluſions, he believed long, their Purpoſes were honeſt. When he grew better inform'd what was Law, and diſcerned in them a deſire to controul that Law by a Vote of one or both Houſes, no Man more oppoſed thoſe Attempts, and gave the adverſe Party more trouble by Reaſon and Argumentation; inſomuch as he was by degrees look'd upon as an Advocate for the Court, to which he contributed ſo little, that he declined thoſe Addreſſes, and even thoſe Invitations which he was obliged almoſt by Civility to entertain. And he was ſo jealous of the leaſt Imagination that he ſhould incline to Preferment, that he affected even a Moroſeneſs to the Court and to the Courtiers, and left nothing undone which might prevent and divert the King's or Queen's Favour towards him, but the deſerving it. For when the King ſent for him once or twice to ſpeak with him, and to give him Thanks for his excellent Comportment in thoſe Councils, which his Majeſty graciouſly termed Doing him Service, his Anſwers were more negligent and leſs Satiſfactory than might be expected; as if he car'd only that his Actions ſhould be Juſt, not that they ſhould be Acceptable, and that his Majeſty ſhould think that they proceeded only from the impulſion of Conſcience, without any ſympathy in his Affections; which from a Stoical and ſullen Nature might not have been miſinterpreted; yet, from a Perſon of ſo perfect a Habit of generous and obſequious Compliance with all good Men, might very well have been interpreted by the King as more than an ordinary averſeneſs to his Service; ſo that he took more Pains, and more forced his Nature to Actions unagreeable and unpleaſant to it, that he might not be thought to incline to the Court, than moſt Men have done to procure an Office there. And if any thing but not doing his Duty, could have kept him from receiving a Teſtimony of the King's Grace and Truſt at that time, he had not been called to his Council; not that he was in truth averſe from receiving publick Employment, for he had a great devotion to the King's Perſon, and had before uſed ſome ſmall Endeavour to be recommended to him for a Foreign Negotiation, and had once a deſire to be ſent Ambaſſador into France; but he abhorr'd an Imagination or Doubt ſhould ſink into the Thoughts of any Man, that in the diſcharge of his Truſt and Duty in Parliament, he had any biaſs to the Court, or that the King himſelf ſhould apprehend, that he looked for a Reward for being Honeſt.

1643. 19 Car. I.

“ For this reaſon, when he heard it firſt whiſper-ed, that the King had a purpoſe to make him a Privy Counſellor, for which there was in the beginning no other ground, but becauſe he was known ſufficient (Haud ſemper errat fama, aliquando & eligit) he reſolved to decline it; and at laſt ſuffered himſelf only to be over-rul'd, by the Advice and Perſwaſions of his Friends, to ſubmit to it. Afterwards when he found that the King intended to make him Secretary of State, he was poſitive to refuſe it; declaring to his Friends, That he was moſt unfit for it, and that he muſt either do that which would be great diſquiet to his own Nature, or leave that undone which was moſt neceſſary to be done by one that was honoured with that Place: For the moſt juſt and honeſt Men did, every Day, that which he could not give himſelf leave to do.

“ And indeed he was ſo exact and ſtrict an Obſerver of Juſtice and Truth, that he believed thoſe neceſſary Condeſcenſions and Applications to the weakneſs of other Men, and thoſe Arts and Inſinuations which are neceſſary for Diſcoveries and Prevention of ill, would be in him a Declenſion from his own Rules of Life; though he acknowledged them fit, and abſolutely neceſſary to be practiſed in thoſe Employments. He was, in truth, ſo preciſe in the practick Principles he preſcribed himſelf (to all others he was as indulgent) as if he had lived in Republica Platonis, non in fæce Romuli.

“ Two Reaſons prevailed with him to receive the Seals, and but for thoſe he had reſolutely avoided them. The firſt, the Conſideration that his Refuſal might bring ſome blemiſh upon the King's Affairs, and that Men would have believed, that he had refuſed ſo great an Honour and Truſt, becauſe he muſt have been with it obliged to do ſomewhat elſe not juſtifiable. And this he made matter of Conſcience; ſince he knew the King made choice of him, before other Men, eſpecially becauſe he thought him more Honeſt than other Men. The other was, leſt he might be thought to avoid it out of fear to do an ungracious thing to the Houſe of Commons, who were ſorely troubled at the diſplacing Sir Harry Vane, whom they look'd upon as removed for having done them thoſe Offices they ſtood in need of; and the Diſdain of ſo popular an Incumbrance wrought upon him next to the other.

“ For as he had a full Appetite of Fame by juſt and generous Actions, ſo he had an equal contempt of it by any ſervile Expedients; and he ſo much the more conſented to, and approved the Juſtice upon Sir Harry Vane, in his own private Judgment, by how much he ſurpaſſed moſt Men in the Religious Obſervation of a Truſt, the Violation whereof he would not admit of any Excuſe for.

“ For theſe Reaſons, he ſubmitted to the King's Command, and became his Secretary, with as humble and devoted an Acknowledgment of the greatneſs of the Obligation as could be expreſſed, and as true a ſenſe of it in his Heart. Yet two Things he could never bring himſelf to, whilſt he continued in that Office, that was to his Death; for which he was contented to be Reproached, as for omiſſions in a moſt neceſſary part of his place.

“ The one, employing of Spies, or giving any Countenance or Entertainment to them. I do not mean ſuch Emiſſaries as with danger would venture to view the Enemies Camp, and bring intelligence of their Number, or Quartering, or any Particulars that ſuch an Obſervation can comprehend; but thoſe, who by Communication of “ Guilt,

“Guilt, or Diſſimulation of Manners, wind themſelves into ſuch Truſts and Secrets as enable them to make Diſcoveries. The other, the Liberty of opening Letters, upon a ſuſpicion that they might contain Matter of dangerous Conſequence. For the firſt he would ſay, ſuch Inſtruments muſt be void of all Ingenuity and common Honeſty, before they could be of Uſe, and afterwards they could never be fit to be credited: And that no ſingle Preſervation could be worth ſo general a Wound and Corruption of Humane Society, as the cheriſhing ſuch Perſons would carry with it. The laſt he thought ſuch a violation of the Law of Nature, that no Qualification by Office could juſtifie him in the Treſpaſs; and though he was convinced by the Neceſſity and Iniquity of the Time, that thoſe Advantages of Information were not to be declined, and were neceſſarily to be practiſed, he found means to put it off from himſelf, whilſt he confeſſed he needed Excuſe and Pardon for the Omiſſion; ſo unwilling he was to reſign any part of good Nature to an Obligation in his Office.

“In all other Particulars he filled his Place with great Sufficiency, being well verſed in Languages, to underſtand any that are uſed in Buſineſs, and to make himſelf again underſtood. To ſpeak of his Integrity and his high Diſdain of any Bait that might ſeem to look toward Corruption, in tanto viro, injuria virtutum fuerit. Some ſharp Expreſſions he uſed againſt the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and his concurring in the firſt Bill to take away the Votes of Biſhops in the Houſe of Peers, gave occaſion to ſome to believe, and opportunity to others to conclude and publiſh, That he was no Friend to the Church and the eſtabliſhed Government of it; and troubled his Friends very much, who were more confident of the contrary, than prepared to anſwer the Allegations.

“The Truth is, he had unhappily contracted ſome prejudice to the Archbiſhop; and having obſerved his Paſſion, when, it may be, multiplicity of Buſineſs, or other Indiſpoſition had poſſeſſed him, did wiſh him leſs intangled and engaged in the Buſineſs of the Court or State: though I ſpeak it knowingly, he had a ſingular eſtimation and reverence of his great Learning and confeſſed Integrity; and really thought his own letting himſelf looſe to thoſe Expreſſions which imply'd a diſeſteem of the Archbiſhop, or at leaſt an acknowledgment of his Infirmities, would enable him to ſhelter him from part of the Storm he ſaw raiſed for his Deſtruction, which he abominated with his Soul.

“The giving his Conſent to the firſt Bill for the diſplacing the Biſhops, did proceed from two Grounds: The firſt, his not underſtanding then the Original of their Right and Suffrage there; the other, an Opinion that the Combination againſt the whole Government of the Church by Biſhops was ſo violent and furious, that a leſs Compoſition than the diſpenſing with their intermeddling in Secular Affairs, would not preſerve the Order. And he was perſwaded to this by the profeſſion of many Perſons of Honour, who declared, they did deſire the one, and would not then preſs the other; which, in that Particular, miſled many Men. But when his Obſervation and Experience made him diſcern more of their Intentions than he before ſuſpected, with great frankneſs he oppoſed the ſecond Bill that was preferr'd for that purpoſe, and had, without ſcruple, the Order it ſelf in perfect Reverence, and thought too great Encouragement could not poſſibly be given to Learning, nor too great Rewards to Learned Men. He was never in the leaſt degree ſway'd or mov'd by the Objections which were made againſt that Government in the Church (holding them moſt ridiculous) or affected to the other, which thoſe Men fancied to themſelves.

1643. 19 Car. I.

“He had a Courage of the moſt clear and keen Temper, and ſo far from Fear that he ſeem'd not without ſome Appetite of Danger, and therefore upon any occaſion of Action, he always engaged his Perſon in thoſe Troops which he thought, by the forwardneſs of the Commanders to be moſt like to be fartheſt engaged; and in ſuch Encounters he had about him an extraordinary Chearfulneſs, without at all affecting the execution that uſually attended them, in which he took no delight, but took pains to prevent it, where it was not by Reſiſtance made neceſſary; inſomuch, that at Edge-hill, when the Enemy was routed, he was like to have incurr'd great Peril by interpoſing to ſave thoſe who had thrown away their Arms, and againſt whom, it may be, others were more fierce for their having thrown them away; ſo that a Man might think, he came into the Field chiefly out of curioſity to ſee the Face of Danger, and Charity to prevent the ſhedding of Blood. Yet in his natural Inclination he acknowledged he was addicted to the Profeſſion of a Soldier; and ſhortly after he came to his Fortune, before he was of Age, he went into the Low Countries, with a Reſolution of procuring Command, and to give himſelf up to it; from which he was diverted by the compleat inactivity of that Summer: So he return'd into England, and ſhortly after enter'd upon that vehement courſe of Study we mention'd before, till the firſt alarm from the North; then again he made ready for the Field, and though he received ſome repulſe in the Command of a Troop of Horſe, of which he had a Promiſe, he went a Voluntier with the Earl of Eſſex.

“From the entrance into this unnatural War, his natural Chearfulneſs and Vivacity grew clouded, and a kind of Sadneſs and Dejection of Spirit ſtole upon him, which he had never been uſed to: yet being one of thoſe who believed that one Battle would end all Differences, and that there would be ſo great a Victory on one ſide, that the other would be compelled to ſubmit to any Conditions from the Victor (which Suppoſition and Concluſion generally ſunk into the Minds of moſt Men, and prevented the looking after many Advantages that might then have been laid hold of) he reſiſted thoſe Indiſpoſitions, Et in luctu, bellum inter remedia erat. But after the King's Return from Brainford, and the furious Reſolution of the two Houſes not to admit any Treaty for Peace, thoſe Indiſpoſitions which had before touch'd him grew into a perfect habit of unchearfulneſs; and he who had been ſo exactly eaſy and affable to all Men, that his Face and Countenance was always preſent and vacant to his Company, and held any cloudineſs, and leſs pleaſantneſs of the Viſage, a kind of Rudeneſs or Incivility, became on a ſuddain leſs communicable, and thence very ſad, pale, and exceedingly affected with the Spleen. In his Cloaths and Habit, which he had minded before, always with more Neatneſs, Induſtry and Expence, than is uſual to ſo great a Soul, he was not now only Incurious but too Negligent; and in his Reception of Suitors, and the neceſſary or caſual Addreſſes to his Place, ſo quick, and ſharp, and ſevere, that there wanted not ſome Men (Strangers to his Nature and Diſpoſition) who believed him Proud and Imperious, from which no mortal Man was ever more free.

“It is true, that as he was of a moſt incomparable Gentleneſs, Application, and even Submiſſion to good, and worthy, and entire Men; ſo he was naturally (which could not but be more evident in his Place, which objected him to another Converſation and Intermixture than his own Election would have done) adverſus malos injucundus, and was ſo ill a Diſſembler of his diſlike and diſin-

“ clination

1643. 19 Car. I.

“ clination to ill Men, that it was not poſſible for ſuch not to diſcern it. There was once in the Houſe of Commons ſuch a declared Acceptation of the good Service an eminent Member had done to them, and, as they ſaid, to the whole Kingdom, that it was moved, he being preſent, That the Speaker might in the Name of the whole Houſe give him Thanks; and then that every Member might as a teſtimony of his particular Acknowledgment, ſtir or move his Hat towards him; the which (though not order'd) when very many did, the Lord Falkland (who believed the Service it ſelf not to be of that moment, and that an honourable and generous Perſon could not have ſtoop'd to it for any Recompence) inſtead of moving his Hat, ſtretched both his Arms out, and claſped his Hands together upon the Crown of his Hat, and held it cloſe down to his Head, that all Men might ſee how odious that Flattery was to him, and the very approbation of the Perſon, though at that time moſt Popular.

“ When there was any Overture or Hope of Peace, he would be more erect and vigorous, and exceedingly ſollicitous to preſs any thing which he thought might promote it; and ſitting among his Friends, often, after a deep Silence and frequent Sighs, would, with a ſhrill and ſad Accent, ingeminate the Word Peace, Peace; and would paſſionately profeſs, That the very Agony of the War, and the View of the Calamities and Deſolation the Kingdom did and muſt endure, took his Sleep from him, and would ſhortly break his heart. This made ſome think, That he was ſo much enamour'd on Peace, that he would have been glad the King ſhould have bought it at any price: which was a moſt unreaſonable Calumny. As if a Man that was himſelf the moſt punctual and preciſe in every Circumſtance that might reflect upon Conſcience or Honour, could have wiſh'd the King to have committed a Treſpaſs againſt either. And yet this ſenſeleſs Scandal made ſome Impreſſion upon him, or at leaſt he uſed it for an Excuſe of the Daringneſs of his Spirit; for at the Leaguer before Glouceſter, when his Friend paſſionately reprehended him for expoſing his Perſon unneceſſarily to Danger (for he delighted to viſit the Trenches and neareſt Approaches, and to diſcover what the Enemy did) as being ſo much beſide the Duty of his Place, that it might be underſtood rather to be againſt it, he would ſay merrily, That his Office could not take away the Privilege of his Age; and that a Secretary in War might be preſent at the greateſt Secret of Danger; but withall alledg'd ſeriouſly, That it concern'd him to be more active in Enterpriſes of Hazard than other Men, that all might ſee that his Impatiency for Peace proceeded not from Puſillanimity, or Fear to adventure his own Perſon.

“ In the Morning before the Battle, as always upon Action, he was very chearful, and put himſelf into the firſt Rank of the Lord Byron's Regiment then advancing upon the Enemy, who had lined the Hedges on both ſides with Muſqueteers from whence he was ſhot with a Muſquet in the lower part of the Belly, and in the inſtant falling from his Horſe, his Body was not found till the next Morning; till when, there was ſome hope he might have been a Priſoner; tho' his neareſt Friends, who knew his Temper, receiv'd ſmall Comfort from that Imagination. Thus fell that incomparable Young-man, in the four and thirtieth Year of his Age, having ſo much diſpatch'd the true Buſineſs of Life, that the Eldeſt rarely attain to that immenſe Knowledge, and the Youngeſt enter not into the World with more Innocency: Whoſoever leads ſuch a Life, needs be the leſs anxious upon how ſhort Warning it is taken from him.”

The two Houſes wanted nothing ſo much as the Broad-Seal, that had been carried away by the Lord Keeper Littleton to the King; and without which they could not exerciſe that ſupreme Power which they had now aſſumed to themſelves. Hence the Commons voted July 4, that, 1. The Great Seal of England ought to attend the Parliament. 2. That the Abſence thereof hath been a Cauſe of great Miſchief to the Commonwealth. 3. That a Remedy ought to be provided for theſe Miſchiefs. 4. That the proper Remedy is by making a new Seal. Upon theſe Reſolutions a Conference was had with the Lords, who were prevailed with to join in an Ordinance dated Novemb. 11, That every Act under the old Seal ſhould be void, and that a new Great Seal of England, already by them made and provided, ſhould only be in force, and be put in the Cuſtody of theſe following Commiſſioners; John Earl of Rutland (in whoſe room was ſubſtituted Ruthin Earl of Kent) Oliver Earl of Bolingbrook, Oliver St. Johns Eſq; John Wild Serjeant at Law, Samuel Brown, and Edmund Prideaux Eſquires.

Parliament reſolve on a new Broad Seal.

An Ordinance was made Sept. 21, For the due and orderly Receiving and Collecting of the King's, Queen's, and Prince's Revenue, and the Arrearages thereof. And in Return the King iſſued a Proclamation Sept. 25. forbidding all the Tenants or Debtors of ſuch who are in actual and open Rebellion, or who adhere to, or aſſiſt the Rebels, to pay any Rents or Debts to ſuch Perſons, or any of them. So that all Property was now put upon the Point of the Sword, and no Law but that of Arms.

Seize on the King's Revenues.

As to Affairs in Ireland, the King being under a Neceſſity to recall as many of thoſe Forces as would obey his Orders to aſſiſt him nearer home, did grant a Commiſſion Apr. 23, (a) to the Marqueſs of Ormond, Lieutenant General of his Majeſty's Army and Forces in Ireland, to treat with the Iriſh Rebels upon a Ceſſation of Arms for one Year (b). This was ſoon objected againſt the King, by thoſe who brought him into the Neceſſity of doing it. The Lords and Commons reſolv'd to take the Government of Ireland, as they had done that of England, into their own hands. So on June 16, they publiſh'd a Declaration touching the preſent Lamentable Condition of Ireland, and eſtabliſh'd the Project of a Company of Adventurers, who for advancing Moneys here ſhould be paid in the Lands of that Kingdom. In the mean time his Majeſty purſued the Exigent of a Ceſſation of Arms, and declared his Reſolution in a Letter to the Lords Juſtices of that Kingdom, dated July 2. And by another of September 7, he commanded the Lords Juſtices to agree upon making a Ceſſation, and after that to ſend over the Forces which were employed againſt the Iriſh to aſſiſt his Majeſty againſt his Engliſh Rebels. And accordingly

Affairs in Ireland.

(a) Mr. Prynne is poſitive, that the Papiſts in Ireland procured the King (after Endymion Porter, a principal Conſpirator in the Plot, had gained the Cuſtody of the Great Seal of England) to iſſue out divers Proclamations under the Great Seal, proclaiming the Parliament of England Traytors and Rebels, and granting Commiſſions to Iriſh and Engliſh Papiſts (contrary to his former Proclamations) to raiſe Popiſh Forces both at home and in foreign Parts for his Defence, as his Truſtieſt and moſt Loyal Subjects; to ſend Letters and Commiſſions of Favour to the Iriſh Rebels, and hinder all Supplies from hence to the Proteſtant Party. And withall they procured the Queen, by the Earl of Antrim and Dutcheſs of Buckingham's mediation, to ſend Ammunition to the Iriſh Rebels, and to attempt to raiſe an Inſurrection in Scotland; as (ſaith Mr. Prynne) the Declaration of the Riſe and Progreſs of the Rebellion in Ireland more largely diſcovers. Rome's Maſter-Piece, &c.

(b) What moſt hurt the King's Intereſt in Ireland, was a pretended Zeal of the Papiſts for him, when they were in the moſt open and violent Oppoſition to Him. See, A Proclamation by the Lords Juſtices in Ireland, dat. 30, Octob. 1642, declaring it to be falſe and ſcandalous what was reported, that Sir Phelim Oneal had his Majeſties Commiſſion for the Inſurrection in Ireland; with a full Detection of that Sham, in Cox Hiſt. of Irel. ii. p. 78. —— See the Engliſh Copy of the Pope's Bull to the Iriſh Rebels, commending their great Zeal towards Propagating of the Catholick Faith, and that in imitation of their Godly and worthy Anceſtors, they had endeavoured by force of Arms to deliver their inthralled Nation from the Oppreſſions and grievous Injuries of the Hereticks. Before the News of this Treaty came into England, the Lords and Commons had publiſh'd a Declaration Sept. 30, againſt the intended Ceſſation or Treaty with the Iriſh. Several of the Forces under Colonel Ernley came over to ſerve the King; but many of them that came over with Vavaſour refuſed to fight againſt thoſe they were taught to call their Fellow-Proteſtants, and ſo joined with the Army under Eſſex, being aſſured that they then fought againſt the Papiſts: And, in ſhort, this Ceſſation in Ireland, and the Recruits call'd from thence to the King, were repreſented by the Artifice of Lying ſo odious and ſo Popiſh, that theſe Meaſures, as moſt others taken up by the King upon Neceſſity, were baſely improved to his greater Diſadvantage.

King and Parliament at Oxford.

It was ſo with the Parliament, which his Majeſty began now to form at Oxford. The Nobility and Gentry were in ſuch great Numbers attending upon the King, and many of them Members excluded from the two Houſes at Weſtminſter, that it was thought proper to aſſemble them into a Parliament at Oxford; where the King being in Perſon at the Head of them, might give them a better Title than the two Houſes had at Weſtminſter. And therefore the King publiſh'd his Proclamation, dated Dec. 22, for the aſſembling of the Members of both Houſes at Oxford on Monday Jan. 22, upon occaſion of the Invaſion by the Scots. And upon their Meeting on that Day, the King made this Speech.

King's Speech.

" My Lords and Gentlemen,

" WHen I conſider your Publick Intereſts and " Concernments in the Happineſs and Ho- " nour of this Nation, and your continual Suffer- " ings in this Rebellion for your Affection and Loy- " alty to me, I muſt look upon you as the moſt " competent Conſiderers and Counſellors how to " manage and improve the Condition we are all in; " for ſure our Condition is ſo equal, that the ſame " Violence hath oppreſſed us all.

" I have therefore called you together to be Wit- " neſſes of my Actions, and privy to my Intenti- " ons; and certainly if I had the leaſt Thought diſ- " agreeing with the Happineſs and Security of this " Kingdom, I would not adviſe with ſuch Counſellors: " And I doubt not but your Concurrence with me will " ſo far prevail over the Hearts and Underſtandings " of this whole Kingdom, who muſt look upon you " as Perſons naturally and originally truſted by and " for them; that it will be above the Reach and Malice " of thoſe who have hitherto had too great an Influ- " ence upon the People, to diſcredit my moſt entire " Actions and ſincere Promiſes. You will be the beſt " Witneſſes for the one, and Security for the other.

" Very many of you can bear me Witneſs with " what Unwillingneſs I ſuffer'd my ſelf to take up " theſe defenſive Arms; indeed with ſo great, that " I was firſt almoſt in the Power of thoſe who in " two ſet Battles have ſufficiently informed the " World how tender they have been of the Safety " of my Perſon. I foreſaw not only the Rage and " Oppreſſion which would every Day break out " upon my Subjects as the Malice of theſe ill Men " encreas'd, and their Purpoſes were detected; but " alſo the great Inconveniences my beſt Subjects " would ſuffer, even by my own Army raiſed and " kept for their Preſervation and Protection: For I " was not ſo ill a Soldier, as not to foreſee how im- " poſſible it was to keep a ſtrict Diſcipline, I being " to ſtruggle with ſo many Defects and Neceſſities. " And I aſſure you, the Senſe I have of their Suffer- " ings who deſerve well of me, by my Forces, hath " been a greater Grief to me than any thing for my " own Particular. My Hope was, that either by " Succeſs on my part, or Repentance on theirs, God " would have put a ſhort End to this great Storm: " But Guilt and Deſpair have made theſe Men more " wicked than I imagin'd they intended to be; for " inſtead of removing and reconciling theſe bloody " Diſtractions, and reſtoring Peace to this languiſh- " ing Country, they have invited a foreign Power " to invade this Kingdom, and that in your Names, " and challenge this Invaſion from them as a Debt " to the Commonwealth.

" You, My Lords, have like Yourſelves (as good " Patriots) expreſs'd your Diſſent, and vindicated " Yourſelves from that Imputation: And I doubt " not but you, Gentlemen, will let your Countries " know, how far you are from deſiring ſuch Aſſiſt- " ance; and how abſolute and peremptory a Breach " this Raiſing of Arms of my Scottiſh Subjects is of " that Pacification which was ſo lately and ſolemnly " made by you, and can intend nothing but a Con- " queſt of you and your Laws. I ſhall ſend you all " the Advertiſements I have of that Buſineſs which " is threatned from Scotland, and what is already " acted from thence, and ſhall deſire your ſpeedy " Advice and Aſſiſtance what is to be ſaid or done, " both with reference to this and that Kingdom.

" Our Ends being the ſame, I am ſure there will " be no other Difference in the way, than what upon " Debate and a right Underſtanding will be eaſily " adjuſted. Let our Religion, in which we are all " moſt nearly concerned, and without Care of which " we muſt not look for God's Bleſſing, be vindicated " and preſerved: Let my Honour and Rights, which " you find to have an inſeparable Relation with your " own Intereſt, be vindicated and reſtored: Let your " Liberties, Properties, Privileges, without which I " would not be your King, be ſecured and confirmed: " And there is nothing you can adviſe me to, I will " not meet you in, and I doubt not we ſhall together " inform Poſterity how much our Truſt and Con- " fidence in each other is a better Expedient for the " Peace and Preſervation of the Kingdom, than " Fears and Jealouſies.

" I ſhall keep you no longer from Conſulting to- " gether, than in telling you, that I have prepared " fit Places for your Meeting, to which I deſire " you to repair this Night, aſſuring you that I will " be always ready to receive any thing from you, " admitting you to me, or coming to you myſelf, " whenſoever you ſhall deſire it. And ſo God di- " rect you the beſt way."

Proceedings of Lords and Commons.

The chief Votes and Reſolutions of the Lords and Commons were to declare, That all the Subjects of Scotland who had conſented to the late Declaration, or had enter'd England in an hoſtile manner, and all the Subjects of England who were aſſiſting to them, are to be deem'd and taken as Traitors and Enemies to the State. That the Lords and Commons now remaining at Weſtminſter, who had conſented to the raiſing Forces under Command of the Earl of Eſſex, or to the making a new Seal, or to calling in the Scots, are guilty of High Treaſon. Theſe laſt Votes were not till March 12. after many of their Propoſals for Peace had been rejected by the other Parliament; and for which reaſon they at the ſame time Reſolved upon the Queſtion, That all the Endeavours and Offers of Peace and Treaty, made by his Majeſty, by the Advice of the Lords and Commons in Parliament aſſembled at Oxford, have been refuſed and rejected by the Lords and Commons remaining at Weſtminſter. And ſoon after they drew up a large Declaration of their Proceedings touching a Treaty of Peace and the Refuſal thereof, with the ſeveral Letters and Anſwers that paſſed therein, actually ſubſcribed by 50 Peers and 140 Commoners, beſides thoſe who were employ'd in his Majeſty's Service, or abſent with Leave, or by Sickneſs; and after their Subſcription concluding thus, Whoever now conſiders, how many have retired themſelves into ſeveral Counties, and ſo are abſent from Weſtminſter, and yet cannot, through the danger of Travelling, be preſent at Oxford; how many have withdrawn themſelves into the Parts beyond the Seas; how many of their own principal Inſtruments are voted out of the Houſe by themſelves, as Sir John Hotham

1643. 19 Car. I. tham and his Son, Sir Alexander Carew, Mr. Martin, Mr. Fienes, and many others; and how many now are Impriſoned by them; how many Members from the beginning have been factiouſly kept from the Houſe, upon Queſtions of Election; and how many without any colour are kept in, by not ſuffering their Elections to be reported; and that there are thirty five Members dead, into whoſe rooms no new Perſons are choſen; how many ſince are become Barons by Deſcent or Creation; will eaſily conclude how ſmall the Number is which remains, and of thoſe how few in truth have Right to ſit there.

Character of this Oxford Parliament.

We may indeed reaſonably infer, that the Peers and Commoners with the King did exceed thoſe at Weſtminſter in Number and Figure: And one of the Reaſons why they did the King and Nation ſo little Service, muſt needs be this; They were afraid of War and Victory, and too inclinable to Peace and Treaty. If inſtead of ineffectual Papers and Propoſals they had unanimouſly took the Field, and exerted all their Strength for one or two deciſive Blows, they could not have fail'd, humanely ſpeaking, of bringing the other Parliament and Army to much better Terms of Accommodation, than thoſe which to no Purpoſe, by idle Letters and Meſſages, they now offer'd to them.

State of Religion.

As to the Affairs of Religion in this Year 1643, they were all agreeable to the Times, changeable and tumultuous. The two Houſes for an Art of caſting the Odium of Profaneneſs on the Royal Party, made an Ordinance May 5. for burning, by the Hand of the Common Hangman, the Book of Sports, or the Proclamation of K. James reviv'd by K. Charles for tolerating Exerciſes and ſome lawful Sports upon Sundays after Divine Service. And they mark't out all the Clergy of England for Scandalous, who dar'd appear to Write, or Preach, or Talk for the true old legal Conſtitution of Church and State, Sequeſtring, Impriſoning, and Depriving by ſuch arbitrary Intimations of their Will and Pleaſure (a), that the King was obliged May 15. to publiſh his Proclamation againſt the Oppreſſion of the Clergy, by the Intruſion of factious and ſchiſmatical Perſons into their Cures, and inverting and detaining their Tythes and Poſſeſſions, by Order of one or both Houſes of Parliament, contrary to all Law and Juſtice.

The Clergy miſerably opreſt.

The greateſt Noiſe was about an Aſſembly of Divines. The regular and legal Convocation called with this Parliament, did not think themſelves bound to a continual Attendance on it; and therefore, as the Upper Houſe was effectually diſſolved by the Impriſonment, and other Perſecutions of the Archbiſhop and Biſhops, ſo the Lower Houſe or inferiour Clergy (knowing themſelves incapable to act without the Metropolitan and his Suffragan Brethren) did ſoon after retire and abſent themſelves without any Application to the Lay Lords or Commons; who indeed were glad to connive at their Departure, and asked no Queſtion what was become of them: for they intended to ſubſtitute an Aſſembly of themſelves, and their own choſen Creatures to be a ſtanding Council to the Parliament in Matters of Religion. This had been long in Agitation, tho' not paſs'd into Ordinance till June 12. in this Year; when it was intitled, An Ordinance of the Lords and Commons in Parliament for the calling of an Aſſembly of learned and godly Divines, and others, to be conſulted with by the Parliament for the ſettling of the Government, and Liturgy of the Church of England, and for vindicating and clearing of the Doctrine of the ſaid Church from falſe Aſperſions and Interpretations; wherein they declare, "That nothing being dearer "to them than the Purity of Religion, that many "things remaining in the Liturgy, Diſcipline, and "Government of the Church, which require more "perfect Reformation, that the preſent Church Go"vernment by Archbiſhops, Biſhops, &c. ſhall be "taken away, and ſuch a Government ſhall be ſet"tled, as is moſt agreeable to God's Word, and of "nearer Agreement with the Church of Scotland; "therefore it was thought fit and neceſſary to call "an Aſſembly of Learned, Godly, and Judicious "Divines, to conſult and adviſe of ſuch Matters as "ſhould be propoſed unto them by both or either "of the Houſes of Parliament, and to give their "Advice and Counſel when and as often as they "ſhall be thereunto required. To which purpoſe "the Perſons in this Ordinance named, that is to "ſay, Algernon Earl of Northumberland, William "Earl of Bedford, and eight other Peers; John Selden Eſq; Francis Rous Eſq; and eighteen other "Commoners; Herbert Palmer of Aſhwell B. D. Oliver Boles of Sutton B. D. with about 118 other Di"vines, and ſuch other Perſons as ſhould be nomi"nated by both Houſes of Parliament, upon Sum"mons ſigned by the Clerks of Parliament to aſ"ſemble at Weſtminſter in K. Hen. VII's Chapel on "July 1. 1643. from time to time to ſit, and be "removed and diſſolved, in ſuch manner as by both "Houſes of Parliament ſhould be directed; to con"fer and treat amongſt themſelves of ſuch Matters "and Things as ſhall be propoſed by both, or ei"ther of the ſaid Houſes, and no other. And it was "farther ordained, that William Twiſs Dr. in Divi"nity, ſhould ſit in the Chair as Prolocutor of the "ſaid Aſſembly, and upon his Death or Sickneſs, "ſuch other Perſon as ſhall be agreed on by both "Houſes of Parliament. Every Divine to be al"lowed for their Attendance four Shillings a Day. "If any Perſon die, others to be nominated by the "two Houſes. Nor ſhall they in this Aſſembly aſ"ſume to exerciſe any Juriſdiction, Power or Au"thority Eccleſiaſtical whatſoever, or any other "Power than is herein particularly expreſſed."

Convocation retir'd.

Aſſembly of Divines.

The manner of packing this Aſſembly is thus reported by the great Hiſtorian. "They ſhew what "Conſultation they meant to have with Godly and "Learned Divines, and what Reformation they in"tended, by appointing the Knights and Burgeſſes "to bring in the Names of ſuch Divines for the ſe"veral Counties, as they thought fit, to conſtitute "an Aſſembly for the framing a new Model for "the Government of the Church, which was done "accordingly: Thoſe who were true Sons of the "Church, not ſo much as endeavouring the Nomi"nation of Sober and Learned Men, abhorring "ſuch a Reformation, as began with the Invaſion "and Suppreſſion of the Churches Rights, in a Sy"nod, as well known as Magna Charta. And if "any well affected Member, not enough conſider"ing the Scandal and the Conſequence of that Vi"olation, did name an Orthodox and well reputed "Divine to aſſiſt in that Aſſembly, it was argument "enough againſt him, that he was nominated by a "Perſon in whom they had no Confidence. And "they only had Reputation enough to commend to "this Conſultation, who were known to deſire the "utter Demoliſhing of the whole Fabrick of the "Church: So that of about one hundred and twen"ty, of which that Aſſembly was to conſiſt (tho' "by the Recommendation of two or three Members "of the Commons, whom they were not willing "to diſpleaſe, and by the Authority of the Lords, "who added a ſmall Number to thoſe named by the "Houſe of Commons, a few very reverend and "worthy Men were inſerted, yet of the whole "Number) they were not above twenty, who were "not declar'd and avow'd Enemies to the Doctrine "or Diſcipline of the Church of England; ſome of "them infamous in their Lives and Converſati"ons, and moſt of them of very mean Parts in "Learning, if not of ſcandalous Ignorance, and "of no other Reputation than of Malice to the "Church of England; ſo that that Convention "hath not ſince produced any thing that might Lord Clarendon's Character of this Aſſembly of Divines.

(a) Dr. Plume, in the Life of Biſhop Hacket, computes, that in the City of London, and Pariſhes adjacent, one hundred and fifteen Parochial Miniſters were turn'd out, beſides many hundreds in all Countries, more than ever had been in Queen Mary's, Queen Elizabeth's, and King James's, or King Charles's Reigns, by the Biſhops of all ſorts.

“not then reaſonably have been expected from it.”

Opening of that Aſſembly.

This Aſſembly met on Saturday July 1, in the Chapel of King Henry VII. where a Sermon was preach'd by the appointed Prolocutor Dr. Twiſs, both Houſes of Parliament being preſent. After which they open'd their Seſſion with reading over the Ordinance for their Convention, and calling over the Liſt of the Clergy appointed for that Aſſembly, ſixty nine then appearing, and the Names of ſuch as appeared not were mark'd, and ſo they adjourned till Monday, and on Friday following kept a Faſt with both Houſes. Every Member before his Admiſſion to Sit and Vote, took this Oath or ſolemn Vow:

I A. B. do ſeriouſly Promiſe and Vow, in the preſence of Almighty God that in this Aſſembly, whereof I am a Member, I will maintain nothing in point of Doctrine, but what I believe to be moſt agreeable to the Word of God; nor in point of Diſcipline but what may make moſt for God's Glory, and the Peace and Good of his Church.

Aſſemblies Petition to the Parliament.

On July 19. they delivered a Petition to both Houſes of Parliament, humbly ſhewing, “That upon the two late ſad and unexpected Defeats of our Forces in the North and in the Weſt, they preſent unto their religious and prudent Conſideration, Firſt, That they would command a publick and extraordinary Day of Humiliation. Secondly, That they would vouchſafe inſtantly to take it into their more ſerious Conſideration how they may moſt ſpeedily ſet up Chriſt more glorioſly in all his Ordinances within this Kingdom, and reform all things amiſs throughout the Land. For which they humbly lay before them theſe Particulars. 1. The bruitiſh Ignorance and palpable Darkneſs of the People. 2. The grievous and heinous Pollution of the Lord's Supper. 3. The bold venting of corrupt Doctrines. 4. The prophanation of any part of the Lord's Day and the Days of ſolemn Faſting. 5. A thorough and ſpeedy Proceeding againſt blind Guides and ſcandalous Miniſters. 6. The Laws to be quicken'd againſt Swearing and Drunkenneſs. 7. Severe courſe to be taken againſt Fornication, Adultery, and Inceſt. 8. All Monuments of Idolatry and Superſtition to be aboliſhed. 9. Juſtice to be executed againſt all Delinquents. 10. Relief of our diſtreſſed Brethren, Priſoners in Oxford, York, and elſewhere, for the cauſe of God. That ſo God who is now by the Sword avenging the quarrel of his Covenant, beholding your Integrity and Zeal, may turn from the fierceneſs of his Wrath, hear our Prayers, go forth with our Armies, perfect the Work of Reformation, forgive our Sins, and ſettle Truth and Peace throughout the Kingdom. And your Petitioners ſhall ever pray, &c.” (a)

Who grant ſome of their Requeſts.

The Spirit of this Aſſembly appears much in this Petition, that, impartially ſpeaking, is ſtufft with Schiſm, Sedition, Cruelty and Cant: But the two Houſes knew it their Intereſt to gratifie moſt of theſe Petitions, therefore in Anſwer to the 8th, an Ordinance was made 28 Aug. for the utter demoliſhing and removing all Monuments of Superſtition or Idolatry, as Altars and Tables ſet Altarwiſe, and all Rails about them, Tapers, Candleſticks, Croſſes, Images, Pictures and ſuperſtitious Inſcriptions. In anſwer to the 5th Petition, an Order of the Commons was given Sept. 5, to enquire into and proceed againſt ſcandalous Miniſters, and ſuch as were aſſiſtant to the Forces raiſed againſt the Parliament. And moſt of the other Deſires were ſuitably ſatisfied.

Scotch Brethren taken into the Aſſembly.

Many additional Members were join'd to the Aſſembly, and a Committee of Scotch Brethren were taken in with them. When they had been very ſervile Inſtruments in promoting the Parliamentary Cauſe at home, they were to be then employ'd in ſolliciting the ſame Cauſe with foreign Nations. Hence on Novemb, 22. it was order'd by the Commons, That the Aſſembly of Divines be moved to write Letters unto ſome Divines, or Churches of Zealand and Holland, and to the Proteſtant Churches in France, Switzerland, and other Reformed Churches, to inform them againſt the great Artifices and Diſguiſes of his Majeſty's Agents in theſe Parts, &c.

Accordingly they drew up Letters directed to ſeveral Paſtors and Elders in the Belgick, French, Helvetian, and other Reformed Churches, running in Engliſh thus.

They write to Foreign Churches.

Right Reverend and dearly Beloved in our Lord Jeſus Chriſt,

W*E the Aſſembly of Divines, and others* —— ſalute you in the Lord. We doubt not but the ſad Reports of the Miſeries under which the Church and Kingdom of England do bleed, and wherewith we are all ready to be ſwallowed up (the Cup which the Righteous Lord hath given us to drink) is long ſince come to your Ears. And it is probable that the ſame Inſtruments of Satan and Antichriſt, have endeavoured by their Emiſſaries to preſent us as black as may be among you; who by Falſehood and Lyes endeavour every where to put fair Gloſſes upon their own bloody Deſigns, and to Reproach our ſtrugglings after a more thorough Reformation of Religion in the Church of England, according to the Word of God and our juſt Defence of our Lives, Liberties, and Religion, againſt their cruel and unjuſt Violences. And ſo they proceed to juſtify the two Houſes, and to caſt the Odium of the War upon the King and his Friends. And then they deſire three things of the dear Brethren they write to: 1. That you would judge aright of our afflicted Condition, and of our Innocency and Integrity in this our juſt Defence.—— 2. That ye will ſympathize with us as Brethren who ſuffer in and for the ſame Cauſe wherein your ſelves have been oppreſſed. ——Laſtly, That as all the Antichriſtian Faction owns the Cauſe of our Adverſaries as their own, and contributes what lies in their power every way to their Help and our Ruin; ſo that you would embrace our Condition as your own Common Cauſe, &c. —— And we crave your Prayers, that God who heareth Prayer, now he hath humbled us and broken all our Arms of Fleſh, (whereon alas we have been too prone to lean) would himſelf bring Salvation to us, that the Bleſſings of Truth and Peace might reſt upon us, that theſe three Nations may be joined as one Stick in the Hand of the Lord, and that we our ſelves, contemptible Builders, called to repair the Houſe of God in a troubleſome time, being aſhamed of our former Pollutions, may ſee the Pattern of this Houſe, and commend ſuch a Platform to our Zorobabels, as may be moſt agreeing to his own ſacred Word, of neareſt Conformity to the beſt Reformed Churches, and greateſt Uniformity amongſt our ſelves, that all Mountains may become Plains before them and us, that then all who now ſee the Plummet in our hands, may alſo behold the Topſtone ſet upon the Head of the Lord's Houſe amongſt us, and may help us with ſhouting to cry, Grace, Grace, unto it.——The Senſe and the very Language of theſe Letters had been a Reproach to any Divines but ſuch as were ſingular Enemies to the King and the Church of England.

Whitlock's Opinion of the Aſſembly.

Their Ignorance is expoſed by a Friend of their own, Mr. Whitlock, who in his Memoirs does relate, “That divers Members of both Houſes were Members of the Aſſembly of Divines, and had the ſame Liberty with the Divines to ſit and debate, and give their Votes in any Matter which was in Conſideration amongſt them: In which Debates Mr. Selden ſpake admirably, and confuted divers of them in their own Learning. And ſometimes when they had cited a Text of Scripture to prove their Aſſertion, he would tell "them, Perhaps in your little Pocket-Bibles with gilt Leaves (which they would often pull out and read) the Tranſlation may be thus, but the Greek or the Hebrew ſignifies thus and thus: and ſo would totally Silence them." Archbiſhop Laud gave this Opinion of them: "A great, if not the greater part of them were Browniſts, or Independents, or New England Miniſters, if not worſe, or at beſt refractory Perſons to the Doctrine or Diſcipline, or both, of the Church of England eſtabliſh'd by Law, and now brought together to reform it. An excellent Conclave! but I pray God that befall not them which Tully obſerves fell upon Epicurus, Siqua corrigere voluit deteriora fecit, He made every thing worſe that he went about to mend. —— It would become this Synod to remember, that there is a Convocation of the Engliſh Prelates and Clergy lawfully choſen and ſummoned, and by no ſupreme or legal Authority as yet diſſolved. —— This, without God's infinite Mercy, will bring forth a Schiſm fierce enough to rend and tear Religion out of this Kingdom."

Their greateſt Duty this Year was to prepare the Hearts of the People for taking the Solemn League and Covenant. When both Houſes of Parliament met to take the Covenant at St. Margaret's Church in Weſtminſter, Sept. 25, the Aſſembly of Divines waited on them. Mr. White, a Member of the Aſſembly, Prayed a whole Hour that God would ſanctifie them for that good Work. Then Mr. Nye, another Member, preach'd it up laboriouſly from the Pulpit, ſhew'd the Warrant of it from Scripture, gave Examples of it ever ſince the Creation, and ſet forth the Benefits of it to the Church of Chriſt and to this Kingdom. Mr. Henderſon, a Scotch Commiſſioner in the Aſſembly, made a long Declaration of the great Mercies the Scots had received by ſuch Covenants, of the Expedience and Neceſſity of the preſent taking of this Covenant; and of its being a ſure Condition of the States of Scotland aſſiſting the Parliament of England. Then Mr. Nye again from the Pulpit read out the Covenant, and all held up their Hands in Teſtimony of their Aſſent to it: Then all the Members of Parliament, and after them all the Members of the Aſſembly, ſubſcribed their Names: And to conclude the Service of the Day, Dr. Gouge from the Pulpit prayed for a Bleſſing upon it, and upon all that took it. (a)

Dr. Featly weary of them.

Dr. Featly was the almoſt only Epiſcopal Divine who remain'd with them; and he grew ſo uneaſie at their zealous Proceedings, that he gave account of them in Letters to Oxford, and promis'd to withdraw from them; but his Letters being intercepted, he was not only expell'd the Aſſembly, but deprived of all his Eccleſiaſtical Preferments (b). And Dr. Uſher, Primate of Armagh, was ſoon after voted out of the Aſſembly, only becauſe he refuſed to appear in it, and choſe rather to attend his Royal Maſter at Oxford; who being to receive the Sacrament from his Hands at Chriſt-Church, riſing up from his Knees, and beckoning to the Archbiſhop for a ſhort Forbearance, made this Proteſtation.

Archbiſh. Uſher expell'd.

King's Proteſtation at the Sacrament.

My Lord,

I Eſpy here many reſolved Proteſtants, who may declare to the World the Reſolution I do now make. I have, to the utmoſt of my power, prepared my Soul to become a worthy Receiver: And may I ſo receive Comfort from the bleſſed Sacrament, as I do intend the Eſtabliſhment of the true Reformed Proteſtant Religion, as it ſtood in its beauty in the happy days of Queen Elizabeth, without any connivance at Popery. I bleſs God that in the midſt of theſe publick Diſtractions, I have ſtill liberty to communicate: And may this Sacrament be my Damnation, if my Heart do not join with my Lips in this Proteſtation.

A farther Account and Character of theſe Presbyters Aſſembling, and Acting without their Biſhops, is thus given by the Lord Clarendon. "The Aſſembly, beſides that it was conſtituted of Members who had all renounced their Obedience to their King, and Submiſſion to the Church of England, by their Appearance and Preſence in that Convention, had been lately taught how dangerous it was to diſſent from the current Opinion of the Houſe of Commons; for Dr. Featly (upon whoſe reputation in Learning they had raiſed great Advantages to themſelves) having made many Speeches in the Aſſembly in the behalf of the Order of Biſhops and their Function, and againſt the Alienation of Church Lands, as Sacrilege, and eſpecially inveigh'd againſt The Liberty that was taken in Matter of Religion, by which ſo many Sects were grown up, to the Scandal and Reproach of the Proteſtant Doctrine, if not of Chriſtianity it ſelf, had ſo far incurr'd their Diſpleaſure, and provok'd their Jealouſie, that an ordinary Fellow (ſo well confirm'd in Spirit that they feared not his Failing or Converſion) was directed to make Application to him in caſes of Conſcience, and after he had gotten ſufficient Credit with him (which was no hard matter) to intimate to him, That he had a ſure and unqueſtionable Conveyance to Oxford, or that he was to go thither himſelf, and if he had any Occaſions to uſe his Service thither, he would faithfully execute his Commands. The Dr. believing the Meſſenger to be ſincere, and the King's Affairs ſtanding then proſperous, gave him Letters for the Archbiſhop of Armagh Primate of Ireland, who waited on his Majeſty; and by this Artifice the ſame Inſtrument receiv'd two or three Letters from him, pretending they were ſtill ſent by infallible Hands, and brought them always to thoſe Perſons by whom he was entruſted in the Work of his Impoſture.

"The Letters contained many Apologies for himſelf, For being engaged in ſuch a Congregation to which he ſubmitted purely out of Conſcience, and for the Service of the King and Church, in hope that he might be able to prevent many Extravagancies, and to contain thoſe unruly Spirits within ſome Bounds of Regularity and Moderation; of his Endeavours that way he gave many Inſtances, and ſent Copies of what he had ſaid in juſtification of Epiſcopacy, the Liturgy, and the eſtabliſhed Government, and concluded with a Deſire to his Grace, To procure a good Opinion from the King towards him, and ſome Biſhoprick or Deanery for his recompence. About the time that this Agitation was in Scotland, and very little before this Covenant was traſmitted, theſe Letters were produced, and a Charge againſt that Doctor, For betraying the Truſt repoſed in him, and adhering to the Enemy; and thereupon the poor Man was expelled the Aſſembly of Divines, both his Livings (for he had two within a very ſmall diſtance of London) ſequeſtred; his Study of Books and Eſtate ſeiz'd, and himſelf committed to a common Goal, where he continued to his Death; which befell him the ſooner through the extreme wants he underwent, ſo ſollicitous was that Party to remove any impediment that troubled them, and ſo implacable to any who were weary of their Journey, though they had accompanied them very far in their way.

"This freſh Example the Aſſembly of godly and Learned Divines, had before their Eyes when this Covenant was ſent to them for their Conſideration and ſpeedy Reſolution; and according to the Sufferings of Abp. Laud.

Archbiſhop Laud in the Tower had long expected his threaten'd Tryal, but before his Tryal he was to bear ſeveral Sentences paſſed upon him. On May 16, an Ordinance was made to deprive him of the Right of Preſenting or Collating to any Eccleſiaſtical Benefice, and to oblige him to accept of ſuch Perſons as ſhould be nominated by both Houſes of Parliament (b). And on June 10, another Ordinance was made to ſuſpend the Archbiſhop Ab Officio & Beneficio & omni & omnimoda Juriſdictione Archiepiſcopali, and that all his Temporalities be ſequeſter'd by and unto the Parliament. Nay, and April 25, it was moved in the Houſe of Commons to ſend him to New-England, a Plot laid by Peters, Wells and others, but it was rejected. May 1, his Chapel Windows at Lambeth were defaced, and the Steps torn up. May 9, his Goods and Books were ſeiz'd, and his Perſon put under cloſer Reſtraint. On May 23, he was forced to ſend a humble Petition to the Lords for Maintenance, the Prayer of the Petition running Oxford Parliament Petition the King.

1644. The Lords and Commons at Oxford ſeeing no hopes of Peace, adviſed the King to take the Field, as the only viſible Means now left, and to give them a Receſs from their Parliamentary Attendance till the next Winter (c); In order to this, they preſented a Petition the Day before their riſing, wherein To ſatisfie all the World, or leave them inexcuſable who will not be ſatisfied, they humbly deſire; 1. King's Speech.

And the next Day being April 16, the King diſmiſſed them with a Speech; wherein he told them, that he could not ſo ſoon have parted with them, if they had not themſelves deſired it, out of Zeal and Affection to him and to their Country. He heartily thanked them for what they had done, and fully approved of what they deſired. And becauſe moſt of them were engaged in his Service, either in a Civil or a Martial way, he gave them directions how to be moſt ſerviceable to him in their reſpective ways; ending thus: "To conclude, my Lords and Gentle-"men, I do now again (yet never enough) thank "you for your great and unanimous Expreſſions of "your Affections to me, which hath laid an inex-"preſſible Obligation upon me: And be aſſured, "that there is no Profeſſion which I have made for "the Defence and Maintenance of our Religion, "Laws, and Liberties, which I will not inviolably "obſerve. Scots Army invited by the Engliſh Parliament.

And now to look into the Field, that which ruined the King was the March of the Scots Army into England, to anſwer the Invitation and come in to the brotherly aſſiſtance of the two Houſes at Weſtminſter, who ſent a Committee of their own to meet them on the Borders, and conduct them, and ſupply them in the moſt friendly, faithful manner. This Engliſh Committee was joined to another ſelect Company of Scots, and they were the Committee of both Kingdoms, and in effect an united Camp Parliament. By their Advice the Scots Army under General Leven had advanced from Berwick on Jan. 19, and without oppoſition came before New-caſtle Feb. 3: but not being able to take that Town, they paſſed the Tyne on Feb. 28, and entered Sunderland March 4. The Marqueſs of New-Caſtle, General for the King in thoſe northern Parts, having reinforced his Army to about 14 thouſand Horſe and Foot, attended ſo near upon the Scots Army, and ſo intercepted their Supply, that ſometimes they had neither Meat nor Drink, and never above twenty four Hours Proviſion before hand: But they colour'd over this Neceſſity by keeping a Solemn Faſt, and by preſſing on toward Durham for better Quarters. To ſtop their Advance, the Marqueſs drew up his Army on March 23, at Hilton, on the North of the River Wear, the Scots being drawn up on a Hill Eaſt from them towards the Sea. So the Armies fac'd each other, and ſkirmiſh'd in Parties; the Field-word given by the Marqueſs being Prophetically enough, Now or never, and by the Scots in their way of profaning Religion, The Lord of Hoſts is with us. The Marqueſs not able to force the Scots to a Battle, retreated toward his Quarters at Durham, and the Scots ſlowly followed.

Their March.

The two Houſes at Weſtminſter knowing that a defeat of the Scots would be a ruin to their whole Cauſe, were extremely ſollicitous for their ſafe Progreſs; and by their Advice the Committee of both Kingdoms on March 5, wrote a Letter to the Lord Fairfax to join with his Son Sir Thomas Fairfax (who was to leave the Siege of Lathom Houſe in Derbyſhire, and to haſten with two thouſand Horſe into the Weſtriding of Yorkſhire) and ſo with joint Forces to keep Intelligence with the Scotiſh Army, and give them the beſt Accommodation and Aſſiſtance. Colonel Bellaſis Governour of York drew his Forces to Selby to hinder if poſſible, the conjunction of the two Fairfax's; but they notwithſtanding join'd, and fell upon Bellaſis and his inferior Forces at Selby, and obtained a compleat Victory over them on April 11, taking Priſoners the Colonel, many Officers, and 1600 Soldiers; for which the two Houſes appointed a Solemn Thankſgiving on April 23.

1644. 20 Car. I.

The Parliament extremely concerned for the Scots Army.

Send an Engliſh Army to join with them.

The Marqueſs of New-caſtle now finding that he ſhould be between two Armies, was reſolved to prevent that Danger by marching back to York to make the better Defence for that important Place; the Scots followed with the double joy of ſeeming to purſue their Enemies, and haſting to join their Friends. And accordingly on April 20, they join'd with the Engliſh Army under Lord Fairfax and Sir Thomas Fairfax, and immediately marched to York and ſhut up the Marqueſs of New-caſtle, who had juſt enter'd that City, and defended it with great Bravery for ſeveral Months againſt the united Armies, that were farther reinforced on June 3, by a conſiderable Body under the Earl of Mancheſter, who had took Lincoln May 6, and marched on to the Leaguer at York without oppoſition.

York Beſieged.

Under this Preſſure the Marqueſs and his Garriſon of York depended on no hopes of Relief but from Prince Rupert, who had relieved Newark, and then marching into Shropſhire had took in the Garriſons of Longford near Newport, and of Stopworth in Cheſhire; and then relieving the brave Counteſs of Derby in her Houſe at Lathom, he took the Town of Bolton May 28, and Leverpool June 11, and then directed his March with all expedition toward York, where the Marqueſs was brought to Treaty and to Propoſitions of Surrendry; but on the News of Prince Rupert's advance, the three Generals, Earl of Leven, Lord Fairfax, and Earl of Mancheſter, ingloriouſly raiſed the Siege, and retired to Marſton-Moor, hoping to intercept the Prince in his way to York; but he declined engaging, and ſafely entered York to the great Joy of that long diſtreſſed Place. Here the Marqueſs would have perſwaded the Prince to have repoſed himſelf, till they recruited their Forces and could then purſue the Enemy. But the Prince, who was by Nature always forward and impatient, drew out the Forces from the City, and finding them to make up an Army of 14000 Foot, and 9000 Horſe, he led them directly to Marſton-Moor, and on Tueſday July 2, offered Battle to the three conjoin'd Armies, whoſe Right-wing of Horſe was commanded by Sir Thomas Fairfax, the main Battalia of Foot by the Lord Fairfax towards the Right-wing, and towards the Left General Leven with the reſt of the Scotiſh Foot; the Left-wing of Horſe by the Earl of Mancheſter and his Lieutenant-General Cromwel. The Field-Word given by the Prince was God and the King, by the other Party God with Us. By Cromwel's breaking through the Right-wing of the Prince's, and coming back from the chaſe of them to the timely Relief of Sir Thomas Fairfax, beat and purſued by Colonel Harry, who commanded the Prince's Left-wing, the Victory fell to the Parliament Army, and the Generals gave this Accompt of it in a Letter to the Committee of both Kingdoms.——— "Before "both Armies were in a readineſs, it was ſeven a-"clock at Night, about which time they advanc'd Marqueſs of Newcaſtle leaves the Kingdom.

The next Morning after the Battle, the Marqueſs of Newcaſtle reſolved to leave the Kingdom, and with his two Sons and Brother, and Dr. Brambal Biſhop of Londonderry, Lord Falconbridge, Lord Widdrington and others, took Ship at Scarborough, and arrived at Hamburgh on July 8, the Marqueſs not returning into England till the Reſtauration of King Charles the Second.

York ſurrender'd.

Prince Rupert with ſome rallied Forces drew off into Lancaſhire, and left Sir Thomas Glemham Governour of York to ſurrender that City upon Articles on July 16. After which, upon conſultation between the Generals and Parliament Commiſſioners it was agreed, 1. That the Lord Fairfax ſhould remain Governour of York, and ſend a thouſand Horſe into Lancaſhire, to join the Forces in thoſe Parts, and to attend the Motions of Prince Rupert. 2. That the Scotiſh Army ſhould march Northward, to join with the Earl of Calendar, who was advancing with additional Forces, and to reduce Newcaſtle. 3. That the Earl of Mancheſter ſhould march towards Lincolnſhire, and recruit his Army from his own Aſſociation.

All unfortunate on the King's Side.

After this Diſpoſition, the Earl of Mancheſter took in Tickhil Caſtle July 26, and Sheffield Caſtle Aug. 10, and Colonel Fretchwell's Houſe Aug. 12, and Balſover Caſtle Aug. 14, and Wingfield Manor Aug. 21, and the next Day Welbeck Houſe. General Leven join'd the Earl of Calendar in the Siege of Newcaſtle, and took the Town by Storm October 19; ſo that all things in the North went moſt unhappily againſt the King.

The Earl of Eſſex by an Ordinance of the Lords and Commons March 26, was to have an Army conſiſting of ſeven thouſand five hundred Foot and three thouſand Horſe, with which he kept his Head Quarters ſometimes at Windſor and ſometimes at St. Albans. Sir William Waller by help of the Aſſociated Counties of Southampton, Suſſex, Surry and Kent, had another Army for the Parliament of ten thouſand Men, with which he fought the Lord Hopton and Earl of Forth at Cheriton-Down in Hampſhire March 29; and though the King's Forces for a while ſeem'd to have the better of it, they were afterwards defeated with very conſiderable Loſs. The two Houſes made an Ordinance for a Thankſgiving for this Victory on April 9, and took advantage of that Joy to ſend a Committee of Lords and Commons the ſame day to Guild-hall, who in ſet Speeches drew in the Citizens to advance Men and Money for the Cauſe, which, they ſaid, God had proſper'd (a).

Waller's Army ſucceſsful.

King prepares to go to the Army.

The King providing now in Perſon to open the Campaign, iſſued a Proclamation dated March 22, commanding all his Subjects and Servants that have any Office, Place, or Fees of his Gift or Grant, to attend his Perſon before April 20, and another dated April 15, requiring the Country to bring in their Corn and other Proviſions to Oxford, for ready Money at reaſonable Prizes, under Pain of having it fetch'd away, or burnt upon approach of the Rebels. Againſt which the two Houſes at Weſtminſter made a Declaration April 22, promiſing Defence and Protection to thoſe Parts, if they would refuſe to carry in their Proviſions as the Proclamation required.

1644. 20 Car. I.

The King's Affairs by the coming in of the Scots, and the defeat of Bellaſis at Selby April 11. were under an ill Aſpect in the North; and the great blow given to the Lord Hopton by Waller March 29, was a great damp to the King's Intereſt in the South; and the Eaſtern Counties were all aſſociated againſt him. His only Hopes were in the Weſt, where Prince Maurice lay with a conſiderable Army before Lyme: And therefore thoſe Parts were thought to be the ſafeſt Retreat for the Queen, who left Oxford April 17, and came ſafe to Exeter, where on June 16, ſhe was delivered of the Princeſs Henrietta, and was forced to take ſhipping at Falmouth July 14, and to take Refuge in France, never more ſeeing her Royal moſt Affectionate Conſort.

Queen forc'd to leave the Kingdom.

May 14, his Majeſty in Perſon at Reading drew out his Forces there Quartered, and demoliſhed the Works, and marched away to Oxford. On the ſame Day Eſſex ſet out from London, and came to his Army at Beaconsfield, and marched them ſlowly to Abington May 26, to Sanford May 28, and next Morning drew up his Army on Bullington-Green, within a Mile of Oxford, and marched that Night to Iſlip; from whence May 31, he ſent out a Party that gained the Paſs at Anſlow Bridge, in the way to Woodſtock, where the Body of the King's Army lay. And Waller had brought up his Army to Newbridge, ſo as the King muſt have been beſieged in Oxford, or muſt have fought with two ſuperiour Armies, he himſelf drawing up his Army at North-lye, finding them no more than three thouſand Foot and four thouſand Horſe marched away to Eveſham, and on June 6, to Worceſter.

Eſſex's Army follow the King.

Upon which the two Houſes determined, that Eſſex ſhould march down into the Weſt for relief of Lyme and Plymouth, &c. and Waller ſhould attend the Motions of the King; and Major-General Brown with conſiderable Forces ſhould be employed for reducing Oxford, Wallingford, Banbury and parts adjacent. Waller in purſuit of the King marched to Stow in the Wold June 5, took Shudeley Caſtle June 9, and made his Approaches ſo faſt toward Worceſter, that the King was obliged to leave that City on June 12, and marched his Army to Bewdley, and finding his Forces unequal, he reſolv'd to return toward Oxford, and came to Woodſtock June 21, and next Day advanced to Buckingham. Waller followed after augmenting his Forces all the way, and quartered at Hanwell near Banbury June 26, and came up to face the King's Army June 28, on the foot of Crouch-hill, the River Charwel between them. The King drew off toward Daventry, leaving a Guard of Dragoons at Cropredry Bridge, the only Paſs between the two Armies. Waller ordered two Regiments of Horſe, and ſome Companies of Foot to make their Way over the Bridge and fall on the King's Rear; but tho' they got over, they were driven back again with great loſs, and left the King to purſue his intended Retreat.

The King purſu'd by the Parliament Forces.

Retreats from Waller.

Eſſex marching Weſtward, received Orders May 30, to relieve Lyme a Port Town in Dorſetſhire, which had been beſieg'd from April 20, by Prince Maurice with a conſiderable Army, and had made a very wonderful Defence, till the Earl of Warwick riding before it with the Navy, and the Earl of Eſſex drawing his Army near it, the Prince raiſed his Siege June 15, and went to Exeter, ſending part of his Army toward Briſtol. Upon which Eſſex took in Weymouth June 19, and held there a conſult with the Admiral Earl of Warwick. The King himſelf had intended to march Northward, but hearing of the Defeat of Prince Rupert at Marſton-Moor, he reſolv'd to march into the Weſt, and upon that Deſign came to Eveſham, whence July 4, he ſent a Meſſage for Peace to the Lords and Commons at Weſtminſter. We being deeply ſenſible of the Miſeries and Calamities of this our Kingdom, and of the grievous Sufferings of our poor Subjects, do moſt earneſtly deſire that ſome Expedient may be found out, which by the Bleſſing of God may prevent the farther effuſion of Blood, and reſtore the Nation to Peace, &c. To which the two Houſes would return no Anſwer. His Majeſty came to Bath and ſummoning the Inhabitants of Somerſetſhire to Kingſmore July 23, he made an affectionate Speech to them, to join with him in Defence of their Religion, Liberty and Property; hence by their Aid and a Conjunction of the Lord Hopton's Forces, he advanced to Ilcheſter, and had now formed a very conſiderable Army.

K.'s Meſſage for Peace deſpis'd.

Eſſex in a Council of War concluded to relieve Plymouth, beſieged by Sir Richard Greenvil, and ſo march into Cornwal. Upon his advance Sir Richard was obliged to draw off his Forces, and to quit his ſmall Garriſons of Mount-Stampſford, Plympton, Salt-Aſh, and his own Greenvil Houſe at Taveſtock; and diſputing the Paſſage at Newbridge to no effect, ſaw the Parliament Army take an eaſy Poſſeſſion of the Shire-Town Lanceſton. The King came to Exeter June 26, and being join'd by Prince Maurice follow'd Eſſex into Cornwal, and quarter'd his Army at Liskard, while the other Army was at Leſtithiel, and wrote a Letter to General Eſſex, To lay hold on this opportunity of effecting the happy Settlement of this miſerable Kingdom, it being now in his Power to redeem his Country and the Crown, and to oblige his King in the higheſt degree. And a Day or two after, other Letters were ſent him by Prince Maurice, the Earl of Brainford, and the Lord Hopton, to all which he did at laſt return Anſwer to the Earl of Brainford, that "He "had received the ſeveral Letters, but it was not in "his Commiſſion to be concern'd in any Treaty, nor "could he betray the Truſt repoſed in him by the "Parliament." Upon this Denial the King drew his Army from Liskard, and preſſed on upon the Rebels in their Quarters at Leſtithiel, and being join'd by Sir Richard Greenvil, he ſo encompaſſed and in a manner beſieged them for ſeveral Days, and upon their attempting to retreat, he fell upon them to ſo great Advantage, that Eſſex, reduc'd to the utmoſt Difficulties, deſerted his Army, and ſhifted away in a ſmall Veſſel to Plymouth Sept. 1, leaving his Horſe entirely routed and diſpers'd, and his Foot hemm'd up under Major General Skippon; to whom the King allowed Articles of laying down their Arms, and being convey'd to Parliament Quarters, when their Liberties and Lives were abſolutely in his Royal Power and Mercy. King marches into the Weſt.

Sends offers of Peace to Eſſex.

Eſſex runs away from his Army.

Upon this glorious Succeſs the King return'd to Taveſtock, and ſent thence a Meſſage for Peace dated Sept. 8, with a Duplicate of his former Meſſage from Eveſham: but being directed To the Lords and Commons of Parliament aſſembled at Weſtminſter, the two Houſes Voted, "That theſe Directions, and the Matter in "them, did not ſufficiently acknowledge them to "be the two Houſes of Parliament of England, and "therefore would ſend no Anſwer." His Majeſty not diſcourag'd with their ſcornful rejecting of all Correſpondence with him, declin'd to ſpend time in beſieging Plymouth, and taking in Barnſtaple Sept. 17, He marched Eaſtward to Chard, and publiſh'd there a Proclamation, declaring his Royal Reſolution to draw toward London, in order to obtain a Treaty for Peace and a good Accommodation, inviting all his Loyal Subjects to join in his Aſſiſtance for that neceſſary End. Upon which the Gentry and Freeholders of that County of Somerſet Addreſs the King at Sturmiſter Octob. 9, for liberty to wait in Perſon upon his Majeſty nearer London, to become Petitioners to the Lords and Commons at Weſtminſter, to embrace his Majeſty's offers of Peace, and in caſe of refuſal to ſpend their Lives in aſſiſting his Majeſty to compaſs that by the Sword which by fair and juſt ways could not be effected. The King accepted their Service, and came to Saliſbury Oct. 15. But the Parliament reſolved to have a new Army to meet him; and therefore enabled Eſſex to take the Field from Portſmouth Octob. 17, and to join with two other great Bodies under the Earl of Mancheſter and Sir William Waller at Baſing Octob. 21, and thence to Newberry, where the King was encamp'd, and caſt up ſome Works to avoid fighting, the Parliament Armies being very much ſuperiour in Numbers. The General Eſſex was indiſpoſed and abſent from the Battle, which was forc'd upon the King on Octob. 27, wherein (by Account of the Committee attending the Army) for three Hours the Fight was maintained with as much Reſolution, Bravery and Deſperateneſs on both Sides, as had been ſince the commencement of the War; but in concluſion, the Parliament's Forces beat the King's from their Works at Speen, and took nine pieces of Canon, among which ſix were thoſe they loſt in Cornwal, which the Foot that had been there diſarm'd, and in Mercy diſmiſt by the King, ventur'd deſperately to regain, and when they had got them embraced them for Joy, and ſaid they muſt give them a Corniſh-Hug. The King ſenſible of his Diſadvantage, marched from Newberry in the Night, and ſecuring his Cannon, Carriages and Baggage in Denington Caſtle, he went off to Wallingford, and ſo to Oxford. And being ſoon reinforc'd by the acceſſion of Prince Rupert, and the Earl of Northampton, he came back and reliev'd Denington Caſtle, took out his Train, drew out his Army in the Field, and offer'd the Rebels another Battle; but they in a Council of War declined fighting, and left the King to march leiſurely away toward Wallingford; and when the bare Report of his going to relieve Baſil Houſe had raiſed the Siege of it, the two Armies retreated both to their Winter Quarters, the King's to Oxford, Marlborough, Baſing, Odham, Newberry, &c. the Parliament's to Reading, Henley, Abington, Farnham, &c.

The King ſeconds this Victory with offers of Peace. Which the 2 Houſes reject.

Diſadvantage to the King.

The King offers another Battle.

And now the two Houſes at Weſtminſter, who had rejected ſeveral Meſſages of Peace from the King, thought fit to ſend him their own Terms by Commiſſioners; Earl of Denbigh and Lord Maynard for the Peers, Mr. Pierpoint, Mr. Hollis, Mr. Whitlock, and Lord Wenman of the Commons; the Lord Maitland, Sir Charles Erskins, and Mr. Barclay, for Scotland: who came to Oxford Nov. 23, and were very obligingly received by the King, who heard the Propoſitions read by the Earl of Denbigh with much Patience, and then ask'd the Commiſſioners, If they had Power to Treat? They anſwer'd No: but their Commiſſion was to receive his Majeſty's Anſwer in Writing. The King replied, Then a Letter Carrier might have done as much as you. Says the Earl of Denbigh, I ſuppoſe your Majeſty looks upon us as Perſons of another Condition than Letter Carriers. The King ſaid calmly again, I know your Condition; but I ſay, that your Commiſſion gives you power to do no more than a Letter Carrier might have done. The King had ſoon after an opportunity of private Diſcourſe with two of the Commiſſioners, Hollis and Whitlock, and had ſuch Confidence in them and in his own Integrity, that he left it to them two to draw up in Writing what they apprehended might be fit to return in Anſwer to the Meſſage. The Reſult was, That Uxbridge was appointed a Place of Treaty, and Commiſſioners were nominated, with Inſtructions and ſafe Conduct on either ſide. (b)

The two Houſes ſend Commiſſioners to the King.

This

1644. 20 Car. I. This Treaty of Uxbridge began Jan. 30, Thurſday, which being Market-day, a Sermon was Preach'd in the Pariſh-Church by Mr. Chriſtopher Love; ſo full of Railing and Sedition, that on the next Day the King's Commiſſioners thought themſelves obliged to give in a Paper of Complaint, "That there was "Yeſterday a Sermon preach'd by one Mr. Love, "in which were many Paſſages very ſcandalous to "his Majeſty's Perſon, and derogatory to his Ho- "nour, ſtirring up the People againſt this Treaty, "and incenſing them againſt us, telling them, "that we come with Hearts full of Blood, and that "there is as great diſtance between this Treaty and "Peace as between Heaven and Hell." The Parliament Commiſſioners anſwered, That Mr. Love was none of their Retinue, nor came thither by any Privity of theirs. And upon the Reply of the King's Commiſſioners, that they muſt inſiſt on their former Deſire concerning the Sermon preach'd by Mr. Love, and muſt refer the way of doing Juſtice to their Lordſhips, they made farther Anſwer, that they would repreſent it to the Lords and Commons at Weſtminſter, who would proceed therein according to Juſtice: But no Juſtice was done in it.

Treaty of Uxbridge open'd with a ſeditious Sermon by Mr. Love.

On this ſame Day, Jan. 31, the Parliament Commiſſioners offer'd theſe Propoſitions concerning Religion.

Propoſitions offer'd by the Parliament Commiſſioners. Concerning Religion.

I. That the Bill be paſſed for aboliſhing Epiſcopacy.

II. That the Ordinances for Calling and Sitting of the Aſſembly of Divines, be confirmed.

III. That the Directory for publick Worſhip, and the Model of Presbyterian Government annex'd, be enacted as a Part of Reformation and Uniformity.

IV. That his Majeſty take the ſolemn League and Covenant, and enjoin it to all his Subjects.

As to the firſt, the King's Commiſſioners offer'd many Arguments to ſhew the Injuſtice and Inconveniency which would follow upon Paſſing the Bill for aboliſhing Epiſcopacy, from Conſcience, Law, and Reaſon. To the ſecond, That they need not inſiſt on Confirmation of the Calling and Sitting of the Aſſembly of Divines, till the Alterations of Church-Government were agreed or not. To the third, That they could not conceive the Directory for publick Worſhip was ſo likely to procure and preſerve the Peace of the Kingdom, as the Liturgy already by Law eſtabliſhed. And as for the Covenant, they could not adviſe his Majeſty to ſwear and ſign the ſame, nor conſent that an Act of Parliament ſhould paſs for enjoining the taking thereof by his Majeſty's Subjects.

Propoſitions concerning the Militia.

Febr. 4, the Propoſitions concerning the Militia were propoſed by the Parliament Commiſſioners, to this effect: That all Forces by Sea and Land ſhould be ſettled in Commiſſioners nominated by both Houſes of Parliament, to be removed and filled up from time to time as the ſaid Houſes ſhould think fit: and that it ſhould be High-Treaſon to levy Forces without ſuch Authority and Conſent: and the Militia of London, and Tower of London, to be in the Government of the ſaid City. To which the King's Commiſſioners anſwer'd, that they could not conſent to ſuch great Alterations in the main Foundation of the Frame of the Government, as by expreſs Words or neceſſary Conſequence took the whole Military and Civil Power out of the Crown, without any Limitation in Time, or Reparation propoſed.

Concerning Ireland.

Febr. 7. the Parliament Commiſſioners preſented the Propoſitions concerning Ireland, that an Act ſhould paſs to make void the Ceſſation of Ireland, and all Treaties with the Rebels, without Conſent of both Houſes of Parliament, and to ſettle the Proſecution of that War in the two Houſes, his Majeſty to aſſiſt, and to do no Act to diſcountenance or moleſt them therein. All Perſons who had any hand in Plotting, Deſigning, or Aſſiſting that Rebellion, to expect no Pardon: and the ſucceſſive Deputies and Judges, &c. of that Kingdom to be nominated by the two Houſes, &c. To which the King's Commiſſioners anſwer'd, That his Majeſty had full Power and juſt Grounds to conſent to that Ceſſation, and it could not be declared void without a breach of Faith and Honour in his Majeſty; but it would of it ſelf expire in March next. Nor could it be agreeable to his Majeſty's Honour, or the Juſtice and Protection which he owes to his Subjects of the Kingdom of Ireland, to put the Nomination of his Lieutenant and Judges out of himſelf, and to commit the whole Power of that Kingdom unto others.

Febr. 20, Eighteen Days having been ſpent in the ſaid Propoſitions concerning Religion, Militia, and Ireland, and the Treaty being limited to twenty Days; the King's Commiſſioners deſired to ſpend the two remaining Days in giving better Satisfaction upon thoſe three Heads, and in Treating for an Expedient of Peace by diſbanding all Armies, and by his Majeſty's coming to Weſtminſter: and for this purpoſe deſired the time of Treaty to be prolonged. To which the Parliament Commiſſioners anſwered, That till they had Satisfaction in their Demands concerning Religion, Militia, and Ireland, they could receive no Propoſitions from his Majeſty, nor give any Addition of Time. By the Papers in this Treaty it plainly appears, That the King's Commiſſioners, though they could not go in to the literal Demands on the other Side; yet they made as many Conceſſions toward granting ſome Equivalent, or other Expedient, as it was poſſible to do. But the Parliament Commiſſioners were tied up to rigid Rules, and ſeem'd to have no Power of receding from the very Letter of the Propoſitions brought along with them: as if only Meſſengers to report the Senſe and very Words of thoſe who ſent them, rather than Commiſſioners to argue and determine upon others Arguments, and their own Judgment of 'em.

Parliament Commiſſioners but meer Meſſengers.

A late Writer of Memoirs tells it as a Secret in Hiſtory, that the Occaſion of breaking off this Treaty was a Letter from the Marqueſs of Montroſs in Scotland, who had entirely defeated the Earl of Argyle Feb. 2, and next Day ſent an Expreſs of it in a Letter to the King; wherein he declares his utter Averſion to all Treaties with his Rebel Parliament in England; and is heartily ſorry to hear, that his Majeſty had conſented to Treat, and hopes it is not true; adviſes him not to enter into any Terms with his rebellious Subjects; and aſſures him, that he ſhould be able within a few Months to march into England to his Majeſty's Aſſiſtance with a brave Army. Suppoſing ſuch a Letter was written; though this Relator pretends to have ſeen nothing but a Copy under another Hand: and ſuppoſing the Difficulty remov'd, which the Relator himſelf can hardly imagine, "That a "Letter writ February 3, in the farthermoſt North "Corner of Britain, ſhould come ſo ſoon to Oxford, "conſidering the Length of the Journey, the Bad- "neſs of the Roads at that time of the Year, eſpe- "cially through the mountainous Parts of Scotland, "together with the Parliament's and Scotch Armies "and Garriſons that were poſted all along the Road;" Suppoſing theſe hard things to be true; yet it ſeems to be no Inference that the King himſelf was the Cauſe of breaking off this Treaty, when a Denial of any the leaſt Conceſſions, and even of a few farther Days, was the ſole Act of the Parliament Commiſſioners. And yet had the Rupture been made ſolely at the King's Command, he would have ſtood juſtified by all the Laws of Conſcience and Honour: For, to have yielded to all their Propoſitions, as they inſiſted, without the leaſt Mitigation of them, would as effectually have diveſted him of his Crown and Dignity, as they did afterward deprive him of his Liberty and Life. It had been more glorious in him to reſolve, That Monarchy ſhould not be murder'd before the King.

D. Wellwood's Opinion of breaking off this Treaty.

Vindication of the King.

After the Treaty was diſſolv'd, the Ambaſſadors of the States of Holland, who had been at Oxford to ſollicit the Succeſs of it, being now in London, obtained Leave of Admiſſion firſt to the Houſe of Lords, and then of Commons; where they repre- ſented ſented the great Deſires and Endeavours of their Maſters for an Accommodation between the King and Parliament, which concerned all Proteſtants, and particularly their Lords and Maſters : and own'd, That his Majeſty, whilſt they were at Oxford, had honoured them, by communicating to them what paſſed at the Treaty in Uxbridge; and declared to them, That if the Parliament be not ſatisfied with what he offer'd concerning Church-Government, his Majeſty is contented that a General Synod be called of Divines from all the Proteſtant Churches in Europe, for their Advice herein. This perhaps was thought to be a Meſſage from the King, and therefore no Anſwer was return'd to it. (a)

Parliament ſeem well pleas'd.

For the Parliament found themſelves every Day more and more ſuperiour to the King : and therefore approving what was done by their Commiſſioners, and thanking them for having diſcharged their Duties with ſingular Judgment and Fidelity ; and ſolemnly acquainting the City with their Proceedings, and poſſeſſing them with the averſeneſs of the King's Party to a Peace ; they made very diligent Preparations for continuing the War : And finding their General Eſſex to be too much inclined to Moderation, and the Defenſive Side ; they modell'd a new Army, to be Commanded by Sir Thomas Fairfax : To whom, by an Ordinance, they gave an ample Commiſſion, to exerciſe all Martial Juriſdiction, to fight with and to ſlay all ſuch as ſhould oppoſe him ; and, to ſuppreſs all Forces not raiſed by Authority of both Houſes of Parliament.

State of Religion. Tryal of Archbp. Laud.

As to the Eccleſiaſtical State in this Year 1644. The long-impriſon'd Archbiſhop of Canterbury had been brought upon his Tryal before the Peers on Tueſday March 12, and Arraign'd in a long Speech by Mr. Serjeant Wild; concluding thus : This Man, my Lords, is like Naaman the Syrian, a Great Man, but a Leper. Upon which the Archbiſhop ſpoke as follows:

His Speech.

My Lords,

M*Y being in this Place, and in this Condition, recalls to my Memory that which I long ſince read in* Seneca, Tormentum eſt, etiamſi abſolutus quis fuerit, cauſam dixiſſe ; 'Tis not a Grief only, no, 'tis no leſs than a Torment, for an ingenuous Man to plead criminally, much more capitally, at ſuch a Bar as this ; yea, though it ſhould ſo fall out, that he be abſolved. The great Truth of this I find at preſent in my ſelf ; and ſo much the more, becauſe I am a Chriſtian ; and not that only, but in holy Orders ; and not ſo only, but by God's Grace and Goodneſs preferred to the greateſt Place this Church affords ; and yet now brought cauſam dicere to Plead, and for no leſs than Life, at this great Bar. And whatſoever the World thinks of me (and they have been taught to think more ill than, I humbly thank Chriſt for it, I was ever acquainted with) yet, my Lords, this I find tormentum eſt ; 'tis no leſs than Torment to me to appear in this Place to ſuch an Accuſation. Nay, my Lords, give me Leave, I beſeech you, to ſpeak plain Truth : No Sentence that can juſtly paſs upon me (and other I will never fear from your Lordſhips) can go ſo near me as cauſam dixiſſe to have pleaded for myſelf upon this Occaſion, and in this Place. For as for the Sentence (I thank God for it) I am at St. Paul's Word, If I have committed any thing worthy of Death, I refuſe not to die : For, I bleſs God, I have ſo ſpent my time, as that I am neither aſham'd to Live, nor afraid to Die. Nor can the World be more weary of me than I am of it : for ſeeing the Malignity which hath been raiſed againſt me by ſome Men, I have carried my Life in my Hands theſe divers Years paſt.

But yet, my Lords, if none of theſe things whereof theſe Men accuſe me, merit Death by Law ; though I may not in this Caſe, and from this Bar, Appeal unto Cæſar, yet to your Lordſhips Juſtice and Integrity I both may and do Appeal ; not doubting, but that God of his Goodneſs will preſerve my Innocency. And as Job, in the midſt of his Affliction, ſaid to his miſtaken Friends, ſo ſhall I to my Accuſers, God forbid I ſhould juſtifie you : till I die I will not remove my Integrity from me : I will hold it faſt, and not let it go : my Heart ſhall not reproach me, as long as I live.

My Lords, I ſee by the Articles, and have now heard from this Gentleman, that the Charge againſt me is divided into two main Heads ; the Laws of the Land, and the Religion by thoſe Laws eſtabliſhed.

And ſo with great Eloquence and Courage he went on, to ſhew himſelf a ſtrict Obſerver of the Laws, and a true Profeſſor of the Religion eſtabliſht in the Church of England ; and wiped off all the Aſperſions of Popery ; concluding with the Names of 21 eminent Popiſh Recuſants, whom he by perſonal Conference had reduced to the Proteſtant Communion.

He had 20 ſeveral Days of Hearing, which ended July 29, wherein he had ſuch a heap of Accuſations, and made ſuch an admirable Defence againſt them, that the Innocence of this Prelate, and the Malice of his Enemies, are hardly to be match'd in any Account of the Primitive Perſecutions. On the laſt Day of his Tryal he made a Recapitulation of all that had been charg'd upon him, and of all that he had anſwer'd in his own Defence, and then concluded, Speech at Concluſion of his Tryal.

And now, my Lords, I do in all Humility lay my ſelf low at God's Mercy Seat, to do with me as he pleaſes : and under God, I ſhall rely upon your Lordſhips Juſtice, Honour, and Clemency, of which I cannot doubt. And, without being farther tedious unto your Lordſhips (who have with very honourable Patience heard me through this long and tedious Trial) I ſhall conclude with that which St. Auguſtin ſaid to Romanianus, a Man that had tried both Fortunes as well as I ; If the Providence of God reaches down to us (as moſt certain it doth) Sic tecum agi oportet, ſicut agitur, It muſt ſo be done with thee (and ſo with me alſo) as it is done. And under that Providence which will, I doubt not, work to the beſt to my Soul, that loves God, I repoſe myſelf. (b)

Acquitted by the Lords.

When all the Articles and utmoſt Proof of them by the moſt prejudic'd Parties were not likely to prevail with the Lords (though but a few, and thoſe Adverſaries to the Archbiſhop's Perſon and Character, and to the Church and King) to find him Guilty of the Impeachment ; the Commons (at the Inſtigation of the Scots) took the Judicature in the moſt illegal manner to themſelves, had him brought to their Bar on ſeveral Days, and on Novemb. 16. paſſed an Ordinance to make him Guilty of High-Treaſon : Which being tranſmitted to the Lords, they referred themſelves to the Judges, who unanimouſly anſwered, "That nothing charged againſt him was Treaſon by any known and eſtabliſhed Law of the Land." Upon which the Lords in a Conference with the Commons Decemb. 24, declared, "That they had diligently weigh'd all things "that were Charged againſt him, but could not by "any one of them, or all, find him Guilty of Treaſon." And yet by the over-ruling of all Honour

And by the Judges.

To be condemn'd by an Ordinance of the two Houſes.

(a) See the Declaration of the Parliament of England to the States of Holland concerning their late Embaſſie, Printed 1645. 4*to.* wherein is a Letter of the ſaid Embaſſadours to the Houſe of Peers, complaining of the Injuries done to the King, &c.

(b) In the MS. Collections repoſited in Lambeth Library by Archbiſhop Teniſon, there is a Copy of the Defence made in the Houſe of Lords by John Herne, Eſq; on the behalf of William Laud Archbiſhop of Canterbury, beginning thus: My Lords, The Work of this Day we humbly conceive is in many Reſpects of very great and high Concernment, in that it concerns 1. a Matter of Life, a thing of the higheſt Conſequence ; 2. the Life of an Archbiſhop who had attained the higheſt Dignity, &c. Serjeant Wild anſwer'd.——Mr Herne, We did never alledge that any one Crime of the Biſhops did amount to a Treaſon or Felony, but we do ſay, that all the Archbiſhop's Miſdemeanours put together do by way of Accumulation make many grand Treaſons.—— To which Mr. Herne replied, I crave you Mercy good Mr. Serjeant, I never underſtood before this time that two hundred couple of black Rabbets make a black Horſe.

1644. 20 Car. I.

and Conſcience, the Bill of Attainder paſs'd the Houſe of Lords Jan. 4, (a) and a Scaffold being prepared on Tower-hill, he was brought to it Jan. 10, where he made his own Funeral Sermon, beginning thus:

His dying Speech.

" Good People,

" THis is an uncomfortable time to Preach, yet I ſhall begin with a Text of Scripture, Heb. 12. 2. Let us run with Patience the Race that is ſet before us, looking unto Jeſus the Author and Finiſher of our Faith; who for the Joy that was ſet before him, endured the Croſs, deſpiſing the ſhame, and is ſet down at the Right-hand of the Throne of God.

" I have been long in my Race, and how I have looked unto Jeſus the Author and Finiſher of my Faith, he beſt knows. I am now come to the end of my Race; and here I find the Croſs; a Death of ſhame, but the Shame muſt be deſpiſed or no coming to the Right-hand of God. Jeſus deſpiſed the Shame for me, and God forbid but that I ſhould deſpiſe the Shame for him. I am going apace (as you ſee) towards the Red-Sea, and my Feet are now upon the very brink of it, an Argument, I hope, that God is bringing me into the Land of Promiſe; for that was the way thro' which he led his People: But before they came to it, he inſtituted a Paſſover for them, a Lamb it was, but muſt be eaten with ſour Herbs. I ſhall obey, and labour to digeſt the ſour Herbs as well as the Lamb; and I ſhall remember it is the Lord's Paſſover: I ſhall not think of the Herbs, nor be angry with the Hand that gathereth them, but look up only unto him who inſtituted that and governs theſe. For Men can have no more power over me, than what is given from above. I am not in love with this Paſſage through the Red-Sea, for I have the Weakneſs and Infirmities of Fleſh and Blood plentifully in me; and I have pray'd with my Saviour, ut tranſiret calix iſte, that this Cup of red Wine might paſs from me; but if not, God's Will not mine be done. And I ſhall moſt willingly drink of this Cup as deep as he pleaſes, and enter into this Sea, yea and paſs through it in the way that he ſhall lead me.

" But I would have it remember'd (good People) that when God's Servants were in this boiſterous Sea, and Aaron amongſt them, the Egyptians which perſecuted them (and did in a manner drive them into the Sea) were drowned in the ſame Waters while they were in purſuit of them.---- And as for this People, they are at this Day miſerably miſled (God of his Mercy open their Eyes that they may ſee the right way) for at this Day the Blind lead the Blind, and if they go on, both will certainly fall into the Ditch.——

" Though the weight of my Sentence be heavy upon me, I am as quiet within as ever I was in my Life. And though I am not only the firſt Archbiſhop but the firſt Man that ever died by an Ordinance in Parliament; yet ſome of my Predeceſſors have gone this way, though not by this means. —— Here is a great Clamour that I would have brought in Popery: I ſhall anſwer that more fully by and by. In the mean time, you know what the Phariſees ſaid againſt Chriſt himſelf, If we let him alone All Men will believe in him, & venient Romani, and the Romans will come and take away our Place and Nation. Here was a cauſeleſs Cry againſt Chriſt, that the Romans would come: and ſee how juſt the Judgment was; they Crucified Chriſt for fear the Romans ſhould come, and his Death was it that brought in the Romans upon them: God puniſhing them with that which they moſt feared. And I pray God this Clamour of venient Romani (of which I have given no cauſe) help not to bring them in: For the Pope never had ſuch an Harveſt in England ſince the (b) Reformation, as he hath now upon the Sects and Diviſions that are among us.——This I ſhall be bold to ſpeak of the King our Gracious Soveraign: He hath been much traduc'd alſo for bringing in of Popery, but in my Conſcience (of which I ſhall give God a very preſent Account) I know him to be as free from this Charge as any Man living; and I hold him to be as ſound a Proteſtant (according to the Religion by Law eſtabliſh'd) as any Man in this Kingdom; and that he will venture his Life as far and as freely for it. And I think I do, or ſhould know both his Affection to Religion, and his Grounds for it, as fully as any Man in England. —— I have been accuſed as an Enemy to Parliaments: No! I underſtand them, and the Benefit that comes by them too well to be ſo: But I did miſlike the Miſgovernments of ſome Parliaments many ways, and I had good Reaſon for it. For Corruptio Optimi eſt Peſſima, there is no Corruption in the World ſo bad as that which is of the Beſt thing within it ſelf: For the better the Thing is in Nature, the worſe it is corrupted. And that being the higheſt Court, over which no other hath Juriſdiction, when it is miſinformed or miſgoverned, the Subject is left without all Remedy: But I have done. I forgive all the World, All and Every of thoſe bitter Enemies which have perſecuted me; and humbly deſire to be forgiven of God firſt, and then of every Man, whether I have offended him or not, if he do but conceive that I have. Lord, do thou forgive me, and I beg forgiveneſs of him. And ſo I heartily deſire you to join in Prayers with me."

O Eternal God! and Merciful Father, look down upon me in Mercy, &c. (c)

His Execution.

His Speech and Prayer ended, he gave the Prayer which he read into the Hands of his Chaplain Mr. Stern; and ſeeing one Hind had been writing his Speech as it came from his Mouth, he deſired him Not to do him wrong in publiſhing a falſe or imperfect Copy. Finding many People upon the Scaffold, he deſired he might have room to dye, beſeeching them to let him " Have an end of his Miſeries, which he had endured very long." Coming near the Block, he ſaid, " God's Will be done, I am willing to go out of this World; none can be more willing to

"ſend me." Seeing ſome Chinks through the Boards with People under them, he called to the Officer for ſome Duſt to ſtop them, or to remove the People, ſaying, "It was no part of his Deſires, that his "Blood ſhould fall upon the Heads of the People." Sir John Clotworthy did rudely interrupt him with impertinent Queſtions, which he anſwer'd with all Chriſtian Meekneſs. The firſt Queſtion was, "What "was the moſt comfortable Saying which a dying "Man would have in his Mouth?" He anſwer'd, Cupio diſſolvi & eſſe cum Chriſto. The other asked again, "What was the fitteſt Speech a Man would "uſe to expreſs his Confidence and Aſſurance?" He anſwer'd, Such Aſſurance is to be found within, and no Words are able to expreſs it rightly. The buſie Man demanding "a place of Scripture, whereupon ſuch "Aſſurance might be grounded." He uſed ſome Words to this effect, that It was the Word of God concerning Chriſt and his dying for us. Then he turned away to the Executioner, gave him Money, and ſaid, "Here, honeſt Friend, God forgive thee and I do, "and do thy Office upon me with Mercy." Then giving him a Sign when the Blow ſhould come, he kneeled down and made another ſhort Prayer; then laying his Head on the Block, and praying ſilently to himſelf, he ſaid aloud, Lord receive my Soul! which being the Signal given, his Head was cut off at a blow, and his Body decently interred in the Church of Alhallows Berking, by the Office of the Liturgy, which on that very Day was, by an Ordinance of Parliament, aboliſh'd, and the Directory eſtabliſh'd in room of it. On his Coffin was nail'd a little braſs Plate, with his Arms and this Inſcription: In hac Ciſtula conduntur Exuviæ Gulielmi Laud Archiepiſcopi Cantuarienſis qui ſecuri percuſſus immortalitatem adiit die x, Januarii Ætatis ſuæ LXXIII. Archiepiſcopatus xii. Much hath been ſaid of the Perſon of "this great Prelate before, of his great Endowments and natural Infirmities; to which ſhall be "added no more in this Place (his Memory deſerving a particular Celebration) than that his "Learning, Piety, and Vertue, have been attain'd "by very few, and the greateſt of his Infirmities are common to all, even to the beſt "Men." His Burial.

The King being in Arms could have no other Care for the Church, but to fight for the Reſtitution of it. But however, to take off as far as poſſible the Prejudice of Foreign Proteſtants, which had been induſtriouſly raiſed and fomented by Letters from the Aſſemblies of Divines in England and Scotland; the King drew up a Declaration to all foreign Reform'd Churches, in Latin, dat. in Academia & Civitate noſtra Oxonienſi pridie Idus Maii 1644, proteſting againſt the falſe Rumours and ſcandalous Letters ſpread among the Reformed Churches in foreign Parts, as if his Majeſty had an Inclination to recede from the Religion wherein he was born, baptized, and bred: and ſolemnly profeſſing, that he will keep entire and inviolable the moſt holy Religion of the Anglican Church, ordained by many Convocations of learned Divines, confirmed by many Acts of Parliament, and ſtrengthen'd by many Royal Proclamations; with a Liturgy and Diſcipline approved and applauded by the moſt eminent of Proteſtant Writers.

And to keep up, if poſſible, the Honour of Religion in his Army, and wipe away the popular Objection, that the Malignants were lewd and prophane Men; the King iſſued his Proclamation, dated Apr. 18, for the farther Reſtraint of prophane Swearing and Curſing, and the better obſerving of Prayer and Preaching in his Majeſties Armies, and in the City of Oxford, and all other Parts. When it was agreed upon to hold a Treaty at Uxbridge, the King publiſhed a Proclamation, dated at Oxford January 27; commanding that Wedneſday Febr. 5. ſhould be kept as a ſolemn Faſt, that both Prince and People might then join together in a true Humiliation, and devout and earneſt Prayers unto God, that he would be pleaſed to bleſs and proſper the intended Treaty, that it might produce a happy Peace for his Honour, the Good of his Church, and of the King and all his Subjects. And for a conſtant Prayer during the Treaty, the King himſelf dictated this Form: O moſt merciful Father, Lord God of Peace and Truth, We a People ſorely afflicted by the Scourge of an unnatural War, do here earneſtly beſeech thee to command a Bleſſing from Heaven upon this preſent Treaty, begun for the Eſtabliſhment of a happy Peace. Soften the moſt obdurate Hearts with a true Chriſtian Deſire of ſaving thoſe Men's Blood for whom Chriſt himſelf hath ſhed his. Or if the Guilt of our great Sins cauſe this Treaty to break off in vain, Lord let the Truth clearly appear, who thoſe Men are, which under pretence of the publick Good do purſue their own private Ends; and that this People may be no longer ſo blindly miſerable as not to ſee at leaſt in this their Day, the Things that belong unto their Peace. Grant this, gracious God, for his ſake who is our Peace it ſelf, even Jeſus Chriſt our Lord. Amen. Which ſhews the Piety of this Prince, and the Sincerity of his Heart, in deſiring the Succeſs of this Treaty upon any Terms conſiſtent with the Being of a Church and Monarchy.

The two Houſes at Weſtminſter made the Aſſembly of Divines and the City, Clergy their Inſtruments of the Cauſe to be called Good. On April 8, they made an Ordinance, that the Miniſters within the City and Bills of Mortality, ſhould on the Morrow, being Thankſgiving-Day for the Victory over Sir Ralph Hopton's Forces, publiſh in their ſeveral Churches the Reſolution taken by the Parliament to draw all their Forces together, and put a ſpeedy Iſſue to theſe lingring Miſeries; and that therefore they ſhould exhort the People to contribute to the uttermoſt for ſending forth what poſſible Strength can be had. April 17, it was ordered, That the Candleſticks, Crucifixes, and other Plate, that ſtood heretofore upon the Altar in St. Paul's Church, be ſold by the Committee at Grocers-Hall, and the Money employed for the publick Safety. On May 9, there was another Ordinance for the farther demoliſhing all Monuments of Idolatry and Superſtition, and taking away all Organs, Surplices, ſuperſtitious Veſtments, &c. And the Price of Sacrilege to ſerve the Cauſe. Proceedings of the Aſſembly of Divines.

As to the Proceedings of the Aſſembly of Divines, they procured in May an Order of Parliament to ſuppreſs an erroneous Edition of the Engliſh Bible at Amſterdam (b). When the Earl of Eſſex marched into the Weſt, it was at the Motion of this Aſſembly that a Day of publick Humiliation was appointed, to implore the Aſſiſtance of God for the proſperous Undertaking of the Lord General. Soon after they communicated to the Parliament a Letter ſent to them from the Kirk of Scotland, lamenting that Church-Government was not yet ſettled. Upon which they had Leave to debate the whole Matter of an Ordinance made for the Ordination of Miniſters, and for ſettling the Government of the Church. In which Debate it was propounded to put the Queſtion, that the Government by Presbytery is Jure Divino. But the putting it to the Queſtion was diverted by a Speech of one of the Lay-Members, who among other Arguments uſed this Dilemma; If this Government be not Jure Divino, no Opinion of any Council can make it to be what it is not; and if it be Jure Divino, it continues ſo ſtill, although you do not declare it to be ſo. The Oppoſition between the Presbyterians and Independants, and other Sectaries, began to interrupt every Scheme of Settlement; ſo that in September a Committee of Lords and Commons was appointed to confer with the Aſſembly, and to endeavour to reconcile ſome Differences amongſt them, and to find out a way how tender Conſciences may be borne withal, ſo far as may ſtand with the Peace of the Kingdom, and the Word of God. Octob. 2, an Ordinance was paſs'd for the Ordination of Miniſters; whereby twenty three Presbyters (of which the Aſſembly named ten of themſelves, and thirteen of the City) or any ſeven of them, were to ordain ſucceſſive Miniſters, and none to preach, or exerciſe the Miniſterial Function, without their Allowance. Juſt before Newbury ſecond Fight, October, the Commons being inform'd that in probability the Armies were now engag'd, they ſent to the Aſſembly of Divines to ſpend ſome time in Prayer for the good Succeſs of the Parliament's Forces; which was done accordingly. In November, by Deſire from the Scots Commiſſioners, both Houſes ſent to the Aſſembly, to bring in the Particulars of what they had finiſhed for the Government of the Church, that it might be approved and confirmed by the Parliament; and to haſten the Diſpatch of what farther lay before them (c). Soon after the chief Members of the Aſſembly came to the Houſe of Commons, and preſented their Draught of humble Advice for ſettling the Presbyterian Government; in which they had an Expreſſion that did aſſert it to be Jure Divino. This gave Offence, and Mr. Glynne, Recorder of London, ſtood up and ſpoke againſt determining a Jus Divinum: wherein he was ſeconded by Mr. Whitlock; till, upon the Queſtion, it was carried to lay aſide all Aſſertion of Divine Right; and Glynne and Whitlock had many Thanks for preventing the Surpriſal of the Houſe upon this great Queſtion. Upon Deſire of ſome Members in the Aſſembly who diſſented from the Form of Presbyterian Government, a Day was appointed to hear their Arguments againſt it; and the other part had liberty to anſwer in Writing the Reaſons of their Diſſenting Brethren; and the Arguments on each ſide were to be preſented to the Houſe of Commons. In November the Aſſembly ſent to the Commons their Directory for Prayer, Preaching, and all other parts of Publick Worſhip; and toward the end of December preſented ſome farther Additions to their firſt Form: All which were Debated and Reſolved by the Commons. And to ſhew the Spirit of Contradiction that was now to prevail, an Ordinance was made Decemb. 19, to turn Chriſtmas-day into a ſolemn Faſt and Humiliation, becauſe it may call to remembrance our Sins, and the Sins of our Forefathers, who have turned this Feaſt, pretending the Memory of Chriſt, into an extreme Forgetfulneſs of him, by giving Liberty to carnal and ſenſual Delights. In January the Directory of Worſhip was fully agreed upon by both Houſes, and ordered to be Printed, and two of the Aſſembly to take care thereof. The Commons ordered, that the Divines of the Aſſembly ſhould write a congratulatory Letter to the General Aſſembly in Scotland, and acquaint them what they had done, and how the Parliament had agreed with them. In the Debate of theſe Matters in the Houſe of Commons, it was voted, that to have a Presbytery in the Church, is according to the Word of God; and that many Congregations may be under one Presbyterian Government; and that Paſtors, Doctors, Teachers, Elders, and Deacons, are the Officers of the Church, in the Government of it; and that ſeveral Congregations ſhould be under one Claſſis, and the Church governed by Congregational, Claſſical, Synodical Aſſemblies; and that there ſhould be one at leaſt in every Congregation to labour in the Word and Doctrine. In the Uxbridge Treaty, Mr. Vines and Mr. Marſhal of the Engliſh, and Mr. Henderſon of the Scots, were ſent from the Aſſembly to attend the Parliament Commiſſioners, and diſpute for the Divine Right of Presbytery; againſt Dr. Steward who was named by the King to be one of his Commiſſioners on the Propoſitions of Religion only, and Dr. Sheldon. During this Treaty, a Petition was directed to the Commiſſioners of both Sides from many thouſand Inhabitants in the County of Bucks, to this effect; That Religion might be eſtabliſhed as it was in the pureſt times of Queen Elizabeth. A Copy being tranſmitted to the Commons at Weſtminſter, they condemned it, and ſent for Sir John Lawrence, the chief Promoter, into Cuſtody. After the End of the Treaty, by Concert of the Aſſembly and Houſe of Commons, there was a Day of Thankſgiving ordered for the Succeſſes which God gave the Parliament ſince the Breach of the Treaty. And then the laſt Act of the Aſſembly this Year, was to ſend a Meſſage to the Parliament touching the Title to the Directory, and the Ordinance for taking away the Common Prayer Book, and for ſettling an able Miniſtry, and for keeping Profane and Ignorant Perſons from the Sacrament: all which the Commons debated in a grand Committee, and referr'd ſome things back to the Aſſembly, and order'd them to nominate ſome Miniſters to go with the Armies into the Field this next Summer. 1645. 21 Car. I. This Year began with an Ordinance for the new Model of an Army, conſtituting Sir Thomas Fairfax General, Col. Skippon Major-General, giving Commiſſion Apr. 1, to lead an Army againſt all Rebels, Traitors, and other common Enemies, and them to kill and ſlay; and to exerciſe Martial Law; and to execute the Laws and Ordinances confirmed this preſent Parliament, to be read at the Head of his Army. After which, April 3, the Ordinance paſſed for the diſcharging of the Members of both Houſes from all Offices both Military and Civil; called the Self-denying Ordinance. The Lord General Eſſex, the Earl of Mancheſter, and the Earl of Denbigh, having reſign'd their Commiſſions the Day before, Fairfax appointed his general Rendezvous at Windſor, and ſoon modell'd an Army of one and twenty thouſand Men; who by Order of Parliament, paſs'd Apr. 28, were to march Weſtward for the Relief of Taunton.

New Army under General Fairfax.

Cromwel came to Windſor under pretence of taking his Leave of the new General, as if he now look'd on himſelf as diſcharged from all Military Employment by the late Ordinance. But he had made ſuch Intereſt in the Committee of both Kingdoms at Weſtminſter, that they had ſent Orders to their General Sir Tho. Fairfax to ſend a Party of Horſe to lie between Oxford and Worceſter to intercept the Correſpondence between the King and Prince Rupert, and particularly recommended Lieutenant-General Cromwel for that Service; who went away with a good Party of Horſe and Dragoons, and engaged a Brigade of the King's Horſe at Iſlip Bridge Apr. 24, and routed them; and purſued them to Blechington-Houſe garriſon'd for the King, and commanded by Col. Windebank, who in a Surprize ſurrender'd it upon Articles the ſame Day; for which he was condemn'd in a Council of War at Oxford, and ſhot to Death.

Cromwel's Induſtry and Succeſs.

The Lord General Fairfax began his March April 30, toward Reading, in order to relieve Taunton: but the Committee of both Kingdoms hearing of the Prince's Advance toward Oxford, order'd him May 4, to ſtop his March; and May 6, an Ordinance paſs'd, that Sir Thomas Fairfax ſhould only ſend a Party of about 3000 Foot and 1500 Horſe to Taunton; and he, with the reſt of his Army, ſhould march back to join Cromwel and Brown, and attend the King's Motions with their united Force. Upon coming up of this Detachment near Taunton, the King's Forces raiſed the Siege; and the Parliament ſent a Letter of Thanks to the Town for their gallant Defence, and beſtow'd 2000 l. on the Soldiers of the Garriſon, and 500 l. to Colonel Blake the Governour.

March of General Fairfax.

The King took the Field from Oxford on May 7, and being join'd by Prince Rupert, march'd into Worceſterſhire, deſigning the Relief of Cheſter, which had been long beſieged by the Parliament Forces under Sir William Brereton; who, by that time his Majeſty came within twenty Miles of Cheſter, raiſed his Siege, and retreated into Lancaſhire. Whereupon his Majeſty diverted his Courſe toward Leiceſter, and coming before that City May 29, took it by Storm. 1645. 21 Car. I.

[...]takes [Leice]ſter.

In the mean time the Lords and Commons agreed with the Committee of both Kingdoms, that General Fairfax ſhould lay Siege to Oxford, and ſpeedily reduce that important Head-Quarters of the King. Accordingly Fairfax march'd up his Army near Oxford, and began to beleaguer it May 22, having his own Quarters at Marſton, Cromwel at Wileham, and Brown at Wolvercot. Fifteen Days were ſpent without much Action, when the two Houſes being ſtartled with the Loſs of Leiceſter, ſent poſitive Orders to General Fairfax to bring away his Army; who accordingly June 9, drew off all his Forces, and next Day came before Borſtal Houſe, Garriſon'd for the King, and Commanded by Sir William Campian, Beſieged by Major-General Skippon. Fairfax ſent a Summons, and Sir William Campian returned a ſtout Anſwer. Skippon that Night made a general Aſſault upon it, but was beaten off with great Loſs, and next Day raiſed the Siege, and followed after the main Army to Great-Brickhill.

Fairfax beſieges Oxford.

But is called away.

The King had march'd from Leiceſter toward Daventry, with intention to relieve Oxford; but hearing that Siege was raiſed, he turned to Northampton, and put the Aſſociated Parts into great dread of being called to account for their Confederacy againſt their Prince. Cromwel had been called from the Siege of Oxford to the Iſle of Ely, to ſupport the Aſſociation, and was ſhortly to attend his Place in the Houſe of Commons; but being much more diſpoſed for the Camp, he prevailed with a Council of War to reſolve, that General Fairfax ſhould write to the Parliament to diſpenſe with Cromwel's Abſence from the Houſe, and to appoint him Lieutenant-General of the Horſe, which was accordingly done. Upon this new Commiſſion, Cromwel came out of the Aſſociated Parts with ſix hundred Horſe and Dragoons, and join'd with General Fairfax and his main Army at Gilsborough, four Miles from Northampton on June 12, the King having his Camp at Borough-hill, and thence moving toward Harborough.

King's March.

Cromwel made Lie. Gen. of the Horſe.

Fairfax followed the Motions of the King, and came up to the Rear of the King's Army, near Naſeby, early in the Morning June the 14th. Upon which, both Armies were drawn into Battalia. On the King's Side, Prince Rupert and Prince Maurice commanded the Right Wing, Sir Marmaduke Langdale the Left, and his Majeſty himſelf in Perſon the main Body; the Earl of Lindſey and Jacob Lord Aſhley the Right-hand Reſerve, and the Lord Bard and Sir George Liſle the Left Reſerve. On the Parliament Side, the Right Wing was led by Cromwel, the Left Wing by Colonel Ireton, the main Body by General Fairfax and Major-General Skippon; With Reſerves to be brought up by Rainsborough, Hammond, and Pride.

Fatal Battle at Naſeby.

Prince Rupert, with his Majeſty's Right Wing, firſt began the Charge on that Side againſt Ireton, who was ſoon diſordered, and diſmounted, and run through the Thigh with a Pike, and into the Face with a Halbert, and taken Priſoner; till afterward, upon a Turn of the Battle, he gained his Liberty. Prince Rupert purſued the Advantage, and chas'd the Enemy almoſt to Naſeby Town; and in his Return ſummoned the Train, and was offering Quarter, not imagining that he ſhould come back too late to ſuccour his Friends: for Cromwel had charged Sir Marmaduke Langdale with great Succeſs; and though he met with gallant Reſiſtance, he broke through all the Diviſions, and forced them to fly beyond all their Foot. The Encounter between the two main Bodies was fierce and doubtful, the Succeſs ſeeming at firſt to incline to his Majeſty, all the Front Diviſions of Fairfax, except his own Regiment of Foot, giving ground, and in Diſorder falling behind the Reſerves: But the Colonels and Officers advancing with Colours and all their Men whom they could poſſibly make to rally and ſtand by degrees repelled the King's Forces, and at laſt put them to a diſorderly Retreat; yet one Diviſion of the King's Foot ſtood like a Rock, and tho' twice deſperately charged, would not move an Inch: till Fairfax commanded a Captain to charge them once more in the Front, while he himſelf, with his own Regiment and a commanded Party, fell on them in the Rear, to meet together in the middle; which was done accordingly, and that laſt Body of the King's Foot put into Confuſion and broken. The King, with undaunted Courage, rallied his Horſe, and put them into tolerable Order, and was joined by Prince Rupert returned from his fatal Succeſs: Fairfax preſently brought up a good Battalia of Horſe, Foot, and Artillery, to charge the King's Troops, who were unwilling to venture another Shock upon ſuch great Diſadvantages; the King with braveſt Magnanimity endeavour'd all that was poſſible to encourage them, crying out, One Charge more, and we recover the Day: But he could not prevail; for they retreated in Diſorder, and Fairfax's Horſe purſued them within two Miles of Leiceſter. The King gain'd nothing but the Characters of Courage and Conduct from all his Enemies. He loſt, in a manner, his entire Army, his Artillery, Ammunition, Coaches, and what went neareſt to his Heart, his Cabinet of Papers and Letters; and with ſome ſcatter'd Horſe he was forced to fly from Leiceſter to Aſhby de la Zouch, thence to Litchfield, and ſo for a ſafer Retreat into Wales. General Fairfax following to Leiceſter, and regaining that Town upon Articles June 18, and thence marching his Army to the Relief of Taunton. (a)

Courage and Conduct of the King.

General Goring, who beſieg'd Taunton, upon News of the Advance of Fairfax, march'd away his Army and march'd toward Langport; and being Maſter of the ſeveral Paſſes on the River, thought he could decline Fighting, and ſecure his Retreat toward Bridgewater: But Fairfax drew down his Ordnance to ſuch Place of Advantage, that they did great execution on Goring's Army, while his Foot reſolutely gain'd the Paſs, and his Horſe advanced over; and after ſome Diſadvantage being relieved by Major Bethel and Major Desborough, they gave ſuch an effectual Charge as put Goring's Horſe to a Retreat, and his Foot into ſuch Confuſion, that Fairfax chaſed them almoſt to Bridgewater, and with the Slaughter of three hundred, took about fourteen hundred Priſoners and twelve hundred Horſes. After this Victory, General Fairfax, in a Council of War, reſolved to ſtorm the ſtrong Garriſon of Bridgewater, and began the Aſſault the 22d of July, and forced a Surrendry the very next Day. The Taking of this Place was of moſt conſiderable Advantage to the Parliament; for, by it a Line of Garriſons was drawn over that Iſthmus of Ground between the South-Sea and Severn by Bridgewater, Taunton, Lime, and Langport; by which the Counties of Devon, and Cornwal, then wholly at the King's Devotion, except Plymouth, were in a manner block'd up from all Intercourſe with the Eaſtern Parts.

K.'s Intereſt declines in the Weſt.

July the 24th it was determined in a Council of War, that Fairfax, with his Army, ſhould advance farther to the Weſt, to hinder Goring from rallying his Forces: and the March was accordingly made as far as Marlock; but there the General took his own Reſolution to march back, and attempt the Taking of Bath and Sherborn, in order to the ſtraitning of Briſtol, and hindring Prince Rupert from raiſing any Recruits in thoſe Parts. With this Intention the General came to Wells; and Colonel Rich, with a Party of Horſe and Dragoons ſurprized Bath, by a deſperate Stratagem of the Dragooners creeping over the Bridge on their Bellies, and ſeizing the ſmall End of the Guard's Muskets, frighted them into taking Quarter, and then firing the Gate, put the Town into ſuch a Conſternation, that they yielded upon Articles to leave the common Soldiers Priſoners, and to ſuffer the Officers to march away to what Garriſon they pleas'd. The Wall of the City, and the Works, were very ſtrong and tenable; and Prince Rupert was advanced with a Party of fifteen hundred Horſe, and Foot, from Briſtol, within four Miles, to relieve it: But coming too late, Retreated.

Fairfax marches Weſtward

After this, Fairfax advanced to Sherborn-Caſtle, a ſtrong Garriſon, Commanded by Sir Lewis Dives; and laying cloſe Siege to it, Auguſt the 2d, entred a Breach Auguſt the 15th, and giving Quarter for Life only, took very great Plunder, and above four hundred Priſoners. The next Reſolution was, to Inveſt Briſtol, where Prince Rupert then was with a conſiderable Garriſon. This Siege was begun Friday Auguſt 22d by Land, and Vice-Admiral Moulton riding about Milford-Haven, ſent Ships into Kings-Road to block it up by Sea. So that after a brave Defence, the Prince offer'd to ſurrender upon Honourable Articles on the 8th of September. But Fairfax inſiſting upon his own Propoſitions, Stormed the City in ſeveral Places September the 10th, and obliged the Prince to a Surrendry upon hard Conditions September the 11th. For which being taxed by ſome who knew not to what Extremities he was reduced, his Highneſs drew up a Narrative of the State and Condition of the City and Garriſon of Briſtol when his Highneſs Prince Rupert came thither, and of the Actions during the Siege, and of the Treaties and Rendition thereof: Which he laid before the King and his Council of War at Newark October the 18th, who unanimouſly declared, That he had not been guilty of the leaſt want of Courage or Fidelity in that Action.

Briſtol Surrendered.

We return to the King; who, after the fatal Battle of Naſeby, had been driven into Wales to recruit his Army: From whence, about the Beginning of Auguſt, he advanced with a Body of three thouſand Horſe toward Litchfield (b). On Auguſt the 15th he came to Welbeck-Houſe, and was there reinforced with Horſe and Dragoons from Newark; with which he was moving Northward, with a Deſign (as generally believed) to join with Montroſs, who was by this time Maſter of the Field in Scotland. But to prevent that Motion, Major-General Poyntz was poſted with above two thouſand Horſe about Doncaſter and Rotherham; with whom Colonel Roſſiter and the Staffordſhire and Derbyſhire Horſe were haſtening to join. So that his Majeſty finding his Paſſage that way intercepted, turned back Southwards, and fell into the Aſſociated Counties: And having lain one Night at Belvoir-Caſtle, made his next Head-Quarters at Stamford, and took Huntingdon after ſome Oppoſition Auguſt the 24th, thence to Woburn and Dunſtable, and thence to Oxford Aug. the 28th, the Day after the Death of the Lord Keeper Littleton.

The King recruits his Army.

Marches to Oxford

His Majeſty taking out what Forces could be ſpared Auguſt 31, marched from Oxford to Cambden, with Deſign, as the Parliament ſuppos'd, to raiſe the Siege of Hereford, then inveſted by General Leven and the Scots; or Briſtol, then beleagur'd by General Fairfax. The Scots, upon the King's Advance, raiſed their Siege before Hereford, and began to march homewards: and ſoon after his Majeſty received the unwelcome News of the Loſs of Briſtol; upon which he viſited Hereford, Worceſter, and Ludlow, and advanced to relieve Cheſter. Major-General Poyntz (who with Colonel Roſſiter was commanded by the Parliament to attend the King in his Motions from Oxford) followed the King with great Expedition, and on Routon-Heath, within two 1645. 21 Car. I.

Unfortunate at Routon-Heath.

Miles of Cheſter, began to engage his Majeſty's Forces, who received them ſo bravely, that they routed the Major, and were in purſuit of him; till Colonel Jones and Adjutant Louthian having drawn out five hundred Horſe and three hundred Foot from their Leaguer before Cheſter, came to his Aſſiſtance, and charging the King's Troops on the other Side, gave Poyntz's Men an opportunity to rally, whereby the King's Forces being obliged to fight in Front and Rear, were defeated, near ſix hundred ſlain upon the Place, among whom Bertue Stuart Earl of Litchfield, and many Officers and Perſons of Quality, and above a thouſand Soldiers taken, his Majeſty not without difficulty retiring with the Remainder into Wales; where he once more recruited, and brought back an Army of about three thouſand fighting Men Octob. 2, to Litchfield, next Day to Melburn, and on the 4th to Newark: From whence Oct. 12, he marched to Welbeck, and drew out twelve hundred Horſe commanded by Lord Digby and Sir Marmadyke Langdale, with Orders to march into Scotland and join Montroſs. They ſpeedily advanced to Doncaſter, took there many Parliament Soldiers, and beat up their Quarters in ſeveral other Towns; ſo proceeded to Sherborn, where they routed Colonel Wren's Regiment of Horſe, and took almoſt a thouſand Foot Priſoners. But Colonel Copley, with a Party of about 1300, came up to them; upon whoſe Approach, the Lord Digby and Sir Marmaduke drew out to meet them, and both Sides charged with extraordinary Gallantry, but Copley prevail'd, and recovered all the Foot and Arms, and took about 300 Priſoners, with the Lord Digby's Coach, and his Letters and Papers, which with little Honour were Printed by Order of the two Houſes. After this Misfortune, they ſtill attempted to find a way into Scotland, and got very near the Borders, when Sir John Brown, Governour of Carliſle, with a Party met them about Carliſle-Sands, and broke their whole Body, and took many Priſoners, and above 200 Horſe and Arms. After this ſecond Defeat, they ſtill preſs'd on toward Dumfreeze: but finding their Paſſage intercepted by Leſley, they were glad to find Veſſels to tranſport themſelves to the Iſle of Man, and thence to Ireland.

The K.'s Affairs in a deſperate Condition.

The King's Intereſt was now ſinking into Ruin and Deſpair in all Parts: After the taking of Briſtol nothing could ſtand before the Army of Fairfax. The Caſtle of Devizes, commanded by Sir Charles Lloyd, was taken by Cromwel September 23, and Laicock-Houſe the ſame Day by Colonel Pickering, and Berkley-Caſtle by Colonel Rainsborough September 26, and Wincheſter by Cromwel October 5, and Baſing-Houſe October 15. Again Tiverton-Caſtle October 19, by General Fairfax, who after an Attempt upon Exeter, help'd to raiſe the Siege of Plymouth, and took Dartmouth by Storm January 18, and then cloſely block'd up Exeter, leaving the Command of that Siege to Sir Hardreſs Waller, while he himſelf, with the reſt of his Army, march'd off to watch the Motions of the Lord Hopton, who being Commander in chief under the Prince, had march'd to Torrington with near four thouſand Horſe and three thouſand Foot, expecting there ſome more Recruits from Barnſtaple. Here Fairfax engaged them, and gave them an abſolute Defeat; and then purſued the only Remains of a Royal Army into Cornwal, where the Prince had his own Regiment and other Corniſh Troops, that made a Body of about five thouſand Horſe and one thouſand Foot: But, not able to make a Stand againſt the Multitudes that Fairfax was pouring on upon him, he embarked with ſeveral Lords and Gentlemen, and found Refuge in the Iſle of Scilly. The Royal Army was left under Command of the Lord Hopton, who was ſo purſued and preſs'd upon by Fairfax, that he was glad to enter on a Treaty, and accept of Articles for disbanding all his Forces March 14.

1645. 21 Car. I.

The Royal Cauſe was equally ſuffering and expiring in all other Parts of England. The City of Hereford that had bore and eſcaped a Siege from the Scots, was ſurpriz'd by a Stratagem under the Conduct of Colonel Morgan and Colonel Birch Decemb. 8. Beeſton Caſtle had been ſurrender'd Novemb. 16, and the ſtrong City of Cheſter delivered up by the Lord Byron into the Parliament's Hands Feb. 3. Newark (to which the King had retreated at the beginning of October) was commanded by the Parliament to be ſoon after beſieg'd by the Scots Army; and the King was forced to leave the Town by Night, and to get privately to Oxford, where he had leiſure to reflect how fatal the whole Year had been to him: and it concluded with one Blow that ſeemed to cut off all hopes of Recovery; this was the Defeat of the Lord Aſtley, who had the only Forces in the Field for the King, about 3000, the greater part Horſe, with whom he was advancing from Worceſter toward Oxford to join with his Majeſty for helping to make up an Army for the next Campaign; on theſe Troops the poor Royaliſts in Oxford built all their Hopes, and therefore ſent out a good Party to meet them and conduct them; but all Intelligence and Paſſages were ſo intercepted by the Enemy, that this Party from Oxford could hear nothing of my Lord Aſtley's Motions, till they heard he was utterly defeated Mar. 22, near Stow in Glouceſterſhire, by Colonel Morgan, Sir William Brereton, Colonel Birch, &c. very few eſcap'd towards Faringdon and Oxford, and many of them taken in the way by Colonel Fleetwood. The Lord Aſtley himſelf being taken Priſoner, was ſo ſenſible of the Conſequences of this Defeat, that he told one of Brereton's Officers, You have now done your Work, and may go to Play, unleſs you will fall out among your ſelves.

The King driven back to Oxford.

Lord Aſtley defeated.

In the midſt of theſe Victories, the Commons at Weſtminſter amuſed the World with Peace, and Auguſt 7, took into Conſideration the ſending of Propoſitions to the King, but took care to preclude all Accommodation by theſe two Votes. 1. That in regard they had met with ſo many Deluſions in the way of Treaty they would henceforth admit of no Treaty nor Debate by Commiſſioners. 2. That ſuch Propoſitions as ſhall be ſent ſhall be drawn up into Bills, that ſo the Royal Aſſent being deſired and had thereunto, they may become Acts of Parliament. Which in effect was to hold no Correſpondence, and to give no Terms but what ſhould be abſolutely impoſed upon a vanquiſh'd Prince. However the King ſent a Meſſage to both Houſes December 5, to ſhew The conſtant Application of his earneſt Endeavours to find ſome Expedient for the ſpeedy ending of theſe unhappy Diſtractions; and for that purpoſe deſires a ſafe Conduct for the Duke of Richmond, the Earl of Southampton, John Aſhburnham and Jeffry Palmer Eſquires, with ſuch Propoſitions as his Majeſty is confident will be the Foundation of a happy and well-grounded Peace(a). His Majeſty ſent another Meſſage in purſuance of the former Decemb. 15, and again a third Meſſage with Propoſitions for committing the Militia into other Hands, and for having a perſonal Treaty with the two Houſes at Weſtminſter. At laſt the Lords and Commons ſent Anſwer Decemb. 25, to the two firſt Meſſages, denying ſafe Conduct and Treaty, and ſaying, They had now under their Conſideration Propoſitions and Bills for the ſettling of a ſafe and well-grounded Peace, to be preſented with all ſpeed to his Majeſty. Many other Meſſages, Anſwers and Replies, paſſed between the King and the two Houſes, to no effect but to ſhew the Inſolence of prevailing Power (b). In the King's laſt Meſſage of this Year

March

1645. 21 Car. I.

March 23, his Majeſty propoſed, that if he may have the Faith of both Houſes of Parliament for the Preſervation of his Honour, Perſon and Eſtate; and that Liberty be given to his Adherents to go home and live quietly, enjoying their Eſtates without Oaths impoſed upon them, he will immediately diſband all his Forces, and diſmantle all his Garriſons, and return to his two Houſes of Parliament, and paſs an Act of Oblivion, and will farther do whatever they will adviſe him for the Good and Peace of this Kingdom. But theſe offers of the utmoſt Condeſcenſion, ſerved only to animate the prevailing Party in Parliament, who now look'd upon the King as their Priſoner, tho' in his own Garriſon at Oxford.

State of Religion.

As to the Confuſions in Religion, the Aſſembly of Divines on March 27, came with a farther Addreſs to the Houſe of Commons, touching the Non-Admiſſion of vicious and ignorant Perſons to the Sacrament. This occaſion'd ſeveral Debates in the Houſe of Commons, who order'd April 1, That the Aſſembly ſhould ſet down in Particular, what meaſure of Underſtanding Perſons ought to have of the Trinity, and other Points debated, before they be admitted to the Sacrament. In theſe Debates Mr. Selden and Mr. Whitlock in ſet Speeches deliver'd their Opinion againſt all Power of Excommunication and Suſpenſion from the Sacrament; the firſt beginning with this Aſſertion, That for four thouſand Years there was no ſign of any Law to ſuſpend Perſons from Religious Exerciſes; and concluding thus: It appears Excommunication is but Humane Invention that was taken from the Heathen.

Debates in the Aſſembly of Divines.

Bp. Morton Impriſoned.

April 7, the aged excellent Biſhop Morton was brought before the Commons, for Chriſtning a Child in the old way, and ſigning it with the Sign of the Croſs; and refuſing to deliver up his Seal of the County Palatine of Durham, he was committed to the Tower (a).

Triers for the Miniſtry.

April 26, an Ordinance paſſed, that no Perſon be admitted to Preach, who is not Ordained a Miniſter, either in this or ſome other Reformed Church, except ſuch as intending the Miniſtry ſhall be allowed for the Trial of their Gifts, by thoſe who ſhall be appointed by both Houſes of Parliament (b). The great Buſineſs of the Aſſembly was an Eccleſiaſtical Union with their Brethren in Scotland; and therefore May 6, a Preamble to the Proceedings in Church-Affairs to be ſent into Scotland, was preſented by the Aſſembly to the Commons, and aſſented to; and it was farther Order'd, That all the Proceedings of the Parliament and Aſſembly, in the Buſineſs of the Church, ſhould be drawn up and ſent into Scotland. We hear no more of the Aſſembly till July 14, when they preſented to the Commons a Book which they had examined and found to be full of Blaſphemies and Hereſies, and though the Author was dead, they deſire the Houſe to put ſome publick Example of Juſtice upon the Book. The Houſe referred it to the Committee of Examinations to find out the Printer, and order'd that all the Books ſhould be brought in by the Bookſellers, and burnt by the Hangman, and gave Thanks to the Aſſembly for their Care in this Buſineſs, or rather for their ſordid Submiſſion of Heretical Books to the better Judgment of the Lay Commons.

Correſpondence with Scots Brethren.

Cenſuring of Books.

Auguſt 1, ſome Divines of the Aſſembly preſented a Petition to the Commons in the Name of the Aſſembly, deſiring ſpeedy courſe might be taken to keep from the Sacrament Ignorant, Scandalous, and Prophane People. The Speaker in the Name of the Houſe gave anſwer, That the Houſe was in Debate of the ſame Buſineſs long before their coming, and that they would expedite it with as much conveniency as could be. It was debated by the Commons Aug. 5, whether Chapels of Eaſe and thoſe in private Houſes ſhould not be exempted from the Church in the Presbyterial way, upon occaſion of the Ordinance ſent up to the Lords for ſettling the Form of Presbytery. Aug. 8, the Aſſembly ſent another Petition to the Commons, inſiſting upon their Claim of Jure Divino Power to ſuſpend from the Sacrament all ſuch as they ſhould judge to be Scandalous or Ignorant. And a new Petition Auguſt 11, for puniſhing ſuch as derogated from the Directory, or uſed the Common-Prayer Book, which by Aug. 23, procured a new Ordinance of the Lords and Commons for the "More effectual putting in execution "the Directory for publick Worſhip, and for bringing in all Common-Prayer Books to the Committees of the reſpective Counties, to be diſpoſed of "as the Parliament ſhall direct." His Majeſty at Oxford by Proclamation dated Novemb. 13, required and commanded the "Common-Prayer to be kept "and uſed in all Churches and Chapels according to "the Statute of 1 Q. Eliz. and that the Directory "be in no ſort admitted, received or uſed, being "introduc'd by colour of Ordinance of Parliament, "made without and againſt our Conſent, and againſt an expreſs Act of Parliament ſtill in force." But, alas, the Proclamation was rather Proteſting for a Right than Aſſerting of it. The Force of the King's Order could go no farther than that of his Arms, confined to Oxford, and a very few other ſmall Garriſons.

Ordinance for the Directory

K.'s Proclamation for the Liturgy.

Aug. 20, it was order'd by the Commons, that no Foreign Impreſſion of Engliſh Bibles ſhould be vended here without peruſal and allowance of the Aſſembly. And upon occaſion of the Penalties that were to attend a Suſpenſion from the Sacrament, it was voted Sept. 6, That the Presbytery ſhould not meddle with any thing of Meum and Tuum, till it were determined by the Civil Magiſtrate. And they began now to be ſo jealous of a Presbyterian Diſcipline, that the Houſe being informed of an intended Petition for eſtabliſhing Presbytery, they voted it Scandalous even before they received it. And October 15, they reſolved, That the Presbytery ſhould not ſuſpend from the Sacrament at their own Diſcretion, but for ſuch Offences only as ſhould be particularly expreſſed in an Ordinance made for that purpoſe; which Ordinance was paſſed by the two Houſes October 20, giving Power to the ſeveral Elderſhips to ſuſpend from the Sacrament of the Lord's-Supper all Ignorant and Scandalous Perſons, according to the Rules and Directions hereafter following, and not otherwiſe (c). So that the Presbyterians who had often objected to the Epiſcopal Clergy their want of Power to ſuſpend unworthy Communicants, were now themſelves under greater reſtraint; for more Authority was left by the Rubrick of the Liturgy to every private Miniſter, than was reſerved by this Ordinance to the Claſſical Aſſemblies. (d)

Parliament afraid of electing Presbytery.

Reſtrain the power of Presbyters.

Novemb. 8, an Ordinance long depending was paſſed for the Ordination of Miniſters, declaring, That the Word Presbyter and the Word Biſhop in Scripture ſignifie one and the ſame Function, and therefore Presbyters being lawfully thereunto appointed and authorized may ordain other Presbyters, according to the Rules of Examination and Faſting and Praying, and Impoſition of Hands in this Ordinance preſcribed. Provided, that this Ordinance ſhall ſtand in force for twelve Months and no longer: And indeed one twelve Months ſpace was the utmoſt Reign of Presbytery and all the Parts of it.

Scots

1645. 21 Car. I.

Scots, and to humour the Aſſembly, they now had it under Conſideration, and framed it into an Ordinance before the end of the Year. But in the mean time they often betray'd their Fears and Jealouſies of it. For when Novemb. 19, the Common-Council of London petition'd the Houſe of Commons, that the Government of the Church might be ſpeedily ſettled and obſerved, and greater Power might be given to the Miniſters and Elders than was eſtabliſhed by the Parliament, according to the Word of God: The Houſe order'd a ſharp Anſwer to be penn'd to this effect, that the Houſe had taken much pains in debating and ſettling of Church Government, and they conceived the City and Common Council were informed falſely of their Proceedings, or elſe they would not have precipitated the Judgment of the Parliament. And when another Petition of the ſame Import was delivered from divers Miniſters of London, they referred it to a Committee to find out the Deſign of the Petition, and who were the Advancers thereof; and then ſent out two of their Members to the Petitioners to tell them, They need not attend for any Anſwer, but ſhould go home and look to the Charges of their ſeveral Congregations.

Parliament reward the Aſſembly.

However to pleaſe the Aſſembly, the Commons ordered Decemb. 4, that one hundred Pounds ſhould be given to the Prolocutor Dr. Twiſs for a Gratuity, and that the Members ſhould have all due Encouragement to meet daily, and proceed upon the Catechiſm. But the Faction within the Aſſembly it ſelf between the Presbyterians and Independents, was now growing into ſuch a ferment, that Decemb. 11, the Presbyterian Divines came to the Houſe of Commons to inform them, that a printed Paper in the nature of a Remonſtrance was publiſhed by the Diſſenting Brethren of their Aſſembly, which they conceived to be ſcandalous to them, and therefore deſired they might make an Anſwer to it. The Houſe named a Committee to peruſe the Remonſtrance, and conſider of the Scandal of it, and to enquire by what Authority it was publiſh'd. Dec. 31, the Commons order'd Mr. Strong one of the Preachers that Day before them, to be added to the Aſſembly, and gave one hundred Pounds to Mr. Reynolds; and on Feb. 16, they appointed a Day to conſider of the Petition of the Aſſembly for ſettling the Presbyterian Government; wherein they were quicken'd with a Letter from the Parliament of Scotland, read Feb. 26, deſiring the ſpeedy ſettling of Religion, according to the Judgment and Requeſt of the Aſſembly of Divines. Upon which the Commons proceeded in this Church Buſineſs de die in diem, and ſent up to the Lords an Ordinance Mar. 5, which was paſſed Mar. 14, wherein they declare, that by the merciful Aſſiſtance of God having removed the Book of Common-Prayer, and eſtabliſhed the Directory; and having aboliſhed the Prelatical Hierarchy, and inſtead thereof laid the Foundation of a Presbyterial Government; they come now to ſupply the Defects of ſome former Ordinances and Directions of Parliament; and do ordain, 1. That there be a choice made of Elders throughout the Kingdom of Engl. according to the Directions of Aug. 19. 2. That notice of ſuch Election be given by the Miniſter in the publick Aſſembly. 3. That ſuch Elections be made by the major part of the Congregation, being ſuch as have taken the Covenant. 4. That there ſhall be Triers of Elections to hear and determine all Controverſies thence ariſing. And ſo on to three and twenty ſeveral Articles of Proviſion, that after all the Pretenſions and Title of Presbytery, made it rather a Scheme of Eraſtian Government, at the pleaſure of the Magiſtrate, and under the Adminiſtration of the People. (a) Great quarrel between the Preſbyterian and Independant Divines.

Presbytery at laſt ſettled or rather an Eraſtian Form.

But one good Motion and that defeated.

One little Attempt was made by the Aſſembly for the promoting of Letters and the Study of the Scriptures. They ſent a Petition by ſome of their Brethren to the Commons March 13, that Mr. Patrick Young might be encouraged in the Printing of the Greek Teſtament, much expected and deſired by the Learned, eſpecially beyond the Seas: And ſeemed to prevail for having an Ordinance read that Day, for Printing and Publiſhing the old Teſtament of the Septuagint Tranſlation, wherein Mr. Young had formerly taken Pains, having in his Hands as Library-Keeper of St. James's an Original Tecla Bible of that Tranſlation. But though under the proſpect of this Encouragement Mr. Young made ſome progreſs in theſe Works, yet Religion and Learning were ſo little countenanc'd by the Parliament and Aſſembly, that they never more called for the performance of them, and they were left unfiniſhed by Mr. Young at his Death in 1652.

The Conſcience and Honour of the King in charging the Prince to be conſtant in his Religion, does appear in ſeveral Letters written by his Majeſty under his greateſt Misfortunes and Diſtreſſes. In a Letter to the Lord Colepepper about the beginning of October, the King wrote thus: —— But that which is of more neceſſity, indeed abſolute, is, that with the beſt Conveniency, the moſt ſecrecy and greateſt Expedition, Prince Charles be tranſported into France; where his Mother is to have the ſole care of him in all things but one, which is his Religion, and that muſt ſtill be under the Care of the Biſhop of Salisbury: And this I undertake his Mother ſhall ſubmit unto. Soon after the King, being ſenſible of the Temptations and Dangers in the Court of France, commanded him to tranſport himſelf into Denmark, as a Proteſtant Kingdom. After which, the Prince being in Jerſey, the King thought him to be in France; and being much afraid he might be tamper'd with to change his Religion, he ſent him this Letter, dated at Oxford, Mar. 22. 1645.

Charles,

Hoping that this will find you ſafe with your Mother, I think fit to write this ſhort, but neceſſary, Letter to you. Then know, that your being where you are, ſafe from the Power of Rebels, is under God, either my greateſt Security, or my certain Ruin. For your Conſtancy to Religion, Obedience to me, and to the Rules of Honour, will make theſe inſolent Men begin to hearken to Reaſon, when they ſhall ſee their Injuſtice not like to be crown'd with Quiet: But if you depart from thoſe Grounds for which I have all this time fought, then your leaving this Kingdom will be (with too much probability) called ſufficient Proof for many of the Slanders heretofore laid upon me. Wherefore once again I command you, upon my Bleſſing, to be conſtant to your Religion, neither hearkning to Romiſh Superſtitions, nor the ſeditious and ſchiſmatical Doctrines of the Presbyterians and Independents; for know, that a perſecuted Church is not thereby leſs Pure, tho' leſs Fortunate. (b)

The King's Intereſt was now reduced to ſo low an Ebb, that it was impoſſible for him to take the Field. The two Houſes therefore had no apprehenſion of Danger, but from his coming in Perſon to Weſtminſter, and preſſing them to Peace and Reconciliation; ciliation; which they had the greater Reaſon to expect, becauſe he had ſent them repeated Offers of a perſonal Treaty with them. But not daring to truſt themſelves and the People with the Sight of the King, they paſſed ſeveral Votes Mar. 31, to this effect: That in caſe the King ſhould, contrary to the Advice of both Houſes of Parliament, come or attempt to come within the Lines of Communication, that then the Committee of the Militia and Guards about the City ſhould conduct him to St. James's, and prevent all reſort to him, and Impriſon all that ſhould preſume to come with him. So as the King found he could not go to the Parliament without being their Priſoner, nor could he long continue ſafe in his Garriſon at Oxford, for his ſtrong Caſtle of Dennington was Surrendred to the Parliament Forces April 1, as Woodſtock was by neceſſity given up Apr. 26, and Exeter, Beſieged by the Army of Fairfax, was glad to yield upon Articles Apr. 9, and Barnſtaple Apr. 12. And Fairfax, fluſh'd with irreſiſtible Succeſs, was now marching to Beſiege Oxford. Under theſe Extremities his Majeſty reſolved to throw himſelf into the Hands of the Scots Army that lay before Newark, communicating his Deſign to the Marqueſs of Ormond in a Letter dated Apr. 13, in theſe Words; Having lately received very good Security that We, and all that do or ſhall adhere to us, ſhall be ſafe in our Perſons, Honours, and Conſciences, in the Scotiſh Army; and that they ſhall really and effectually join with us, and ſhall employ their Armies and Forces to aſſiſt us to the procuring of an happy and well grounded Peace, for the good of us and our Kingdoms, in the Recovery of our juſt Right; we have reſolved to put Ourſelves to the hazard of paſſing into the Scots Army now lying before Newark. The King had the greater reaſon to truſt to this Security that he ſays was given to him, becauſe the Animoſities between the Engliſh Parliament and the Scots Commiſſioners and Army were very high. The Scots had in a manner proteſted againſt the Propoſitions which the two Houſes were ſending to the King, and had as it were appeal'd to the People, by Printing their Papers. At which the Houſes were ſo incenſed, that they concurr'd in a joint Vote, That the Matter contained in the ſaid Papers was falſe and ſcandalous againſt the Parliament of England; That they ſhould be burnt by the common Hangman; That a Declaration ſhould be drawn up to hold forth to the whole World the Untruths therein contained, and the Innocency and Integrity of the Parliament; and that the Author or Publiſher was an Incendiary between the two Kingdoms. Which harſh Proceeding was ſuch a Breach of the Union between the two Covenanted Nations, that like Herod and Pilate, nothing but trading for the Perſon of their Maſter could have made them Friends.

The Parl. afraid of the K.'s coming to them.

The King propoſes to throw himſelf upon the Scots Army.

Had ſome reaſon to truſt them.

The King leaves Oxford.

Upon the Approach of Fairfax toward Newberry, his Majeſty, on Monday April 27, about Midnight left Oxford in Diſguiſe, in Company only of Dr. Hudſon a Divine, and Mr. John Aſhburham, riding as a Servant to the latter with a Cloak-bag behind him. They went to Henley, Brentford, and Harrow on the Hill, thence toward St. Albans, making their Way to Harborough in Leiceſterſhire, where they expected Monſieur Montril the French Agent (a); who failing in his Appointment, his Majeſty went to Stamford, thence to Downham in Norfolk, where he lay from Thurſday April 30, to Monday May 4, then to Southwell, where meeting with the French Agent, he ſent to General Leven, and was conducted by a Troop of Horſe to Lieutenant General David Leſley's Quarters on Tueſday May 5. A Deſign managed with ſo much Secrecy, that thoſe at Oxford, though they ſoon knew his Majeſty was gone, could not gueſs whither he intended his Courſe; but it was generally reported he was gone to London. This ſo alarm'd the two Houſes, that they publiſhed an Order, May 4, that what Perſon ſoever ſhould harbour and conceal, or know of the harbouring or concealing of the King's Perſon, and ſhould not immediately reveal it to the Speakers of both Houſes, ſhould be proceeded againſt as a Traitor to the Commonwealth, forfeit his whole Eſtate and die without Mercy.

The Parl. afraid.

1646. 22 Car. I.

On the 6th of May the two Houſes received Intelligence from Colonel Poyntz and their Commiſſioners before Newark, that the King was in the Scots Army. Upon which the Commons voted, That the Commiſſioners and General of the Scots Army be deſired, that his Majeſty's Perſon be diſpoſed of as both Houſes ſhall deſire and direct; and that his Majeſty be thence diſpoſed of and ſent to Warwick Caſtle.

General Leven immediately prevail'd with the King to ſend Order to the Lord Bellaſis Governour of Newark to ſurrender it to the Commiſſioners of the Parliament; which was done by Articles ſign'd the 6th of May. And the ſame Day the Scotch General ſent Letters to the Committee of both Kingdoms at Weſtminſter to inform them of the ſtrange Providence with which they are now ſurpriz'd, the King coming into their Army yeſterday in ſo private a way, that after they had made ſearch for him, they could not find him out in ſundry Houſes: A Matter of much Aſtoniſhment to them, ſeeing they did not expect he would have come in any Place under their Power.

Hypocriſy of the Scots.

May 7, the Scots Army, with their unexpected Prize, took their March Northward, his Majeſty being with Lieutenant-General Leſly in the Van of them; and on May 13, came to Newcaſtle, where his Majeſty took up his Reſidence in the General's Quarters. On May 25, the Committee of Eſtates with the Scots Army ſent to the two Houſes a Paper of Reaſons for not delivering up Colonel Aſhburnham and Dr. Hudſon the King's Guides. His Majeſty on May 18, ſent a Meſſage to the two Houſes, offering all poſſible Conceſſions, and deſiring to return to his Parliament for his and their mutual Comfort; and next Day a Letter to the City of London, expreſſing his Integrity and full Reſolution to comply with his Parliaments in every thing for ſettling Truth and Peace, that his Return to that his antient City may be to the Satiſfaction of his Parliament, the good liking of his Citizens, and all his good People, and to his own greater Joy and Comfort. And again June 10, another Meſſage to both Houſes, propoſing that He may come to London with Safety, Freedom, and Honour, where he reſolves to comply with his Houſes of Parliament in every thing which may be moſt for the Good of his Subjects. But this unfortunate Prince was now in ſuch a helpleſs ſtate, that neither would the Scots Army deliver him, nor the Engliſh Parliament receive him, but for a Victim to their mutual Deſigns of Avarice and Empire.

The King carried to Newcaſtle.

Sends a Meſſage of Peace.

His unhappy Condition.

General Fairfax came a ſecond time before Oxford with his victorious Army May 1, and prepared for the cloſe Siege of it, and ſent to Sir Thomas Glenham the Governour, to demand the Surrendry of it; who entred on a Treaty May 18, and receiving his Majeſty's Warrant dated at Newcaſtle June 10, did Surrender upon honourable Articles June 29. Prince Rupert and Prince Maurice taking Ship at Dover and going over into France, where the Prince of Wales was alſo retired from the Iſle of Jerſey, the Duke of York being brought up to St. James's.

Oxford Surrendred.

The few remaining Garriſons for the King made the like Terms of Surrendry; Worceſter on July 19, Wallingford July 22, Pendennis Caſtle Aug. 16, and Ragland Caſtle Aug. 17. So that there was not now one Garriſon in England or Wales remaining, but what was reduced to the Power of the two Houſes, ſave only thoſe in the North, which remained in the Hands of the Scots.

And alſo other Garriſons.

And therefore the two Houſes at Weſtminſter thought their only Buſineſs was now to get Poſſeſſion of the King's Perſon, and to get a fair Riddance of the Scots Army. In order to this, they enter'd into many Conferences with the Commiſſioners for the Kingdom of Scotland, and agreed with them upon what they called Propoſitions for Peace June 27. Gen. Leven and his Officers the ſame Day preſenting a mock Petition to the King, Praying his Majeſty to compaſſionate the diſtreſſed Condition of his Kingdoms groaning under the heavy Preſſures of manifold Calamities occaſioned by the Continuance of this unnatural War; and to comply with the Counſels of his Parliaments. The King returned Anſwer, that He came into the Scotiſh Army with full intent of ſettling a happy Peace, and to ſatisfy the juſt Deſires of his good Subjects, and to comply with his Parliaments in all things which ſhall be for the Good of Religion, and the Happineſs of his People.

Deſirous of the K.'s Perſon.

Votes againſt the Scots.

The Commons were more and more afraid of the good Meaning of the Scots, and therefore boldly voted July 6, that this Kingdom hath no farther need of the Scotch Army, and that the Kingdom is unable to pay them longer; and that therefore a Letter ſhould be ſent from both Houſes to the Commiſſioners of Scotland, to deſire them to withdraw their Army into Scotland.

Propoſitions of Peace.

On Monday July 13, the Propoſitions for Peace were ſent to his Majeſty at Newcaſtle by the E. of Pembroke, the E. of Suffolk, Peers, and Sir Walter Erle, Sir John Hippeſley, Kts. Rob. Goodwin, Luke Robinſon, Eſqs. Commoners; Mr. Marſhal attending them as Chaplain. Theſe Propoſitions were, 1. By Act of Parliament to make null all Oaths, Declarations, and Proclamations, againſt both or either of the Houſes of Parliament, who have been neceſſitated to undertake a War in their juſt and lawful Defence. 2. That his Majeſty ſwear and ſign the late Solemn League and Covenant. 3. That a Bill be paſſed for the utter aboliſhing of Epiſcopacy. 4. That the Ordinances for the Aſſembly of Divines be confirmed. 5. That Reformation of Religion be ſettled according to the Covenant. 6. That both Kingdoms be brought to Uniformity of Religion, according to the Covenant. 7. That an Oath be adminiſtred to all Papiſts to renounce the Doctrines of Supremacy, Tranſubſtantiation, &c. 8. An Act for the Education of Children of Papiſts in the Proteſtant Religion. 9. An Act for the true Levy of all Penalties againſt Papiſts. 10. An Act to prevent ſaying Maſs in the Court. —— That ſuch Perſons (to a very great number) ſhall expect no Pardon: That the King ſhould part with the Power of the Militia, and the Cuſtody of the Tower of London: And, in ſhort, an entire Change of the ancient Government in Church and State.

Hard and unreaſonable.

The Commiſſioners not impower'd to Treat.

The Commiſſioners brought theſe Propoſitions to Newcaſtle on Thurſday July 23, and on the Day after were admitted to his Majeſty's Preſence, and kiſs'd his Hand. The King firſt demanded, If they had any Power to Treat? To which they anſwering No; his Majeſty replied, Then ſaving the Honour of the Buſineſs, an honeſt Trumpeter might have done as much. Then Mr. Goodwin read the Propoſitions, to which his Majeſty hearkned attentively, and at the end of Reading, ſaid, Gentlemen, I hope you do not expect a very ſpeedy Anſwer, becauſe the Buſineſs is of high Concernment. The Earl of Pembroke anſwer'd, That they were limited not to ſtay above ten days after their coming to that Town, and muſt then return. His Majeſty replied, that he would diſpatch them in convenient time: and ſo for the preſent diſmiſs'd them.

King's Anſwer.

Aug. 1, his Majeſty deliver'd his Anſwer in Writing to the Commiſſioners, directed to the Speaker of the Houſe of Peers pro tempore to be communicated: wherein he told them, "That the Propoſitions "tendred to him did import ſo great Alterations in "Government, both in the Church and Kingdom, "that it was difficult to return a particular and po"ſitive Anſwer before a full Debate: to which end "his Majeſty deſireth and propoſeth to come to "London, or any of his Houſes thereabouts; where "by his perſonal Preſence he may not only raiſe a "mutual Confidence between him and his People, "but alſo have theſe Doubts cleared, and theſe "Difficulties explained unto him, which he now "conceives to be deſtructive to his juſt Regal Pow"er, if he ſhall give a full Conſent to theſe Propo"ſitions as they now ſtand."

1646. 22 Car. I.

Engliſh Parliament to Purchaſe,

This Anſwer was Reported to the Houſe of Commons Aug. 12, and the Counſels to be now taken were how to bring up the King into ſafer Cuſtody, and how to ſend the Scots into their own Country. And therefore the Day following, the Houſe of Commons, upon Conſideration of a Paper delivered to the Lords by the Scotch Commiſſioners, voted, that the Sum of a hundred thouſand Pounds ſhould be provided for the Advance of the Scots Army into Scotland. And did reſolve, that this Houſe do well and thankfully approve of their good Affections and Zeal to this Kingdom, and their Offer to deliver up our Garriſons and depart the Kingdom. That their Arrears ſhall be audited, and in convenient time paid. So they began to reckon with them: The Scots demanded two Millions from the 18th of Jan. 1643, to the 18th of Septemb. 1646. The Parliament accounted for one Million four hundred thouſand Pounds already paid; but the Scots excepted to ſeveral Particulars in the Account, and offer'd to accept of a Sum in groſs for a full Diſcharge of their Arrears, to be agreed on by Commiſſioners; who concluded on four hundred thouſand Pounds; of which one Moiety to be paid before their going home, and the other within ſtated terms.

Scots Army to Sell the King.

Price agreed upon.

The delivering up the King was a tacit Condition of this Agreement: therefore Sept. 18, the Commons took into Conſideration how his Majeſty's Perſon ſhould be diſpoſed of; and voted, 1. That whatſoever Conſultation and Debate the Scots Commiſſioners ſhould have concerning his Majeſty's Perſon, it ſhould not impede the March of the Scots Armies out of this Kingdom, nor violate or trench upon the Treaties between both Nations. 2. That his Majeſty ſhall be diſpoſed of as both Houſes of the Parliament of England ſhould think fit. Upon this, the Scots Commiſſioners put in their Claim to a joint Right of diſpoſing of his Majeſty's Perſon; and ſeveral Conferences were held upon this Matter, and many long Papers paſs'd upon it: the Scots inſiſting upon a Right in his Perſon who was King of Scotland as well as of England; and the Engliſh keeping to this Aſſertion, We do affirm, that the Kingdom of Scotland hath no Right of joint Exerciſe of Intereſt in diſpoſing the Perſon of the King, in the Kingdom of England. The Parliament of England truſted to this Argument, that the Scots Army would not carry away the King to looſe their Contract of four hundred thouſand Pounds; and that they ſhould receive no part of it without delivering up their Security the King's Perſon.

Difficulty of making good the Bargain.

By Loan from the City, upon the Credit of a Sale of Church-Lands, the Sum of two hundred thouſand Pounds was ready at Goldſmiths-Hall by Novemb. 27, and being ſoon after ſent into the North, it was very well known that the Perſon of the King was to be given for a Scotch Receipt to the Engliſh. The King ſenſible of the Price ſet upon him, ſent one more Meſſage Decemb. 20, to the Lords and Commons at Weſtminſter, and the Scots Commiſſioners at London, for a Perſonal Treaty; concluding thus, "'Tis your King who deſires to be heard, (the "which if refuſed to a Subject by a King, he would "be thought a Tyrant for it) and for that End "which all Men profeſs to deſire. Wherefore his "Majeſty conjures you, as you deſire to ſhew your "ſelves really what you profeſs, even as you are "good Chriſtians and Subjects, that you will ac"cept this his offer, which he is confident God will "ſo bleſs, that it will be the readieſt Means by "which theſe Kingdoms may again become a Com"fort to their Friends and a Terrour to their Ene"mies." And his Majeſty diſcovering the Intrigues carried on, gave in ſeveral Queries to the Scots Commiſſioners then attending upon him; who declined all Anſwer, till they received a Letter and Declaration from the Parliament of Scotland to the Parliament of Engl. expreſſing their Conſent and Reſolution to concur with them in diſpoſal of the King's Perſon.

Lords and Commons differ about cuſtody of the King's Perſon.

There was ſome Diſpute between the Lords and Commons as well as between the two Nations, about the Cuſtody of the King. The Lords voted December 22, that the King may come to Newmarket, there to remain with ſuch Attendants as both Houſes ſhall appoint. But the Commons voted, that Holmby-Houſe in Northamptonſhire, would be a Place moſt fit for his Majeſty to abide with ſuch Attendants; to which the Lords agreed, pretending to provide, that his coming thither ſhould be with reſpect to the Safety and Preſervation of his Majeſty's Perſon, and in Preſervation and Defence of the true Religion, the Commons adding this Explication, According to the Covenant. So Commiſſioners of both Houſes were named to go down to receive the King from the Scots, and to bring him to Holmby; of the Lords the Earl of Pembroke, Earl of Denbigh, and Lord Mountague; of the Commons Sir John Holland, Sir Walter Earl, Sir James Harrington, Sir John Cook, Mr. John Crew and Major General Brown, who ſet out from London Jan. 13, and came to Newcaſtle Jan. 23, and having all kiſs'd the King's Hand, the Earl of Pembroke told his Majeſty, They were commanded by both Houſes of Parliament to attend him to Holmby. The King betray'd no ill Reſentment nor any Surprize, but only enquired of the Goodneſs of the Ways: Yet he could not but take to Heart the baſe Dealing of the Scots, and took occaſion to tell their chief Leaders Jan. 28, that he had often deſired to go into Scotland, that he came into their Army for Protection, but now perceived they were not willing he ſhould go with them; he deſir'd to know how they would diſpoſe of him, and to whom they would deliver him? After withdrawing they came back and told his Majeſty, "They had conſider'd "of his Speech, and ſince his Majeſty had refuſed "to take the Covenant and ſign the Propoſitions, "they were to deliver him to the Commiſſioners "of both Houſes of the Parliament of England, "who were come to attend him to Holmby."

The King delivered up to the Parliament.

Carried to Holmby.

On Saturday Jan. 30, (a Day of Impriſonment that within two Years became the Day of his Martyrdom) the Scots marched out of Newcaſtle, and the Parliament Commiſſioners received the King into their Charge, and conducted him to Holmby, where he arrived on Tueſday Feb. 16.

Death of the Earl of Eſſex.

The Parliament's firſt General the Earl of Eſſex, who had choſe rather to decline their Service than to deſert it; and was in his own Judgment too deſirous of Peace to be made the prime Inſtrument of War, was reſerv'd and melancholy at the preſent poſture of Affairs, and ſo in a viſible Diſcontent departed this Life at Eſſex Houſe in the Strand Sept. 14. of which the two Houſes having notice the next day, they both immediately adjourn'd to the morrow, and then order'd that each Houſe ſhould accompany the Corps to the Grave, and aſſiſt at the Celebration of his Funeral Rites, towards which they appointed 5000 l. to be paid to his Executors for defraying the Charges thereof; which was celebrated with extraordinary State on October 22. His Body was interr'd in ———————, the Funeral Sermon preach'd by Mr. Vines; his Character better drawn by the Lord Clarendon. "The Earl of Eſſex died without being "ſenſible of Sickneſs, in a time when he might "have been able to have undone much of the Miſ"chief he had formerly wrought, to which he had "great Inclinations, and had Indignation enough "for the Indignities himſelf had received from the "ungrateful Parliament, and wonderful Apprehen"ſion and Deteſtation of the Ruin he ſaw likely "to befal the King and the Kingdom. And it is "very probable, conſidering the preſent Temper of "the City at that time, and of the two Houſes, he "might, if he had lived, have given ſome Check "to the Rage and Fury that then prevail'd. But "God would not ſuffer a Man, who out of the Pride "and Vanity of his Nature, rather than the Wick"edneſs of his Heart, had been made an Inſtru"ment of ſo much Miſchief, to have any ſhare in ſo "glorious a Work. Though his Conſtitution and "Temper might very well incline him to the Lethar"gick Indiſpoſition of which he died, yet it was "loudly ſaid by many of his Friends that he was "Poiſoned. Sure it is, that Cromwell and his Party "(for he was now declared Head of the Army, tho' "Fairfax continued General in Name) were won"derfully exalted with his Death, he being the on"ly Perſon whoſe Credit and Intereſt they feared "without any eſteem of his Perſon."

Parliament jealous of the Aſſembly of Divines.

As to the Diſtractions in Religion within this Year 1646, the Majority of Divines in the Aſſembly were often petitioning the Commons for a full and perfect Settlement of Church Government. Which being debated in the Houſe April 21, they began more freely to aſſert the Power of Parliaments in Spiritual Matters, which they would not ſuffer to be impeached by ſuch Petitions (a); and therefore April 30, they ſent theſe Queſtions to the Aſſembly and deſir'd Satisfaction in them.

(a) See, A Declaration of the Commons of England aſſembled in Parliament concerning the Ancient and Fundamental Government of the Kingdom, and Government of the Church, wherein they declare for a Presbyterial Government, but cannot conſent to the granting of an arbitrary and unlimited Power and Juriſdiction for erecting near Ten thouſand Judicatories within this Kingdom, as demanded by the Aſſembly of Divines. Dat. 17. Apr. 1646. Husband's Collect. p. 877.

(b) The Aſſembly gave no formal Publick Anſwer, a private Pamphlet only was publiſht with this Title, An Anſwer to thoſe Queſtions propounded by the Parliament to the Aſſembly of Divines touching Jus Divinum in Matter of Church-Government: Wherein is clearly proved from Scripture that the Presbyterial Government is Jure Divino, of Divine Inſtitution, and according to the Will and Appointment of Jeſus Chriſt. London, 1646. 4*to*.

1646. 22 Car. I. deed the Presbyterian Majority were ſo confounded at the oppoſition in their own Houſe from their warm diſſenting Brethren, and at the Checks and Repulſes they frequently met with from the Houſe of Commons, that they grew very weary of their Attendance on them, and began to fall off and retire home privately and by degrees, without any formalities of Proroguing and Diſſolving. And the wiſeſt of them were at laſt a little ſenſible of their own fatal Errors, in breaking off a Synodical Union with their Spiritual Governours, and ſubmitting to be made an independent Body of Presbyters, to quarrel eternally among themſelves; and to be made a Property to the Lay-powers, who meant no more than to ſerve a Turn by them, and then to deſpiſe them.

Petition of the City in favour of Presbytery. So that Presbytery now languiſhing within its own Aſſembly, was glad to call in the Aſſiſtance of the Common-People. Hence a Remonſtrance was procured from the Lord-Mayor, Aldermen, and Common-Council of London to both Houſes, deſiring a ſtrict and ſpeedy Courſe for ſuppreſſing all private and ſeparate Congregations; and that all Hereticks and Sectaries who conformed not to the publick Diſcipline may be proceeded againſt; and that none diſaffected to the Presbyterian Government be employ'd in any place of publick Truſt. The Lords gave a kind Anſwer, acknowledging the great Services and Merit of the City, and giving them Thanks for this Teſtimony of their Duty and good Affections: But the Commons expreſſed great Offence, that the City ſhould thus preſcribe to the Parliament what to do; and gave a ſhort Anſwer, That they would take their Remonſtrance and Petition into Conſideration within convenient time. The Commons offended. Amidſt theſe Party Squabbles it was obſerved, that General Fairfax was much inclined to the Presbyterians, Cromwell and a ſtrong Party of the deepeſt Reach for the Independents, or rather for a Religion alway to depend upon the Supreme, Civil and Military Power. And therefore by their ſubtilty a Counter-Petition was preſented from the City of London to the Houſe of Commons June 2, who now perceived they ſhould have ſtrength enough to aboliſh Presbytery as well as Epiſcopacy. A counter-Petition.

Letter from the Kirk of Scotland. The General-Aſſembly of the Kirk of Scotland began to be very jealous that their Covenant would not have its due Effect in England; and therefore they reſolv'd to expoſtulate this Matter with their dear Brethren at London and Weſtminſter. Accordingly they in the Name of their whole Aſſembly ſent a Letter to both Houſes of Parliament dated June 18, to complain of the ſlow progreſs of the Work of God, and of the Generation of Men who retarded the Work of Uniformity, and fomented Jealouſies betwixt the Nations, ſtudying if it were poſſible to break our Bands aſunder; deſiring them to hold faſt the Band of their Covenant as Sacred and Inviolable. They ſent at the ſame time another Letter to the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, and Common-Council of the City of London, thanking them for their late and ſeaſonable Teſtimony given to the Truth of the Goſpel, manifeſted in their humble Remonſtrance and Petition to the Honourable Houſes of Parliament, which revives the remembrance of their former Faith and Zeal, and makes them precious in the Lord's ſight. And after theſe, a third Letter to the Aſſembly of Divines at Weſtminſter dated June 27, telling them, If any here hath ſeemed to be more jealous than godly Jealouſie would allow, it can be imputed to nothing elſe but to the vehemency of ardent Affection, and impatient Deſire to have our Brethren there and us join'd nearer to Chriſt, and to one another, in all his Ordinances, and eſpecially in Presbyterian Government. —— No doubt Mountains of Oppoſitions ariſe, and Gulfs of Difficulties open up themſelves in this your way, but you have found it is God who girdeth you with Strength, and maketh your way plain and perfect before you. —— We exhort you to continue and abound, knowing that your Labours ſhall not be in vain in the Lord. But their Army being now ready to be gone, theſe Exhortations were to little other purpoſe than to ſhew their Zeal and their Miſtake. (a) 1646. 22 Car. I.

July 22. Mr. Herle was voted to be Moderator of the Aſſembly, in the room of Dr. Twiſs deceaſed; and the Divines were now buſying themſelves in drawing up a large Confeſſion of Faith, and on Sept. 25, brought to the Houſe of Commons ſuch Heads of the Articles as they had already perfected; which Articles were debated by the Commons October 5, who received a Complaint of October 25, of an Indictment in the County of Bucks, againſt a Miniſter for not reading the Common Prayer according to Statute; upon which they reſolv'd, that an Ordinance ſhould be brought in to take away that Statute of Uniformity, and to diſable malignant Miniſters from Preaching. October 28, Mr. Sympſon formerly ſilenced from Preaching, becauſe he differed in Judgment from the Aſſembly in their beloved Points, was reſtored to his Liberty. On Novemb. 19, a Petition of the inferiour People of Kent to the Houſe of Commons, that the Miniſters may no longer receive Tythes, but be provided for ſome other way (b). The Houſe took it, and gave them Thanks for their good Affections. On Dec. 3, the Aſſembly preſented to the Commons the laſt Part of their Confeſſion of Faith. Which being debated Decemb. 7, the Commons order'd five hundred Copies to be printed for the Members of both Houſes; and that the Aſſembly ſhould bring in their Marginal Notes to prove every part of it by Scripture; and ſhould likewiſe prepare their Anſwer to thoſe Queries touching the Point of Jus Divinum, which they had received from this Houſe. Mr. Herle made Moderator. A Confeſſion of Faith.

At the King's firſt coming to Newcaſtle, Mr. Henderſon a Scotch Presbyter came as an Agent for the Kirk, and much importun'd his Majeſty to paſs the Propoſitions. His Majeſty affirmed to him, that he could not in Conſcience conſent to ſeveral things therein contained; eſpecially as to the change of Church-Government from the primitive Order of Epiſcopacy; and condeſcended to have ſeveral Conferences with him, and to let ſeveral Papers paſs between them upon this Subject; which being faithfully printed do demonſtrate the King's great Abilities, and his incomparable Knowledge in theſe Controverſies; being at a time when he had few or no Books, and could not have the aſſiſtance of any Chaplain. Mr. Henderſon returned from Newcaſtle to Edinburgh with a ſerious conviction of his Majeſty's Integrity and Learning, and died about the end of Auguſt, much lamented by thoſe of his Party, who themſelves ſuſpected that his Death was owing to his diſſatisfaction in his late trial of Skill with his Majeſty. The Lord Clarendon expreſſes it thus. " The King was ſo much too hard for Mr. Hender- " ſon in the Argumentation, that the old Man him- " ſelf was ſo far convinc'd and converted, that he Conference between the King and Mr Henderſon.

(a) By obſerving the Steps taken in the Houſe of Commons and in the Aſſembly of Divines, it is very evident that all the Attempts for ſettling Presbytery were ſupported by the Fear and Love of the Scots Army; and that as ſoon as that Army was gone home, Religion was as well govern'd by the Engliſh Army, who were for Independency, and a better Principle of Toleration.

(b) The Papiſts were very much animated by theſe unhappy Conteſts, and laboured to inflame them, as we have undoubted Authority in the Letter of Biſhop Bramhall to Archbiſhop Uſher, dat. July 20, 1654. ——It plainly appears, That in the Year 1646, by Order from Rome, above One hundred of the Romiſh Clergy were ſent into England, conſiſting of Engliſh, Scotiſh, and Iriſh, who had been educated in France, Italy, Germany, and Spain; Part of theſe within the ſeveral Schools there appointed for their Inſtructions. In each of theſe Roman Nurſeries, theſe Scholars were taught ſeveral handicraft Trades and Callings, as their Ingenuities were moſt bending, beſides their Orders or Functions of that Church: They have many yet at Paris a fitting up to be ſent over, who twice in the Week oppoſe one the other; One pretending Presbytery, the other Independency, ſome Anabaptiſm, and other contrary Tenets. —— The hundred Men that went over 1646, were moſt of them Soldiers in the Parliament Army, and were daily to correſpond with thoſe Romaniſts in the King's Army, that were lately at Oxford, and pretended to Fight for his Sacred Majeſty. See Life and Letters of Archbiſhop Uſher. Fol. p. 611.

" had

1646. 22 Car. I. "had a very deep ſenſe of the Miſchief he had himſelf been the Author of, or too much contributed to, and lamented it to his neareſt Friends and Confidents, and died of Grief and Heart-broken within a very ſhort time after he departed from his Majeſty."

Rudeneſs of a Scotch Presbyter. It is very obſervable, that another Scotch Presbyter of much leſs Moderation and Learning, preach'd very bold ſtuff before the King in the ſame Garriſon, and after Sermon call'd for the fifty ſecond Pſalm, beginning thus:

Why doſt thou Tyrant boaſt thy ſelf,
Thy wicked Works to praiſe?

His Majeſty ſtood up, and without any Reflection on the Inſolence of the Man, with great preſence of Mind called for the fifty ſixth Pſalm, which begins;

Have Mercy, Lord, on me I pray,
For Men would me devour.

And the Congregation were ſo well pleaſed with the happy Turn, that they wav'd the Preacher's Pſalm and fell in with that which the King called for.

King deſires the Attendance of his Chaplains. When the King was firſt brought to Holmby Houſe, he ſent a Letter to the Lords and Commons, deſiring, That in regard he was not ſatisfied with the Presbyterian Government, and could not be content that thoſe Miniſters ſhould officiate to him, Dr. Sheldon and ſome other of his Chaplains, or any two of them might be permitted to come to him, by whom he might receive the proper Comforts to his Soul.

Delay and Denial of it. And hearing of no return to this Requeſt, he ſent another Letter to the Parliament at the beginning of March, to deſire that Favour of his Chaplains; and told the Commiſſioners then with him, that indeed he had not now Power to command them or any Man; but he muſt needs importune them to be inſtrumental in ſatisfying this his Reaſonable Deſire. But ſtill no Anſwer was return'd till after March 29, when it was formed into a Denial, that they cannot conſent to his Majeſty's Deſire in ſending any of his Chaplains named in his Letter; becauſe they are diſaffected to the preſent Government of the Church; but for others of his Chaplains who have taken the Covenant, if his Majeſty pleaſe they will ſend them to him.

"After this Anſwer, ſays the Ld Clarendon, His Majeſty thought it to no purpoſe to importune 'em farther in that particular: but next to the having his own Chaplains, he would have been beſt pleaſed to have been without any. They who were ſent by them being Men of mean Parts, and of moſt impertinent and troubleſome Confidence.---Cromwel and his Officers took upon them to Preach and Pray publickly to their Troops, and admitted few or no Chaplains in the Army, but ſuch as bitterly inveighed againſt the Presbyterian-Government as more Tyrannical than Epiſcopacy; and the Common Soldiers as well as the Officers did not only Pray and Preach among themſelves, but went up into the Pulpits in all Churches, and preached to the People, who quickly became inſpired with the ſame Spirit: Women as well as Men taking upon them to Pray and Preach, which made as great a noiſe and confuſion in all Opinions concerning Religion, as there was in the Civil Government of the State; ſcarce any Man being ſuffered to be called in queſtion for delivering any Opinion in Religion by ſpeaking or writing, how Prophane, Heretical, or Blaſphemous ſoever it was, which they ſaid was to reſtrain the Spirit." The ſame Author well obſerves, "That it was an obſervation in that time, that the firſt publiſhing of extraordinary News was from the Pulpit." (a)

We left the King a Priſoner to the Parliament, and under a Guard of their Commiſſioners at Holdenby or Holmby in Northamptonſhire; a very ſtately Houſe built by the Lord Chancellor Hatton; and in K. James's Reign purchaſed by the Queen for this her ſecond Son then Duke of York, not then foreſeeing that he ſhould make it a Royal Palace and Priſon. 1647. 23 Car. I. The King a Priſoner at Holmby Houſe. This Houſe had been prepared for the King's reception by Mr. Clement Kinerſley of the Wardrobe, with all ſuitable Accommodation. The two Divines Mr. Marſhal and Mr. Carrel (who came along with the Commiſſioners) attended the King at Dinner and Supper, as ready and willing to crave a Bleſſing; but the King alway ſaid Grace himſelf. And upon Sundays, when thoſe Miniſters preached in the Chapel, Forenoon and Afternoon by turns, the King allowed his Servants to go if they pleas'd; but ſequeſter'd himſelf to his own private Devotions. On Week-days the King ſpent two or three Hours daily in Prayer and Reading; would after Meals play a Game at Cheſs, and walk often in the Garden; and there being no Bowling-green at Holmby, would ſometimes under ſufficient Guard ride to Harrowden and to Althrop, where good Greens were well kept. In going once to Harrowden Major Boſvile ſtanding on a Bridge diſguis'd like a labouring Man, gave his Majeſty a Packet from the Queen. The King told the Commiſſioners it was to obtain his leave for the Prince to accompany Monſieur that Campaign in the French Army. Upon which the Commiſſioners ſeemed content to diſmiſs the Perſon in diſguiſe; but he was ſent up to the Parliament and committed to Newgate. This Accident being reported to the two Houſes, they ſent down Inſtructions to have a ſtricter Eye upon his Majeſty's Perſon, and to diſcharge thoſe Servants who had waited upon him at Oxford. Put into ſtricter Cuſtody. The Commiſſioners ſoon acquainted the King with theſe Orders, who with great Expoſtulation for the ſeverity of them, was forced to diſmiſs all his old Attendants except Mr. James Maxwel, and Mr. Patrick Mawl, Grooms of his Bed-Chamber, to whom the King was willing to join Mr. Thomas Herbert and Mr. Harrington. His old Servants taken from him.

King's Health and Moderation. It is worth obſervation, that in all the time of his Majeſty's Reſtraint and Solitude, he was never Sick, nor took any thing to prevent Sickneſs, which (under God) was attributed to his quiet Diſpoſition, and moderate Exerciſe and regular Diet; eating but of few Diſhes, and drinking but twice at Dinner and Supper, once of ſmall Beer, and once of Wine and Water mix'd, or after Fiſh of pure Wine; ſeldom or never eating or drinking before Dinner or between Meals.

Apr. 21, Letters came from the Parliament's Commiſſioners at Holmby, acquainting the Houſe of Commons with the great reſort of People to his Majeſty, to be touched for the King's Evil: Upon which the Houſe ordered a Declaration to be drawn up, to inform the People of the fond Superſtition of being touched by the King for the Evil; and renewed their Orders for the ſtricter Cuſtody of him. At the beginning of May, his Majeſty told the Commiſſioners about him, that he had long waited for Propoſitions to be ſent him from London, but not receiving them, he had now prepared an Anſwer to thoſe He ſends an Anſwer to the Propoſitions made at Newcaſtle

(a) The Presbyterians called the Independents Schiſmaticks, and maintained a Neceſſity of giving no Toleration to them. See, The Schiſmatick ſifted againſt the five Apologiſts, 4to. 1646.

In the Diſputes about Schiſm, Hereſies and Blaſphemies prevail'd more and more. See, An Ordinance of the Lords and Commons aſſembled in Parliament concerning the Growth and Spreading of Errours, Hereſies, and Blaſphemies, Die Jovis, 4, Febr. 1646.

The Papiſts took their Advantage of the Enthuſiaſtick Humour of the Times, and laid the Foundation of a new Sect called Quakers; by reprinting in London within this Year 1646, the third Part of the Rule of Perfection, a myſtical Book written by Father Prenet, a Capuchin, under a new Title, A bright Star centring in Chriſt our Perfection. Printed for H. Overton, 4to. wherein it was expreſsly laid down, that Chriſt's Paſſion was to be practis'd and beheld in Ourſelves, rather than that which is conſidered at Jeruſalem.

1647. 23 Car. I. Propoſitions delivered at Newcaſtle, which (not being allowed a Secretary) he muſt ſcribble over himſelf. His Majeſty ſent this Anſwer in a Letter read in the Houſes May 18, wherein the King conſented to ſome of the Propoſitions in whole, to others in part; and gave his Reaſons for whatever he diſſented from. "He was willing to have the Presbyterial Government ſettled for three Years; and conſented to ratifie the Aſſembly of Divines, propoſing ſome other Miniſters to be joined with them; the King and his Houſhold only having liberty to uſe the Common-Prayer Book. As to the Militia he would yield it up for ten Years, provided it might then be reſtored to him and his Heirs. As to the Covenant he could not be ſatisfied, but deſired ſome of his own Divines might be ſent to reſolve his Scruples therein. The Great Seal he will ratifie, if put into his own diſpoſal. To the City of London he will grant the Tower and all that is deſired. He will conſent to the Bills againſt Popery; and will paſs a general Act of Oblivion and free Pardon on all ſides. For all which purpoſes, his Majeſty deſired to come to the Parliament, and confer and agree with them." On May 20, the Lords voted for his Majeſty's coming from Holmby, and removing to Oatlands; but the Commons did not concur in it.

Factions in the Army. The two Houſes began now to be afraid of their own Armies, and therefore disbanded ſome Forces, and would have ſent others into Ireland. This improved into Jealouſies and Factions between the Parliament and Army. The General Fairfax was diſpoſed to comply with the Orders he received from above; but Lieutenant-General Cromwel made a ſtrong Party for Military Power, and reſolved to rob the Parliament of the Perſon of the King; for which Expedient he ſent out a Party of Horſe under Colonel Joyce, to bring away the King to the Army. So on Friday June 4, about Midnight, Joyce drew up his Horſe in order before Holmby Houſe, and demanded Entrance. Colonel Graves and Major-General Brown, who upon Alarm had doubled the Guards, asked him his Name and Buſineſs. He ſaid his Name was Joyce a Cornet in Colonel Whaley's Regiment, and his Buſineſs was to ſpeak with the King. Being asked from whom, he ſaid, from my ſelf, my Errand is to the King, I muſt and I will ſpeak with him. Graves and Brown bid their Soldiers within ſtand to their Arms, and be ready to fire at the Word given; but they finding them to be their Fellow-Soldiers of the ſame Army, opened the Gates, and ſhook Hands with them as old Friends. Joyce ſet his Centinels at the Chamber-Doors of the Commiſſioners; and by the Back-Stairs went himſelf directly to the King's Bed-Chamber, and knock'd at the Door with a Piſtol cock'd in his Hand. The four Grooms were much amaz'd at this rudeneſs, and deſired Joyce to lay aſide his Arms, and to forbear giving diſturbance, aſſuring him, that the next Morning he ſhould have his Majeſty's Anſwer to his Errand. The Cornet with Sword and Piſtol inſiſted to have the Door open'd with ſo much Noiſe that it wak'd the King, who mildly ſent him out Word, that he would not riſe nor ſpeak with him till Morning; upon which the Cornet huff'd and retired. The King roſe early in the Morning, and after his Devotions ſent for Joyce, who came with great Confidence, and told his Majeſty he had Commands to remove him. The King deſired the Commiſſioners might be ſent for; Joyce told him the Commiſſioners had nothing to do but to return back to the Parliament. The King then asked for a Sight of his Inſtructions. Joyce ſaid he ſhould ſee them preſently, and ſo drawing up his Troop in the Inner-Court: Theſe, Sir, (ſaid he) are my Inſtructions. The King took a good View of them, and finding them proper Men, well mounted and armed, ſmilingly told the Cornet, his Inſtructions were in fair Characters, legible without Spelling. The Cornet then preſs'd the King to go along with him; the King ſaid, He would not ſtir unleſs the Commiſſioners might attend him. The Cornet reply'd, He was very indifferent, they might go if they would. So at the King's deſire the Keepers of his Perſon being now themſelves made Priſoners, went along with his Majeſty, and were by Joyce conducted that Night to Colonel Mountague's Houſe at Hinchingbrook, and next Night to the Houſe of Sir John Cuts at Childerſly near Cambridge. Here Fairfax, Cromwel, Ireton, Skippon, and many other Officers, came to wait upon the King and kiſs'd his Hand. The King took General Fairfax aſide and diſcourſed with him about half an Hour; he diſavowed his Majeſty's ſeizure at Holmby, as done without his Order or Approbation.

Cromwel ſteals the King. The Inſolence of Joyce. The Patience of the King. General Fairfax diſowns the Action.

The King at Newmarket. From Childerſly the King was removed to his Houſe at Newmarket, and ſuffered to divert himſelf upon the Heath ſometimes in his Coach, but moſt part Riding. His Preſence-Chamber was conſtantly thronged with People, eſpecially at Dinner and Supper; and when he withdrew, their Acclamations and Prayers alway followed him. He was now to make his involuntary Progreſs according to the Motion of the Army; and ſo by ſome ſhort Stages he was brought to his Houſe at Royſton; and after a ſtay of two Days, was carried June 26, to Hatfield a Houſe of the Earl of Saliſbury in Hertfordſhire, where he ſtaid till the firſt of July, then hurried to Windſor, two Days after to Caverſham; where the Prince Elector Palatine, many of the Nobility, General Fairfax, and ſeveral of the chief Officers waited on him. Hence July 15, to Maidenhead, the 20th to Woburne; away again to Latimers, hence to New-Park, ſo to Stoke, and Aug. 14, to Oatlands, a large and beautiful Palace of the Queen's upon the River Thames; and from thence in a Day or two to Hampton-Court, where the King was allowed to appear in State and Luſtre; his Nobility about him; his Chaplains in waiting, and all Servants permitted to attend in their reſpective Places; the Intercourſe free betwen King and Parliament, and the Army ſeeming to endeavour a right underſtanding between them. His Majeſty had the Favour to viſit his Children then at Sion Houſe, under the Government of the Earl of Northumberland, who received the King and his Followers with a very noble Treat. Here the King met the young Duke of Glouceſter and the Princeſs Elizabeth, who on their Knees begg'd a Bleſſing from their Royal Father, who heartily gave it, and was overjoy'd to ſee them ſo well in Health, and ſo honourably regarded.

Hurried from Place to Place. Settled at Hampton-Court, And better treated. Viſits his Children.

Jealouſies between the Parliament and the Army. We leave the King a Priſoner at large in Hampton-Court, and look back on ſome Proceedings in the Parliament and Army. The two Houſes were wiſe enough to apprehend, that their aſſumed Legiſlature could not poſſibly conſiſt with a Standing Army. And the leading Heads in the Army were as apprehenſive, that if they parted with their Arms, they ſhould have little ſhare in the Prizes they had won. Hence a mighty Inclination in the Parliament to disband the Army, for which Petitions were brought out of the Country. And on the other ſide, a fierce Reſolution in the Soldiery not to be diſmiſt without full Pay and Reward; for which, bold and tumultuous Papers were often read in the Field. The Commons order'd ſix Months Pay to the Army for their encouragement to be quietly disbanded; and May 14. reſolved that the addition of a Fornights Pay more ſhould be given to them, and ſix Weeks Pay advance to thoſe who would go into Ireland; and paſſed an Ordinance for Indempnity of the Soldiers in whatever they had done by Virtue of the Power committed to them by the Parliament. But the Soldiers thought it better to do themſelves Juſtice; and therefore at Saffron-Walden their head Quarters on May 15, they choſe a Committee of Troopers out of every Regiment, to conſider of their Grievances and the Remedy of them; and they referr'd it to another Committee of General Officers, who drew up a Draught of all Complaints, and delivered it to Skippon, deſiring him to preſent it to the Parliament. This ſo alarmed the Commons, that on May 18, they voted, that all the Forces of this Kingdom not ſubſcri-ſcribing for the Service of Ireland ſhall be disbanded, except thoſe for the Garriſons; and that the General be deſired forthwith to repair to the Army. And on May 21, they order'd, that the Soldiers Arrears ſhould be ſpedily Audited, and viſible Security given them upon disbanding; and that Proviſion ſhould be made for the maimed Soldiers, and for the Widows and Orphans of thoſe who had died in the Parliament Service. On Friday May 21, General Fairfax came to the head Quarters at Walden, and put the Army into ſo much Joy and Quiet, that the Commons proceeded May 25, to the Time and Manner of disbanding; ordering that his Excellencies Regiment ſhould firſt be disbanded on Tueſd. next at Chelmsford, Colonel Hewſon's Regiment to be diſbanded at Biſhop's-Stratford on June 3, and ſo on; the General to iſſue out his Orders to the ſeveral Regiments to be at the Times and Places appointed, and to be himſelf preſent at the disbanding; and a Committee of Lords and Commons to go down and give the Thanks of the Houſes in the Head of each Regiment for their faithful Service to the Kingdom, and to be aſſiſtant to the General in disbanding the Army.

The Army refuſe to be diſbanded.

But ſtill the Army were unſatisfied with theſe Votes, and challeng'd a better Reward for their Pains and Hazards in the Cauſe of the Parliament and City. And in a Council of War May 29, it was reſolved, that the ſaid Votes were not ſatisfactory; and the common Soldiers ſeemed all to declare, that they would not be disbanded till their Grievances were redreſs'd. Upon which, the Commons ordered the Money ſent down for disbanding, to be recall'd; and the Committee at Derby-houſe, who ſate upon this Affair, ſent Letters to General Fairfax, to inform him, that the Parliament expected Obedience in disbanding the Army, and ſending the Train immediately to London. In anſwer to which, the General deſired to be excuſed; but promiſed he would do all that was poſſible to execute the Pleaſure of the Parliament. And on June 4, at the Rendezvous at Kentford, the General went to every Regiment, and aſſured the Soldiers, that the Parliament took notice of their civil and fair Carriage, and had taken a courſe for ſatisfying their Arrears; and doubted not but they would anſwer all their other Grievances; and therefore advis'd them to behave themſelves with Moderation and a due Submiſſion.

And draw up a Remonſtrance,

But next Day there was put into his Hands, A humble Repreſentation of the Diſſatisfactions of the Army, in relation to the late Reſolutions for ſo ſudden disbanding; ſhewing the Particulars of their former Grievances. Wherein they did remain unſatisfied, and the Reaſons thereof. Unanimouſly agreed upon, and ſubſcribed by the Officers and Soldiers of the ſeveral Regiments at the Rendezvous near New-Market on Friday and Saturday June the 4th and 5th. Preſented to the General, to be by him humbly repreſented to the Parliament. And the ſame Day they drew up and ſubſcribed a ſolemn Engagement, That without Satisfaction and Security they would not willingly disband or divide, nor ſuffer themſelves to be disbanded or divided.

And an Engagement.

Nay, and the common People of Eſſex were grown ſo much fonder of the Army than they were of the Parliament, that they preſented a Petition to the General, That he would in no caſe admit of disbanding, till the juſt and legal Requeſts of the Kingdom were embraced and ſatisfied by the Parliament. And the like Petitions were ſoon after preſented by the Inhabitants of Norfolk and Suffolk. On June 7, the Commons agreed, that new Commiſſioners ſhould be ſent down to the Army, to acquaint them what the Houſes had done farther in ſatisfaction of their Grievances, and to perſwade them to a Compliance with the Orders of the Parliament.

The Army for diſſolving the Parliament.

And beginning now to be in ſome Fears, that the Army would be for diſſolving the Parliament, as well as the Parliament for disbanding the Army, they accepted of a good Guard from the City, and were putting themſelves into a poſture of Defence; making an Ordinance Jun. 11, for enabling the Committee of the Militia of the City of London to make Searches, and raiſe Horſes. And hearing the Army was advancing toward London, they revived the Committee of Safety, and ſent a Committee of Parliament to ſit all Night with a Committee of the City Militia; and ordered Letters to his Excellency from both Houſes, that he ſhould by no means ſuffer the Army to come within twenty five Miles of the City: and then offered large Gratuities and Rewards to thoſe Officers and Soldiers who ſhould come off from the Army, and ſubmit to the Parliament.

The Parliament put into great Conſternation.

The General, in the mean time, made his Head-Quarters at St. Albans, and kept the Army in tolerable Order; where June 22, he received the Votes of the two Houſes for the Army's removing forty Miles from London: To which his Excellency only anſwered, That he would hold a Council of War, and then return a poſitive Anſwer. At which Council, held June 23, the Officers all ſign'd A humble Remonſtrance from his Excellency Sir Thomas Fairfax and the Army under his Command, expreſſing the preſent ſtate of Affairs, in relation to themſelves and the Kingdom; with their Deſires and preſent Reſolutions thereupon. Preſented to the Commiſſioners at St. Albans, to be by them humbly repreſented to the Parliament. The General removed his Head-Quarters from St. Albans to Barkhamſtead, and ſent word to the Houſes, that the Army would there expect the Reſult of their Debates concerning their Deſires; and accordingly either remove, or approach nearer to London. Which gave ſuch a new Alarm, that June 25, the Militia of London were deſired to ſend four full Companies for the Guard of the Houſes to morrow. On which Day other Letters came from the General, with account of the Army's nearer Advance toward London, renewing their Deſires, that the eleven Members charged by them may be ſuſpended the Houſe.

Army advances toward London.

Upon which the ſaid Members craved liberty to abſent from the Houſe; and a Treaty with the Army was voted to be carried on with Expedition. And to ſilence and ſoften them the more, the Commons declared June 27, that they do own this Army as their Army, and will make Proviſion for their Maintenance. But the Army ſent up their Impeachment of the eleven Members, and inſiſted for Juſtice upon them; ſending up their particular Charge by a Committee of Officers, of whom Colonel Scroope delivered in the Charge to the Commons, with this Speech: That by the Appointment of the General, and Army under his Command, and in their Names, they came there to preſent a particular Charge or Impeachment againſt the eleven Members: Theſe were, Denzil Hollis Eſq; Sir Philip Stapleton, Sir William Waller, Sir John Maynard, Major-General Maſſy, John Glynne Eſq; Recorder of London, Walter Long Eſq; Colonel Edward Harley, Anthony Nicol Eſq; Sir William Lewis, Sir John Clotworthy; who on July 19, put in their Anſwer in Demurrer to the ſaid Charge and Impeachment, and at their own Deſire had leave given them to be abſent from the Houſe for the ſpace of ſix Months.

Impeach the eleven Members.

Soon after there was a ſolemn Engagement by Oath and Vow entred into by very many Citizens and others in and about London, for oppoſing and disbanding the Army, and for the King's preſent coming to the Parliament. This was heinouſly reſented by the General and chief Officers, and very many Papers of Expoſtulation and Excuſe paſſed between the Army and the two Houſes upon this Matter. And Jealouſies mutually improving, the Army began to advance, and the Cities of London and Weſtminſter began to be fortified; and the two Speakers were ſo ſtruck with terrible Apprehenſions, that July 30, they both ran away from their attendance on their ſeveral Houſes; and the Lords were forced to chooſe the Lord Willoughby of Parham their Speaker, in room of the Earl of Mancheſter; and the Commons choſe Mr. Pelham, a Counſellor of Lincolns-Inn, to take the Chair in room of Mr. Lenthal: After which the Commons voted, 1. That the King ſhould come to London. 2. That the Militia of the City ſhould have full Power to raiſe

The two Speakers run away.

1647. 23 Car. I. raiſe ſuch Forces as they ſhall think fit for Defence thereof. And 3. That they make choice of a Commander in chief to be approved by the Houſe. Then they reſolved to receive the eleven Members impeached by the Army, to ſit and vote in their Places. And both Houſes paſſed ſeveral Votes and Orders for bringing the King's Majeſty to ſome of his Houſes near London, to receive Propoſitions from both Kingdoms for Peace and Safety: And Auguſt 2, they ſent this Meſſage to the King.

And the two Houſes invite the King.

By a very civil Meſſage.

To the King's moſt excellent Majeſty.

May it pleaſe your Majeſty,

WE your Majeſty's moſt humble and loyal Subjects, the Lords and Commons aſſembled in the Parliament of England, have agreed upon theſe incloſed Votes; and do humbly preſent them to your Majeſty: Remaining

Weſtm. Aug. 2. 1647. Your Majeſty's moſt humble and loyal Subjects, Hunſdon, Speaker of the Houſe of Peers pro tempore.

H. Pelham, Speaker of the Houſe of Commons.

The Votes are as follow: viz.

WHereas the King hath been ſeized upon, and carried away from Holmby without his conſent, or the conſent of the Houſes of Parliament, by a Party, into the Army, where his Majeſty yet remaineth; the Lords and Commons in Parliament aſſembled, do deſire that his Majeſty will be pleaſed immediately to come to ſuch Places as both Houſes of Parliament ſhall appoint. And they do declare, That he ſhall there be with Honour, Freedom, and Safety; and that they, with the Commiſſioners of the Kingdom of Scotland, will make their Addreſſes unto his Majeſty for a ſafe and well-grounded Peace.

Reſolved upon the Queſtion, by the Lords and Commons aſſembled in Parliament; that London be the Place whither the King ſhall be deſired to come: Where both Houſes of Parliament, and the Commiſſioners of the Kingdom of Scotland, may make their Addreſſes to him for a ſafe and well-grounded Peace.

It is a matter of Wonder, that theſe great Jealouſies between the Parliament and Army could not be turned into any Advantage to the King's Intereſt or Liberty. On Auguſt 5, the whole Army advanced nearer London: The General removing his Head-Quarters from Thiſtleworth, came to Hammerſmith; and at the end of the Town was met by the Commiſſioners of the City, who aſſured him, that the City were well ſatisfied with his Excellency's Advance: and next Morning ſeveral Members of Parliament, driven away by Tumults from Weſtminſter, met the General at the Earl of Holland's Houſe at Kenſington, and ſubſcribed the Declaration of the Army, and a farther Declaration of their approving and joining with the Army in their laſt Proceedings, making null all Acts paſſed by the Members at Weſtminſter ſince July 26. Then the General march'd in great ſtate to the Houſe of Sir Abraham Williams in New-Palace-Yard; and both Houſes being ſate with their old Speakers, the Earl of Mancheſter and William Lenthal Eſq; they invited the General into each Houſe, and gave him ſolemn Thanks for his faithful Services to them and the Kingdom, and order'd Thurſday next for a Day of Thankſgiving, for the great Mercies of God in reſtoring the Members of both Houſes to their juſt Privileges without the Effuſion of Blood, and for the Settlement of Peace. On the ſame Day they conſtituted the General Conſtable of the Tower of London, and ordered the Gratuity of a Month's Pay to the Officers and private Soldiers. So fatally did Things conſpire for a Peace and Union between all Parties except the King and his People.

But the Army was ſtronger than the Parliam.

1647. 23 Car. I.

The Scots now began to repent of Selling the King, and on Auguſt 13, publiſhed a Declaration and Remonſtrance of the preſent Engagement of the Kingdom of Scotland, with their Reſolutions and Intentions (according to their ſolemn League and Covenant) to redeem his Majeſty from the Hands of Schiſmaticks, and to place him in his Parliament with Honour and Safety, to procure the Peace of the three Kingdoms, and to vindicate the worthy Members of Parliament falſely impeached by the Army, with the true Privileges of Parliament and Liberty of the Subject: all which are not only endangered, but by likelihood ready to be deſtroyed by the Power of an over-awing, tyrannical Army, under the Conduct of Sir Thomas Fairfax. With an Oath taken by the Parliament of Scotland, and by them preſcribed to be taken by all his Majeſty's loyal Subjects. But this was now too late: Major-General Lambert collected all the Forces in the North, and was preparing to march to the Borders of Scotland; while the Scots, hearing of the Agreement between the Army, Parliament, and City, were aw'd into Silence and Quiet.

The Scots ſeem to Repent.

The two Houſes began now to be at leiſure to reaſſume their Pretence of a well-grounded Peace between the King and his Subjects. And having made ſome few Amendments to the Propoſitions ſent to Newcaſtle, on Sept. 2, it was reſolved by the Lords and Commons, that a Day be appointed for the delivering of the Propoſitions of both Kingdoms to the King's Majeſty for a ſafe and well-grounded Peace: and that on Tueſday next the Commiſſioners of both Houſes ſhould attend his Majeſty to deliver the ſaid Propoſitions; with ſix Days to be limited for receiving his Majeſty's Anſwer. They delivered them accordingly, and were only told by his Majeſty, That he would return Anſwer with all conveniency. The Commiſſioners reported to the Houſes on Sept. 13, "That to ſeveral of the Propoſitions his Majeſty "is willing to aſſent: To ſettle Presbytery in this "Kingdom for three Years; and the Militia as he "before offered: That he cannot aſſent to ſome "others, but deſires to put himſelf upon the Pro"poſals of the Army, and that they may be ta"ken into conſideration by the Houſes, profeſſing "his Reſolution to whatſoever ſhall concern the "ſettling the Proteſtant Religion, with Liberty to "tender Conſciences, and the ſecuring the Laws, "Liberties and Properties of all his Subjects, and "juſt Privileges of Parliament, for the future." On September 14, his Majeſty's full Anſwer in Writing was read to both Houſes to that effect; That he could not conſent to all their Propoſitions, but deſires them to take into conſideration the Propoſals of the Army, and to have a perſonal Treaty upon them. His Majeſty therefore conjures his two Houſes of Parliament, by the Duty they owe to God, and his Majeſty their King, and by the Bowels of Compaſſion they have to their Fellow-Subjects, both for Relief of their preſent Sufferings and to prevent future Miſeries; that they will forthwith accept of his Majeſty's Offer, whereby the joyful Tidings of Peace may be reſtored to this diſtreſſed Kingdom.

The two Houſes begin again to treat with his Majeſty.

They ſend Propoſitions,

And have the King's Anſwer reported;

Sept. 21, the two Houſes reſumed the Debate of the King's Anſwer, and voted it to be a flat Denial: and on Sept. 23, the Commons voted, That they would once more make application to his Majeſty for his Aſſent to ſuch Things in the Propoſitions as they conceive will moſt make for the Good of this Kingdom: and then ordered ſeveral of the Propoſitions to be turned into Bills, and ſent to his Majeſty for his poſitive Aſſent. This took up long Debates, and occaſioned ſeveral Alterations, and many additional Propoſitions. But in a Conference of the two Houſes Nov. 8, the Scheme was diſpatched, with a Preface to perſuade his Majeſty to give his Royal Aſſent; declaring that he ought not to deny to paſs whatever is preſented to him from the two Houſes of Parliament.

The Houſes diſſatisfied.

1647. 23 Car. I.

The Army had ſtill their Head-Quarters at Putney(a); where a general Council of Officers, and then a Cabal of Agitators, were continually ſending Petitions, and Demands, and Caſes to the Parliament. The King finding he could have no honourable Terms of Peace, and hoping that in his Abſence the Diſſention between the Houſes and the Army might in time recall him to be the only Centre of Unity, reſolved to break from his Confinement at Hampton-Court: and ſo on Thurſday Night Nov. 11, between the Hours of Eight and Nine, the King in Diſguiſe went from his privy Lodgings through a Door into the Park, and taking a Boat there laid for him, he croſſed over to Thames-Ditton, where Sir John Berkley, Mr. Aſhburnham, and Mr. Leg, were placed with Horſes ready for Eſcape. His Majeſty left a Letter in his withdrawing Room for the Commiſſioners of Parliament, to be communicated to both Houſes; dated Hampton-Court Novemb. 11, 1647, and beginning thus.

The King breaks from his Priſon of Hampton-Court, and leaves a Letter to the two Houſes.

Liberty being that which in all times hath been, but eſpecially now is, the Condition, the Aim, and the Deſire of all Men; common Reaſon ſhews, that Kings leſs than any ſhould endure Captivity. Yet I call God to witneſs, with what Patience I have endured a tedious Reſtraint, which ſo long as I had any hope that this ſort of my Sufferings might conduce to the Peace of my Kingdoms, or the hindring more effuſion of Blood, I did willingly undergo: But now finding by too certain Proofs, that this my continued Patience would not only turn to my perſonal Ruin, but likewiſe be of much more prejudice than furtherance to the publick Good; I thought I was bound, as well by natural as political Obligations, to ſeek my Safety by retiring my ſelf for ſome time from the publick view both of my Friends and Enemies. And ending thus: To conclude, Let me be heard with Freedom, Honour, and Safety, and I ſhall inſtantly break through this Cloud of Retirement, and ſhall ſhew my ſelf ready to be Pater Patriæ.

Charles Rex.

The King when eſcaped, knew not where to fly.

The King had ſeemed rather ſollicitous how to eſcape, than where to fly (b). We are told, that Mr. Aſhburnham diſſwaded him from going to London, and led him into Hampſhire, and then propoſed the Iſle of Wight, where he had a Confidence in Colonel Hammond the Governour. His Majeſty ſaid, He would not adventure himſelf, without Aſſurance under the Governour's Hand for his Security; and therefore ſent Mr. Aſhburnham and Sir John Berkley into the Iſle to treat with Hammond, ſtaying himſelf with Colonel Leg at Tichfield-Houſe; charging them not to let Hammond know where he was, without aſſurance under his Hand of Protection and Freedom. But contrary to theſe Directions, they came back, and brought Hammond with them: The King in ſome amaze, asked them if they had a Promiſe under Hammond's Hand for his Security; they replying No, but they could truſt him as a Man of Honour; the King ſaid, Then you have betrayed me, and I am his Priſoner. Which ſharp Reſentment touch'd them ſo near, that they offer'd to kill Hammond, and take ſome other courſe for his Majeſty's Safety. But the King utterly rejected the Propoſal, and committing himſelf to Colonel Hammond, was on Nov. 13, carried croſs to Cowes (c), and thence through Newport to Cariſbrook-Caſtle, where he had for ſome Weeks the Attendance of his Servants, and the Liberty of the Iſland. The King immediately wrote a Letter to the two Houſes, Novemb. 16, ſignifying, "That "he was confident before this time they had receiv"ed the Meſſage which he left behind at Hampton-"Court the 11th of this Month; that he would ſtill "have the ſame Endeavours for ſettling a ſafe and "well-grounded Peace. And becauſe Religion would "be the greateſt Foundation of Peace, he would "begin with that particular: And though he could "not, as a Chriſtian and a King, aſſent to aboliſh"ing Epiſcopacy; yet he would be content that "the Presbyterial Government, as now in practice, "ſhould continue for three Years. As to the Mili"tia, tho' by right it was inſeparably inherent to "the Crown by the Laws of the Nation; yet he "would agree, that during his whole Reign, it "ſhould be ordered and diſpoſed by the two Hou"ſes of Parliament. That he would concur in any "thing for Payment of the Army and other publick "Debts. And for the farther ſecuring all Fears, he "will conſent to an Act, That all the great Offices "of State, and naming of Privy Counſellors for "his whole Reign, ſhall be diſpoſed by the two "Houſes of Parliament. And to wipe away the "Memory of all Diſtractions, there ſhould be an "Act to ſuppreſs and annul all Declarations againſt "the Parliament; and an Act of Oblivion to ex"tend to all Subjects. To which purpoſes, his "Majeſty earneſtly deſires a Perſonal Treaty at "London with his two Houſes in Honour, Freedom, "and Safety, as the only Means to a firm and ſet"led Peace."

Was in effect, betrayed into the Iſle of Wight.

Sends a Letter to the two Houſes.

But the Power being now lodged in two ſeveral Bodies the Parliament and the Army, they were both ſo jealous of one another, that this obſtructed the King's making any Terms with either of them. On Nov. 27, the Commons concurred with the Lords to admit of a Perſonal Treaty with his Majeſty, upon his firſt conſenting to theſe four Propoſitions.

Preliminary Propoſitions.

"I. That a Bill be drawn up by conſent of both "Houſes for his Majeſty to paſs into an Act for the "ſettling of the Militia of the Kingdom.

"That a Bill be paſſed for his Majeſty's calling "in of all Declarations, Oaths and Proclamations, "againſt that Parliament and thoſe who have ad"hered to him.

(a) There has been a conſtant Tradition, that at Hampton-Court a ſecret Contract was made between the King and Cromwell, that the Army ſhould reſtore his Majeſty, and that Cromwell, for his Part in it, ſhould have ten thouſand Pounds per Ann. be Earl of Eſſex, and have a Garter: And that this Bargain had certainly taken Effect, had not the King made an Apology for it in a Letter to the Queen; and ſufficiently implied, that he did it by Conſtraint, and when at Liberty, and in Power, he ſhould think himſelf diſcharged of the Conditions put upon him. This Letter was ſew'd up in the Skirt of a Saddle, to be ſent to France, and was ſeiz'd by Cromwell and Ireton, waiting themſelves, upon private Intelligence, at an Inn in Holborn, and upon it, Cromwell declared, there were no Terms to be kept with Charles Stuart. It is ſaid, that Dr. Lane of the Commons frequently declared, that he had ſeen this Original Letter, that he knew it to be the King's Hand, and that the Contents of it were as before mentioned.

(b) If we may credit the Relation given by Sir John Bowring Kt. of his own ſecret Tranſactions relating to K. Ch. I. delivered in Manuſcript to his Son and Succeſſor K. Ch. II. and ſince printed in the Collection of Private Papers, 1703. 8*vo*, the King had before thought of the Iſle of Wight, and depended there on the Favour of Mr. Liſle, who had the greateſt Property and Intereſt in that Iſland. Sir John Bowring ſays, upon the King's coming to Sion-Houſe, to viſit and dine with the Duke of York, the Duke of Glouceſter, and the Lady Elizabeth, and to meet with the Prince Elector, where I was waiting in the Gallery to kiſs his Majeſty's Hand, in ſome Buſineſs: the Prince Elector obſerving his Majeſty to ſpeak ſomewhat privately and kindly to me, told the King, that he knew me, and that I was an Acquaintance of Mr. Liſle's, of the Iſle of Wight, who was Chairman of his Revenue, which the Parliament allowed him. The King immediately ſends the Elector into the next Room, and takes me aſide into the Gallery, and his Majeſty was pleaſed to ask me how I came acquainted with Mr. Liſle of the Iſle of Wight? --The King gave me ſpecial Charge to keep my Friendſhip with Mr. Liſle, for ſays his Majeſty, I ſhall in a ſhort time, for ought I know, be in that Man's Power, &c. p. 80. —— His Majeſty knew that Hammond received his Orders from Liſle in all Things, by reaſon Hammond was otherwiſe a Stranger to the Iſland. Ib. p. 81, &c.

(c) The Reverend Mr. Gilbert, Miniſter of Newport in the Iſle of Wight, in the Year 1713, ſhewed to the Reverend Mr. Willey an old Carved Bedſtead, on which King Charles lay the firſt Night he came aſhore at Cowes; on the Head-board of which Bed-ſtead, was carved upon the Wood, in Letters gilt over, Remember thy End; which, when the King took notice of in the Morning, he applied it as a Warning for his own Death, and ſo kneeled down by the Bed-ſide, and prayed, and wept, looking upon the Words as a kind of Sentence againſt him.

"III. For

1647. 23 Car. I.

"III. For paſſing an Act that thoſe Lords who were made after the Great-Seal was carried to Oxford, may be made uncapable of Sitting in the Houſe of Peers thereby.

"IV. That Power may be given to the two Houſes of Parliament to adjourn as the two Houſes of Parliament ſhall think fit."

The King had applied to Sir Tho. Fairfax as General, for the uſe of his Chaplains, and he ſent over Dr. Sheldon, Dr. Holdſworth and Dr. Heywood, for which good reſpect the King thanked him by Letter Nov. 27, and on Decemb. 6, the King ſent a Meſſage to the two Houſes, to lay before them with what Patience he had expected their leiſure in acknowledging the receipt of his Meſſage of Novemb. 16, that he cannot yet forbear the vehement Proſecution of a perſonal Treaty; and expoſtulates with them, whether he had not done his part by diveſting himſelf of ſo much Power and Authority, and whether he had met with that Acknowledgment from his two Houſes, which his great Grace and Favour juſtly deſerved? The Houſes took no notice at all of theſe Meſſages, but having paſſed the four Bills to be ſent to his Majeſty, and drawn their Inſtructions for the Commiſſioners who were to carry them; the Lords named the Earls of Northumberland, Kent, Rutland, Pembroke, Saliſbury, Warwick and Mulgrave; the Commons Mr. Bulkeley, Mr. Liſle, Mr. Goodwin, and Mr. Kemp, and theſe were order'd December 15, to go to the Iſle of Wight with the ſaid Bills and Propoſitions, and there for a certain time to attend his Majeſty's Anſwer; Mr. Marſhal and Mr. Nye being three Days after voted to go Chaplains with them.

The King paſſionately deſires a Treaty.

Parliam. Commiſſioners.

The Scots Commiſſioners being not included in this Treaty, ſent a large Declaration in very high Language to the Parliament, proteſting againſt the ſending of the four Bills, and preſſing for a perſonal Treaty with his Majeſty at London, upon ſuch Propoſitions as ſhall be agreed upon by the Advice and Conſent of the two Kingdoms. But the two Houſes were to be frighted by nothing but the Army, and therefore they order'd the Printer of the Scots Declaration to be committed; and then returned them an Anſwer full enough of Contempt and Correction.

The Scots angry, but deſpis'd by the two Houſes.

The Parliament Commiſſioners coming ſafe to the Iſle of Wight, preſented the Bills and the Propoſitions on them to his Majeſty Decemb. 24, and he was pleaſed to ſay, that he was aſſured they could not expect a preſent Anſwer; but he would take the ſame into Conſideration, and give his Anſwer within few Days (a). The Scots Commiſſioners came the next Day to the King, and put in their Proteſtation to this effect; "That they had endeavour'd by all Ways and Means to the Parliament of England for farthering a happy Peace; having ſeen the Propoſitions and Bills brought to his Majeſty, which they apprehended prejudicial to Religion, the Crown and the Union between the Kingdoms, and therefore in the name of the Kingdom of Scotland declare their diſſent."

The King receives the Commiſſioners.

General Fairfax wrote to the Houſe of Commons Decemb. 31, that there had been ſome Meeting in the Iſle of Wight, and a deſign to carry away the King, for which reaſon he had given order to Colonel Hammond to have a ſtricter Guard upon his Majeſty's Perſon. Upon which both Houſes agreed, that his Excellency be required to take ſpecial care for ſecuring the Perſon of his Majeſty in Carisbrook Caſtle, and that the Governour ſhould obey his farther Orders and Directions. On the ſame Day their Commiſſioners came back from the King, and brought but little Satisfaction with them, reporting, that his Majeſty ſhewed little Inclination to paſs the Bills, or to make a Compoſure in that way, but had barely offer'd a perſonal Treaty (b). Upon which, after long Debate Jan. 3, the Commons upon the Queſtion, Whether any Addreſſes ſhould be made hereafter to his Majeſty? Did reſolve, That no more Addreſſes be made from the Parliament to the King; nor any Letters or Meſſages received from him; and at the ſame time certified a good Agreement between the General and the Parliament. And immediately Orders were ſent to Colonel Hammond to diſmiſs the King's Servants, and to confine him cloſe within the Bounds of the Caſtle.

The King to be made a ſtricter Priſoner.

1647. 23 Car. I.

Mr. Harrington and Mr. Herbert were the only Perſons allowed to wait upon his Majeſty in his Bed-Chamber. The latter gives this account of the King's Studies in that Confinement: The ſacred Scripture was the Book he moſt delighted in. He read often in Biſhop Andrews's Sermons, Hooker's Eccleſiaſtical Policy, Dr. Hammond's Works, Villalpandus upon Ezekiel, Sandy's Paraphraſe upon King David's Pſalms, Herbert's Divine Poems, and alſo Godfrey of Bologin, writ in Italian by Torquato Taſſo, and done into Engliſh Heroick Verſe by Mr. Fairfax, a Poem his Majeſty much commended; as he did alſo Arioſto, by Sir John Harrington, a facetious Poet, much eſteemed of by Prince Henry his Maſter; Spencer's Fairy Queen, and the like, for alleviating his Spirits after ſerious Studies. And at this time it was (as is preſumed) he compoſed his Book called Suſpiria Regalia, publiſhed ſoon after his Death, and entitled, The King's Pourtraicture in his Solitudes and Sufferings, which Manuſcript Mr. Herbert found amongſt thoſe Books his Majeſty was pleaſed to give him. And though he did not ſee the King write that Book, his Majeſty being always private when he writ, and thoſe his Servants never coming into the Bed-Chamber when the King was private until he called; yet comparing it with his hand writing in other things, found it ſo very like as induces his Belief that it was his own hand writing, having ſeen ſo much of the King's writing before: and to inſtance Particulars, in that his Majeſty's Tranſlation of Dr. Saunderſon, the late Biſhop of Lincoln's Book, De Juramentis, or like Title, concerning Oaths; all of it Tranſlated into Engliſh, and writ with his own Hand, and which in his Bed-Chamber he was pleaſed to ſhew to his Servants Mr. Harrington and Mr. Herbert, and commanded them to examine it with the Original, they found it accurately Tranſlated.

How he ſpent his time.

As to this obſervation of Sir Tho. Herbert, in preſuming the King while a Priſoner in the Iſle of Wight compoſed his Book, it can be meant only of ſome part of it. For indeed it was not a compoſure under any one Confinement, or with any one train of Thoughts; but it was rather an occaſional common place of his Reflections and Meditations, as this and that Juncture and Seaſon did ſuggeſt. Some Chapters were finiſhed before the fatal Battle of Naſeby, as among many other Authorities is expreſsly affirm'd by an Eye-witneſs, Major Huntingdon, who gave this Account to Sir William Dugdale. —— "And as to ΕΙΚΩΝ ΒΑΣΙΛΙΚΗ, he ſaith, That after the King was brought to Hampton-Court, his Majeſty there acquainting him with the loſs of that Book at Naſeby Fight, and deſiring him to uſe his Intereſt to regain it, he did apply himſelf to General Fairfax, and by his means obtained it, it being bound up in a white Vellum Cover, and (as he well remembers) all the Chapters in it were written by the Hand of Sir Edward Walker, but much corrected with Interlineations by the King's own Account of the King's Book.

(a) See, His Majeſty's moſt Gracious Anſwer to the Bills and Propoſitions preſented to him at Carisbrook Caſtle, Dec. 24, 1647, declaring he had fulfilled the Offices both of a Chriſtian and a King, and will patiently wait the good Pleaſure of Almighty God. Printed London, 1648. 4to.

(b) By the ſeveral Accounts given by two Perſons here attending on the King, the Lord Lauderdale and Sir John Bowring, it ſeems too plain that the King choſe rather to depend on the Scots Commiſſioners, who promis'd to raiſe an Army for him, than on the Engliſh Commiſſioners of a Parliament in Arms againſt him. This made his Majeſty fluctuate in his Anſwers, and decline a Compliance which might have reſtor'd him to his Throne, and by degrees to all the Dignities and Powers of it.——His Majeſty himſelf afterwards repented that he did not Sign the Bills, with ſome few Explanations. See the Apology of the Duke of Lauderdale, and the ſecret Tranſactions of Sir John Bower, both printed in the Collection of Papers, 1703, ſaid to be found in the Study of the Marqueſs of Hallifax.

“ Hand (the Prayers being all written with the “ King's own Hand) which, he ſays, he very well “ knew ſo to be.”

It is not the buſineſs of a Hiſtorian to collect Authorities for a Matter of Fact, thought to be evident and granted by Mankind, till there aroſe a Set of Men who delighted once more to Judge and Execute this Royal Martyr. And therefore to murder his Name, when they could reach no farther, they pretended his Εἰκὼν Βασιλικὴ was a Sham put upon the World in his Name by another Hand. But after all the confidence with which this Story has been told, it ſtands apparently convicted of Falſehood by a cloud of Witneſſes. And it really has its Self-conviction; for to ſay, that not King Charles but Dr. Gauden was the Author of it, carries along two of the moſt improbable things in the World; ſince the private Letters and other uncontested Writings of the King ſhew the Capacity and the Vein of writing that Book; while the profeſt Works of Dr. Gauden are a demonſtration that he did not, that he could not write it. It may be confeſt, that Dr. Gauden might be employ'd to convey the Sheets to the Preſs; and it was not unlikely that ſuch a forward Man might ſuggeſt ſome things, and might preſume to add ſome others: But that he was the ſole or prime Author of it, can never be believed by the rational part of Mankind. The moſt unhappy Objections againſt the King's Honour in this Caſe, were the known prejudice of his two Sons, and the more remarkable Silence of the Earl of Clarendon (a).

No more Addreſſes.

To return to the ſevere Reſolution of no longer Addreſſing to the King, the Lords concurred with the Commons in their Votes to that unmerciful purpoſe, and drew up this Preamble which was order'd Jan. 17, to be publiſh'd with the Votes. The Lords and Commons aſſembled in Parliament, after many Addreſſes to his Majeſty, for the preventing and ending this unnatural War raiſed by him againſt his Parliament and Kingdom, having lately ſent four Bills to his Majeſty, which did contain only Matter of Safety and Security to the Parliament and Kingdom, referring the Compoſure of all other Differences to a perſonal Treaty with his Majeſty, and having received an abſolute Negative, do hold themſelves obliged to uſe their utmoſt Endeavours ſpeedily to ſettle the preſent Government in ſuch a way as may bring the greateſt ſecurity to this Kingdom, in the enjoyment of the Laws and Liberties thereof; and in order thereunto, and that the Houſes may receive no Delays and Interruptions in ſo great and neceſſary a Work, they have taken theſe Reſolutions, &c.

Information to the Commons about the King.

Feb. 4, the Houſe of Commons was certified by Letters from the Iſle of Wight, “ That the King was “ in good Health in Carisbrook Caſtle, but is obſer- “ ved to be more melancholy than uſual. His Ma- “ jeſty had ſome Diſcourſe lately with the Gover- “ nour Col. Hammond about his Reſtraint, and the “ ſtrict Guard upon him; and, in ſhort, his Majeſty “ told the Governour, that that ſhould be the laſt “ Argumentation he would hold with him about it, “ and that he might yet e'er long be beholden to one “ of his Sons for his Life. The Expreſſions ſeem as “ ſtrange as the Reports now alſo ſpread, that Prince “ Charles is gone into Holland, and that the King “ hath made a Reſignation unto the Prince of the “ Crown of Scotland, that he ſhould engage all In- “ tereſts for reſtoring the King in this Kingdom.” And by Expreſs dated Feb 5, it was farther certified, “ That his Majeſty takes uſually every Morning a “ Walk about the Caſtle-Wall, and the like in the “ Afternoon if fair; much time ſpent every Day in “ private; he ſpeaks moſt to us at Dinner, asks “ News, particularly concerning Ireland, Scotland, “ the City of London, and the Army; the Death of “ Capt. Burley quarter'd at Wincheſter is little ſpoken “ of. His Majeſty is as merry as formerly; all “ quiet and fair between his Majeſty and Colonel “ Hammond the Governour.”

A bitter Declaration of the Parliament.

The Parliament, to ſatisfie the People and the Army why they had proceeded to ſuch ſtrange Reſolutions as to ſuffer no farther Addreſſes to the King; drew up a ſolemn Declaration for the Reaſons of it, publiſh'd on Febr. 15, wherein they load the King with every thing that was odious: “ With making “ all their Addreſſes fruitleſs; with Cruelties done “ at Brentford, and a bloody Maſſacre intended up- “ on London; with laying a Foundation of all Ty- “ ranny, in ſaying he ow'd an Account of his Acti- “ ons only to God; with a Guilt in the Death of “ his Father King James; with betraying Rochel, “ and the Engliſh Fleet, into the hands of the French “ King; with a Deſign of bringing over German “ Horſe to enſlave this Nation; with grinding his “ People by Loans, Privy-Seals, Coat and Conduct “ Money, Patents, Monopolies, and that one Com- “ pendium of Slavery, Ship-Money; with torturing “ the Bodies of Men by Whipping, ſlitting Noſes, “ cutting off Ears, branding Cheeks, Racks, Pillo- “ ries, and cloſe Impriſonment, with Lording it “ over Souls by Oaths ex officio, Excommunications, “ Ceremonies, Articles, new Canons, and Canon “ Oaths; with a ſcandalous Declaration for Diſſol- “ ving the Parliament in 1640; with a Cabal for “ bringing up the Northern Army to awe the Par- “ liament; with ſealing a Commiſſion to the Iriſh “ Rebels; with an Unwillingneſs to disband the “ Popiſh Iriſh Army; with writing Letters to the “ Pope, and to the Duke of Lorrain; with charging “ Members of Parliament with Treaſon, and co- “ ming to the Houſe in that unparallel'd way, as a “ deſigned Prologue to a bloody Tragedy; with the “ Preparation of a Fleet from Denmark, and expe- “ cting another from Holland; with ſigning the “ moſt illegal Commiſſion of Array, a Commiſſion “ for ten thouſand Rebels to conquer the Parliament “ and London:” And at laſt they conclude, that they could give many Reaſons more why they will make no more Addreſſes, but uſe their utmoſt Endeavours to ſettle the preſent Government, as may beſt ſtand with the Peace and Happineſs of this Kingdom. A Declaration ſo extremely virulent and falſe, that the Framers of it ſeem'd already to erect the High Court of Juſtice, and to draw up the very Form of Impeachment againſt the King (b).

The People thought the Parliament the greateſt Grievance.

This Proceeding was of ſuch infinite Scandal to all indifferent People, who had yet a Reaſon and a Conſcience left within them; that Diſcontents and Murmurs grew very high, and many Pamphlets were now publiſh'd that ſhew'd the Parliament to be the great Grievance of the Nation; ſuch as, The Parliament's Ten Commandments, &c. another intitled, The New Teſtament of our Lords and Saviours the Houſe of Commons ſitting at Weſtminſter; and ſeveral others; the Parliament in vain burning the Books, and bidding Money for Diſcovery of the Authors of them.

Death of Lord Ferdinando Fairfax.

Monday March 13, Ferdinando Lord Fairfax, Father of Sir Thomas Fairfax General, died at York, upon a Sickneſs occaſioned by a Bruiſe on his Foot, where he had a Corn growing, which feſter'd and turn'd to a Gangreen; and with the pain of this he fell into a Fever that took away his Life. Upon Information of his Death, the Commons, on March 16, order'd, That his Excellency the now Lord Fairfax ſhould be Keeper of Pontefract Caſtle; Cuſtos Rotulorum for Yorkſhire, and chief Ranger, &c. the Places before held by his deceaſed Father.

(a) After all poſſible Enquiries and Diſcoveries, the Truth ſeems to be this; The King himſelf wrote moſt of thoſe Chapters contain'd in that Book upon immediate occaſion of the Subject of them. His looſe Papers came thro' ſeveral Hands into thoſe of Mr. Symmonds, a Learned and Loyal Clergyman in Eſſex, who communicated them to his Neighbour Dr. Gauden, who in order to publiſh them, dreſs'd them up with ſome additional Chapters ſaid to be written by Dr. Earl, and threw in Soliloquies and Ejaculations, and put a ſwelling Title to it, and took care of the firſt Impreſſion. Which was enough to value himſelf upon as in effect the Author of the Work in that Form; tho' the King himſelf was certainly the Writer of the beſt Parts of it.

State of Religion.

Religion was to be the Shew in all theſe Proceedings: and therefore April 9, the Commons ordered, that on Thurſday Fortnight they would debate the Buſineſs of the Church for fourteen Days together, and no private Buſineſs to interveen. And farther ordered, that ſuch Miniſters as are recommended from the Lords to be put into Livings, be referred to the Aſſembly to be examined concerning their Abilities for the Miniſtry. According to the foreſaid Order, on April 20, the Buſineſs of the Church was taken into Conſideration; and the Obſtructions to the Government of the Church in Presbytery, and the Amendments to the Remedies thereof were reported to the Houſe, and aſſented to. They referred it to a Committee to draw up an Ordinance for the aboliſhing of all Feſtival and accuſtomed Holidays; and to appoint the ſecond Tueſday in every Month for a Day of Recreation to all Apprentices, Scholars, and Servants. Next Day they proceeded to order, that the Aſſembly ſhould be requeſted to return to the Houſe the Articles of the Church of England, and the ſeveral places of Scripture thereunto: and that a Declaration ſhould be drawn up to inform the People of the fond Superſtition of being Touch'd by the King for the Evil.

Proceedings of the Commons.

Of the Aſſembly of Divines.

April 29, the Aſſembly of Divines attended the Commons, and being call'd in acquainted the Houſe, That according to their Orders, they had attended them with their Advice upon the Thirty Nine Articles of the Church of England, and the Texts of Scripture thereunto; and upon the Confeſſion of Faith, with the Texts of Scripture likewiſe to it. Upon which the Houſe ordered ſix hundred Copies of the Aſſembly's Advice herein ſhould be Printed for the Service of the Houſes and the Aſſembly; and gave the Divines Thanks for their Pains therein.

A Provincial Aſſembly of London.

May 3, the Provincial Aſſembly of London met in the Convocation-houſe at St. Paul's Church, according to an Ordinance in Parliament of the 29th of April laſt paſt, for the farther ſettling Presbytery; and Dr. Gouge was choſen Prolocutor. The Ordinance directing that Aſſembly was to this purpoſe; That the Elders of the Claſſis of the Province of London ſhould hold this Provincial Aſſembly in the Convocation-houſe at Paul's Church in London, upon the firſt Monday in May next enſuing; and may adjourn their Meeting de die in diem, and conclude their Meeting with Adjournments unto the next Opportunity. And that no Act ſhall paſs or be valid in the ſaid Province of London, but what ſhall be done by the number of 36 preſent, or the major part of them, whereof 12 to be Miniſters, and 24 to be Ruling Elders. On this ſame Day an Ordinance paſſed both Houſes for regulating the Univerſity of Oxford by certain Viſitors, who ſhould examine upon Oath concerning Neglect of the Covenant, Directory, or Diſcipline, or ſuch as write falſe Doctrine, or have been Enemies to the Parliament (a).

Ordinance for the Viſitation of Oxford.

May 11, Mr. Byfield (by appointment of the Aſſembly of Divines) delivered the printed Books of the Confeſſion of Faith, with Scripture Notes, to the Members of the Houſes of Parliament. And no more being to be diſperſed, every Member ſubſcribed his Name to a Paper at the Receipt thereof. After the Members have well peruſed and examined them, the Houſes are to conſider, whether they ſhall approve the Publication of them. On May 19, the Commons debated the Confeſſion of Faith, and ſpent the whole Day therein, paſſing particularly from the firſt Paragraph to the eleventh of the firſt Chapter (b).

1647. 23 Car. I.

Confeſſion of Faith to be determin'd by the two Houſes.

Attempt of Accommodation between the Presbyterians and Independents.

The Faction between Presbyterians and Independents was now grown ſo near the Level, that June 29, a Committee was appointed in the Houſe of Commons to propoſe godly and able Perſons to conſider of the Matters of Accommodation in Religion, and to preſent their Names to the Houſe. And on July 1, they ordered, that the ſaid Committee of Accommodation ſhould meet, and report their Opinion with all convenient ſpeed.

Hereſies and Blaſphemies abound.

Theſe Diviſions gave Encreaſe to all ſorts of Hereſie, with which the Preſs and very Pulpits now ſwarm'd. Among others, Complaint was made to the Houſe of Commons Sept. 6, againſt a dangerous Pamphlet wrote by Mr. John Biddle, and called his Twelve Arguments upon the Deity; expreſsly denying the Divinity of the Holy Ghoſt, and running out into other abſurd and blaſphemous Tenets. Upon Debate it was ordered, That this Pamphlet ſhould be called in, and burnt by the Hangman; and the Author ſhould be referred to the Examination of the Committee for plunder'd Miniſters. And for a ſhew of preventing the like Poiſon, an Ordinance paſſed both Houſes Sept. 27, for ſuppreſſing ſcandalous Papers and Pamphlets; and that no Writing be publiſhed, except the ſame be Licens'd by one or both Houſes of Parliament, or by ſome Perſon authorized by them.

Houſe of Commons much exerciſed in the Debates of Religion.

Octob. 2, the Commons in debating the Confeſſion of Faith preſented by the Aſſembly, had got as far as the fourth Chapter; and order'd that theſe Divinity Diſputations ſhould be brought on every Wedneſday. The Ordinance for ſettling the Government of the Church in a Presbyterial way was reported to the Houſe of Commons Octob. 6, and after the Debate upon it had took up the whole Day, it was order'd to be committed, and to be brought in again with a Clauſe for giving eaſe to tender Conſciences of ſuch as are godly and make a Conſcience of their ways. On the ſame Day a ſtrong Petition was preſented to both Houſes, that able and gifted Men might have liberty to preach without Ordination, being approved by the Parliament (c). To which perfection of Enthuſiaſm, the Lords were forc'd to anſwer, that they took well this good Affection of the Petitioners to the advancement of the Goſpel. And the Commons thought fit to give them a yet greater Encouragement, by thanking them for their good Affection to the Kingdom, and by aſſuring them that their Petition was referred to a Committee, to conſider of a way for Men to preach without Ordination.

(b) The Commons had likewiſe ordered ſix hundred Copies of the Proceedings of the Aſſembly of Divines upon the Thirty nine Articles of the Church of England, to be printed for the Service of both Houſes: To which the Aſſembly of Divines put a Preface as an Apology for their ſlow Proceedings; complaining grievouſly of the Limitations put upon them.

(c) How far the Papiſts were concern'd in fomenting the War, and driving it on to the very Murder of the King, was ſeriouſly related by Biſhop Bramhall to Archbiſhop Uſher, in a Letter dat. July 20, 1654.——In this Year 1647, many of thoſe Romiſh Orders, who came over the Year before, were in Conſultation together, knowing each other. And thoſe of the King's Party asking ſome, why they took with the Parliaments ſide, it was declared between them, there was no better Deſign to confound the Church of England, than by pretending Liberty of Conſcience. It was argued then, that England would be a ſecond Holland, a Commonwealth, and if ſo, what would become of the KING? It was anſwered, Would to God it were come to that Point? It was again reply'd, Yourſelves have preached ſo much againſt Rome and his Holineſs, that Rome and her Romaniſts will be little the better for that Change: But it was anſwered, You ſhall have Maſs ſufficient for a hundred thouſand in a ſhort ſpace, and the Governours never the wiſer. Then ſome of the mercifulleſt of the Romaniſts ſaid, This cannot be done unleſs the King die; upon which Argument the Romiſh Orders thus Licenſed, and in the Parliament Army, wrote unto their ſeveral Convents, but eſpecially to the Sorboniſts, Whether it may be ſcrupled to make away our late Godly King, and his Majeſty his Son? It was returned from the Sorboniſts, that it was lawful for Roman Catholicks to work Changes in Governments for the Mother Church's Advancement, and chiefly in an Heretical Kingdom, and ſo LAWFULLY MAKE AWAY THE KING. Thus much to my Knowledge have I ſeen and heard ſince my leaving your Lordſhip. Life and Letters of Archbiſhop Uſher. Fol. P. 611.

1647. 23 Car. I. examining ſuch as ſhould be ſo allowed. Thus the Care of Religion was transferred from a Convocation to a new Aſſembly of Divines, from them to a Houſe of Commons, and thence to the Mob.

Presbytery to be eſtabliſh'd. Octob. 13, both Houſes ſate upon the Buſineſs of Religion, the Lords were for an Act to be paſſed by the King for ſettling the Presbyterial Government for three Years; with liberty to Diſſenters for the Service and Worſhip of God in any other way, provided ſuch liberty ſhould not extend to any Toleration of the Popiſh Religion, nor to tolerating the practice of any thing contrary to the practice of the Chriſtian Religion, contained in the Apoſtles Creed as expounded in the firſt fifteen Articles of the Church of England, according to the true Senſe and meaning of them cleared and vindicated by the Aſſembly of Divines. The Commons agreed with them except in thoſe Particulars; They would have the time of eſtabliſhing Presbytery to be until the end of the next Seſſions of Parliament after this, or the end of the ſecond Seſſions: And of doing nothing contrary to the firſt fifteen Articles, they would except the eighth which mentions the three Creeds, made, ſay they, many Years after the Apoſtles: And that the Indulgence to tender Conſciences ſhould not extend to the uſe of the Common Prayer in any Place whatſoever.

Aſſembly's Catechiſm. Octob. 20, the Prolocutor attended with many of the Aſſembly, came to the Houſe of Commons, and preſented to their Conſideration a Catechiſm, which they had drawn up according to the Order of that Houſe. The Commons it ſeems, thought this Catechiſm too prolix and ſuperfluous, and therefore ſent back their holy Workmen to bring it into a leſs compaſs. So they ſet themſelves to abridging of it, and upon Novemb. 25, the Houſe being informed that the Aſſembly of Divines were at the Door, they were called in and preſented a Catechiſm, which they called A ſhorter Catechiſm. The Houſe ordered, that four hundred Copies of them ſhould be printed for the Service of the Houſe, with the ſeveral places of Scripture in the Margin. Then the Aſſembly were called in again, and Mr. Speaker by command of the Houſe gave them Thanks; and told them that the Houſe did expect, that the Aſſembly ſhould give a ſpeedy Anſwer to the Queries formerly ſent unto them; and deſired them to go on in perfecting thoſe things which the Houſe had referred to them.

Abp. Uſher allow'd to preach. Decemb. 20, a great Debate in the Houſe of Commons, Whether Dr. Uſher (Primate of Armagh) ſhould continue Preaching at Lincoln's-Inn, he having formerly adhered to the Enemy (the King) againſt the Parliament? The Houſe divided, and it was carried in the Affirmative, on condition he take the Negative Oath. But leaſt delinquent Miniſters ſhould be encouraged by this Vote, they order'd immediately, that it ſhould be referred to a Committee for plunder'd Miniſters, to ſend for and examine ſuch Miniſters as have adhered to the Enemy, and preach now in the Kingdom, and ſuch as have of late, or now do cauſe the Book of Common-Prayer to be read, and to take care for Silencing of them. And Decemb. 24, the Houſe order'd that the Militia ſhould take ſtrict Courſe to put out of the late Lines of Communication all Delinquent Miniſters (a).

Severity againſt malignant Miniſters. And next Day, being Chriſtmas-Day, the Houſes Sitting (though without a Faſt) complaint was made to the Commons that ſome malignant Miniſters had preached that Morning in honour of the Day. Upon which it was order'd, that the Committee for plunder'd Miniſters have Power given them to examine and puniſh Churchwardens, Sequeſtrators and others, that do countenance delinquent Miniſters to Preach, and to commit them if they ſee Cauſe; and upon which ſome were taken into Cuſtody (b).

Jan. 31, an Ordinance paſſed the two Houſes for the ſpeedy dividing and ſettling the ſeveral Counties of this Kingdom into diſtinct Claſſical Presbyteries and Congregational Elderſhips, according to a former Ordinance of Aug. 19, 1645, and that a Committee of Lords and Commons ſhall have power to bound the Provincial Aſſemblies in this Kingdom; and to conſtitute Tryers within the Province of London where need ſhall require. 1647. 23 Car. I.

Ordinance for Repair of Churches. Feb. 8, the Commons ſpent much time in Debate of the Advice of the Aſſembly concerning the Confeſſion of Faith. The next Day an Ordinance paſſed both Houſes for Repair of Churches, and paying of Church Rates, to be approved by two Juſtices of Peace; Collectors to be choſen Monday and Tueſday in Eaſter-Week, to give in their Accounts within four Days after the Year is ended, the Goods of Defaulters to be diſtreſſed, and Oppoſers to be committed to the Jayl without Bail or Mainprize. This Ordinance to be read in all Churches and Chapels.

Confeſſion of Faith. March 1, the Commons taking into conſideration the Buſineſs of the Church, order'd, that a Return ſhould be made for the Claſſes of the ſeveral Counties of the Kingdom by the firſt of May next; and that the ſaid Returns ſhould be printed, to the end they may the better know what Counties have failed of their Returns. On March 22, the Commons at a Conference preſented the Lords with the Confeſſion of Faith paſſed by them with ſome Alterations, viz. That they do agree with their Lordſhips, and ſo with the Aſſembly in the Doctrinal part, and deſire the ſame may be made publick, that this Kingdom and all the Reformed Churches of Chriſtendom may ſee the Parliament of England differ not in Doctrine. In ſome Particulars they would have ſome Phraſes alter'd, as in that of Tribute to the Magiſtrate, they would have it Dues; the Degrees of Marriage they refer to the Law eſtabliſh'd; Particulars in Diſcipline they will have recommitted; and for the Title they would not have it A Confeſſion of Faith, becauſe not ſo running, I confeſs, at the beginning of every Section; but rather Articles of Faith agreed upon by both Houſes of Parliament, as moſt ſuitable to the former Title of the Thirty nine Articles.

On the firſt Day of this new Year March 25, 1648, Letters from the Iſle of Wight informed the Commons of a new Deſign to carry away the King, which had been diſcovered before it came to perfection. Upon which, ſome in Attendance upon his Majeſty were diſcharged. On April 13, other Letters from the Iſle gave account, that the King was in good Health and Pleaſant; had bowled ſeveral times upon the new Bowling-Ally with the Governour, Colonel Herbert, and others; and had talked merrily in relation to this Army and the Scots. Indeed the Scots began now to threaten a new War, for recovering the King out of thoſe Hands into which they had ſold him; and ſome Counties in England brought up ſuch bold Petitions to the Parliament, to condeſcend to the Royal Intimations of his Majeſty for a Perſonal Treaty; that the Houſe of Commons began to think it their Intereſt to recede from their former Reſolutions of Non-Addreſſing: And on May 5, they fell to conſider of making ſome farther Application to the King, and paſt a Declaration, "That they will be ready to join "with the Kingdom of Scotland in the Propoſitions "agreed upon by the two Kingdoms, and formerly "preſented to his Majeſty at Hampton-Court." On May 24, the Commons voted, that after his Majeſty had Signed the Bills to be tender'd him by Parliament, for ſettling the Militia of the Kingdom, and the Presbyterian Government, and had recalled all his Declarations, Proclamations, &c. againſt both or either Houſes of Parliament; that then a Treaty 1648. 24 Car. I. ſhould be had with his Majeſty upon the reſt of the Propoſitions preſented to his Majeſty at Hampton-Court. On May 30, the three Bills to be preſented to his Majeſty in relation to a Treaty were aſſented to by the Commons, and ſent to the Lords for their concurrence; and then to be forthwith ſent to the Parliament of Scotland. This good Diſpoſition of the Members was owing to their Danger from ſeveral Inſurrections in moſt Counties of England in great Bodies declaring for the King; eſpecially in Kent and Eſſex. On June 23, the Commons were in long debate concerning his Majeſty's Perſon, and put the Queſtion, whether he ſhould be removed from Cariſbrook-Caſtle to Windſor-Caſtle, in order to a Perſonal Treaty upon ſuch things as both Kingdoms ſhall conclude to be proper? But they could come to no Reſolution. June 28, the Lord Mayor, Aldermen and Common-Council of London, preſented an earneſt Petition to both Houſes, that a perſonal Treaty might be obtained between his Majeſty and the Parliament in the City of London, or ſome other convenient Place. This was ſo much the Voice of the Nation, that in a Committee of both Houſes Jun. 30, it was agreed; Firſt, That the Vote of the third of January 1647, forbidding any Addreſſes to be made to, or received from his Majeſty, ſhould be made null. Secondly, That the three Propoſitions ſent into the Kingdom of Scotland, and to be preſented to his Majeſty before a perſonal Treaty to be had, ſhould not be inſiſted upon. And Thirdly, That his Majeſty be removed to ſome of his Houſes within ten Miles of London. And yet on Monday July 3, thinking their Affairs more hopeful, they reſolved, that the three Bills ſhould be drawn up and ſent as Propoſitions; to which his Majeſty is to give his Approbation by ſubſcribing his Hand before a Perſonal Treaty, and to give aſſurance to paſs them into Acts, ſo ſoon as he ſhall come to London and ſit in Parliament; but would not yet conclude on the Time or Place of Treaty. On the contrary, the Lords were for a Treaty without any preceeding Terms; and July 8, deſired a Conference with the Commons about the three Propoſitions, that they ſhould not be inſiſted on before the Treaty; and gave their Reaſons in the ſaid Conference July 10. 1. That ſo there may be no delay in the thing, a ſpeedy Perſonal Treaty being ſo much deſired and petitioned for. 2. It's the deſire of the Parliament of Scotland. 3. The Agreement upon the Treaty will be the more Authentick. 4. It is probable, having no Army in being, his Majeſty will condeſcend to that which at Uxbridge and Oxford he refuſed. 5. It's not the way of Treaties to confirm any before all is agreed, eſpecially thoſe of moſt concernment, and that which chiefly will be inſiſted upon. But the Succeſs of Cromwel in Wales, of Lambert in the North, and of the Forces before Colcheſter, gave new Spirits to the irreconcileable Members of the Houſe of Commons, who declared July 15, that they would adhere to their former Vote, That his Majeſty ſhould ſign the three Propoſitions before any Perſonal Treaty be had with his Majeſty. And ſoon after made a Declaration of their calling to mind the great Victories that God hath pleaſed to give the Parliament's Forces within theſe few late Months over the Enemy, and how God had owned the great Cauſe of the Parliament and Army; appointing a Day of Thankſgiving for it. But after all, the Citizens of London were ſo importunate and poſitive for an immediate Treaty; and Duke Hamilton had made ſuch Advances with an Army out of Scotland for the King, that the Commons were forced to give back and agree with the Lords for a Treaty without the King's ſigning any Propoſitions (a). And it was then reſolved July 28, that his Majeſty in Perſon ſhould be treated with by Commiſſioners of both Houſes of Parliament in the Iſle of Wight, upon the whole Matter of the Popoſitions at Hampton-Court, for ſettling the Peace of this Kingdom. And both Houſes concurr'd in theſe Votes Aug. 2. Firſt, "That a Meſſage be "ſent to the King to acquaint him that the Houſes "deſire a Treaty with his Majeſty's Perſon, in what "Place of the Iſle of Wight he ſhall appoint, upon the "Propoſitions tendered to his Majeſty at Hampton-Court, and concerning Wards and Liveries, and "to treat with Honour and Freedom and Safety to "his Majeſty's Perſon. Secondly, To receive ſuch other Propoſitions to be treated on, as ſhall be preſented by his Majeſty. Thirdly, That Commiſſioners be diſpatched away to his Majeſty by Friday next "with the ſaid Votes, and return within ten Days."

The Parliament recal their Votes of Non-Addreſſing.

The Commons decline a perſonal Treaty.

The Lords preſs for it.

The Commons forced to agree with the Lords.

Commiſſioners ſent to the King.

Theſe Commiſſioners were the Earl of Middleſex, Sir John Hippeſley and Mr. Bulkley, who on Monday Aug. 7, had Acceſs and Audience of the King at Cariſbrook-Caſtle; at which time the Earl of Middleſex read the Votes of the Houſes concerning a Perſonal Treaty, and delivered them to his Majeſty, who received them with much cheerfulneſs, and ſpoke to this effect, that no Man deſired Peace ſo much as he (look on him in his ſeveral Relations, as a King, a Husband, a Father, a Maſter) and that he would give ear to any Motion or Overture which might conduce to a good Accommodation. For (ſaid he) whoever they be that gain by theſe Troubles, I muſt needs be a loſer. His Majeſty demanded of the Commiſſioners, How long they were to ſtay in the Iſland? To which it was anſwered by my Lord of Middleſex, that they were confined by the two Houſes to ten Days from the time they ſet forth from London. His Majeſty replied, "That the Time "was ſhort, and that he had no Clerk to write for "him; but he would nevertheleſs diſpatch them "within the time limited."

And kindly received.

King's Letter to the Parliament.

His Majeſty ſent back his Anſwer in this Letter to the two Houſes. Cariſbrook-Caſtle Aug. 10. 1648. If the Peace of my Dominions were not much dearer to me than any particular Intereſt whatſoever, I had too much Reaſon to take notice of the ſeveral Votes which paſſed againſt me, and the ſad Condition I have been in now above theſe ſeven Months. But ſince you, my two Houſes of Parliament have opened, as it ſeems to me, a fair Beginning to a happy Peace, I ſhall heartily apply my ſelf thereunto. And to that end I will as clearly and ſhortly as I may, ſet you down thoſe things which I conceive neceſſary to this bleſſed Work: ſo that we together may remove all Impediments that may hinder a happy Concluſion of this Treaty, which with all chearfulneſs I do embrace. The King proceeds to demand firſt, That they will recall all ſuch Votes and Orders by which People are frighted from Coming, Writing, or Speaking freely to him. Next, That Men of neceſſary uſe to him in this Treaty may be admitted to wait upon him. Then, That the Scots may be invited to ſend ſome Perſons authorized by them to treat upon ſuch Propoſitions as they ſhall make. As to the Place, He will name Newport in this Iſle; though he cannot but think it a great loſs of Time, to treat ſo far from the Body of the two Houſes. Concluding, I have now no more to ſay, but to conjure you by all that is dear to Chriſtians, honeſt Men, or good

(a) It is very plain, that the good Diſpoſition of the Parliament was the moſt part owing to their Fear of Oliver Cromwel: Sir John Bowring, who had waited on the King, during the late Treaty, and had ſince convers'd with the Members of the Houſe of Commons, tells King Charles II. in the Relation of his ſecret Tranſactions, that he had told the Houſe as News out of Scotland, that Cromwell was to fight and beat Duke Hamilton's Army.——They deſired to know what he thought would be the event of Cromwell's Victory.——I told them 'tis my Opinion, if Cromwell beats Duke Hamilton's Army, he will return to London, purge the Houſe, and ſet up his own Party the Independents.——They asking my Opinion what to do.——I ſaid, the ſafeſt way is for the Parliament to take off the Votes of Non-Addreſſes, and fetch his Majeſty out of the Iſle of Wight, and ſettle him ſpeedily in his Throne at Weſtminſter, which will prevent Cromwell upon preſuming any Deſign with his victorious Army.——The Members made no Anſwer, but returned into the Houſe, after they had talked a while together, and that Afternoon, being Friday 28 July 1648, they voted a Treaty to be had with the King by the Lords and Commons in the Iſle of Wight, &c.——The King was much pleaſed with the News brought privately by Sir John Bowring and ſaid to him, I have had a ſad time of it ever ſince the two Houſes impriſoned me in this Caſtle, expecting every hour when I ſhould have been murthered, but you have relieved my Heart now.

1648. 24 Car. I.

Patriots, that you will make all the Expedition poſſible to begin this happy Work, by haſtening down your Commiſſioners fully authorized and well Inſtructed; and by enabling me (as I have ſhewed you) to Treat. Praying the God of Peace ſo to bleſs our Endeavours, that all my Dominions may enjoy a ſafe and well-grounded Peace.

Good Votes of the Lords.

Upon this Letter the Lords readily voted, "1. That the Votes of both Houſes of Parliament "againſt no farther Addreſſes and Applications to "his Majeſty, be recalled. 2. That ſuch Perſons "as his Majeſty ſhall ſend for, as of neceſſary uſe "to him in the Treaty, be admitted to wait on him. "And that his Majeſty be in the ſame eſtate of "Freedom, as he was laſt in at Hampton-Court. "3. That ſuch Servants as his Majeſty ſhall appoint "be ſent to wait on him. 4. That the Place for the "Treaty be Newport in the Iſle of Wight. 5. That the "Scots be invited to treat with his Majeſty; and his "Majeſty admitted to invite them." But Lieutenant-General Cromwel having obtained a great Victory againſt Duke Hamilton, and the Scots Army near to Preſton in Lancaſhire (a); and Colcheſter being reduced by Fairfax to the utmoſt Extremity; the Commons would not concur in the Votes of the Lords without great Reſtrictions; that no Perſon lately in Arms againſt the Parliament, ſhould be of the number of thoſe to be admitted to the King; and, that he paſs his Royal Word not to go out of the Iſland during the Treaty, nor 28 Days after, without the Advice of both Houſes of Parliament.

The Commons more refractory.

Sir Peter Killigrew being ſent from the two Houſes, returned with this Anſwer from his Majeſty, dated Aug. 28. My Lord, and Mr. Speaker, I have received your Letter of the 25*th of this Month, with the Votes that you ſent me; which though they are not ſo full as I could have wiſhed for the perfecting of a Treaty, yet becauſe I conceive by what you have done, that I am in ſome meaſure fit to begin one, ſuch is my inceſſant and earneſt Deſire to give Peace to theſe my now diſtracted Dominions, as I accept the Treaty: And therefore deſire, that ſuch five Lords and ten Commons as ſhall be appointed, be ſpeedily ſent, fully authorized and inſtructed, to treat with me; not doubting but what is now wanting, will at our Meeting, upon debate, be fully ſupplied, not only to the Furtherance of this Treaty but alſo to the Conſummation of a ſafe and well-grounded Peace. So I reſt your good Friend,* Charles R.

King's Anſwer to the two Houſes.

Colcheſter ſurrender'd.

The ſame Day this Letter was read in the Houſes, Aug. 29, News came, that the Town of Colcheſter was ſurrendered Yeſterday according to Articles, all the Priſoners at Mercy, the Town preſerved from Plunder paying Fourteen thouſand Pounds. That Afternoon a Council of War was called; at which it was reſolved, that Sir Charles Lucas, Sir George Liſle, and Sir Bernard Gaſcoigne, ſhould be ſhot to Death. The two firſt were barbarouſly ſo executed, the latter, being the only Papiſt, was reprieved and ſaved by the General. The Characters of the two Gentlemen that ſuffered, are thus drawn by the Lord Clarendon: "The two that were thus murdered, "were Men of great Name and Eſteem in the War; "the one being held as good a Commander of Horſe, "and the other of Foot, as the Nation had, but of "very different Tempers and Humours. Lucas "was the younger Brother of the Lord Lucas, and "his Heir both to the Honour and Eſtate, and had "a preſent Fortune of his own. He had been bred "in the Low Countries, under the Prince of Orange, "and always amongſt the Horſe. He had little "Coverſation in that Court, where great Civility "was practis'd and learned. He was very brave in "his Perſon, and, in a Day of Battle, a gallant "Man to look upon, and follow; but at all other "Times and Places, of a Nature ſcarce to be lived "with, of no good Underſtanding, of a rough and "proud Humour, and very moroſe Converſation; "yet they all deſired to accompany him in his "Death. Liſle was a Gentleman who had the ſame "Education with the other, and at the ſame time "an Officer of Foot; had all the Courage of the "other, and led his Men to a Battle with ſuch an "alacrity, that no Man was ever better followed; "his Soldiers never forſaking him; and the Party "which he commanded never left any thing undone "which he led them upon. But then to his Fierceneſs of Courage he had the ſofteſt and moſt gentle "Nature imaginable; was kind to all, and belov'd "by all, and without a Capacity to have an Enemy. The Manner of taking the Lives of theſe "worthy Men was new, and without Example, and "concluded by moſt Men to be very barbarous; and "was generally imputed to Ireton, who ſway'd the "General, and was upon all Occaſions of an unmerciful and bloody Nature."

The King haſtens on the Treaty.

Sept. 7. Sir Peter Killigrew returned again from the Iſle of Wight, with an Anſwer from his Majeſty, That he deſires the Treaty may be haſtened; that he could have wiſhed all thoſe he deſires might have been admitted to him, but will not let that hinder the Treaty; and now deſires, that Dr. Duck and Dr. Reeves, two Civil Lawyers, may be admitted for his Service in the Treaty. Sir Peter farther reported, That his Majeſty ask'd a Gentleman, who wore Black-Ribbon, and was there with him, Who he mourned for? He anſwer'd, for Sir Charles Lucas: And being told of his Death, his Majeſty wept. Letters came from the Iſland September 11, with Advice, that his Majeſty had his Liberty out of Cariſbrook-Caſtle Wedneſday laſt: that after he had dined, the Gentlemen about him rid with him to Newport, and his Majeſty was now at Sir William Hodges's, the Place appointed for the Treaty: that ſome of his new Attendants were come, others expected; and the Book of Common-Prayer was uſed again. September 14, Intelligence was given, that the Duke of Richmond, and moſt of the Lords, Miniſters, Lawyers, and Gentlemen, nominated in the Liſt to attend the King upon the Treaty, were now with him, and had kiſs'd his Hand; and that the King told them, He was glad they were admitted to be with him in the Treaty: That his Majeſty had given them Inſtructions, and daily expected the Commiſſioners from the Parliament. Other Letters from thence, read September 16, (b) ſaid, the Parliament Commiſſioners were come, a good Correſpondence on both ſides, and the Treaty to begin on Monday Morning. Saturday Sept. 16, the Commiſſioners waited on the King, kiſs'd his Hand, and acquainted him with their Meſſage from the Parliament. His Majeſty made a ſhort Speech in Anſwer to them; That he was glad they were come to Treat with him, for the ſettling of his poor bleeding Kingdom in Peace; and deſired God to perfect this bleſſed Work; profeſſing, that he was in Charity with all of them, and not willing to ſeek Revenge againſt any, nor give occaſion of Delays: deſiring that there may be no procraſtinating of Time; but that being only a broken piece of a Day, and the laſt Day of the Week too, he deſired the Treaty might begin at Nine a Clock on Monday Morning; and from thence the Treaty to commence. Accordingly on Monday Sept. 18, the King and Commiſſioners met at the Houſe of Sir William Hodges, and began the Treaty. The Commiſſioners firſt preſented the three Bills, for Religion, the Militia, and the Recalling his Majeſty's Proclamations and Declarations againſt the Parliament. Then the two firſt Days were ſpent in laying down the Method that was to be obſerved: viz. That nothing ſhould be binding on either ſide, but what ſhould be expreſſed in Writing; and not that, till the Concluſion of the Treaty. His Majeſty deſired that the Preamble to the Propoſitions might be laid aſide, becauſe it charged all the Blood, ſhed in the three Kingdoms, upon himſelf and Thoſe who adhered to him. The Commiſſioners inſiſted on the Preamble to be made part of the Act of Parliament, till the King, againſt Judgment, yielded to it. Upon which Conceſſion, the Commiſſioners wrote to the Parliament, that on September 25, the King had declared, he would conſent to paſs the Preamble as was deſired: Which being done, great Hope is given to all Hearts, that this is the Fore-runner of a happy Peace and Eſtabliſhment; the King having declared, That nothing of his particular Intereſt ſhall hinder the Progreſs of this Treaty.

King agrees to the hard Preamble.

Propoſals of the K.

October 2, A Letter from his Majeſty was brought to both Houſes by Captain Titus, with Propoſals, that as to Religion, his Majeſty will conſent, that the Calling and Sitting of the Aſſembly of Divines, and the Directory, and Presbyterian Government, ſhall be confirmed for three Years; provided his Majeſty, and thoſe of his Judgment, be not obliged to comply with the ſame. Concerning the Biſhops Lands and Revenue, his Majeſty will conſent to an Act whereby legal Eſtates for Lives or for Years, not exceeding 99, ſhall be made for thoſe Lands towards the Satisfaction of the Purchaſers; provided the Propriety and Inheritance of thoſe Lands may ſtill remain to the Church. His Majeſty will give his Royal Aſſent for the better Obſervation of the Lord's-Day; for ſuppreſſing of Innovations in Churches and Chapels; for Acts againſt Plurality and Non-Reſidence; for Regulating and Reforming Univerſities and Colleges; for the better Diſcovery and ſpeedy Conviction of Popiſh Recuſants; for the Education of their Children by Proteſtants; and for preventing the Hearing or Saying of Maſs, and for putting the Militia into the Parliament's Hands for ten Years, &c. But the Commons, upon Debate of this Meſſage, voted the ſame to be unſatisfactory. (a)

Voted not ſatisfactory.

October 7, Letters were ſent to the Parliament from their own Party, that the great Buſineſs inſiſted on was the Propoſition for ſettling Religion, which was like to take up ſome time: That his Majeſty had given a Paper to the Commiſſioners, of the Reaſons wherefore he could not condeſcend to take away Biſhops, and the Government by Biſhops, which he conceived to be of Apoſtolical Inſtitution, and alledged ſeveral Scriptures to that purpoſe: He alſo propounded ſome Queries concerning Presbyterial Government, which were referred to the Parliament Miniſters who waited on the Commiſſioners, Mr. Marſhal, Mr. Vines, Mr. Caryll, and Mr. Seaman. A Day or two after, his Majeſty had ſaid, that He was bred and inſtructed in the way he ſtands for, by his Father the wiſeſt King and beſt in the World, and therefore could not eaſily yield; and yet he had already yielded far, having denied in effect nothing but the abſolute Sale of Biſhops Lands, which he thought to be Sacrilege, and to be againſt his Coronation-Oath. That in a Debate about the Directory the King had asked, What Fault they found in the Common Prayer Book? It was replied, That the Liturgy was taken out of the Maſs-Book, only ſpoiled in the Tranſlation; and that his Majeſty's Father, King James, had ſo confeſſed it to be: to which his Majeſty had ſaid, That if it were good in it ſelf, that did not make it ill. As to the aboliſhing of Biſhops, his Majeſty would by no means conſent to it; but had ſince made Offer of a limited and regulated Epiſcopacy. The Form of this Offer (which ſhall be recited among the Affairs of Religion) was read and debated in the Houſe of Commons, who voted that his Majeſty's Paper concerning Religion was not ſatisfactory. And then ordered their Commiſſioners not to proceed to the Debate of any new Propoſition, till this concerning the Church were firſt ſigned by his Majeſty. This was on October 11, on which very Day the King had given his Conſent to the Propoſition concerning Ireland; and preſently after to another Propoſition for taking away all Honours conferred ſince May 20, 1642, and to great part of the Propoſition concerning Delinquents; ſubjecting them to any Penalties except the loſs of Life. October 23, his Majeſty farther conſented to theſe other Propoſitions: 1. To that of the Nomination of the great Officers of the Kingdom, as deſired. 2. To that concerning the City of London, as deſired. 3. To that concerning the Great Seal, as deſired. 4. And to that concerning the Court of Wards, as deſired; a Recompence being aſſured to his Majeſty of one hundred thouſand Pounds per Annum to him and his Heirs in lieu of it. (b)

... and Compliance of the King.

Cromwel's Victory exalts the Commons.

But ſuch now was the Miſery of this vanquiſhed Prince, and ſuch the Inſults of the conquering Party, that ninety and nine Conceſſions would not have ſatisfied, if any ſingle one of a hundred had been denied. And therefore, upon the returning of Cromwel with Victory out of Scotland, the Commons voted October 27, that his Majeſty's Anſwer concerning the taking of the Covenant was Unſatisfactory; and that his other Anſwers concerning the taking away Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Deans, &c. concerning the aboliſhing of Popery, and concerning the alienating of Biſhops-Lands, were all Unſatisfactory: and within few Days after, that his Meſſage as to Delinquents, his Anſwer concerning the Church, and concerning Ireland, were likewiſe Unſatisfactory.

The Army breaks off the Treaty.

(c) Upon this, the Army, inſtructed by their Leaders, preſented to the Houſe of Commons a large Remonſtrance; wherein they declare, that the Parliament hath abundant cauſe to lay aſide any farther Proceeding in this Treaty, and to return to their Votes of Non-Addreſſes, that the King may come no more to Government, but be brought to Juſtice, as the capital Cauſe of all Evils. In this was the hand of Cromwel; who, being at the Leaguer before Pontefract in his Return from Scotland, induced all the Regiments under him to petition againſt the Treaty,

(a) Sir John Bowring tells us, that coming down from London, and being admitted into the King's Cloſet with Sir Edward Walker only; Sir, ſaid I, this Treaty is not obtained of any Intention your Majeſty ſhould or can poſſibly make your Peace by it, but it is deſign'd only of purpoſe to get your Majeſty liberty to go away, and to have Friends to help you. But looking the King in the Face, I found his Majeſty's Countenance to alter very much, and to grow pale as I ſpake to his Majeſty. Whereupon I immediately apprehended his Majeſty miſliked my Advice of getting away. Upon which I inſtantly ſaid, Yet, Sir, if your Majeſty does think in your better Judgment, you can make your more certain Peace by Treating than you can by going away; then I beg of your Majeſty to make your Majeſty's Conceſſions in one Declaration, and at one Inſtant, and in one Day.——Forty Days was only a Trick of Cromwel's Party——that within that time Cromwel may have diſpatched in Scotland, and return to London with his Army, &c.

(b) See, A Journal dated from Newport, Octob. 28, 1648, of the King's Conference with the Biſhops and Clergy: the Biſhop of London's Speech; the Sermon on the Faſt-Day, &c. Printed 4to. 1648.

In the Collections of Archbiſhop Teniſon in the Lambeth Library, are ſeveral Original Letters of Biſhop Duppa, Dr. Robert Sanderſon, and others attending on the King. Dated from Newport in September and October 1648, giving an Account of the King's Conceſſions, and the ſad Neceſſity of them, &c.

(c) The firſt Notice brought to the King of the bloody Intention of the Army againſt him, was by Sir Peter Killigrew, who came to Newport to the King in the Preſence-Chamber, Sir J. Bowring being by, and ſeveral other Perſons. The King enquiring what News, and from whence he came: without much Circumſtance he ſaid, He came from London yeſterday, and to Day from Windſor. But, Sir, I am loth to tell your Majeſty how things are like to be with your Majeſty, if God does not pleaſe to preſerve you miraculouſly: and yet, ſays he, I came on purpoſe to let your Majeſty underſtand it, that you may provide for your Safety in time, I may go to Priſon for this. Sir, The Army have reſolved at Windſor in Council, and in Council in ſeveral other Places in and about London, to take you out of the Iſle of Wight by force, and bring your Majeſty to London, try you for your Life, and murther you publickly. His Majeſty not at all daunted, anſwered, He could not believe they would Murder him, and that he believed it would be a more difficult thing for them to attempt any ſuch thing than was imagined, and moſt unſafe to themſelves, &c.

1648. 24 Car. I.

and for Juſtice on the King. The Remonſtrance not being immediately conſidered in the Houſe of Commons, another Declaration of the General and his Council of Officers was agreed upon November 30, in farther Proſecution of the Ends of their late Remonſtrance, and to ſhew the Grounds of the Army's Advance toward London.

And ſeize upon the King.

This Cabal in the Army reſolved once more to ſeize upon the Perſon of the King, the manner of which is thus related by Colonel Edward Cook, who drew up the Narrative next Morning, by Aſſiſtance of the Duke of Richmond and the Earl of Lindſey, at the King's Command (a). "Upon rumour of ſuch an "Attempt upon the King—— the Duke of Richmond and the Earl of Lindſey, upon Advice of Colonel Cook, agreed for the King's attempting an immediate Eſcape, as the readieſt way to procure a "perſonal Treaty with the Parliament ——— But "before they could proceed to debate the Manner "of this Eſcape, the King prevented it, arguing a"gainſt the Eſcape it ſelf. Firſt, He urged the "great Difficulty, if not Impoſſibility, of accom"pliſhing it. Next, that in caſe he ſhould miſ"carry in the Attempt, it would exaſperate the "Army, and diſhearten his Friends. And Laſtly, "if the Army ſhould ſeize him, they muſt preſerve "him for their own ſakes; he being convinced, "that no Party could ſecure their own Intereſt "without joining his to it, his Son being out of "their Reach——After ſome Conſult, the King "commanded Colonel Cook to give his Advice; who "did it thus: Suppoſe I ſhould not only tell your Ma"jeſty that the Army deſigned ſuddenly to ſeize your Ma"jeſty, but by concurring Circumſtances ſhould fully con"vince you that it would be ſo: Alſo, that I have the "Word, and Horſes ready at hand (they being not far "off in a readineſs under the Penthouſe;) That I had "alſo a Veſſel attending me by the Cows, nay hourly "expecting me; My ſelf likewiſe both ready and deſirous "to attend your Majeſty; and the Darkneſs of the Night "as it were ſuited to the Purpoſe; ſo that I can foreſee "no viſible Difficulty in the Thing; which I ſuppoſe in "all its Particulars to be the true ſtate of this preſent "Caſe: The only now remaining Queſtion is, If ſo, "what will your Majeſty reſolve to do? The King, af"ter a ſmall Pauſe, delivered this poſitive Anſwer, "They have promiſed Me, and I have promiſed Them, "and I will not break firſt. The Duke of Richmond "preſſing the Colonel to ſpeak, he craved Leave "to argue the Point with the King: His Majeſty "replied, With all my Heart. I preſume Sir (then "ſaid the Colonel) your Majeſty intends by theſe "Words They and Them the Parliament, to whom "your Majeſty made that Promiſe you mention. If ſo, "the Scene is now quite changed, the preſent Appre"henſion ariſing from the Army, who have already ſo "far violated the Votes and Promiſes of the Parlia"ment, as to invade your Majeſty's Freedom and Safety, "by changing the ſingle Centinel of State at the outward "Door, contrary to their declared Promiſe, into ſtrong "Guards on your very Bed-Chamber; which in it ſelf is "no better than a Confinement, and in all probability a "Forerunner of ſomething worſe."

1648. 24 Car. I.

"The King replied (b), However he would not do any "thing that ſhould look like a breaking of his Word; "and ſo bad him and the Earl of Lindſey good "Night, and that he would go and take his reſt too as "long as he could. Which, Sir (replyed Col. Cook) "I fear will not be long. The King perceiving a great "Uneaſineſs and Diſturbance in Col. Cook, ſaid, "Ned what troubleth thee, tell me? Who anſwered, "Sir, to conſider the greatneſs of your Majeſty's Danger, "and your unwillingneſs to obviate it. To which the "King made this Reply, Never let that trouble you, "were it greater I would not break my Word to prevent "it. ——— Next Morning, December 1, juſt at "break of Day the King hearing a great knocking "at his outward Door, ſent the Duke of Richmond "to ask, What it meant? Who demanding who was "there? It was anſwered, my Name is Mildmay: "One of thoſe Servants the Parliament had put to "the King, and Brother to Sir Henry. The Duke "demanded, What he would have? Who anſwered, "There were ſome Gentlemen from the Army very deſirous "to ſpeak with the King. Which account the Duke "gave the King; but the knocking rather increa"ſing, the King commanded the Duke to let them "into the Room. No ſooner was this done, but "before the King could get from his Bed, thoſe Of"ficers ruſhed into his Bed-Chamber and abruptly "told the King, that they had Orders to receive him. "From whom, ſaid the King? they reply'd, from the "Army. The King then ask'd, to what Place? To "the Caſtle, ſaid they. The King demanded, To "what Caſtle? Again they anſwered, to the Caſtle. "The Caſtle, ſaid the King, is no Caſtle: And added, "he was well enough prepared for any Caſtle, requiring "them to name the Caſtle. After a ſhort whiſper "together, they ſaid, Hurſt-Caſtle. Indeed, ſaid the "King, you could not have named a worſe. Where"upon the King called to the Duke of Richmond to "ſend for the Earl of Lindſey and Col. Cook. At "firſt they ſcrupled at the Earl of Lindſey's coming, "the King ſaid, Why not both, ſince both lye together? "Then having whiſper'd together, they promiſed to "ſend for both, but ſent for neither. And tho' the "Duke of Richmond had order'd the King's Breakfaſt "to be haſten'd, preſuming there was little Proviſion "made in that deſolate Caſtle; nevertheleſs when his "Majeſty was ſcarce ready, the Horſes being come, "they hurried him away, permitting only the Duke "of Richmond to attend him two Miles, and then tel"ling him he muſt go no farther; where he ſadly "took leave of his Majeſty, ſcarce being permitted "to kiſs his Majeſty's Hand, whoſe laſt Words to the "Duke were, Remember me to my Lord of Lindſey, "and to Col. Cook, and command Col. Cook from me "never to forget the Paſſages of this Night."

(a) See, Certain Paſſages which happened at Newport in the Iſle of Wight, Novemb. 29, 1648, relating to King Charles I. written by Mr. Edward Cook of Highnam in Glouceſterſhire, ſometime Colonel of a Regiment under Oliver Cromwel; firſt publiſht in 4*to.* 1690, with a Preface. [Written by Dr. Tho. Teniſon, as he himſelf when Archbiſhop told me, and at the ſame time he complain'd, that the Preface was left out in a following Edition.]

(b) Sir John Bowring, Kt. in his Account of Secret Tranſactions in the Iſle of Wight, ſpeaks much of the frequent Importunities and convenient Offers he made to the King for an Eſcape out of the Iſland, and had brought him at laſt to ſome Inclination to it: when on the ſudden his Majeſty made me a private Sign to follow him into his Cloſet. As ſoon as I was in, his Majeſty was pleas'd to tell me, he had received this Morning early ſome Letters from a Friend beyond Seas, wherein he was adviſed not to go out of the Iſland by any means, for it was not in the power of the Army to do his Majeſty the leaſt harm, or to touch one Hair of his Head, and ſhew'd me the Letter. So that, ſays his Majeſty, if I ſhould go with you now, as I thought to have done, and things fall out otherwiſe than well with me, and the rather becauſe my Treaty hath had ſo fair an End as you ſee by their Votes, That my Conceſſions are Satisfactory, and eſpecially ſince I have received this Advice [you gueſs from whence it comes] I ſhall be alway blamed hereafter; and ſo told me ſome more private and material Reaſons, which I durſt die, if ever they ſhould happen. I anſwered his Majeſty, and ſhall [ſays Sir John Bowring to King Charles II.] if your Majeſty be pleaſed tell them to your Majeſty, but thought not fit to write them in this Paper. And his Majeſty further ſaid, the Duke of Richmond was of the ſame Opinion with him. Therefore, ſays his Majeſty, I am Reſolved to ſtay here, and God's Will be done. ——— I doubt there is a Key to this Secret piece of Hiſtory in a Letter from the Queen to his Majeſty in the Iſle of Wight, once in the Hands of Mr. Lenthal Son of the Speaker, who ſhew'd it to a particular Friend who ſpoke of it to Perſons of great Worth and Figure, that he had ſeen and read ſuch a Letter from the Queen diſſuading his Majeſty from attempting to ſave his Life by any Eſcape to France: Whether She did this from a timerous Apprehenſion of greater Danger if he ſhould be taken; or (as intimated) from an indifference to the King's Perſon, and a familiar Acquaintance contracted with the Lord Aubigney, is not ſo eaſy or fit to determine. But if the King was really detain'd by ſuch a Letter of Advice from the Queen, when he would and might otherwiſe have eſcap'd; the Match was the more fatal to him, when She chiefly brought Him to his Troubles, and now prevented his only Deliverance from a violent Death.

The Two Houſes made Priſoners as well as the King.

The next Day after this perfidious Exploit, the General Fairfax with ſeveral Regiments of Horſe and Foot marched to London, and took up their Quarters in White-hall, St. James's, the Mews, York-Houſe, and other parts of Weſtminſter and the adjacent Villages. By which means the Parliament who had ſo long kept their King a Priſoner, were themſelves made Priſoners of War to the Army; and had only leiſure to repent, that this Treaty was in this manner diſſolved, which they might have concluded with ſo much Honour and Intereſt at leaſt to themſelves. While all that the Commons could now do was to Vote Decemb. 4, That the ſeizing upon the Perſon of the King, and carrying him Priſoner to Hurſt-Caſtle, was without the Advice or Conſent of the Houſe. A ſorry Confeſſion, that they would not prevent it, and could not now help it. Excellent Sayings of the King.

And here, becauſe the private Converſation and occaſional Sayings of a Prince (eſpecially in times of Trial) repreſent him better than any other Marks and Characters whatever. Take this Account of ſome Paſſages given by an Ear-Witneſs, Sir Philip Warwick. "In the Treaty at Newport, two Replies "which the King made to two Gentlemen that Day "were obſervable; the one to a Gentleman who is "now a Lord, who preſs'd ſomewhat upon him hard-"ly: A good Nature, Sir, (ſays he) would not offer "this you ſay, nor is it true Logick: And then made "another kind of ingenious Reply unto Mr. Buckly "(who was a Gentleman of that Iſland, and now "a Commiſſioner) when he prayed the King to "make right uſe of this Treaty.—— Conſider "(ſays he) Mr. Buckly, if you call this a Treaty, "whether it be not like the Fray in the Comedy; where "the Man comes out and ſays there has been a fray and "no fray. I ſhew him "you (ſays he) becauſe that was the beſt Companion "I had for three Months together in Cariſbrook-Caſtle, "where he made my Fires. Methinks, becauſe it "ſhews his diſeſteem of a common Court-Vice, it "is not unworthy the relating of him, that one "Evening his Dog ſcraping at the Door, he com-"manded me to let in Gipſey; whereupon I took "the boldneſs to ſay, Sir, I perceive you love a Grey-"hound better than a Spaniel. Yes (ſays he) for they "equally love their Maſters, and do not flatter them "ſo much."

(b) We ought not to leave the Iſle of Wight without obſerving, that the King drew up a full account of the Treaty in a Letter to the Prince, which he began before the firſt forty Days was expired, and continued it as the Treaty was lengthen'd, even to the Hour it was concluded, and finiſhed it the 29th of Nov. after the Commiſſioners were departed, and with it ſent a very exact Copy of all the Papers which had paſſed in the Treaty; the perfect Copies whereof are lately printed in the Hiſtorical Diſcourſes of Sir Ed. Walker, who was the chief Clerk employed by his Majeſty during that Treaty. The Lord Clarendon relates, that the Letter to the Prince was all in the King's own Hand, and contained above ſix Sheets of Paper; in which he made a very particular Relation of all the Motives and Reaſons which had prevailed with him, or over him, to make thoſe Conceſſions. The Concluſion of the Letter, as it was dated the 25th of November (what was added to it after till the 29th, was but the additional Paſſages

(a) In a Paper intituled by Mr. Griffyth, into whoſe Hands it came, Several Remarks concerning the Intrigues of Sir Henry Vane, by Mr. Coytmore Servant to Robert Earl of Warwick, now in the Hands of this Writer, it is ſaid; Sir Henry Vane was one of the Commiſſioners returning out of the Iſle of Wight, who were about a Fortnight after to make Report to the Houſe of their Proceedings with the King, but they ſtaid the longer from making their Report, until Oliver returned with his Army from the Defeat of Duke Hamilton. Moſt of the Commiſſioners were for the Conceſſions, ſaving Mr. St. John, and Sir Henry Vane, who (as it is reported) made many invective Speeches againſt the Proceedings there, and, in fine, Sir Henry Vane ſaid then in the Houſe, that there was no Truſt to be given to any thing that the King had ſaid there. After that he had ended his Speech, with the which the Army was ſo much taken, he retired to his Houſe at Deptford, and gave forth he would come to the Parliament-Houſe no more. MS.

(b) The beſt Relation of the ſurprizing Removal of the King to Hurſt-Caſtle ſeems to be that given by Sir John Bowring, who was a Witneſs of it. He firſt tells the Story how Col. Evres came over to the Iſle of Wight, and carried away Col Hammond his Priſoner. And then (ſays he) as ſoon as Evres had got over from Cows to Titchfield with Col. Hammond, he diſmounts him, puts him into a Hackney-Coach brought thither for that purpoſe, and with a ſmall Guard ſends this great Governour Hammond to Windſor-Caſtle a Priſoner, and his Horſe back again into the Iſland. Night being at hand, Evres returns with all haſte by Cows Harbour into the Iſle of Wight; by which time a Troop of Horſe and a Company of Foot were conducted into the Iſland by one Cobbett and Merriman from Southampton, and landed at Cows harbour by eleven of the Clock, which this Evres commanded to Newport, and commanded Mr. Mildmay from his Lodging to ſhew where the King's Chamber was, and ſo in the Name and by the Command of General Fairfax, and the Council at Windſor, Evres, aſſiſted by Cobbett and Merriman, takes the King out of his Bed at Newport, and hurries him over to Hurſt-Caſtle about ſix a Clock that Morning, where the King (as I think) was ſhut up near ten Days, and they put away all Perſons and Servants about him, except Mildmay.

To return to the King's Sufferings and Trial, on Dec. 6, ſeveral Members of the Houſe of Commons, who were thought leſs inclinable to the Wickedneſs in agitation, were excluded, ſeized upon, and kept in Cuſtody by ſpecial Order from the General and Council of Army (b). And when the Houſe was thus purged, Lieutenant Colonel Axtel came in, and preſented the Propoſals of the Army, ſetting forth, That they had for a long while ſadly beheld and taſted in their Proceedings the miſerable Fruits of Counſels divided and corrupted by Faction and perſonal Intereſt; that all faithful Members muſt acquit themſelves by a Proteſtation of their not concurring in the late Proceedings; and muſt then ſpeedily and vigorouſly proceed to take Order for the Execution of Juſtice. Next Day Lieutenant General Cromwell came into the Houſe, and received their hearty Thanks for his great and faithful Services. On Dec. 13, the Remnant of the Commons voted, that they will make no farther Addreſſes or Applications to the King; and that the late Treaty with him was highly diſhonourable and deſtructive to the good of the Kingdom. On Dec. 16, a Party of Horſe was ſent over to Hurſt-Caſtle to bring the King from thence to Windſor, where Cromwel was now ready to receive him: He lay at Farnham December 22, and was delivered up at Windſor Caſtle on Saturday Night Dec. 23. Colonel Thomlinſon commanding the Guards of Horſe and Foot about him. The Council of War ordered, Dec. 27, that all Ceremonies of State uſed to the King ſhould be left off, and his Attendance ſhould be with fewer Perſons and at leſs Charges. Next Day a Committee of the Commons appointed to draw up a Charge againſt the King, reported an Ordinance for Attainting Charles Stuart of High-Treaſon, and for trying him by Commiſſioners to be nominated in the ſaid Ordinance, which was tumultuouſly agreed to, and carried up to the Lords Jan. 2, their Lordſhips with Members excluded.

Ordinance for Attainting the King. Rejected by the Lords.

(a) Sir John Bowring in his Narrative to King Charles II. writes thus: The Parliament proteſted againſt the Army for ſeizing on the King, and taking of his Majeſty by force out of the Iſle of Wight to Hurſt-Caſtle, and voted a Letter to Fairfax to charge him to recall his Letter to Col. Evre, which was to ſeize on the King, and to command Fairfax to command Col. Evre to return the King to Newport, and to put his Majeſty in the ſame freedom he was in, and reſtore Hammond to his Command and Charge. But inſtead of obeying the Command of the Lords and Commons, the King was violently removed from Hurſt-Caſtle to Windſor-Caſtle; where his Majeſty was kept in cloſe Lodgings in the Upper Court, with a great Guard at the Chamber door, and ſometimes in his Chamber, under the Command of one Col. Thomlinſon; Mildmay waiting as Carver, and one Muſchamp as Cup-Bearer, and no other Servants as I could hear of. I adventured to wait on his Majeſty at Windſor-Caſtle,—— to acquaint the King of ſome Succeſs of vaſt Importance to his Majeſty, and what foreign Sollicitations were made to the Army againſt him.——

In that Speech he refers to a Council of War ſitting at Whitehall, and a Reſolution in it carried by two Voices, that all Papiſts ſhall have free Liberty and Toleration of Conſcience, and that all Sequeſtrations and Forfeitures as Papiſts only ſhall be taken off from them.

Commiſſioners for Trial of the King.

Jan. 10. The Commiſſioners appointed to try the King, met in the Painted-Chamber, and nominated Serjeant Bradſhaw to be Preſident of their Court (a), Mr. Steel to be Attorney-General, Mr. Cook Sollicitor, Dr. Doriſlau and Mr. Ask to be Pleaders againſt him. On Jan. 13, they agreed, that Weſtminſter-Hall ſhould be the Place of Trial; and that, in order thereto, the King ſhould be brought up from Windſor on Monday next. On Wedneſday Jan. 17, they ordered that the King ſhould be brought to the Houſe of Sir Robert Cotton, for the better Conveniency of his Trial in the Hall adjoining.

Call'd a High Court of Juſtice.

Jan. 20. This execrable High Court of Juſtice met in Weſtminſter-Hall; and after reading the Ordinance, the Names of the Commiſſioners, as Judges, were called over: Every Man anſwering to his Name as he was called, and the Preſident being firſt called and making Anſwer, the next who was called being the General, Lord Fairfax, and no Anſwer being made, the Officer called him the ſecond time, when there was a Voice heard that ſaid, He had more Wit than to be there, which put the Court into ſome Diſorder; and ſome body asking who it was? there was no other Anſwer but a little Murmuring. But preſently when the Impeachment was read, and that Expreſſion uſed, Of all the good People of England, the ſame Voice, in a louder Tone, anſwered, No, nor the hundredth Part of them: upon which one of the Officers bid the Soldiers give Fire into that Box from whence thoſe preſumptuous Words were uttered. But it was quickly diſcerned that it was the General's Wife, the Lady Fairfax, who had uttered both thoſe ſharp Sayings; who was preſently perſuaded or forced to leave the Place to prevent any new Diſorder. Sixty ſeven Commiſſioners anſwered to their Names; and then the Court commanded the Serjeant at Arms to ſend for the Priſoner, who was brought up in the Face of the Court by Colonel Thomlinſon, under a ſtrong Guard, and delivered to the Serjeant at Arms, who conducted him to the Bar, where a Crimſon Velvet Chair was ſet before him. After a ſtern looking upon the Court, and the People in the Galleries on each ſide of him, he placed himſelf in the Chair, not at all moving his Hat; all the impudent Judges ſitting cover'd, and fixing their Eyes upon him without the leaſt Shew of Reſpect. The King preſently roſe up again, and turn'd about, looking downwards on the Guards and Multitude of Spectators. Being again placed in his Chair, and Silence proclaimed, the Preſident acquainted him, "That the Commons (b) of England aſſembled in Parliament being deeply ſenſible of "the Evils and Calamities that had been brought "upon this Nation, and of the innocent Blood that "had been ſpilt in it, which was fixed upon him as "the principal Author, had reſolved to make Inquiſition for this Blood, and according to the Debt "they did owe to God, to Juſtice, to the Kingdom, "and Themſelves, and according to that fundamental Power and Truſt repoſed in them by the "People, other Means failing through his Default, "had reſolved to bring him to Trial and Judgment, and had therefore conſtituted that Court "of Juſtice before which he was then brought, "where he was to hear his Charge, upon which the "Court would proceed according to Juſtice." Upon which, Mr. Cook, Sollicitor, offer'd to ſpeak: but the King having a Staff in his Hand, held it up, and ſoftly laid it upon Cook's Shoulder two or three times, bidding him Hold: But, at Command of the Preſident, Cook went on, and in the Name and on the Behalf of the People of England, exhibited a Charge of High-Treaſon, and other high Crimes, and did therewith accuſe the ſaid Charles Stuart, King of England; praying, that the ſaid Charge might be received and read, and due Proceedings had thereupon. The King interrupted the Reading of it; but the Clerk, at Command of the Court, read the Charge, concluding, That he the ſaid Charles Stuart hath been and is the Occaſioner, Author, and Continuer of the ſaid unnatural, cruel, and bloody Wars; and therein guilty of all the Treaſons, Murders, Rapines, Burnings, Spoils, Deſolations, Damages, and Miſchiefs to this Nation, acted and committed in the ſaid Wars, or occaſioned thereby.

The King brought before this execrable Court.

Bradſhaw, after he had inſolently reprehended the King for not having ſhew'd more Reſpect to that high Tribunal, told him, "That the Parliament of "England had appointed that Court to Try him "for the ſeveral Treaſons and Miſdemeanours which "he had committed againſt the Kingdom during the "Evil Adminiſtration of his Government; and "that, upon the Examination thereof, Juſtice might "be done." And after a great Sawcineſs and Impudence of Talk, he asked the King, "What Anſwer "he had to make to that Impeachment?"

The King, without any Alteration in his Countenance by all that inſolent Provocation, told them, "He would firſt know of them, by what Authority "they preſumed by Force to bring him before "them, and who gave them Power to judge of his "Actions, for which he was accountable to none "but God, though they had been always ſuch as "he need not be aſham'd to own them before all "the World. He told them, That He was their "King, They his Subjects; who owed him Duty "and Obedience: That no Parliament had Authority to call him before them; but, that they were "not the Parliament, nor had any Authority from (a) Mr. Serjeant Bradſhaw, the Preſident, was afraid of ſome Tumult upon ſuch new and unprecedented Inſolence as that of ſitting Judge upon his King; and therefore beſide other Defenee, he had a thick high crown'd Beaver Hat lin'd with plated Steel to ward off Blows. This Hat had long hung uſeleſs, when the Reverend Dr. Biſſe, Preacher at the Rolls, lighting on it, ſent it for a Preſent to the Muſæum in Oxford, with a Latin Inſcription to preſerve the Hiſtory of it.

24 Car. I. "the Perſons who ſat there, and took upon them "to judge him, (except thoſe Perſons who being "Officers of the Army, he could not but know "whilſt he was forced to be amongſt them) there "were only two Faces which he had ever ſeen be-"fore, or whoſe Names were known to him." And after urging their Duty that was due to him, and his Superiority over them, by ſuch lively Reaſons and Arguments as were not capable of any Anſwer, he concluded, "That he would not ſo much betray "himſelf, and his Royal Dignity, as to anſwer any "thing they objected againſt him, which were to "acknowledge their Authority; though he belie-"ved that every one of themſelves, as well as the "Spectators, did in their own Conſciences abſolve "him from all the material things which were ob-"jected againſt him."

Bradſhaw adviſ'd him, in a very arrogant manner, "Not to deceive himſelf with an Opinion that any "thing he had ſaid would do him any Good: That "the Parliament knew their own Authority, and "would not ſuffer it to be call'd in queſtion or de-"bated: therefore requir'd him, To think better of "it againſt he ſhould be next brought thither, and "that he would anſwer directly to his Charge; "otherwiſe, he could not be ſo ignorant as not to "know what Judgment the Law pronounced againſt "thoſe who ſtood mute, and obſtinately refuſed to "Plead." So the Guard carried his Majeſty back to St. James's, where they treated him as before.

Second Day. Monday Jan. 22. The Court being ſat, and the Sollicitor requiring that the Priſoner might make a poſitive Anſwer to his Charge, the Lord Preſident ſaid,

Sir, You may remember, at the laſt Court you were told the Occaſion of your being brought hither, and you heard a Charge read againſt you, containing a Charge of High-Treaſon, and other high Crimes againſt this Realm of England: and inſtead of anſwering, you interrogated the Court's Authority and Juriſdiction. Sir, The Authority is the Commons of England in Parliament aſſembled, who require you to anſwer to the Charge, either by Confeſſing or Denying.

"King. When I was laſt here, 'tis very true I "made that Queſtion; and truly, if it were only "my own particular Caſe, I would have ſatisfied "Myſelf with the Proteſtation I made the laſt time "I was here, againſt the Legality of this Court; "and that a King cannot be tried by any ſuperiour "Juriſdiction on Earth. But it is not my Caſe "alone; it is the Freedom and the Liberty of the "People of England; and, do you pretend what "you will, I ſtand more for their Liberties: For, "if Power without Law may make Laws, may al-"ter the fundamental Laws of the Kingdom; I do "not know what Subject he is in England that can "be ſure of his Life, or any thing he calls his own. "Therefore when that I came here, I did expect "particular Reaſons by what Law, what Authority, "you did proceed againſt me here: and therefore "I am a little to ſeek what to ſay to you in this "Particular; becauſe the Affirmative is to be pro-"ved; the Negative often is very hard to do. But "ſince I cannot perſwade you to it, I ſhall tell you "my Reaſons as ſhort as I can. My Reaſons why, "in Conſcience and Duty I owe to God firſt, and "my People next, for the Preſervation of their "Lives, Liberties, and Eſtates. I conceive I can-"not anſwer this, till I be ſatisfied of the Legality "of it. All Proceedings againſt any Man what-"ſoever"——

L. Preſident. Sir, I muſt interrupt you; which I would not do, but that what you do is not agreeable to the Proceedings of any Court of Juſtice. You are about to enter into Argument and Diſpute concerning the Authority of this Court; before whom you appear as a Priſoner, and are charged as a high Delinquent. If you take upon you to diſpute the Authority of the Court, we may not do it, nor will any Court give way unto it. You are to ſubmit to it: You are to give a punctual and direct Anſwer, whether you will anſwer your Charge or no, and what your Anſwer is. 1648. 24 Car. I.

"King. Sir, By your Favour, I do not know the "Forms of Law: I do know Law and Reaſon, tho' "I am no Lawyer profeſſed. But I know as much "Law as any Gentleman in England: and therefore, "under favour, I do plead for the Liberties of the "People of England more than you do: and there-"fore if I ſhould impoſe a Belief upon any without "Reaſons given for it, it were unreaſonable. But I "muſt tell you, that by that Reaſon I have as thus "informed, I cannot yield unto it."——

L. Preſident. Sir, I muſt interrupt you, you may not be permitted: You ſpeak of Law and Reaſon; it is fit there ſhould be Law and Reaſon, and there is both againſt you. Sir, The Vote of the Commons of England aſſembled in Parliament, it is the Reaſon of the Kingdom; and they are theſe too that have given Being to that Law according to which you ſhould have Ruled and Reigned. Sir, You are not to diſpute our Authority; you are told it again by the Court. Sir, It will be taken notice of, that you ſtand in Contempt of the Court, & your Contempt will be recorded accordingly.

"King. I do not know how a King may be a De-"linquent, by any Law that ever I heard of. All Men "(Delinquents or what you will) let me tell you, they "may put in Demurrers againſt any Proceeding as "Legal; and I do demand That, and demand to be "heard with my Reaſons. If you deny That, you "deny Reaſon."

L. Preſident. Sir, You have offer'd ſomething to the Court, I ſhall ſpeak ſomething to you the Senſe of the Court. Sir, Neither you nor any Man are permitted to diſpute that Point: You are concluded, you may not demur to the Juriſdiction of the Court. If you do, I muſt let you know they over-rule your Demurrer. They ſit here by the Authority of the Commons of England, and all your Predeceſſors, and you, are reſponſible to them.

"King. I deny that: Shew me one Precedent."

L. Preſident. Sir, You ought not to interrupt while the Court is ſpeaking to you. This Point is not to be debated by you, neither will the Court permit you to do it. If you offer it by way of Demurrer to the Juriſdiction of the Court, they have concluded of their Juriſdiction: They do affirm their own Juriſdiction.

"King. I ſay, Sir, By your favour, that the Com-"mons of England was never a Court of Judicature: "I would know how they came to be ſo."

L. Preſident. Sir, You are not to be permitted to go on in that Speech, and theſe Diſcourſes.

[Then the Clerk of the Crown read as follows:]

Charles Stuart, King of England, You have been accuſed, on the behalf of the People of England, of High-Treaſon, and other high Crimes; and the Court have determined, that you ought to anſwer the ſame.

"King. I will anſwer the ſame, ſo ſoon as I know "by what Authority you do this."

L. Preſident. If this be all that you will ſay, then Gentlemen, you that brought the Priſoner hither, take Charge of him back again.

"King. I do require, that I may give in my Rea-"ſons why I do not Anſwer, and give me time for "that."

L. Preſident. Sir, It is not for Priſoners to Require.

"King. Priſoners! Sir, I am not an ordinary "Priſoner"

L. Preſident. The Court has conſidered of their Juriſdiction, and they have already affirmed their Juriſdiction: If you will not anſwer, we will give Order to Record your Default.

"King. You never heard my Reaſons yet."

L. Preſident. Sir, Your Reaſons are not to be heard againſt the higheſt Juriſdiction.

"King. Shew me that Juriſdiction where Reaſon "is not to be heard."

L. Pre-

1648. 24 Car. I. L. Preſident. Sir, We ſhew it you here, the Commons of England: And the next time you are brought you will know more of the Pleaſure of the Court, and it may be their final Determination.

" King. Shew me where ever the Houſe of Commons " were a Court of Judicature of that kind."

L. Preſident. Serjeant, Take away the Priſoner.

" King. Well, Sir, Remember that the King is not " ſuffer'd to give in his Reaſons for the Liberty " and Freedom of all his Subjects."

L. Preſident. Sir, You are not to have Liberty to uſe this Language. How great a Friend you have been to the Laws and Liberties of the People, let all England and the World judge.

" King. Sir, Under favour, it was for the Liberty, " Freedom, and Laws of the Subject, that I ever " took to defend Myſelf with Arms: I never took " up Arms againſt the People, but for the Laws."

L. Preſident. The Command of the Court muſt be obey'd, no Anſwer will be given to the Charge.

" King. Well, Sir."

[And ſo he was guarded forth to Sir Robert Cotton's Houſe, and the Court adjourn'd till to Morrow.]

Third Day of Trial. Tueſday Jan. 23. Mr. Sollicitor Cook moved the Court, that the Charge againſt the Priſoner may be taken pro confeſſo, and ſpeedy Judgment pronounced againſt him. And the Lord Preſident requiring him to give a poſitive and final Anſwer in plain Engliſh; the King, after a little Pauſe, ſaid:

" King. When I was here Yeſterday, I did deſire " to ſpeak for the Liberties of the People of England; I was interrupted, and deſire to know yet, " whether I may ſpeak freely or no."

L. Preſident. —— Sir, I muſt let you know from the Court, as their Commands, that you are not permitted to iſſue out into any other Diſcourſes, till ſuch time as you have given a poſitive Anſwer concerning the Matter that is charg'd upon you.

" King. For the Charge I value it not of a Ruſh: " it is the Liberty of the People of England I ſtand " for. For me to acknowledge a new Court that " I never heard of before, I that am your King, that " ſhould be an example to all the People of England " to uphold Juſtice, to maintain the old Laws, in- " deed I do not know how to do it. You ſpoke " very well the firſt Day that I came here (on Saturday) of the Obligations that I had laid upon " me by God, to the Maintenance of the Liberties " of my People: The ſame Obligation you ſpake of " I do acknowledge to God that I owe to him and " to my People, to defend, as much as in me lies, " the ancient Laws of the Kingdom. Therefore " until that I may know that this is not againſt the " fundamental Laws of the Kingdom, by your fa- " vour, I can put in no particular Anſwer. If you " will give me time, I will ſhew you my Reaſons, " why I cannot do it. And thus"——

[Here being interrupted, he ſaid,]

" By your favour, you ought not to interrupt me; " how I came here I know not; there is no Law for " it to make your King your Priſoner. I was in a " Treaty upon the publick Faith of the Kingdom, " that was the known —— two Houſes of Parlia- " ment, that was the Repreſentative of the King- " dom. And when that I had almoſt made an end " of the Treaty, then I was hurried away and " brought hither: And therefore"——

L. Preſident. Sir, You muſt know the Pleaſure of the Court.

" King. By your favour, Sir."

L. Preſident. Nay, Sir, By your favour, you may not be permitted to fall into thoſe Diſcourſes. You appear as a Delinquent; you have not acknowledged the Authority of the Court, the Court craves it not of you, but once more they command you to give your poſitive Anſwer.—— Clerk, Do your Duty.

" King. Duty, Sir!

[The Clerk reads a Paper, requiring the King to give a poſitive and final Anſwer, by way of Confeſſion or Denial of the Charge.]

" King. Sir, I ſay again to you, ſo that I might " give Satisfaction to the People of England of the " clearneſs of my Proceedings, not by way of An- " ſwer, not in this way; but to ſatisfie them that I " have done nothing againſt that Truſt that hath " been committed to me, I would do it: but to ac- " knowlege a new Court againſt their Privilege, to " alter the fundamental Laws of the Kingdom, Sir, " you muſt excuſe me." 1648. 24 Car. I.

L. Preſident. Sir, This is the third time that you have publickly diſowned this Court, and put an Affront upon it. How far you have preſerved the Privileges of the People, your Actions have ſpoke it; and truly, Sir, Men's Intentions ought to be known by their Actions. You have written your meaning in bloody Characters throughout the whole Kingdom. But, Sir, You underſtand the Pleaſure of the Court. ——Clerk, Record the Default. —— And, Gentlemen, You that took Charge of the Priſoner take him back again.

" King. I will ſay this one Word more to you. " If it were my own Particular, I would not ſay any " more, nor interrupt you."——

L. Preſident. Sir, You have heard the Pleaſure of the Court, and you are (notwithſtanding you will not underſtand it) to find that you are before a Court of Juſtice.

[Then the King was guarded back to Sir Robert Cotton's Houſe, where he lay laſt Night and this, and the Court adjourned till the next Day.]

[Thurſday and Friday the Court ſate in private, to reſolve upon the Condemnation and Execution of the King.]

Saturday Jan. 27, the Court being ſate, the King was brought into Weſtminſter-Hall, ſome of the Soldiers calling for Juſtice, Juſtice and Execution. Silence being commanded, his Majeſty began. Laſt Day.

" King. I deſire to be heard a little, and I hope I " ſhall give no occaſion of Interruption."

Preſident.

1648. 24 Car. I.

Preſident. You may anſwer in your time, hear the Court firſt.

" King. If it pleaſe you, Sir, I deſire to be heard, " and I ſhall not give any occaſion of Interruption, " and 'tis only in a Word; a ſudden Judgment." — Preſident. Sir, You ſhall be heard in due time, but you are to hear the Court firſt.

" King. Sir, I deſire it, it will be in order to what " I believe the Court will ſay; and therefore, Sir, " ——a haſty Judgment is not ſo ſoon recalled." — Preſident. Sir, You ſhall be heard before the Judgment be given, and in the mean time you may forbear.

" King. Well, Sir, Shall I be heard before the " Judgment be given?"

[Then the Preſident gave account how the Priſoner had been charged, and how he refuſed to anſwer; and told him he ſhould not be heard in any thing againſt the Juriſdiction of the Court; but if he had any thing to ſay in Defence of himſelf, concerning the Matter charged they would hear him.]

" King. Since I ſee that you will not hear any thing " of Debate concerning that, which I confeſs I thought " moſt material for the Peace of the Kingdom, and " Liberty of the Subject, I ſhall wave it; I ſhall ſpeak " nothing to it. But only I muſt tell you, that this " many a Day all things have been taken away from " me, but that that I call dearer to me than my Life, " which is my Conſcience and my Honour. And " if I had a reſpect to my Life more than the Peace " of the Kingdom, and the Liberty of the Subject, " certainly I ſhould have made a particular Defence " for myſelf; for by that, at leaſtwiſe, I might have " delayed an ugly Sentence which I believe will paſs " upon me. Therefore, certainly Sir, as a Man " that hath ſome Underſtanding, ſome Knowledge " of the World, if that my true Zeal to my Country " had not overborn the Care that I have for my " own Preſervation, I ſhould have gone another way " to work than that I have done.

" Now, Sir, I conceive then an haſty Sentence " once paſſed may ſooner be repented of than re- " called: And truly the ſelf-ſame deſire that I have " for the Peace of the Kingdom, and the Liberty of " the Subject, more than my own particular Ends, " makes me now at laſt deſire, that I have ſome- " thing to ſay that concerns both, before Sentence " be given, that I may be heard in the Painted- " Chamber before the Lords and Commons. This " delay cannot be prejudicial to you, whatſoever I " ſay. If that I ſay be not Reaſon, thoſe that hear " me muſt be Judges; if it be Reaſon, and really " for the Welfare of the Kingdom, and the Liberty " of the Subject, I am ſure of it, it is very well worth " the hearing. Therefore I do conjure you, as you " love that that you pretend (I hope it is real) the " Liberty of the Subject, the Peace of the Kingdom, " that you will grant me this Hearing before any " Sentence be paſt. I only deſire this, that you will " take this into your Conſideration; it may be you " have not heard of it before-hand. If you will, I " will retire, and you may think of it. But if I " cannot get this liberty, I do proteſt, that theſe " fair ſhews of Liberty and Peace are pure ſhews, " and that you will not hear your King."

[The Preſident made this to be a farther declining the Juriſdiction of the Court; but for a pretence, the Court withdrew for half an Hour into the Court of Wards, and then returning, and calling for the Priſoner, the Preſident ſaid,]

Sir, You were pleaſed to make a Motion here to the Court, to offer a Deſire of yours, touching the propounding of ſomewhat to the Lords and Commons in the Painted-Chamber for the Peace of the Kingdom. Sir, You did in effect receive an Anſwer before the Court adjourned. Truly, Sir, their withdrawing and adjournment was pro forma tantum, for it did not ſeem to them that there was any difficulty in the thing. —— And notwithſtanding what you have offer'd, they are reſolved to proceed to Sentence and to Judgment, and that is their unanimous Conſent.

" King. Sir, I know it is in vain for me to Diſ- " pute; I am no Sceptick for to deny the Power that " you have, I know that you have Power enough. " Sir, I muſt confeſs, I think it would have been " for the Kingdom's Peace, if you would have ta- " ken the Pains to have ſhewn the lawfulneſs of " your Power. For this Delay that I have deſired, " I confeſs it is a Delay, but it is a delay very im- " portant for the Peace of the Kingdom: For it is " not my Perſon that I look at alone, it is the King- " dom's Welfare, and the Kingdom's Peace. 1648. 24 Car. I.

" It is an old Sentence, that We ſhould think long " before we reſolve on great Matters ſuddenly. Therefore, " Sir, I do ſay again, that I do put at your Doors " all the Inconveniency of a haſty Sentence.—— " A little delay of a Day or two farther may give " Peace; whereas a haſty Judgment may bring on " that Trouble and perpetual Inconveniency to the " Kingdom, that the Child that is unborn may re- " pent it. And therefore again, out of the Duty I " owe to God and to my Country, I do deſire that " I may be heard by the Lords and Commons in the " Painted-Chamber, or any other Chamber that you " will appoint me."

Preſident. You have been already anſwer'd to what you even now moved, being the ſame you moved before, ſince the Reſolution and the Judgment of the Court in it. And the Court now requires to know, Whether you have any more to ſay for your ſelf than you have ſaid, before they proceed to Sentence?

" King. I ſay this, Sir, that if you hear me, if " you will give me but this delay, I doubt not but " I ſhall give ſome Satisfaction to you all here, and " to my People after that. And therefore I do re- " quire you, as you will anſwer it at the dreadful " Day of Judgment, that you will conſider it once " again."

Preſident. Sir, I have received Directions from the Court.

" King. Well, Sir!"

Preſident. If this muſt be re-inforced, or any thing of this Nature, your Anſwer muſt be the ſame, and they will proceed to Sentence, if you have nothing more to ſay.

" King. I have nothing more to ſay, but I ſhall " deſire that this may be enter'd what I have ſaid."

Preſident. The Court then, Sir, hath ſomething to ſay unto you, which I know will be very unacceptable, yet notwithſtanding they are willing and reſolved to diſcharge their Duty.

" King. I will deſire only one Word before you " give Sentence, and that is, that you would hear " me concerning thoſe great Imputations that you " have laid to my Charge."

Preſident. Sir, You muſt give me now leave to go on: For I am not far from your Sentence, and your time is now paſt.

" King. But I ſhall deſire you will hear me a few " Words to you; for truly whatever Sentence you " will put upon me, in reſpect of thoſe heavy Im- " putations that I ſee by your Speech you have put " upon me. Sir, It is very true that."——

[Then the Preſident interrupted him, and told him, he had not owned them as a Court, and therefore they would admit of no farther delay; concluding,]

Preſident. We are not here Jus dare, but Jus dicere, to do that which the Law preſcribes; we cannot be unmindful of what the Scripture tells us; For to acquit the Guilty is of equal Abomination as to condemn the Innocent: We may not acquit the Guilty. What Sentence the Law affirms to a Traitor, Murderer, and a publick Enemy to the Country, that Sentence you are now to hear read unto you.

[The Clerk read the Sentence, concluding,]

Clerk. For all which Treaſons and Crimes, this Court doth adjudge, that he the ſaid Charles Stuart as a Tyrant, Traitor, Murderer, and a publick Enemy, ſhall be put to Death, by the ſevering of his Head from his Body.

After Sentence, his Majeſty ſaid, Will you hear me a Word, Sir?

Preſident. Sir, You are not to be heard after the Sentence.

" King. No Sir!"

Preſident. No Sir; by your Favour, Sir. Guard, Withdraw your Priſoner.

" King. I may ſpeak after Sentence, by your Fa-" vour, Sir. I may ſpeak after Sentence ever. By " your Favour hold——the Sentence Sir.——I ſay " Sir, I do——I am not ſuffer'd to ſpeak, expect " what Juſtice other People will have."

His Majeſty being taken away by the Guard, as he paſſed down the Stairs the Soldiers ſcoffed at him, blowing the Smoak of their Tobacco in his Face, and throwing their Pipes in his way; and even one ſpit in his Face, his Majeſty taking no more notice of that barbarous Indignity, than to wipe it off with his Handkerchief. As he paſſed along, hearing the Rabble of Soldiers crying out, Juſtice, Juſtice; he ſaid, Poor Souls! for a piece of Money they would do ſo for their Commanders.

In the Evening, a Member of the Army acquainted the Committee with his Majeſty's Deſire, That ſeeing they had paſs'd a Sentence of Death upon him, and his time might be nigh, he might ſee his Children: and Dr. Juxon Biſhop of London might be admitted to aſſiſt him in his private Devotions, and receiving the Sacrament. Both which at length were granted.

The King prepares for Death. Sunday Jan. 28, the King was attended by a Guard from Whitehall to St. James's; where the Biſhop of London, after Prayers, Preach'd before him on theſe Words, Rom. 2. 16. In the Day when God ſhall judge the ſecrets of all men by Jeſus Chriſt according to my Goſpel. Upon which he explain'd the Doctrine of a future Judgment, and made an Application ſuited to the ſad Occaſion, and after that adminiſter'd the Sacrament. The King ſpent the Remainder of the Day in Prayer and Meditation, and pious Conference with the good Biſhop, avoiding all Interruption, and for that reaſon refuſing to admit the Prince Elector, the Duke of Richmond, Marqueſs of Hertford, Earls of Southampton and Lindſey, and ſome others, who came to offer their laſt Duties to him; but, ſaid the King, My Time is ſhort and precious, and I am deſirous to improve it the beſt I may in Preparation: I hope they will not take it ill that none have Acceſs to me but my Children: The beſt Office they can do now, is to pray for me.

1648. 24 Car. I.

King takes Leave of his Children. Monday Jan. 29. the King's Children being brought to take their Leave of him, he firſt gave his Bleſſing to the Lady Elizabeth, and bid her remember to tell her Brother James, whenever ſhe ſhould ſee him, that it was his Father's laſt Deſire, that he ſhould no more look upon Charles as his eldeſt Brother only, but be obedient unto him as his Sovereign; and that they ſhould love one another, and forgive their Father's Enemies. Then ſaid the King to her, Sweet heart, you will forget this. No, ſaid ſhe, I ſhall never forget it whilſt I live. He wiſh'd her not to grieve and torment herſelf for him; for it would be a glorious Death that he ſhould die, it being for the Laws and Liberties of this Land, and for maintaining the true Proteſtant Religion. He bid her read Biſhop Andrews's Sermons, Hooker's Eccleſiaſtical Policy, and Biſhop Laud's Book againſt Fiſher, which would ground her againſt Popery. He told her, He had forgiven all his Enemies, and hoped God would forgive them. He bid her tell her Mother, that his Thoughts had never ſtrayed from her, and that his Love ſhould be the ſame to the laſt.

Then taking the Duke of Glouceſter on his Knees, he ſaid, Sweet heart, now they will cut off thy Father's Head, (upon which Words the Child look'd very ſtedfaſtly upon him) Mark Child what I ſay; They will cut off my Head, and perhaps make thee a King: but mark what I ſay, You muſt not be a King ſo long as your Brothers Charles and James do live; for they will cut off your Brothers Heads (when they can catch them) and cut off thy Head too at laſt; and therefore I charge you do not be made a King by them. At which the Child ſighing, ſaid, I will be torn in pieces firſt: which falling ſo unexpectedly from one ſo young, it made the King rejoyce exceedingly. At parting, the King commanded them both to be obedient to their Mother, and bid the Lady Elizabeth ſend his Bleſſing to the reſt of her Brothers and Siſters, with Commendation to all his Friends.

The Prince, then in Holland, had convey'd a Letter to his Majeſty by Mr. Seamour, and by the States Ambaſſadours had interceded with the Parliament, and uſed all poſſible Means with the Army, to prevent, or at leaſt to defer, the Execution. But all in vain; for a Warrant was this Day ſign'd and ſeal'd by 59 of thoſe execrable Judges, directed to Colonel Francis Hacker, Colonel Huncks, and Lieutenant-Colonel Phray, and to every of them, Willing and requiring them to ſee the ſaid Sentence executed in the open Street before Whitehall, upon the Morrow, being the 30th Day of this inſtant Month of January, between the Hours of Ten in the Morning and Five in the Afternoon of the ſame Day, with full effect. Which original Warrant has been lately diſcovered, and now remains a Record of Infamy to this Nation. A Warrant for Execution.

Tueſday Jan. 30, the King having ſlept ſoundly for about four Hours, awak'd near two Hours before Day; and calling to Mr. Herbert, who lay by his Bed-ſide, bid him riſe; For (ſays the King) I will get up, having a great Work to do this Day. Herbert, This is my ſecond Marriage-Day: I would be as trim to Day as may be, for before Night I hope to be eſpouſed to my bleſſed Jeſus. He then appointed what Cloaths he would wear; and, ſays he, Let me have a Shirt on more than ordinary, by reaſon the Seaſon is ſo ſharp as Day of Execution.

1648. 24 Car. I.

as probably may make me ſhake: which ſome Obſervers will imagine proceeds from Fear: I would have no ſuch Imputation; I fear not Death; Death is not terrible to me: I bleſs my God, I am prepared. Soon after the King was dreſs'd, came Dr. Juxon Biſhop of London, preciſely at the time his Majeſty had the Night before appointed; and being firſt an Hour in private with him, call'd in Mr. Herbert, and pray'd in the Prayers of the Church, reading the 27th Chapter of St. Matthew, which relates the Paſſion of our Saviour. After Service, the King thank'd the Biſhop for making choice of that Chapter, being ſo applicable to his preſent Condition: The Biſhop reply'd, May it pleaſe your gracious Majeſty, it is the proper Leſſon for the Day, as appears by the Calender. At which the King was much affected, and thought it a providential Preparation for his Death.

About Ten a-Clock Colonel Hacker knock'd eaſily at the King's Chamber-door; and knocking louder a ſecond time, the King commanded Mr. Herbert to go to the Door, who demanding why he knock'd? Hacker ſaid, He would ſpeak with the King: The King ſaid, Let him come in. He came in trembling, and told his Majeſty, It was time to go to White-Hall, where he might have ſome farther time to reſt. Well (ſays the King) Go forth, I will come preſently. Soon after, the King took the Biſhop by the hand, and ſaid, Come, let us go; and ſpoke thus to Mr. Herbert, Open the Door, Hacker has given us a ſecond Warning. The King paſs'd through the Garden into the Park, where ſeveral Companies of Foot were drawn up, and made a Guard on each ſide, the Biſhop walking on the King's Right-hand, and Colonel Thomlinſon on his Left, both bare-headed: the King walk'd very faſt, and calling on them to walk faſter, ſaid, He now went before them to ſtrive for a heavenly Crown, with leſs ſolicitude than he had often encouraged his Soldiers to fight for an earthly Diadem. At the end of the Park the King went up the Stairs leading to the Long-Gallery, and ſo into the Cabinet-Chamber, where, after ſeveral Prayers and pious Diſcourſe, about Twelve he eat a bit of Bread, and drunk a Glaſs of Claret. Soon after Colonel Hacker came to the Chamber-door, and gave his laſt Signal. The Biſhop and Mr. Herbert weeping fell upon their Knees, and the King gave them his Hand to kiſs, and help'd up the aged Biſhop, and ſaid, Open the Door; and bidding Hacker go on, ſaid, I'll follow. So he was conducted through the Banquetting-houſe to the Scaffold by a Paſſage made through a Window. Many Companies of Foot and Troops of Horſe were placed to keep off the Spectators, whereby his Majeſty was diſappointed of ſpeaking to the People: and therefore directing himſelf chiefly to Colonel Thomlinſon, he ſaid, King's laſt Speech.

"I Shall be very little heard of any body here, I "ſhall therefore ſpeak a Word unto you here. "Indeed I could hold my Peace very well, if I did "not think, that holding my Peace would make "ſome Men think, that I did ſubmit to the Guilt as "well as to the Puniſhment. But I think it is my "Duty to God firſt, and to my Country, for to "clear my ſelf, both as an honeſt Man, a good "King, and a good Chriſtian.

"I ſhall begin firſt with my Innocence. In troth, "I think it not very needful for me to inſiſt long "upon this; for, all the World knows, that I ne-"ver did begin a War firſt with the two Houſes of "Parliament: And I call God to witneſs, to whom "I muſt ſhortly make an Account, that I never did "intend for to encroach upon their Privileges: they "began upon me. It is the Militia they began up-"on: They confeſs'd that the Militia was mine, "but they thought it fit for to have it from me. "And, to be ſhort, if any body will look to the "Dates of Commiſſions, of their Commiſſions and "mine, and likewiſe to the Declarations, they will "ſee clearly, that they began theſe unhappy Trou-"bles, not I. So that as to the Guilt of theſe "enormous Crimes that are laid againſt me, I hope "in God that God will clear me of it. I will not, "I'm in Charity, God forbid that I ſhould lay it "on the two Houſes of Parliament; there is no "Neceſſity of either: I hope they are free of this "Guilt; for I do believe that ill Inſtruments be-"tween them and me have been the chief Cauſe of "all this Bloodſhed: ſo that by way of ſpeaking, "as I find my ſelf clear of this, I hope and pray "God that they may too. Yet for all this, God "forbid that I ſhould be ſo ill a Chriſtian, as not "to ſay, that God's Judgments are juſt upon me: "Many times he does pay Juſtice by an unjuſt "Sentence; that is ordinary. I only ſay this, that "an unjuſt Sentence that I ſuffer'd to take effect, is "puniſh'd now by an unjuſt Sentence upon me. "That is———So far I have ſaid to ſhew you "that I am an innocent Man.

1648. 24 Car. I.

Meaning the Earl of Straſford.

"Now to ſhew you that I am a good Chriſtian, "I hope there is a good Man that will bear me "witneſs, that I have forgiven all the World; and "even thoſe in particular that have been the chief "Cauſes of my Death. Who they are, God knows; "I do not deſire to know: I pray God forgive "them. But this is not all; my Charity muſt go "farther: I wiſh that they may repent; for in-"deed they have committed a great Sin in that "Particular. I pray God, with St. Stephen, that "this be not laid to their Charge; nay, not only "ſo, but that they may take the right way to the "Peace of the Kingdom: For, my Charity com-"mands me not only to forgive particular Men, "but my Charity commands me to endeavour to "the laſt Gaſp the Peace of the Kingdom. So, Sirs, "I do wiſh with all my Soul (and I do hope there "is ſome here will carry it farther) that they may "endeavour the Peace of the Kingdom.

Pointing to Biſhop Juxon.

Turning to ſome Gentlemen who wrote.

"Now, Sirs, I muſt ſhew you both how you are "out of the Way, and will put you in a Way.

"Firſt, You are out of the Way: For certainly "all the Way you have ever had yet, as I could "find by any thing, is in the Way of Conqueſt. Cer-"tainly this is an ill way; for Conqueſt, Sirs, in "my Opinion is never juſt, except there be a good "juſt Cauſe, either for Matter of wrong or juſt Ti-"tle; and then if you go beyond it, the firſt Quar-"rel you have to it, that makes it unjuſt at the "end, that was juſt at the firſt. But if it be only "Matter of Conqueſt, then it is a great Robbery; "as a Pirate ſaid to Alexander the Great, that he was "the great Robber, himſelf was but a petty Robber. "And ſo, Sirs, I do think the way that you are "in is much out of the way.

"Now, Sirs, for to put you in the way, believe "it, you will never do right, nor will God ever "proſper you, until you give God his due, the King "his due, (that is, my Succeſſors) and the Peo-"ple their due: I am as much for them as any of "you.

"You muſt give God his due by regulating right-"ly his Church (according to his Scripture) which "is now out of order. For to ſet you in a way "particularly, now I cannot, but only this, a Nati-"onal Synod freely called, freely debating amongſt "themſelves muſt ſettle this, when that every Opi-"nion is freely and clearly heard.

"For the King, indeed I will not" [then turning to a Gentleman who touch'd the Axe, he ſaid, Hurt not the Axe, that may hurt me.] "For the "King, the Laws of the Land will clearly inſtruct "you for that. Therefore becauſe it concerns my "own particular, I only give you a touch of it. "For the People: and truly I deſire their Liberty "and Freedom as much as any body whomſoever; "but I muſt tell you, that their Liberty and Free-"dom conſiſts in having of Government, thoſe Laws "by which their Life and their Goods may be moſt "their own. It is not for having a ſhare in Govern-"ment, Sirs, that is nothing pertaining to them; "a Subject and a Sovereign are clear different things.

"And

1648. 24 Car. I.

"And therefore until they do that, I mean, that you "do put the People in that Liberty as I ſay, certain-"ly they will never enjoy themſelves. Sirs, it was "for this that now I am come here: If I would have "given way to an arbitrary way, for to have all "Laws changed according to the Power of the Sword, "I needed not to have come here: And therefore I "tell you (and I pray God it be not laid to your "Charge) that I am the Martyr of the People.

"In troth, Sirs, I ſhall not hold you much lon-"ger, for I will only ſay this to you, that in truth "I could have deſired ſome little time longer, be-"cauſe that I would put this that I have ſaid in "little more Order, and a little better digeſted than "I have done, and therefore I hope you will excuſe "me. I have delivered my Conſcience, I pray God "that you do take thoſe Courſes that are beſt for the "good of the Kingdom and your own Salvation.

[Then the Biſhop ſaid, Tho' it be very well known what your Majeſty's Affections are to the Proteſtant Religion, yet it may be expected, that you ſhould ſay ſomewhat for the World's Satiſfaction in that particular.]

Whereupon the King reply'd, "I thank you hear-"tily, my Lord, for that, I had almoſt forgotten "it. In troth, Sirs, my Conſcience in Religion, "I think is very well known to all the World; and "therefore I do declare before you all, that I die "a Chriſtian, according to the Profeſſion of the "Church of England, as I found it left me by my "Father; and this honeſt Man, I think, will wit-"neſs it." Pointing to the Biſhop.

Then turning to the Officers, he ſaid, Sirs, excuſe me for this ſame, I have a good Cauſe, and I have a gracious God, I will ſay no more. Then to Colonel Hacker, he ſaid, Take care that they do not put me to Pain, and, Sir, this and pleaſe you—— But here a Gentleman coming near the Axe, he ſaid, Take heed of the Axe, pray take heed of the Axe. Then he ſpoke to the Executioner, I ſhall ſay but very ſhort Prayers, and when I thruſt out my Hands—— Then he called to the Biſhop for his Cap, and having put it on, he ask'd the Executioner, Does my Hair trouble you? Who deſired him to put it all under his Cap; and as he was doing this, by the help of the Biſhop and (a) Executioner, he ſaid, turning to the Biſhop, I have a good Cauſe and a gracious God on my Side. The Biſhop ſaid, "There is but one Stage more, which tho' turbulent "and troubleſome, yet it is a very ſhort one; you "may conſider, it will ſoon carry you a very great "way: It will carry you from Earth to Heaven, "and there you ſhall find to your great Joy the "Prize you haſten to, a Crown of Glory." The King adjoined, I go from a corruptible to an incorruptible Crown, where no diſturbance can be, no diſturbance in the World. The Biſhop added, "You are exchanged from "a temporal to an eternal Crown, a good Exchange." 1648. 24 Car. I.

Then the King ask'd the Executioner, Is my Hair well? And taking off his Cloak and George, he delivered his George to the Biſhop, ſaying, Remember. Then putting off his Doublet, and being in his Waſtcoat, he put on his Cloak again, and looking upon the Block, ſaid to the Executioner, You muſt ſet it faſt. The Executioner ſaying, it was faſt; the King ſaid, It might have been a little higher. Being told by him it could be now no higher, the King ſaid, When I put out my Hands this way, then. —— And ſaying a few Words to himſelf as he ſtood, with Hands and Eyes lift up, immediately ſtooping down, he laid his Neck upon the Block, and the Executioner again putting his Hair under his Cap, his Majeſty thinking he had been going to ſtrike, bad him ſtay for the Sign; to which the Executioner ſaid, "Yes I will "and it pleaſe your Majeſty." So after a ſhort pauſe, his Majeſty ſtretching forth his Hands, the Executioner (who was all the while in a Mask) at one Blow ſevered his Head from his Body, which being held up and ſhewed to the aſtoniſh'd People, was with his Body put into a Coffin covered with black Velvet, and carried into his Lodging-Chamber in Whitehall. (b)

It muſt be dreadfully remember'd, that the then cruel Powers did ſuſpect, that the King would not ſubmit his Head to the Block; and therefore to bring him down by violence to it, they had prepared Hooks and Staples (made by a Smith in Aldgate) to hawl him as a Victim to the Slaughter. But by the Example of his Saviour, he reſiſted not, he diſappointed their Wit, and yielded to their Malice.

Apology for General Fairfax.

There be grounds for the Charity of thinking, that General Fairfax was not conſenting to the King's Murder, but was amuſed by Cromwell to the very Day of Execution, and even then drawn by him into ſeeking God by Prayer, till the Blow was over. Sir Thomas Herbert aſſures us, That while the Biſhop and he were going with the King's Body to be embalm'd, he ſtep'd into the Long-Gallery, and the General there meeting him, ask'd him, How the King did? Which he at firſt thought ſtrange; but he afterward perceived, that the General knew not what had paſſed, being all that Morning uſing his Power and Intereſt to have the Execution deferred for ſome Days, forbearing to come among the Officers, and fully reſolving with his own Regiment to prevent the Blow, or to defer it till he could make a Party in the Army to ſecond his Deſign: but being with the Officers of the Army then at Prayer in Colonel Harriſon's Apartment, he came from thence without knowledge of the matter, and was much ſurprized when Mr. Herbert told him of it.

Application was made to the Men in Power, for leave to bury the Royal Corps in King Henry VII.'s

(a) It was never yet prov'd or diſcover'd, who was the bold Executioner of the King; that which moſt led to the Knowledge of him, was a Story I heard related by Archbiſhop Teniſon, who when Vicar of St. Martins, had a young Woman came to him to viſit her dying Father, in a Yard or Lane in King's-ſtreet Weſtminſter, and importuning him much to go with her; She ſaid, that her Father lay under the Horrour of having cut off the King's Head. When he came, the Perſon was dead, and no Confeſſion was left in writing, nor any other Account to be got, but that the Perſon had been a ſort of Butcher, or Cattle Drover at St. Ives in Huntingdonſhire, was ſent for up by Oliver Cromwell about the end of 1648, had ever ſince lived obſcurely by a feigned Name, and received a Yearly Penſion, which died with him. The Archbiſhop ſent me to enquire at the Griffin or Green-Dragon Tavern in Fleet-ſtreet, about the ſaid ſurviving Daughter, but the People of the Houſe being changed, I could learn nothing.

(b) The Philiſtines, the Jeſuits triumph at this Spectacle. Father Sarabras, the Queen's Confeſſor, is reported to have been preſent at the King's Death, and there on Horſeback, toſſing up his Cap in the Air, and brandiſhing his Sword: And when he was asked what he did there, he anſwered, that there were twenty more Prieſts there beſide himſelf, and that the greateſt Enemy to their Religion fell that Day.

This Paſſage of the Prieſt flouriſhing with his Sword when the King's Head was cut off, was printed thrice (ſays Dr. Pet. du Moulin) before I ventured upon it, twice by Mr. Prynne, and once by Mr. Foulis. And upon Mr. Prynne's Credit, I alledged it. To him I did write (tho' a Stranger to me) upon the Noiſe made about it; and he confirmed it to me by his Letters, which I keep.——Another Paſſage is true. An underſtanding Gentleman viſiting the Friers at Dunkirk, who are Flemiſh or French, put them upon the Diſcourſe of the King's Death, and to pump out their Senſe of it, ſaid, that the Jeſuits had laboured very much to compaſs that great Work. To which they anſwered, that the Jeſuits would engroſs to themſelves the Glory of all great and good Deeds; whereas they had laboured as diligently and effectually to advance it as they.

So there was ſtriving among the Papiſts for the Glory of that Atchievement; and the Friers ſhewed themſelves as much Jeſuited as the Jeſuits. Du Moulin of Papal Tyranny. 4*to*. p. 51.

The Brother of the laſt Writer Dr. Lewis Du Moulin, was himſelf an Independent, and would therefore vindicate his own Party from the Guilt and Odium of the King's Murder, in theſe Words; As for the Odium that is caſt upon the Congregational Way, and thoſe who are called Independents, as being the more immediate Authors and Abettors of the King's Murder, and of taking away Monarchy, it can be eaſily wiped off, and made out, that Oliver Cromwell's Army, like that of King David's in the Wilderneſs, was a Medley or a Collection of all Parties that were diſcontented, as ſome Courtiers, ſome Epiſcoparians, few of any Sect, but moſt of none, or elſe of the Religion of Thomas Hobbes, and Dr. Scarborough, not mentioning the Papiſts, who had the greateſt Hand in the Death of King Charles the Firſt.

1648. 24 Car. I. Chappel; but the Requeſt was denied upon this Reaſon, that it might attract great Numbers of People to that Place, which might be inconvenient and unſafe. And therefore upon a ſecond Addreſs to the Committee of Parliament, an Order was given dated Feb 6, to authorize Mr. Herbert and Mr. Mildmay to bury the King's Body in the Royal Chapel of St. George within the Caſtle of Windſor. Hence the Body being embalmed and laid in a Coffin of Lead, to be ſeen for ſome Days by the People, was on Feb. 7, carried from St. James's in a Hearſe covered with black Velvet, and drawn by ſix Horſes, with four Coaches following, and ſo brought to Windſor Caſtle, where the Order for Interment was ſhewn to the Governor Colonel Whichcot. Next Day came the Duke of Richmond, the Marqueſs of Hartford, the Earls of Southampton and Lindſey, and the Biſhop of London, with two Votes paſſed that Morning, whereby the ordering of the King's Burial was committed to the Duke, provided the Expences thereof exceeded not 500 Pounds. Theſe Lords agreed, that the King's Body ſhould be interr'd in a Vault about the middle of the Choir, over againſt the eleventh Stall upon the Sovereign's Side, in which Vault were laid the Bodies of King Henry VIII. and Queen Jane Seymour. This Vault being opened, the King's Body was brought from his Bed-Chamber into St. George's-Hall, and thence with a ſlow and ſolemn Pace carried by Gentlemen, the Lords following, and ſet down in the Choir near the place of Burial, where the Biſhop of London ſtood ready with the Service-Book in his Hands to have performed that laſt Duty by the publick Form of Burial; but the rude Colonel would not ſuffer it to be done; and tho' the Lords earneſtly deſired it, and inſiſted on the Parliaments leave for it, yet ſtill he denied, and ſaid, it was improbable the Parliament would permit the uſe of what they had ſo ſolemnly aboliſhed, and therein deſtroy their own Act. So the Body was ſilently depoſited with this Circumſcription in capital Letters upon Lead.

It has been made a Queſtion and a Wonder by ſome Perſons, why a Monument was not erected for him after the Reſtauration of his Son, when the Commons were well inclined to have given a Sum of Money for that grateful Purpoſe. We are afraid, the true Reaſon was, that the Royal Body could not be found; thoſe who murther'd it had diſturbed it in the very Grave, and had carried it away to ſome other Place, and God alone knows whether they gave it any ſecond Interment. The Lord Clarendon ſpeaks ſoftly of this Matter, when he ſays, "Upon "the Return of King Charles II, with ſo much Con- "gratulation and univerſal Joy of the People, a- "bove ten Years after the Murther of his Father, "it was generally expected that the Body ſhould be "removed from that obſcure Burial, and with ſuch "Ceremony as ſhould be thought fit, ſhould be ſo- "lemnly depoſited with his Royal Anceſtors in King "Henry VII.'s Chappel in the Collegiate Church of "Weſtminſter. And the King himſelf intended no- "thing more, and ſpoke often of it, as if it were "only deferred till ſome Circumſtances and Ceremo- "nies in the doing it might be adjuſted. But, by "degrees, the diſcourſe of it was diminiſhed, as if "it were totally laid aſide upon ſome Reaſons of "State, the ground whereof ſeveral Men gueſſed at "according to their Fancies; and thereupon caſt "thoſe Reproaches upon the States-men as they "thought reaſonable, when the Reaſons which were "ſuggeſted by their own Imaginations, did not ſa- "tisfie their Underſtanding. For the ſatisfaction "and information of all Men, I chuſe in this place "to explain that Matter, which, it may be, is not "known to many, and at that time was not, for "many Reaſons thought fit to be publiſhed.

"The Duke of Richmond was dead before the "King returned; the Marqueſs of Hertford died in a "ſhort time after, and was ſeldom out of his Lodg- "ing after his Majeſty came to Whitehall; the Earl "of Southampton and the Earl of Lindſey went to "Windſor, and took with them ſuch of their own "Servants as had attended them in that Service, "and as many others as they remember'd had been "then preſent, and were ſtill alive; who all amount- "ed to a ſmall number, there being at the time of "the interment great ſtrictneſs uſed in admitting "any to be preſent, whoſe Names were not inclu- "ded in the Order which the Lords had brought. "In a Word, the confuſion they had at that time "obſerved to be in that Church, and the ſmall Alte- "rations which were begun to be made towards de- "cency, ſo totally perplexed their Memories that "they could not ſatisfie themſelves in what place or "part of the Church the Royal Body was interred; "yet where any concurred upon this or that place, "they cauſed the Ground to be opened at a good "diſtance, and upon ſuch Enquiries found no cauſe "to believe that they were near the place; and up- "on their giving this Account to the King, the "Thought of that Remove was laid aſide, and the "Reaſon communicated to very few, for the better "diſcountenancing farther Enquiry."

His Character is thus drawn by the maſterly Hand of the Lord Clarendon. "It will not be un- "neceſſary to add a ſhort Character of his Perſon, "that Poſterity may know the ineſtimable Loſs "which the Nation then underwent, in being depri- "ved of a Prince whoſe Example would have had a "greater influence upon the Manners and Piety of "the Nation than the moſt ſtrict Laws can have. "To ſpeak firſt of his private Qualifications as a "Man, before the mention of his Princely and "Royal Virtues; he was, if ever any, the moſt "worthy of the Title of an honeſt Man; ſo great "a Lover of Juſtice, that no Temptation could diſ- "poſe him to a wrongful Action, except it was ſo "diſguiſed to him that he believed it to be juſt. He "had a tenderneſs and compaſſion of Nature, which "reſtrained him from ever doing a hard-hearted "Thing; and therefore he was ſo apt to grant Par- "don to Malefactors, that the Judges of the Land "repreſented to him the Damage and Inſecurity to "the Publick that flowed from ſuch his Indulgence. "And then he reſtrained himſelf from pardoning ei- "ther Murders or High-way Robberies, and quick- "ly diſcerned the Fruits of his Severity by a won- "derful Reformation of thoſe Enormities. He was "very punctual and regular in his Devotions; "he was never known to enter upon his Recreati- "ons or Sports, though never ſo early in the Mor- "ning before he had been at publick Prayers; ſo "that on hunting Days his Chaplains were bound "to a very early Attendance. He was likewiſe ve- "ry ſtrict in obſerving the Hours of his private Ca- "binet Devotions; and was ſo ſevere an exacter of "Gravity and Reverence in all mention of Religion, "that he could never endure any light or prophane "Word, with what ſharpneſs of Wit ſoever it was "cover'd: And though he was well pleaſed and de- "lighted with reading Verſes made upon any occaſi- "on, no Man durſt bring before him any thing that "was prophane or unclean; that kind of Wit had "never any countenance then. He was ſo great an "Example of Conjugal Affection, that they who did "not imitate him in that particular durſt not brag of "their Liberty: And he did not only permit, but "directed his Biſhops, to proſecute thoſe ſcandalous "Vices in the Eccleſiaſtical Courts, againſt Perſons "of Eminence and near Relation to his Service.

Character of King Charles.

"His Kingly Vertues had ſome mixture and allay "that hinder'd them from ſhining in full Luſtre, and "from producing thoſe Fruits they ſhould have been "attended with. He was not in his Nature very "bountiful, though he gave very much. This ap- "peared more after the Duke of Buckingham's Death, "after which thoſe Showers fell very rarely; and he 1648. 24 Car. I. "paused too long in giving, which made thoſe to "whom he gave leſs ſenſible of the Benefit. He kept "State to the full, which made his Court very orderly; no Man preſuming to be ſeen in a Place "where he had no pretence to be. He ſaw, and obſerved Men long before he received them about "his Perſon; and did not love Strangers nor very "confident Men. He was a patient hearer of Cauſes "which he frequently accuſtomed himſelf to at the "Council-Board, and judged very well, and was "dexterous in the mediating part; ſo that he often put an end to Cauſes by Perſwaſion which "the ſtubborneſs of Men's Humours made dilatory "in Courts of Juſtice.

"paused

"He was very fearleſs in his Perſon, but, in his "riper Years not very enterprizing. He had an excellent Underſtanding, but was not confident "enough of it, which made him often times change "his own Opinion for a worſe, and follow the Advice of Men that did not judge ſo well as himſelf. "This made him more irreſolute than the conjuncture of his Affairs would admit: If he had been "of a rougher and more imperious Nature, he would "have found more Reſpect and Duty. And his not "applying ſome ſevere Cures to approaching Evils "proceeded from the Lenity of his Nature, and the "Tenderneſs of his Conſcience, which in all caſes of "Blood made him chuſe the ſofter way, and not "hearken to ſevere Counſels how reaſonably ſoever "urged. This only reſtrained him from purſuing his "Advantage in the firſt Scotiſh Expedition, when "humanly ſpeaking, he might have reduced that "Nation to the moſt entire Obedience that could "have been wiſhed. But no Man can ſay he had then "many who adviſed him to it, but the contrary, by "a wonderful indiſpoſition all his Council had to "the War, or any other Fatigue. He was always a "great Lover of the Scotiſh Nation, having not only "been born there but educated by that People, and "beſieged by them always, having few Engliſh about "him till he was King, and the major number of his "Servants being ſtill of that Nation, who he thought "could never fail him: And among theſe no Man "had ſuch an aſcendant over him by the humbleſt "Inſinuations as Duke Hamilton had.

"As he excelled in all other Virtues, ſo in Temperance he was ſo ſtrict, that he abhorr'd all Debauchery to that Degree, that, at a great Feſtival "Solemnity, where he once was when very many "of the Nobility of the Engliſh and Scots were entertained, being told by one who withdrew from "thence, what vaſt draughts of Wine they drank, "and That there was one Earl who had drunk moſt of the reſt down, and was not himſelf moved or altered, the "King ſaid, That he deſerved to be hanged; and that "Earl coming ſhortly after into the Room where his "Majeſty was, in ſome gaiety, to ſhew how unhurt "he was from that Battle, the King ſent one to bid "him withdraw from his Majeſty's Preſence; nor did "he in ſome Days after appear before him.

"So many miraculous Circumſtances contributed "to his Ruin, that Men might well think that Heaven and Earth conſpir'd it. Though he was from "the firſt declenſion of his Power ſo much betray'd "by his own Servants, that there were very few "who remained faithful to him; yet that Treachery "proceeded not always from any treaſonable purpoſe to do him any harm, but from particular and "perſonal Animoſities againſt other Men. And, "afterwards the Terror all Men were under of the "Parliament, and the Guilt they were conſcious of "themſelves, made them watch all opportunities to "make themſelves gracious to thoſe who could do "them good; and ſo they became Spies upon their "Maſter, and from one piece of Knavery were harden'd and confirm'd to undertake another, till at laſt "they had no hope of Preſervation, but by the Deſtruction of their Maſter. And after all this, when a 1648. 24 Car. I. "Man might reaſonably believe that leſs than a univerſal Defection of three Nations could not have reduced a great King to ſo ugly a Fate; it is moſt certain, that, in that very hour when he was thus "wickedly murthered in the Sight of the Sun, he "had as great a Share in the Hearts and Affections "of his Subjects in general, was as much beloved, eſteemed, and long'd for by the People in "general of the three Nations, as any of his Predeceſſors had ever been. To conclude, He was "the worthieſt Gentleman, the beſt Maſter, the "beſt Friend, the beſt Husband, the beſt Father, and the beſt Chriſtian, that the Age in "which he lived produced. And if he were not "the greateſt King, if he were without ſome Parts "and Qualities which have made ſome Kings "great and happy, no other Prince was ever unhappy who was poſſeſſed of half his Vertues and "Endowments, and ſo much without any kind of "Vice."

It ſeems a Scandal to think of the Name of Religion in this Land within the Year wherein a moſt lawful, moſt religious, moſt condeſcending King was murder'd in ſtate by his own Subjects before his own Palace. But to keep on the Method of ſeparating Eccleſiaſtical Affairs from Civil, we muſt give ſome ſhort Account of them; which Account will hardly be capable of any Order or Method; for indeed Fanaticiſm was in this one Year at the very height of Perfection or Confuſion: it improved from the Beginning of the Civil Wars to the Effuſion of the King's Blood; and then, as if it had attain'd its utmoſt Glory, it declined by ſenſible degrees, till being weaker and weaker, it did at laſt ſuffer the Reſtoration of Monarchy and an eſtabliſhed Church. Religion a Reproach to the Saints.

Apr. 14, ſome of the Aſſembly of Divines waiting at the Door of the Houſe of Commons, were called in, and did acquaint the Houſe, that they had perfected the Catechiſm, according to the former Order of the Houſes, and had inſerted the Places of Scripture in the Margin. Upon which the Houſe ordered, that ſix hundred Copies of the ſaid Catechiſm ſhould be Printed for the Service of the Members of both Houſes, and no more; and gave Thanks to the Aſſembly for their Pains and Endeavours in perfecting this Catechiſm. Aſſemblys Catechiſm.

Such a Spirit of Loyalty and Uniformity was ſtill left in the Univerſity of Oxford, that it was found neceſſary to ſend down the Chancellor, the Earl of Pembroke, to execute the Viſitation, or rather the Inquiſition, that had been lately made in that Place. He came thither Apr. 11, and by Power of Parliament and Arms put Mr. Reynolds into Poſſeſſion of the Deanry of Chriſt-Church in the room of Dr. Fell ejected. Dr. Palmer into the Wardenſhip of All-Souls, in the room of Dr. Sheldon. Mr. Harris into the Preſidentſhip of Trinity-College, in room of Dr. Potter. Dr. John Wilkinſon into the Preſidentſhip of Magdalen-College, in room of Dr. Oliver. Mr. John Wilkins into the Wardenſhip of Wadham, in room of Dr. Pitts. Mr. Cheynell into the Preſidentſhip of St. John's, in room of Dr. Bayly. Mr. Greenwood into the Principality of Brazen-Noſe-College, in room of Mr. Radcliff. And ſeveral others were thruſt into the Places of ejected Heads and Members. For which, on April 21, the Commons gave the Thanks of their Houſe to the Right Honourable the Earl of Pembroke, Chancellor, for his great Care and Pains in ſettling and reforming the Univerſity of Oxford. Blaſphemy and Hereſy be immediately brought in and debated. (a) Letter of the Engliſh to the Scotch Aſſembly.

June 7, the Houſe of Commons being informed that many of the Aſſembly were at the Door, they were called in, and preſented to the Houſe the Draught of a Letter to be ſent from the Aſſembly here to the Aſſembly in Scotland, in order to ſtrengthen the Amity and Union of both Kingdoms; and deſired the Approbation of the Houſe thereunto. The Houſe debated on the Letter, and approv'd it.

New Articles of Faith.

June 21, the Ordinance for the more effectual ſettling the Presbyterian Government throughout the Kingdom, was read the ſecond time by the Commons, and committed. After which, the Articles of Faith and Texts of Scripture to them, brought in by the Aſſembly, were ordered to be Printed, with this Title; Articles of Chriſtian Religion approved and paſſed by both Houſes of Parliament, after Advice had with the Aſſembly of Divines, by Authority of Parliament ſitting at Weſtminſter, June 27. 1648.

On July 24, the Commons ſpent much time upon a Paragraph of the large Catechiſm, which was committed, and the Aſſembly were deſired to explain ſome Words therein.

At opening the Treaty of the Iſle of Wight, the King kept a Faſt on Saturday Septemb. 16, with his Houſhold and Attendance, for a Bleſſing on that Treaty, and had a particular Prayer, drawn by his own ſpecial Direction and Dictates, to be uſed with the Form of Common-Prayer. By the Papers now remaining which paſſed between his Majeſty and the Divines which attended the Commiſſioners of the two Houſes concerning Epiſcopacy and Church-Government, the Learning, Judgment, and Conſcience of this Prince appeared great, beyond the Denial and Doubt of his Enemies. It was near this time that Mr. Alexander Henderſon, principal Miniſter of the Word of God at Edinburgh, and chief Commiſſioner from the Kirk of Scotland to the Parliament and Synod of England, made a ſolemn Declaration upon his Death-bed, grounded on the Experience he had in converſing and diſputing in Matters of Religion with the King; wherein he prays for the good King's being reſtored to his juſt Rights: and, among other Things, ſays thus: "I do declare before God and the World, that ſince I had the Honour and Happineſs to converſe and confer with his Majeſty, with all ſorts of Freedom, eſpecially in Matters of Religion, whether in Relation to the Kirk or State, that I found him the moſt intelligent Man that ever I ſpoke with; as far beyond my Expreſſion as Expectation. I profeſs, that I was oft-times aſtoniſhed with the Solidity and Quickneſs of his Reaſons and Replies, wondered how he, ſpending his time ſo much in Sports and Recreations, could have attained to ſo great Knowledge; and muſt confeſs ingenuouſly, that I was convinced in Conſcience, and knew not how to give him any reaſonable Satisfaction; yet the Sweetneſs of his Diſpoſition is ſuch, that whatſoever I ſaid was well taken. I muſt ſay, that I never met with any Diſputant of that mild and calm Temper; which convinc'd me the more, and made me think, that ſuch Wiſdom and Moderation could not be without an extraordinary meaſure of Divine Grace. I had heard much of his Carriage towards the Prieſts in Spain, and that King James told the Duke of Buckingham, upon his going thither, that he durſt venture his Son Charles with all the Jeſuits in the World, he knew him to be ſo well grounded in the Proteſtant Religion; but could never believe it before. I obſerved all his Actions, more particularly thoſe of Devotion, which I muſt truly ſay are more than ordinary.—— If I ſhould ſpeak of his Juſtice, Magnanimity, Charity, Sobriety, Chaſtity, Patience, Humility, and of all his both Chriſtian and moral Virtues, I ſhould run my ſelf into a Panegyrick, and ſeem to flatter him to ſuch as do not know; if the preſent Condition that I lie in did not exempt me from any Suſpicion of worldly End, when I expect every hour to be called from all tranſitory Vanities to eternal Felicity, and the diſcharging of my Conſcience before God and Man, did not oblige me to declare the Truth ſimply and nakedly, in ſatisfaction of that which I have done ignorantly, tho' not altogether innocently."

Repentance of Mr. Henderſon.

1648. 24 Car. I.

And with this Character of King Charles, given by a Scot, a Presbyterian, an Opponent, we might conclude this fatal Year, unwilling to reveal the farther Iniquities of it. Though in Juſtice to the greater part of the Presbyterian Miniſters, it muſt be acknowledged, that when they ſaw too late the ſad Iſſues of Separation and Rebellion, they did then repent of them; and they did then labour to prevent the execrable Fact of putting the King to Death: They drew up and publiſh'd, A ſerious and faithful Repreſentation of the Judgments of the Miniſters of the Goſpel within the Province of London, in a Letter to the General and Council of War, Jan. 18, 1648, delivered by ſome of the Subſcribers. But alas (which was more, we hope, than they knew) it was all to no purpoſe. (b)

Remonſtrance of the Preſbyterian Miniſters againſt the King's Murder.

On the Day of the Father's Murder, an Act was paſſed to diſinherit the Son; ordaining, That no Perſon whatſoever do preſume to proclaim, declare, publiſh, or any ways to promote Charles Stuart, Son of the ſaid Charles late King of England, commonly called Prince of Wales, or any other Perſon, to be King or chief Magiſtrate of England or Ireland, or of any Dominions belonging to them; under pain of being adjudged a Traitor. Soon after a Committee was appointed to reſtrain the Preaching and Printing any Thing againſt the Proceedings of the Houſe, and of the High Court of Juſtice. They preſently after voted, That the Houſe of Peers in Parliament was uſeleſs and dangerous, and ought to be aboliſhed, and that an Act ſhould be brought in to that Purpoſe. Then they reſolved upon the Queſtion, "That it hath been found by Experience, and this Houſe doth declare, That the Office of a King in this Nation, and to have the Power thereof in any ſingle Perſon, is unneceſſary, burthenſome, and dangerous to the Liberty, Safety, and Publick Intereſt of the People of this Nation, and therefore ought to be aboliſh'd; and that an Act be brought in to that purpoſe (c)." Then the Form of Government was declared to be a Commonwealth, and the executive Power was put into the Hands of a Council of State, conſiſting of thirty eight Perſons, to act with full Powers for one Year: The Qualifications of every Member of this Council of State, or Committee of Eſtates, was, to ſubſcribe unto approving the King's Execution. After this, another High Court of Juſtice was erected for Trial of Delinquents; before whom the Marqueſs of Hamilton, under the Title of Earl of Cambridge, the Earl of Holland, the Lord Capel, the Lord Goring, and Sir John Owen, were condemned to Death for adhering to the King. After Sentence, their Reprieve, or their Execution, was put to the Vote of the Commons, who voted

By the Anſwer to Philanax may appear what Influence the Jeſuitical Party had upon the barbarous Murther of a moſt excellent Prince. I ſhall only add this, that Anno 1648, a Book was printed with this Title, Several Speeches delivered at a Conference, concerning the Power of Parliament, to proceed againſt their King for Miſgovernment. Licenſed by Gilbert Mabbot, which is Word for Word, taken out of Parſons the Jeſuits Book of Succeſſion to the Crown of England, as will appear to any one who will take the Pains to compare them.

KING CHARLES THE II^d.

1649. by great Majority, that the Earl of Cambridge and Car. II. the Ld. Capel ſhould not be Reprieved, and Sir John
Owen ſhould be Reprieved: and on the like Queſti-on of Life and Death to the Earl of Holland, and the Lord Goring, the firſt was ſacrific'd, and this latter ſav'd by one ſingle Vote, which was that of the Speaker. Upon which, the Earl of Cambridge, the Earl of Holland, and the Lord Capel, were all Beheaded in the Palace-Yard at Weſtminſter Mar. 9.

The Characters and Sufferings of theſe three Noblemen, are thus deliver'd by the Lord Clarendon.

“ A Scaffold was erected before Weſtminſter-Hall,
“ and all the Priſoners Condemn'd were brought “ from St. James's (as well the two who were Re“ prieved, as the three who were to ſuffer) upon
“ the 9th of March, that was at the End of the Year
“ 1648, a little more than a Month after the Mur“ der of the King, to Sir Thomas Cotton's Houſe, at “ the upper End of Weſtminſter-Hall, where they “ were ſuffer'd to repoſe themſelves about the ſpace
“ of an hour, and then were led ſucceſſively through
“ the Hall to the Scaffold, Duke Hamilton being “ firſt, who ſeem'd yet to have ſome hope of a Re“ prieve, and made ſome ſtay in the Hall, till the “ Earl of Denbigh came to him; and after a ſhort “ Whiſper, in which he found there was no hope,
“ he aſcended the Scaffold. He complain'd much
“ of the Injuſtice that was done him; and that he “ was put to Death for obeying the Laws of his “ Country; which if he had not done, he muſt have “ been put to Death there. He acknowledged the “ Obligations he had to the King, and ſeem'd not “ ſorry for the Gratitude he had expreſſed, how dear “ ſoever it coſt him. His natural Darkneſs and “ Reſervation in his Diſcourſe, made him to be “ thought a Wiſe-man; and his having been in “ Command under the King of Sweden, and his con“ tinual Diſcourſes of Battles and Fortifications, “ made him be thought a great Soldier: and both “ theſe Miſtakes were the Cauſe that made him be “ looked upon as a worſe and a more dangerous “ Man than in truth he deſerv'd to be.

“ The Earl of Holland (a) was brought next, who,
“ by his long Sickneſs, was ſo ſpent, that his Spirits
“ ſerv'd not to entertain the People with long Diſ-“ courſe. He ſpoke of his Religion, as a Matter “ unqueſtionable, by the Education he had had in “ the religious Family of which he was a Branch:
“ which was thought a ſtrange Diſcourſe for a dy“ ing Man; who, tho' a Son, knew enough of the “ Iniquity of his Father's Houſe; which ſhould
“ rather have been buried in Silence, than by ſuch
“ an unſeaſonable Teſtimony have been revived in “ the Memory and Diſcourſe of Men. He took
“ more care to be thought a good Friend to Parlia“ ments, than a good Servant to his Maſter, and “ was thought to ſay too little of his having failed
“ ſo much in his Duty to him, which moſt good “ Men believed to be the Source from whence his “ preſent Calamity ſprang. He was a very well-
“ bred Man, and a fine Gentleman in good times;
“ but too much deſired to enjoy Eaſe and Plenty
“ when the King could have neither; and did think “ Poverty the moſt inſupportable Evil that could “ befall any Man in this World. He was then ſo “ weak, that he could not have liv'd long; and “ when his Head was cut off, very little Blood fol“ low'd.

“ The Lord Capel was then called; who walked “ through Weſtminſter-Hall, ſaluting ſuch of his “ Friends and Acquaintance as he ſaw there, with “ a very ſerene Countenance, accompanied with his “ Friend Dr. Morley, who had been with him from “ the time of his Sentence; but at the Foot of the 1649.
“ Scaffold the Soldiers ſtopping the Doctor, his 1 Car. II.
“ Lordſhip took his Leave of him, and embracing “ him, thank'd him, and ſaid he ſhould go no far“ ther, having ſome Apprehenſion that he might “ receive ſome Affront by that rude People after his “ Death, the Chaplains who attended the two other “ Lords being Men of the Time, and the Doctor
“ being well known to be moſt contrary.

“ As ſoon as his Lordſhip had aſcended the Scaf-
“ fold, he look'd very vigorouſly about, and ask'd,
“ Whether the other Lords had ſpoken to the Peo“ ple with their Hats on? And being told that they “ were bare, he gave his Hat to his Servant, and “ then with a clear and ſtrong Voice he ſaid, That “ he was brought thither to Die for doing that “ which he could not repent of: That he had been “ born and bred under the Government of a King
“ whom he was bound in Conſcience to obey; un“ der Laws, to which he had been always obedient;
“ and in the Boſom of a Church, which he thought
“ the beſt in the World: That he had never vio“ lated his Faith to either of thoſe, and was now “ Condemn'd to Die againſt all the Laws of the “ Land; to which Sentence he did ſubmit.

“ He enlarged himſelf in commending the great “ Virtue and Piety of the King, whom they had “ put to Death; who was ſo juſt and ſo merciful a “ Prince; and pray'd to God to forgive the Nation
“ that innocent Blood. Then he recommended to “ 'em the preſent King; who he told them, was their “ true and lawful Sovereign, and was worthy to be “ ſo: That he had the Honour to have been ſome
“ Years near his Perſon, and therefore he could not “ but know him well; and aſſured them, that he “ was a Prince of great Underſtanding, of an excel“ lent Nature, of great Courage, an entire lover of “ Juſtice, and of exemplary Piety; that he was not “ to be ſhaken in his Religion, and had all thoſe
“ Princely Virtues which could make a Nation hap“ py; and therefore adviſed them to ſubmit to his “ Government, as the only means to preſerve them-
“ ſelves, their Poſterity, and the Proteſtant Religion.
“ And having with great vehemence recommended
“ it to them, after ſome Prayers very devoutly pro“ nounced upon his Knees, he ſubmitted himſelf
“ with an unparallel'd Chriſtian Courage to the “ fatal Stroke, which deprived the Nation of the “ nobleſt Champion it had.

“ He was a Man in whom the Malice of his “ Enemies could diſcover very few Faults, and “ whom his Friends could not wiſh better accom“ pliſh'd, whom Cromwel's own Character well de-“ ſcribed, and who indeed would never have been “ contented to have lived under that Government.
“ His Memory all Men lov'd and reverenced, tho'
“ few followed his Example. He had always lived
“ in a ſtate of great Plenty and general Eſtimation,
“ having a very noble Fortune of his own by deſcent,
“ and a fair addition to it by his Marriage with an “ excellent Wife, a Lady of very worthy Extraction,
“ of great Virtue and Beauty, by whom he had a “ numerous Iſſue of both Sexes, in which he took “ great Joy and Comfort: So that no Man was “ more happy in all his Domeſtick Affairs; and he “ was ſo much the more happy, in that he thought “ himſelf more bleſſed in them.

“ And yet the King's Honour was no ſooner vio“ lated, and his juſt Power invaded, than he threw
“ all thoſe Bleſſings behind him; and having no
“ other Obligations to the Crown than thoſe which “ his own Honour and Conſcience ſuggeſted to him,
“ he frankly engaged his Perſon and his Fortune

(a) Dr. Plume, in his Life of Biſhop Hacket, tells us, That being then retired to his Church of Cheam in Surrey, he was call'd to Town by the Earls of Holland and Norwich, who both requeſted his Aſſiſtance at their expected Deaths. The Earl of Holland was very penitent, for that he had deſerted ſo good a Maſter in the beginning of the Wars. Norwich was very chearful in the Comforts of a good Conſcience. Dr. Hacket would much admire, how God ſometimes gives ſecret Admonition of things contrary to all humane Expectations. For the Earl of Holland had many Meſſengers came and told him, they had Votes enough, and to ſpare for his Life. Yet nothing would perſuade him but he ſhould Die within a few Days, and ſo he did. The Earl of Norwich that knew no Friends, yet would not believe but he ſhould eſcape, and ſo he did.

1649. "from the beginning of the Troubles, as many
1 Car. II. "others did, in all Actions and Enterprizes of the "greateſt hazard and danger; and continued to the "end without ever making one falſe Step, as few "others did, though he had once, by the Iniquity of "a Faction that then prevail'd, an Indignity put up- "on him that might have excuſed him for ſome re- "miſſion of his former Warmth: But it made no "other Impreſſion upon him than to be quiet and "contented whilſt they would let him alone, and "with the ſame chearfulneſs to obey the firſt Sum- "mons when he was called out, which was quickly "after. In a Word, he was a Man that whoever "ſhall after him deſerve beſt of the Engliſh Nation, "he can never think himſelf undervalued, when he "ſhall hear that his Courage, Virtue, and Fidelity "is laid in the Ballance with and compared to that "of the Lord Capel." (a)

After this an Act was made, declaring and conſtituting the People of England to be a Commonwealth and Free-State; and an Oath was enjoin'd, called an Engagement to be faithful to the Commonwealth without King or Houſe of Lords.

Lieutenant-General Cromwel was now appointed to be Commander in chief of all the Forces in Ireland, and the Lord Fairfax was continued General of all the Forces in England; Whitlock and Liſle were made Commiſſioners of the new Republican Broad Seal. An Act was made to remove all malignant and diſaffected Magiſtrates, and to make them incapable of bearing any Office in the Common-wealth.

Lords content to be Commons. The Houſe of Lords being diſſolv'd and aboliſh'd, the Earl of Pembroke humbly ſubmitted to be choſen Knight of the Shire for Berks, and was admitted an inglorious Member of the Houſe of Commons; and the Lord Howard of Eſcrick ſoon after choſen and admitted to be Burgeſs for Carliſle; and the Earl of Salisbury did likewiſe deſcend to the like Honour. New Money was ordered to be coined, on one ſide the Arms of England between a Laurel and a Palm, with this Inſcription, The Common-wealth of England; on the other ſide the Arms of England and Ireland, with this Inſcription, God with us. Dr. Doriſlaus being ſent a publick Miniſter from the Powers of England to the States of Holland, was ſtabb'd at Supper in the Hague, by ſeveral of the old deſperate Cavaliers, one of them ſaying, Thus Dies one of the King's Judges. Murmurs and Complaints were ſo very high that the Powers in Being made an Act May 14, to declare it Treaſon to affirm the preſent Government to be Tyrannical, Uſurp'd or Unlawful, or to endeavour to alter the ſaid Government, or to kill any Member of Parliament or Judge in their Duty.

Doriſlaus kill'd.

New Judges. June 1, upon a Report of fit and truſty Perſons to be Judges in Weſtminſter-Hall, it was voted by the Commons, that Serjeant Nicholas, and Mr. Ask, be Judges of the Upper-Bench, that Serjeant Pulesſton, and Peter Warburton Eſq; be Judges of the Common-Pleas, that Serjeant Thorp, and Mr. Rigby, be Barons of the Exchequer. To make a firm Union between the three Principles of Power, the Parliament, the Army, and the City of London, it was contrived that the Speaker with the Houſe of Commons, the General with the chief Officers, and the Council of State, ſhould, after hearing two Sermons, be feaſted at Grocer's-Hall without drinking of Healths, by the Lord-Mayor, Aldermen, and Common-Council, on June 7.

Army and City combine. This ſealed up ſuch a Friendſhip, that the Houſe referred it to a Committee, to conſider what Mark of Honour and Favour the Parliament ſhould beſtow upon the City for their great Affection. And the City preſented to the Lord-General a large Baſon and Ewer of beaten Gold, and to Lieutenant General Cromwel Plate to the value of 300 l. and 200 pieces in Gold.

By this, and other Arts of Policy and Popularity, 1649.
Cromwel began to make the firſt Figure in the Nation, 1 Car. II.
having more and more obliged the Houſe by reducing of the Levellers, by accepting the difficult Cromwel aſcends. Poſt of Ireland, and by ſuppreſſing the Mutinies of the Soldiers who refuſed to go upon that Service, ſo that June 22, he had a pompous Commiſſion in Latin and Engliſh to Command all Forces to be ſent into Ireland, and to have all the Civil and Military Power of that Kingdom for three Years; and July 10, he went out of Town with a very noble Equipage and Life-Guard; and on the morrow, being a Day of publick Humiliation, he himſelf and ſome of his chief Officers fell upon the work of the Day, and prayed and expounded the Scriptures.

Before Cromwel could land his Forces in Ireland, Goes into Ireland. the buſineſs was in effect over: For Colonel Jones, who had kept Poſſeſſion of Dublin till it was in a manner blocked up by the Marqueſs of Ormond, ſallied out and fell upon Ormond's Army with that advantage that he put them to an entire Rout, and the Marqueſs himſelf very narrowly eſcaped. So that Cromwel landed and enter'd Dublin without any oppoſition, with a mighty concourſe of People, to whom he made a long Speech with his Hat in his Hand, and they all cryed out that they would live and die with him. He immediately publiſhed a Proclamation for Thankſgiving for the late Defeat given to the Rebels, and commanded the Magiſtrates to execute the Laws againſt Swearing and Drunkenneſs, the Sins that he would have to be thought peculiar to his Enemies. Soon after with his Army of fifteen thouſand Horſe and Foot, he marched toward Tredagh, the ſtrongeſt Garriſon of the Enemy, and after a ſhort Siege took the Town by Storm, and for Terror put all the Men of Arms to the Sword, near three His great Succeſs. thouſand, with Sir Arthur Aſton Governour. After theſe Streams of Blood Cromwel march'd towards Wexford, and took in many Garriſons by the way, giving a conſtant account of his Proceedings to the Parliament and Council of State, with the Art of aſſuming greater Glory to himſelf, by exhorting them in all his Letters to give the Glory unto God. And he carried all things now with that abſolute Command, that there was printed and diſpers'd a Book, entitled, The Character of King Cromwel, which tho' ſuppreſt for a Libel, was even received as a kind of Prophecy.

In January the Parliament alarm'd with the Pre- Alarms in Scotland. parations for the King in Scotland, reſolved to ſend an Army thither to divert the War from England, and offer'd the Command to General Fairfax, but he declined the Service, and was the more ſuſpected becauſe his Lady was a zealous Presbyterian, and a Friend to the Kirk. Upon this juncture the Parliament and Council of State found it neceſſary to employ Cromwel in this other Expedition, and gave him the Honour of reducing Scotland as well as Ireland. The Ambition of doing ſuch double Service inflamed Cromwel into a quicker Diſpatch; ſo that before the end of March he had made the Lord Inchequin deſert his remains of an Army, and had forced the Marqueſs of Ormond to fly into France, and had little to do but to ſail home in triumph; yet he had one ſore Mortification in the Death of his Son-in-Law Ireton, who died at the Siege of Limerick in a Death of Ireton. peſtilential Feaver; and (ſays Sir Philip Warwick) being a Man of Blood (for he had deeply dy'd himſelf in the King's) expired with that Word in his Mouth (for in his raving as I was told by one that was then there, he cried out) I will have more Blood, Blood, Blood.

Prince Charles at the Death of his Father juſtly Condition of King Charles II. took his Titles, and alas nothing but his Titles, on him; yet he kept up a ſort of Court at the Hague, (b) and received

1649. 1 Car. II. received Commiſſioners from Scotland, who were ſent from the Kirk not to ſubmit to him as their King, but to treat with him as a late Enemy coming into Alliance with them. The Swediſh Ambaſſador addreſt him as a Crown'd Head, and he and the Daniſh Miniſter invited the States to join with them in aſſiſting his Britannick Majeſty to regain his Birth-right. But the States were for no Rupture with their young Siſter the Common-wealth of England. The diſtreſſed King had no proſpect but toward Scotland; and yet the (a) Commiſſioners were ſo impoſing in their Terms, that he was forced to Remonſtrate againſt them, and to give Reaſons why he could not comply with their high Demands. However, with the little Supplies he had from a few of his faithful Subjects, and from ſome few generous Princes, he made ſome Preparations for an Army in Scotland, and ſent Montroſs before with ſome Men and Money, intending to follow in his Royal Perſon; but the States refuſed him neceſſary Shipping, and Montroſs was ſo hated and perſecuted by the Kirk, that his Majeſty thought fit to decline the Expedition; and inſtead of going to Scotland he was content to take ſome Refuge in the Iſle of Jerſey, where he was invited and loyally received by the Governor George Carteret. In his way hither he had been nobly entertained by the Archduke and the Magiſtrates at Antwerp, and thence to the Court of France, where the Queen his Mother ſent to him Jermyn and Piercy, to let him know, It was the Advice of the Council of France, and Hers, that he agree with the Scots upon any Terms. Which Advice indeed was falſe and fatal; for the longer the King had reſerv'd himſelf, the more Honour and Intereſt it would have been to him. The Hearts of the People of England ſeemed to be kept from him by nothing but the Sword. At Preſton in Lancaſhire he was proclaimed Charles the Second, King of England, &c. at the Market-Croſs, without the offer of any oppoſition. And the Levellers, who made up formidable Bodies in ſeveral Counties, though their demands for taking away Tithes, and Engliſhing Proceedings at Law, &c. were extravagant, yet their laſt Article was alway this, That Prince Charles ſhould be brought in.

Invited to Scotland upon hard Terms.

Takes refuge in Jerſey.

The King came into Jerſey with a Retinue of not above three hundred, and when he left the Court of France had brought away no more than three hundred Piſtoles to defray the Expences of his Journey and Voyage. The Truth is, Cardinal Mazarine ſeems alway to have thought, that the extirpation of Monarchy in England would raiſe the Grandeur of it in France; and therefore he always obſtructed and retarded the King's Reſtauration; and when his Royal Brother the Duke of York was at this time ſolliciting and humbly beſeeching the King, Queen, and Cardinal, to have Compaſſion upon the King his Brother, and to give him all Aſſiſtance poſſible for the regaining of his Eſtate and Kingdom, the Cardinal coldly anſwer'd, That they might be hereafter in a Capacity to ſerve him, but it could not now be.

Cardinal Mazarine obſtructed the King's Reſtoration.

As ſoon as it was known in Scotland that the King was arrived at Jerſey, Mr. Windram Layds of Libberton was diſpatch'd away with a Meſſage to him; who being admitted to the King's Preſence, preſented theſe Deſires and Offers of the States of Scotland; "1. That he would Sign the Covenant, and paſs "an Act for all Perſons to take it. 2. That he "would paſs the Acts of Parliament in Scotland, "which were ratified by their two laſt Seſſions. "3. That he would withdraw his Commiſſion to "Montroſs. 4. That he would put away all Papiſts from about him. 5. That he would appoint "ſome Place in Holland to Treat with Commiſſioners "from the Eſtates of Scotland. And, 6thly, That "he would give a ſpeedy Anſwer." Some of the King's Council were for rejecting theſe Propoſitions as hard and diſhonourable; others were for accepting of them as in a Caſe of Neceſſity; of this latter Opinion was the Queen Mother, who by her Letters urged a Compliance to the preſent exigency of Affairs; and even Montroſs adviſed the King to yield to their Deſires, and to make his perpetual Baniſhment one Condition of Agreement. But the King at preſent had too great a Senſe of Honour, however his Neceſſities did afterward extort a more unreaſonable Submiſſion. In the mean time, the King ſent his Ambaſſadors to the Emperor, the Duke of Muſcovy, the States of Venice, the Grand Seignior, and the King of Spain, who all returned Anſwer much to the ſame effect, "That they were "ſorry for his Father's ill Succeſs, and condoled his "Death; but as to the Differences between him and "the People of England, they were Matters out of "their Cognizance, and they ſhould not meddle in "them." About the ſame time the King ſent over Sir John Berkley and Colonel Slingsby to ſollicite his Cauſe in the Weſt of England; but they had there the misfortune to be apprehended, and ſent up Priſoners to the Tower. And the Powers in being had prepared a Fleet againſt the Iſle of Jerſey, ſo that it was thought proper for the King to leave that Place, and return thro' France to Breda, where he fell into new Treaties with the Scots Commiſſioners, who ſtill inſiſted upon the moſt rigorous Terms, That he ſhould diſclaim all Perſons Excommunicated by the Kirk, meaning Montroſs, and other his moſt Loyal Subjects; that he ſhould take, and enforce the taking of the National Covenant, and ratifie all Acts concerning Presbyterian Government, and conſent to all Matters Civil, as determined by the preſent and ſubſequent Parliaments; and to all Matters Eccleſiaſtical as order'd by the General-Aſſembly of the Kirk.

The Scots ſend inſolent Demands.

Foreign Princes and States were afraid to aſſiſt him.

The King forced to leave Jerſey.

In Matters of Religion, the Commons who now called themſelves the Parliament of England, were ſo jealous of the Pulpits, that they order'd, no Miniſters ſhould teach in their Sermons any thing relating to State-Affairs, but only to preach Chriſt in Sincerity, and ordained Penalties to thoſe who ſhould preſume to do otherwiſe: Suppreſſing the liberty of the Pulpits as ſoon as this Liberty to an infinite Scandal had ſerved their ſeditious Purpoſes. Then April 3, they made a Declaration that Tythes ſhould be taken away, but not till another Maintenance be provided for the Miniſtry as large and as honourable as that by Tythes; that the Presbyterian Government ſhould be eſtabliſhed; and a way provided for admiſſion of all ſuch Churches as tend to Godlineſs, and to advance the Kingdom of Jeſus Chriſt. In their following Debates for a ſufficient Maintenance of Miniſters, it was propoſed to be by an Aſſeſſment of twelve pence in the Pound upon Lands, and ſome allowance out of Deans and Chapters Lands and Impropriations; but they never formed their Project into an Act.

April 20, it was enacted to aboliſh and take away the Name and Office of Dean, Subdean, Dean and Chapter, Archdeacon, Chancellor, Chantor, Treaſurer, Canon, Prebend, Choiriſter, and all other Titles and Offices belonging to any College or Collegiate Church or Chappel, excepting the Univerſities, the Deanery of Chriſt-Church in Oxford, and the Foundations of Weſtminſter, Wincheſter, and Eaton, and to ſettle the Lands and Hereditaments of them in the hands of Truſtees called Contractors, to ſell and diſpoſe of them for the Benefit of the Publick. To make this Alienation more plauſible, they enacted June 8, that out of the Tythes Impropriate belonging to the late Eſtates of Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Deans and Chapters, there ſhould be Augmentations made to the Incumbents of ſmall Livings, ſo as to make up the Maintenance of every Miniſter to be One hundred Pounds a Year.

(a) Sir John Bowring, in the Narrative of his ſecret Services, tells K. Charles II. I was in Scotland two Months, with great Expences by Intelligence; there I found it neceſſary to ſend your Majeſty word, by Sir Thomas Glemham, that for ſome private material Reaſons I thought it not ſafe for you by any means to come into Scotland, and to put yourſelf into the Head of Duke Hamilton's Army, as was expected every Hour, &c.

For another ſpecious ſhew of Zeal, they enacted in July following, that there ſhould be a Corporation for the promoting and propagating the Goſpel of Jeſus Chriſt in New-England, to be called by the Name of The Preſident and Society for the Propagation of the Goſpel in New-England; and for their Stock of Charity, a Collection ſhould be made in all the Pariſh-Churches of England, and they ſhould be enabled to receive or purchaſe any Eſtate to the value of two thouſand Pounds per Ann.

Society for propagating the Goſpel.

But the State of Religion was to be new modell'd by the Army, rather than by any other Power; and therefore in Auguſt the General and his Council of Officers petition'd the Houſe, that all Penal Statutes, formerly made, and late Ordinances, whereby many conſcientious People were moleſted, and the propagation of the Goſpel hinder'd, might be removed; to which the Houſe were bound to aſſent, and to order the bringing the Matter of the Petition into an Act for eaſe of tender Conſciences; which was but a Stratagem of the Independents to overthrow the Presbyterian Government and Diſcipline. There was little more of Religion in Acts or Votes till March 12, when it was reſolved, that a late Book aſſerting the Obſervation of the Jewiſh Sabbath, and condemning the obſervation of the Lord's-Day as the Chriſtian Sabbath, was Erroneous, Scandalous and Prophane, contrary to the practice of the Apoſtles and all the Chriſtian Churches, and ſhould be therefore burnt, and the Author and Printer puniſhed. And it was indeed high time to think of repreſſing Hereſies and Blaſphemies, which now ſwelled up againſt Heaven to a moſt prodigious height. One Salmon a Preacher in Coventry taught his People to Swear and Curſe and commit Whoredom upon this profeſt Principle, That it was God which did ſwear in them; and that it was their Liberty to keep Company with Women to ſatisfie their natural Appetites. And one Wyke ſet up for breathing the Spirit of God into Men, by kiſſing them three times. (a)

Independent Army too hard for the Presbyterian Government.

Prodigious growth of Hereſies and Blaſphemies.

Some Examples were made of puniſhing thoſe blaſphemous Wretches; among others, one Boutholmey a Quarter-Maſter was tried by a Council of War for Blaſphemy, and ſentenc'd to have his Tongue bored through with a hot Iron, his Sword broke over his Head, and to be Caſhier'd the Army. Theſe Spiritual Wickedneſſes gave the greater hopes to the Papiſts, who were never more numerous and buſie; and Letters from Rome received Feb. 1, adviſed, that they had there an Agent from England, and that the Engliſh Prieſts there were very confident, that within few Years their Religion would be eſtabliſhed in England. Moſt certainly the Prieſts and Jeſuits well knew that a confuſion in Church and State would be their Seed-time and Harveſt; for which reaſon they help'd to deſtroy Abp. Laud, and the King himſelf. What was deliver'd upon knowledge by Dr. Peter du Moulin ſince the Reſtauration, and promiſed to be made good by a publick Charge and Challenge, deſerves to be here inſerted. This certain Intelligence ſhall be juſtified whenſoever Authority will require it, that the Year before the King's Death, a ſelect number of Engliſh Jeſuits were ſent from their whole Party in England, firſt to Paris to conſult with the Faculty of Sorbon, then altogether Jeſuited, to whom they put this Queſtion in writing, "That ſeeing the State of England was in a "likely poſture to change Government, whether it "was lawful for the Catholicks to work that Change "for the advancing and ſecuring of the Catholick "Cauſe in England, by making the King away, "whom there was no hope to reclaim from his He- "reſy?" This was anſwer'd Affirmatively. After which, the ſame Perſons went to Rome, where the ſame Queſtion being propounded and debated, it was concluded by the Pope and his Counſel, that it was both Lawful and Expedient for the Catholicks to promote that alteration of State. What followed that Conſultation and Sentence all the World knoweth; and how the Jeſuits went to work God knoweth, and Time the bringer forth of Truth will let us know. (b)

Advantage taken by the Papiſts.

Cromwel had now a great mind to leave Ireland, but wanted a more publick Call from it. He had received many private Intimations of the Parliament's pleaſure for his coming over, and Copies of their Votes; but he deſired the Honour of a more ſolemn Invitation; and therefore in a Letter dated from Carrick Apr. 2, he begg'd a more clear Expreſſion of their Command and Pleaſure. Profeſſing, as before the Lord, that I am moſt ready to obey your Commands herein with all alacrity; rejoycing only to be about that Work which I am called to, by thoſe whom God hath ſet over me, which I acknowledge to be you, and fearing only in obeying you to diſobey you. When he had farther enlarged his Conqueſts, and left his Army under true Diſcipline, he came over into England, and at the end of May was met on Hounſlow-Heath by the prime Members of Parliament and Officers of the Army; at Hide-Park he was ſaluted with the great Guns, and with a Volly of Shot from Colonel Barkſtead's Regiment, and ſo conducted like a King to Whitehall, where he next Day received the Viſits and Complements of all the People in Authority, who are ſaid to congratulate his ſafe Arrival, after ſo many Dangers both by Sea and Land, wherein God had preſerved him; and the wonderful Succeſſes which the great God had given to him.

Cromwel deſires to be recall'd from Ireland.

The King was at Breda in a new Treaty with the Scots Commiſſioners, where the Prince of Orange was to aſſiſt in the Councils and in the Expedition. But the Kirk, who were the treating Party, kept up a Bigotry for Covenant and Diſcipline, and retarded all the Meaſures that might have been otherwiſe eaſily concerted. Montroſs had his Majeſty's Commiſſion to prepare a little Army for him; but becauſe he would not ſubmit to the Sentences of the Kirk, they purſued him as a Common Enemy; and getting him into their mercileſs Hands, they brought him before the Parliament, and accuſed him of nothing but Covenant breaking; he made a ſtout Defence, and told them, his Cauſe was good; he had not only a Commiſſion but particular Orders for what he did from his Majeſty, to whom he was engaged to be a Loyal Subject, and they themſelves profeſt to be ſo. That if they would take away his Life for doing his Duty, the World knew he did not regard it. It was a Debt that muſt once be paid; and now in good ſeaſon, when he ſhould rejoice to go the ſame way his Royal Maſter had lately done. And for his preſent Majeſty, it would be another Joy of his Heart, not only to do but to ſuffer for him. But at the inſtigation of the Aſſembly Men, the Parliament gave Sentence beyond all Precedent, that he ſhould be

(a) Even the Turkiſh Alcoran was coming in. On the 16th of March, 1648-9, the Commons were forc'd to make an Order for ſuppreſſing the Turks Alcoran, ſaid to be Licens'd by One of the Miniſters of London, and to be printed in Engliſh. hanged

1650. 2 Car. II. hanged upon a Gibbet of ſix Ells and a half high, and when dead his Head to be ſevered from his Body, and ſet upon the Tolbooth at Edinburgh; his Right Hand to be cut off and ſent to Glaſcow, his Left to Aberdeen, his Right Foot to St. Johnſtown, and his left to Dundee: All which Barbarities he ſuffered with an unmoved Meekneſs and Courage. His Character is thus given by the Lord Clarendon. “Thus died the gallant Marqueſs of Montroſs, after he had given as great a Teſtimony of Loyalty and Courage as a Subject can do, and performed as wonderful Actions in ſeveral Battles, upon as great inequality of Numbers, and as great diſadvantages in reſpect of Arms, and other preparations for War, as have been performed in this Age. He was a Gentleman of a very ancient Extraction, many of whoſe Anceſtors had exerciſed the higheſt Charges under the King in that Kingdom, and had been allied to the Crown it ſelf. He was of very good Parts, which were improv'd by a good Education: He had always a great emulation, or rather a great contempt of the Marqueſs of Argyle (as he was too apt to contemn thoſe he did not love) who wanted nothing but Honeſty and Courage to be a very extraordinary Man, having all other good Talents in a very great degree. Montroſs was in his Nature fearleſs of Danger, and never declined any Enterprize for the Difficulty of going through with it; but exceedingly affected thoſe which ſeemed deſperate to other Men, and did believe ſomewhat to be in himſelf above other Men, which made him live more eaſily towards thoſe who were, or were willing to be inferior to him (towards whom he exercis'd wonderful Civility and Generoſity) than with his ſuperiors or equals. He was naturally jealous, and ſuſpected thoſe who did not concur with him in the way, not to mean ſo well as he. He was not without Vanity, but his Virtues were much ſuperior, and he well deſerved to have his Memory preſerved and celebrated amongſt the moſt illuſtrious Perſons of the Age in which he lived.”

And barbarouſly executed.

Some others were executed only for joining with Montroſs: Theſe Indignities and Cruelties might have juſtly provoked the King to break off the Treaty and deſert a People given up to Bigotry and Blood; yet ſuch were his Majeſty's Neceſſities, and ſo great the Importunities of his Relations and Friends to comply at any rate, that he was forced to connive at all this Inſolence, and to write to Edinburgh in no harder Words than theſe, That he was very ſorry at a Report he heard, that there was ſome Blood of his good Subjects ſhed of late; but not knowing how it is, he deſires to underſtand the Buſineſs more fully. To which the Parliament took a liberty to anſwer, that they hoped for a happy Agreement with his Majeſty, and deſired him not to be diſcouraged at ſome ſeeming Obſtacles, ſuch as the Death of Montroſs and ſome few others, they doing nothing therein but to accompliſh his Intereſt. And his Majeſty was bound to ſeem as if he did believe 'em, tho' they were ſo conſcious of their own guilt as to queſtion the King's forgiveneſs of it; ſo that after long Negotiations, in the Month of June they put it to the Vote in Parliament, Whether they ſhould make any more Addreſſes to the King? But with ſome difficulty it was carried, “That they ſhould deſire the King's ſpeedy coming thither, and would promiſe to endeavour to ſet him on his Throne; and would paſs by many things contrary to his Agreement in the caſe of Montroſs, provided he would now come in and comply with them.” And he did ſo comply with their Conſcience and Honour.

The Scots importune the King to come among 'em.

A Juncto of the Council of State in England having Intelligence of the Dangers, were adviſed by Cromwel not to wait the coming of them, nor to truſt to any after-game, but rather to prevent their Invaſion of England by carrying the War directly into Scotland. Some Men of Scruple did object, That to begin a War upon Scotland would be contrary to the Covenant; but it was anſwered, that the Scots had already broken the Covenant, and that therefore it was not now binding on the one ſide after it had been diſſolved on the other. So it was reſolv'd, That having a formed Army, well provided and experienced, they would march it forthwith into Scotland, to prevent the Scots marching into England, and the Miſeries which might thence enſue. The Lord General Fairfax was taught by the Presbyterian Miniſters, and his own Lady a great Patroneſs of them (and perhaps by Cromwel himſelf) to object, that he was unſatisfied, whether there was a juſt ground for the Parliament of England to ſend their Army to invade Scotland: But in caſe the Scots ſhould firſt enter England, he was then ready to oppoſe and engage them in defence of his own Country. The Council of State were ſo far troubled about theſe ſcruples in the General, that they appointed a Committee to give him ſatisfaction, Cromwel, Whitlock, Lambert, Harriſon and Saint John, the Debates of this Conference are publiſhed by one of the Committee, the General concluding thus, What would you have me do? As far as my Conſcience will give way, I am willing to join with you ſtill in the Service of the Parliament; but where the Conſcience is not ſatisfied, none of you, I am ſure, will engage in any Service, and that is my condition in this, and therefore I muſt deſire to be excuſed. So the General laid down his Commiſſion; and by good contrivance an Act was immediately paſſed, for conſtituting and appointing Oliver Cromwel, Eſq; to be Captain-General in chief of all the Forces raiſed and to be raiſed by Authority of Parliament within the Common-wealth of England; and on June 29, this new General march'd his Army Northward, to the great alarm of the Scots, who in vain alledg'd, that by the Covenant and Articles of Pacification, they ought not to be invaded without three Months warning.

Reſolutions in England to invade Scotland.

General Fairfax excuſes himſelf, and ſo lays down his Commiſſion.

Cromwel made General.

The King landed in Scotland June 16, after a demand from the Council, That he would ſign the Covenant himſelf before he ſet his Foot on Shore. He ſtaid many Days at Dundee, attended with one Committee from the Parliament and another from the Kirk, who were preſſing his Majeſty to ſign ſeveral Propoſitions, and before his doing ſo would not agree for his coming to Edinburgh in order to his Coronation. His Majeſty ſubmitted to all their Demands, and was proclaimed King but not yet crowned (a). Toward the end of July Cromwel with his Army enter'd Scotland, and without oppoſition advanced to Haddington within 12 Miles of Endinburgh, not above ſix Miles from the Scot's Army now encreaſed to above thirty thouſand. Cromwel reſolutely march'd on, and drew up his whole Army before Edinburgh, and beat the Enemy from King Arthur's Hill, but could not force them out of their Trenches, till by fall of Rains and want of Victuals, he was forced to retreat to Muſſleborough, and had only ſome Skirmiſhes that were commonly to the diſadvantage of the Scots. When the Army was refreſhed, Cromwel march'd back to the view of Edinburgh, and pitch'd his Tents on Pentland Hills, being well furniſhed with Proviſions by the Parliament's Ships that attended his motion. In the mean time, upon ſafe Conduct, ſeveral of the Scots Officers came to a Conference with the Engliſh, and perfidiouſly ſaid, that they were deluded by the Malignants, and that the King refuſed to ſign the diſowning of his Father's Action, and to adhere to the Covenant, and repent for the Blood ſhed by his Father himſelf, and that they had thoughts of relinquiſhing him. And indeed the poor King had as much difficulty to deal with his own Lieutenant-General, and his other Officers, as he had with the powerful Engliſh Army, Cromwel's compleat Victory.

Weſt ſide of Edinburgh on Saturday Auguſt 31, and came next Day to Dunbar, cloſely followed by the Scot s Army; the fight began early on Tueſday Morning Sept. 3, wherein the divided Scots ſoon threw down their Arms and ran away, loſing in the Battle and Purſuit above four thouſand ſlain, and ten thouſand taken Priſoners. Cromwel himſelf drew up a Narrative of this great Victory, and ſent it by a Courier to the Council of State, who ordered it to be read in all the Churches of London with ſolemn Thankſgiving.

The Lord Clarendon ſays, "Their Horſe did not "ſuſtain one Charge, but fled and were purſued "with a great Execution. The Foot depended "much upon their Miniſters, who preached and "prayed, and aſſured them of the Victory, till the "Engliſh were upon them, and ſome of the Preachers "were knock'd in the Head whilſt they were pro- "miſing the Victory.——— Never Victory was "attended with leſs Lamentations; for as Cromwel "had great Argument of Triumph in the total de- "feat and deſtruction of the only Army that was in "Scotland, which defeat had put a great Part of that "Kingdom, and the chief City of it under his Obe- "dience; ſo the King, who was then at St. Johnſton's "was glad of it, as the greateſt Happineſs that "could befal him, in the loſs of ſo ſtrong a Body of "his Enemies; who, if they ſhould have prevailed, "his Majeſty did believe that they would have ſhut "him up in Priſon the next Day."

The Engliſh Army the ſame Day poſſeſs'd themſelves of Edinburgh and Leith, the King, whom the Scots would not ſuffer to be in the Battle, retiring to St. Johnſtown, and the Lieutenant-General Leven endeavouring to rally his Forces about Sterling, the Scots Presbyters preaching it up, that their late Overthrow was owing to their too much complying with the King, whoſe ill treatment made him incline to eſcape privately from St. Johnſtown, for which purpoſe he had ſent to Orkney for ſhipping; and the Earl of Cleveland and many of his beſt Friends for refuſing the Covenant were forc'd to run away from him. And the King himſelf, with the Duke of Buckingham and ſome few Servants, was in the way of eſcape, but being diſcovered was brought back again, and to attone for many Indignities was crown'd at Scone. But ſoon after the Commiſſioners of the Kirk preſented a Remonſtrance to him, preſſing him to humble himſelf, and to repent of his own and his Father's Sins, that he might be thereby able to quit the Nation of their Enemies now in the Bowels of the Kingdom; and ſet forth an Exhortation to their Brethren not to communicate with any who deſerted the Kirk. And the King coming to Aberdeen about the end of February to haſten his Levies, the Presbytery there openly oppoſed his Proceedings, and would not ſuffer him to receive the Marqueſs of Huntley, nor to erect the Office of a Lord Chancellor. Under which ſtate of Perſecution we leave his Majeſty for this Year.

The King weary of the Scots.

The King's Ambaſſadors commanded by the K. of Spain to depart.

Only we may obſerve, that the hopeleſs condition of the King did incline the Court of Spain to favour the Engliſh Parliament; and therefore a Meſſage was delivered to the King's Ambaſſadors to deſire them to be gone; and when they preſſed for a longer ſtay, they had ſevere Orders to depart immediately. Sir Edward Hide went away to Antwerp in Flanders, and obtained ſo good recommendations to the Magiſtrates of that City, that he kept up the Name of an Ambaſſador, and enjoyed the Privilege of his Chapel; and all the Engliſh, who were numerous then in that City, repaired thither with all freedom for their Devotion and the Exerciſe of their Religion, which Liberty had never been before granted to any Man there; and which the Engliſh and Iriſh Prieſts, and the Roman Catholicks of thoſe Nations exceedingly murmured at, and uſed all the Endeavours they could to have taken away, tho' in vain. The other Ambaſſador, the Lord Cottington, who relapſed to Popery, petition'd and obtain'd leave to abide in Spain as a private Perſon, and ſo retired to Valledolid, where he died within one Year after in the 77th Year of his Age. His Brother Ambaſſador has left him this Character.

Death and Character of Lord Cottington.

"He was a very wiſe Man by the great and long "Experience he had in buſineſs of all kinds, and by "his natural Temper, which was not liable to any "tranſport of Anger or any other Paſſion; but could "bear Contradiction, and even Reproach, without "being moved or put out of his way: For he was "very ſteady in purſuing what he propoſed to him- "ſelf, and had a Courage not to be frighted with "any oppoſition. It is true he was illiterate as to "the Grammar of any Language, or the Principles of "any Science, but by his perfectly underſtanding "the Spaniſh (which he ſpoke as a Spaniard) the "French and Italian Languages, and having read "very much in all, he could not be ſaid to be ig- "norant in any part of Learning, Divinity only "excepted. He had a very fine and extraordinary "underſtanding in the Nature of Beaſts and Birds, "and above all in all kind of Plantations and Arts "of Husbandry. He was born a Gentleman both "by Father and Mother, his Father having a "pretty entire Seat near Bruton in Somerſetſhire, "worth about two hundred Pounds a Year, which "had deſcended from Father to Son for many hun- "dred Years, and is ſtill in the Poſſeſſion of his El- "der Brother's Children, the Family having been "always Roman Catholicks. His Mother was a "Stafford, nearly allied to Sir Edward Stafford, who "was Vice-Chamberlain to Queen Elizabeth, and "had been Ambaſſador in France; by whom this "Gentleman was brought up, and was Gentleman "of his Horſe, and left one of the Executors of his "Will, and by him recommended to Sir Robert Ce- "cil then Principal Secretary of State, who preferr'd "him to Sir Charles Conwallis when he went Ambaſ- "ſador into Spain, in the beginning of the Reign "of King James, where he remained for the ſpace "of eleven or twelve Years in the Condition of Se- "cretary or Agent, without ever returning into "England in all that time. He raiſed by his own "Virtue and Induſtry a very fair Eſtate, of which, "tho' the Revenue did not exceed above four thou- "ſand Pounds by the Year, yet he had four very good "Houſes and three Parks, the Value whereof was "not reckoned into that Computation. He liv'd very "nobly, well ſerv'd and attended in his Houſe; "had a better Stable of Horſes, better Proviſion for "Sports (eſpecially of Hawks, in which he took "great Delight) than moſt of his Quality, and li- "ved all Ways with great Splendor; for tho' he lo- "ved Money very well, and did warily enough con- "ſider the Circumſtances of getting it, he ſpent it "well always but in giving, which he did not af- "fect. He was of an excellent Humour and very "eaſy to live with; and under a grave Countenance "cover'd the moſt of Mirth, and cauſed more, than "any Man of the moſt pleaſant Diſpoſition. He ne- "ver uſed any Body ill, but uſed many very well "for whom he had no regard: His greateſt fault "was that he could diſſemble, and make them be- "lieve that he loved them very well, when he cared "not for them. He had not very tender Affections, "nor Bowels apt to yearn at all Objects which de- "ſerved Compaſſion. He was heartily weary of the "World, and no Man was more willing to die; "which is an Argument that he had peace of Con- "ſcience. He left behind him a greater eſteem of "his Parts than love to his Perſon."

The Parliament ingratiate themſelves with the City of London.

The Parliament (as a Houſe of Commons muſt be now called) were not wanting in the Politicks of ſecuring the City of London to a faſt Friendſhip with them. And for a Token of Love they preſented New-Park, a fair Lot of the Crown-Lands to the City and Chamber of London for ever in their Term of Conveyance, with ſeveral Houſes and Appurtenances, and one thouſand Pounds for diſtribution to the Poor. For which the Lord-Mayor, Aldermen and Common-Council were taught to come to the Parliament Doors

April 2, with their Addreſſes of Thanks, Declaring and Reſolving (through God's aſſiſtance) with the hazard of their Lives and Eſtates, to ſtand and fall with the Parliament againſt all wicked Practices, and oppoſite pretended Powers whatſoever. To which the Speaker was inſtructed to anſwer, That the Houſe took notice of this their good Reſolution, and of the ſeaſonableneſs of it; and the Houſe kindly accepted it, and gave them their Thanks for it. Yet Loyalty and Honeſty remained in many of the chief Citizens, who in this ſame Month preſented a Petition to the Parliament, expoſtulating with them about the change of Rights, Liberties, and Religion; for which reaſon it was rejected and cenſured, That the Scope thereof was to bring Scandal and Reproach upon the juſt and neceſſary Laws and Proceedings of the Parliament, and to weaken the preſent Government, to give thereby Advantage to the common Enemy, and to raiſe new Tumults and Troubles in the Nation.

Ordinances of Parliament againſt profaneneſs.

To gain the Reputation of Godlineſs and preciſe Juſtice, the Parliament paſſed an Act May 10, againſt Inceſt, Adultery, and Fornication; making the two firſt to be Felony without Benefit of the Clergy, and the latter to be puniſhed with Impriſonment for the firſt Offence, and Death for the Second. This Bill was ſmartly oppoſed by Mr. Henry Martin, who argued, That the ſeverity of the Puniſhment would cauſe the Sins to be the more frequently committed, becauſe People would learn to be the more ſly and cautious in the commiſſion of them, and the Parties ſo obliged to mutual Secrecy, that a Conviction would be impracticable. They paſſed another Act June 28, againſt Swearing and Curſing, with a Penalty of 30 s. on a Lord, 20 s. on a Baronet or Knight, 10 s. on an Eſquire, 6 s. 8 d. on a Gentleman, and 3 s. 4 d. on every other Perſon for the firſt Offence, and for the ſecond the Penalty doubled.

Project for altering the Laws.

The Matter that occaſioned moſt Debates in the Houſe, was the Project of altering the Forms of Law, and making all Writs and Proceedings to run only in the Engliſh Tongue. This was the Subject of ſeveral Petitions from the Soldiers and the Country Farmers, who indeed had reaſon to think themſelves impoſed upon by Languages which they did not underſtand. Hence it was at laſt enacted Nov. 22, that all Report Books of the Reſolutions of Judges, and other Books of the Law of England, ſhall be tranſlated into the Engliſh Tongue, and all Writs, Proceſs and Returns thereof, Pleadings, Rules, Orders, Indictments, Inquiſitions, Certificates, Patents, and all Acts, Deeds and Proceedings whatſoever, ſhall be only in the Engliſh Tongue, in the ordinary uſual Hand, and not in Court-Hand.

New Council of State.

The Council of State, who had the Executive Power, under direction of the Parliament and Army, was on Feb. 11, voted to be altered for the Year enſuing, twenty one of the old Members to continue, and twenty new Members to be choſen. The old Members continued in were Cromwel, Bradſhaw, Rolles, Saint John, Skippon, &c. the new Members taken in were Major-General Harriſon, Lieutenant-General Fleetwood, Sir Thomas Widdrington, Prideaux, Strickland, &c.

The King had ſent the Lord Cottington and Sir Edward Hide as his Ambaſſadors into Spain, where they found ſometimes a kind and ſometimes a cold Reception. The Parliament ſent likewiſe their Agent or Envoy Mr. Aſcham a Scholar, who had been concerned in drawing up the King's Trial, and had written a Book to determine in what time, and after how many Years, the Allegiance which is due from Subjects to their Sovereign comes to be determined after a Conqueſt, and that from that time it ought to be paid to thoſe who had ſubdued them. This new Agent was no ſooner come to Madrid, but the next Morning ſome Engliſh Officers and Soldiers who had ſerved in the Spaniſh Armies, went to his Lodgings, and without asking any Queſtions walk'd directly up the Stairs into his Chamber, drew their Swords, and beſides their Intentions in diſorder killed the Friar as well as the Agent, and ſo return'd to their Companions with their Swords naked and bloody, and ſome fooliſh Expreſſions of Triumph, as if they had performed a very gallant and juſtifiable Service. The King's two Ambaſſadors abhorr'd this Action, but had the misfortune to have one of their own Servants Henry Progers in it. In great trouble of Mind they immediately writ a Letter to the prime Miniſter Don Lewis de Haro, to expreſs the ſenſe they had of this unfortunate raſh Action; of which, they hoped, he did believe, if they had had any Notice or Suſpicion, they would have prevented it. Don Lewis returned them at that time a dry and a ſevere Anſwer. But when ſome Weeks were paſſed, the Ambaſſadors went to confer with Don Lewis upon ſome other Occurrence, with no purpoſe of mentioning any thing of that matter: but Don Lewis then ſpoke of it in a manner they did not expect; one Expreſſion was, Yo lengo invidia de eſtos Cavaleros, &c. I envy thoſe Gentlemen for having done ſo noble an Action; how Penal ſoever it may prove to them, to revenge the Blood of their King: Whereas he ſaid, The King his Maſter wanted ſuch Reſolute Subjects; otherwiſe he would never have loſt a Kingdom, as he had done Portugal, for want of one brave Man, who by taking away the Life of the Uſurper, might at any time, during the firſt two Years, have put an end to that Rebellion. The Perſons concerned in this bloody Fact might have diſperſed themſelves and been ſecure, but in confuſion they went into a little Chappel for Sanctuary, from whence in a Day or two they were taken by a principal Officer after Examination, and ſent to the Priſon, and were condemned to die, but then were delivered back into the ſame Chappel, and were kept there till they had all opportunity to make their eſcape; only one was apprehended and ſuffer'd Death. Mr. Progers had ſeparated from the reſt upon the firſt commiſſion of the Fact, and had got ſafely into France.

State of Religion.

In matters of Religion, the Parliament made an additional Act for Truſtees to pay out of the Rents of Appropriations formerly belonging to Biſhops, Deans, and Chapters, all ſuch Augmentations and Allowances as ſhould be made and ſettled by Parliament, for the Maintenance of preaching Miniſters, the Advancement of Learning, and other pious Uſes. For which there had been many other Acts and Orders, and an Office eſtabliſh'd for the execution of them, and yet with little effect but that of Suits and Delays. Another holy Act was made for the due obſervation and ſanctification of the Lord's-Day, and the Days of publick Humiliation and Thankſgiving; wherein the Penalties for profaning the Parliamentary Faſts and Thankſgivings were equal with thoſe for the profanation of the Lord's-Day, and made ſo by thoſe Men who had abrogated the Church Feſtivals and Faſts, on a pretence that thoſe Days aſſum'd a ſanctity due only to the Sabbath.

Blaſphemies and Witchcrafts.

Blaſphemies, Hereſies, Enthuſiaſms and Witchcrafts were in a full Tide. At Boſton in Lincolnſhire one Man and two Women were condemn'd; of whom the Man confeſt, that he had a Familiar ſuck'd him at ſome Paps which he then ſhew'd; that he had ſign'd a Writing to the Devil to deny God and Jeſus Chriſt; and that the Familiar drew Blood from thoſe Paps, and appeared to him in the ſhape of a white Chicken; that he ſigned the Devil's Covenant with a Piece of a Stick, with the ſame mark he now made at the bottom of his Examination; and both the Women confeſs'd the like. Four Men out of Somerſetſhire pretending to have an immediate Call from God to go and preach the Goſpel in Galilee, ſold their Eſtates and came to London in order to imbark for their own Miſſion. The Hereſies and Blaſphemies of the time are ſumm'd up in the Act made to reſtrain them. " Every Perſon that ſhall preſume " avowedly in Words to profeſs, or by writing pro- " ceed to affirm and maintain Him or Her, or any " meer Creature to be God, or to be Infinite or Al- " mighty, or in Honour, Excellency, Majeſty and " Power, to be equal and the ſame with the true " God; or that the true God or the eternal Majeſty

All and every Perſon or Perſons ſo avowedly profeſſing —— and thereof convicted, ſhall be committed to Priſon for ſix Months.—— And if after, they maintain or publiſh any of the ſaid Atheiſtical or blaſphemous Opinions, they ſhall be baniſhed this Commonwealth, and upon return ſhall be adjudged Felons, and ſuffer as in caſe of Felony." All theſe Suggeſtions of Horror and Hell do ſhew the diſtracted and deplorable Condition of theſe Times; and that the Fear of God was now as little as the Honour of the King. (a)

The Spirit of Presbytery ſhewed it ſelf to Perfection in Scotland; where, as the Lord Clarendon obſerves, upon the King's Arrival, "The firſt Welcome he received was a new Demand, that He would ſign the Covenant himſelf, before he ſet his Foot on ſhore; which all about him preſs'd him to do: and he now found, that he had made haſte thither upon very unskilful Imaginations and Preſumptions; yet he conſented unto what they ſo imperiouſly required. —— They removed his Engliſh Servants, and placed others about the King's Perſon, but principally relied upon their Clergy, who were in ſuch a continual Attendance about him, that he was never free from their Importunities, under pretence of inſtructing him in Religion; and ſo they obliged him to their conſtant hours of their long Prayers, and made him obſerve the Sundays with more Rigour than the Jews accuſtomed to do their Sabbath, and reprehended him very ſharply if he ſmiled on thoſe Days, and if his Looks and Geſtures did not pleaſe them, whilſt all their Prayers and Sermons, at which he was compelled to be preſent, were Libels and bitter Invectives againſt all the Actions of his Father, the Idolatry of his Mother, and his own Malignity.——Yet after their Defeat at Dunbar, they all look'd upon the King as one they might ſtand in need of; they permitted his Servants, who had been ſequeſtred from him from his Arrival in the Kingdom, to attend and wait upon him, and began to talk of calling a Parliament, and of a Time for the King's Coronation; which had not hitherto been ſpoken of. Some Miniſters began to preach Obedience to the King; the Officers who had been caſhier'd for their Malignity, talking aloud of the Miſcarriages in the Government, and that the Kingdom was betray'd to the Enemy for want of Confidence in the King, who alone could preſerve the Nation. So that the King did, in a good degree, enjoy the Fruit of this Victory, as well as Cromwell. — Yet again when the King was marching at the Head of an Army into England, and had ſent Maſſey with ſome Troops to march before; then was it fatal to all Scotiſh Armies, to have always in them a Committee of Miniſters, who ruin'd all; and tho' there had been now all the Care taken that could be, to chuſe ſuch Men for that Service as had the Reputation of being the moſt ſober and moderate of that whole Body, and who had ſhewed more Affection, and advanced the King's Service more than the reſt; yet this moderate People no ſooner heard that Maſſey was ſent before to call upon their Friends, and obſerved that from the Entrance into England, thoſe about the King ſeem'd to have leſs regard for the Covenant than formerly, but they ſent an Expreſs to him, without communicating it in the leaſt degree with the King, with Letters and a Declaration, wherein they required him to publiſh that Declaration, which ſignified the King's, and the whole Army's Zeal for the Covenant, and their Reſolutions to proſecute the Intereſt of it; and forbid him to receive or entertain any Soldiers in his Troops, but thoſe who would ſubſcribe that Obligation. The King had ſoon notice of this, and loſt no time in ſending to Maſſey not to publiſh any ſuch Declaration, and to behave himſelf with equal Civility towards all Men who were forward to ſerve his Majeſty." But before this Inhibition was receiv'd, the Matter had taken Air in all Places, and was ſpread over the Kingdom: All Men fled from their Houſes, or conceal'd themſelves, who wiſh'd the King very well. 1651. Proceedings of the K. in Scotland.

The King was at the Head of a conſiderable Army in Scotland, but had not the proper Command of them; for a ſelect Committee of Sixty was appointed to manage the Affairs of the War with the Conſent of the Kirk. Cromwel had order'd a Rendezvous of all his Horſe at Muſcleborough, and march'd thence to Glaſcow, and again return'd to Edinborough, where he lay ſo very ill of an Ague, that on May 27, the Parliament ſent two Phyſicians, Dr. Wright and Dr. Bates, to attend upon him; and deſired him to retire for his Health to ſome convenient Place in England for freſh Air, and to intruſt the Army in the mean time in ſuch hands as he ſhould think fit. But he ſoon recovered, and gain'd ſeveral Advantages over the Scots Army, much divided by the Factions of Hamilton and Argyle; and eſpecially in the Battle of Fife, where two thouſand of the Scots were Slain, and fourteen hundred taken Priſoners. By which Cromwel got between the King and the North Parts of Scotland; and ſo cutting off all Communication, forced the King upon the Neceſſity of marching into England. Cromwel ſent away Letters to the Parliament, that the Scots Army, in Fear and Deſperation, and out of inevitable Neceſſity, were run away into England; and doubts not but the Deſperateneſs and Folly of this Counſel of theirs would ſoon appear, for that he had ſent after them Major General Cromwel gains Advantages.

(a) The very Jews were compounding to be a ſort of Motley Chriſtians. One Manaſſ h Ben-Iſrael, a noted Jew, wrote and publiſh'd a Book, called, The Hope of Iſrael, which he ſent to the ſupreme Power of England in 1650, offering to prove from the ancient Rabbi's, that there are two Meſſiahs, one the Son of David, the other the Son of Joſeph, which latter was now coming to die in the laſt War of Gog and Magog, and afterward to riſe again, and ſit in the Throne of Meſſiah the Son of David.

Lambert,

1651. 3 Car. II.

Lambert, with a conſiderable Body of Horſe, to attend the Rear of the Enemy; and that he himſelf was haſting after them; and that he ſhould leave behind him a ſufficient Force under Lieutenant-General Monk to keep Scotland in awe.

The King flies into England.

The King deſerted by many of the Scotch Nobility, and great Numbers of common Soldiers, made rather a flying Retreat than a regular March to Preſton in Lancaſhire, hoping his Engliſh Subjects would have come in to his aſſiſtance; but all thoſe Parts had either ſuch an averſion to the Scots, or ſuch a reſtraint and terror from the cloſe purſuit that Cromwel and Lambert and Harriſon made after the King, that no Succour at all came in to him; which diſappointment the King took with patience, and marched his poor Army of twelve thouſand without committing any Violence, or doing any Injury to the Country.

Purſued by Cromwel.

The brave Earl of Derby was the only Engliſhman who made any attempt to ſupport the King; he got together a Body of 1500 Men, but before he could join the Royal Army, he was ſet upon by Colonel Lilburn near Wiggan and entirely routed, he himſelf wounded retreated into Cheſhire with about eighty Horſe, and being afterward taken Priſoner upon Quarter given, was ſentenc'd to Death, and loſt his Head at Bolton.

The King comes to Worceſter.

The King brought his Army much fatigu'd to Worceſter, where ſome Parliament Forces were got in and made a ſharp reſiſtance; but the worthy Citizens laying down their Arms, and even firing out of their Windows upon the Parliament Soldiers, the King obtain'd a quiet Poſſeſſion. Hence the King ſent a Letter to the City of London, but it was burnt by the common Hangman; and a Declaration of the Parliament was publiſh'd by Beat of Drum and Sound of Trumpet through all the Streets, proclaiming all thoſe to be Traitors and Rebels that do or ſhall adhere to the King and his Party. The King ſent out a Summons to all the adjacent Country, that all his loving Subjects, within the Age of 16 and 60, ſhould come in to him to Worceſter; but none came: ſo that finding himſelf not able to take the Field, he fortified the Town as well as the Time would allow, and kept up a ſtrict Diſcipline; and when any Engliſh Priſoners were brought to him, he treated them courteouſly, gave them his Hand to kiſs, and ſo diſcharg'd them.

Cromwel marches up to Worceſter, And gets a ſignal Victory.

Before the end of Auguſt, Cromwel was got up with his Foot and Baggage, and had his Head-Quarters within two Miles of Worceſter; and upon Septemb. 3, the ſame day Twelvemonth that he obtain'd the Victory at Dunbar, ſtorm'd the City, entred it, and gave the Scots an abſolute Defeat: and ſent this Account of it in a Letter to the Parliament.

Account of it in his own Letter.

I Am not able yet to give you an exact Account of the great things the Lord hath done for this Commonwealth, and for his People; and yet I am unwilling to be ſilent, but, according to my Duty, ſhall repreſent it to you as it comes to hand. This Battle was fought with various Succeſs for ſome hours, but ſtill hopeful on your part, and in the end became an abſolute Victory, and ſo full an one, as proved a total Defeat and Ruin of the Enemy's Army, and Poſſeſſion of the Town: Our Men entring at the Enemies heels, and fighting with them in the Streets, with very great Courage took all their Baggage and Artillery. What the Slain are I can give you no Account, becauſe we have not taken an exact View; but they are very many, and muſt needs be ſo, becauſe the Diſpute was long, and very near at hand, and often at puſh of Pike, and from one Defence to another. There are about ſix or ſeven thouſand Priſoners taken here, and many Officers and Noblemen of Quality: Duke Hamilton, the Earl of Rothes, and divers other Noblemen, I hear the Earl of Lauderdale, many Officers of great Quality, and ſome that will be fit Subjects of your Juſtice.———The Dimenſions of this Mercy are above my Thoughts; it is, for ought I know, a crowning Mercy; ſurely if it be not, ſuch a one we ſhall have, if this provoke thoſe that are concerned in it to Thankfulneſs, and the Parliament to do the Will of him who hath done his Will for it, and for the Nation; whoſe Good pleaſure is to eſtabliſh the Nation, and Change of the Government, by making the People ſo willing to the Defence thereof, and ſo ſignally to bleſs the Endeavours of your Servants in this late great Work. I am bold humbly to beg, that all Thoughts may tend to the promoting his Honour who hath wrought ſo great Salvation, and that the Fatneſs of theſe continued Mercies may not occaſion Pride and Wantonneſs, as formerly the like hath done to a choſen People; but that the Fear of the Lord even for his Mercies may keep an Authority and a People ſo proſper'd and bleſſed, and witneſſed to humble and faithful, that Juſtice and Righteouſneſs, Mercy and Truth, may flow from you, as a thankful Return to our glorious God. This ſhall be the Prayer of

Your moſt humble and obedient Servant,

Worceſt. Sept. 4, 1651. O. Cromwel.

Defeat of the Earl of Derby.

The firſt ill Omen of the King's Misfortunes, was the News of the Defeat of the Earl of Derby at Wigan in Lancaſhire, and the total Deſtruction of thoſe gallant Perſons who accompanied him. The Earl, after his Horſe had been ſhot under him, made a ſhift to mount again; and ſo, with a ſmall Party of Horſe, through many Difficulties and Dangers, eſcap'd wounded to the King to Worceſter. The Lord Withrington, after he had received many Wounds, and given as many, and merited his Death by the Vengeance he took upon theſe who aſſaulted him, was kill'd upon the Place. Of whom my Lord Clarendon gives this Character, Character of Lord Widrington.

"He was one of the moſt goodly Perſons of that Age, being near the Head higher than moſt tall Men, and a Gentleman of the beſt and moſt ancient Extraction of the County of Northumberland, and of a very fair Fortune, and one of the four which the laſt King made choice of to be about the Perſon of his Son the Prince as Gentleman of his Privy Chamber, when he firſt ſettled his Family. His Affection to the King was always remarkable; and ſerving in the Houſe of Commons, as Knight of the Shire for the County of Northumberland, he quickly got the Reputation of being amongſt the moſt Malignant. As ſoon as the War broke out, he was of the firſt who raiſed both Horſe and Foot at his own Charge, and ſerv'd eminently with them under the Marqueſs of Newcaſtle, with whom he had a very particular and entire Friendſhip. He was very nearly allied to the Marqueſs; and by his Teſtimony that he had performed many ſignal Services, he was, about the middle of the War, made a Peer of the Kingdom. He was a Man of great Courage, but of ſome Paſſion, by which he incurr'd the Ill-will of many, who imputed it to an Inſolence of Nature, which no Man was farther from; no Man of a Nature more civil, and candid towards all, in Buſineſs or Converſation. But having ſat long in the Houſe of Commons, and obſerv'd the Diſingenuity of the Proceedings there, and the groſs Cheats, by which they deceived and cozened the People, he had contracted ſo hearty an Indignation againſt them, and all who were cozen'd by them, and againſt all who had not his Zeal to oppoſe and deſtroy them, that he often ſaid things to ſlow and flegmatick Men which offended them, and it may be injur'd them; which his Good-nature often obliged him to acknowledge, and aſk Pardon of thoſe who would not queſtion him for it. He tranſported himſelf into the Parts beyond the Sea at the ſame time with the Marqueſs of Newcaſtle, to accompany him, and remain'd ſtill with him till the King went into Scotland, and then waited upon his Majeſty, and endured the ſame Affronts which others did during the time of his Reſidence there: And, it may be, the Obſervation of their Behaviour, the Knowledge of their Principles, and the Diſdain of their Treatment, produced that Averſion from their Conver-

1651. 3 Car. II.

"Converſation, that prevailed upon his Impatience "to part too ſoon from their Company, in hope "that the Earl of Derby, under whom he was very "willing to ſerve, and he Himſelf, might quickly "draw together ſuch a Body of the Royal Party, "as might give ſome Check to the unbounded Ima- "ginations of that Nation. It was reported by the "Enemy, that, in reſpect of his brave Perſon and "Behaviour, they did offer him Quarter, which he "refuſed; and that they were thereby compelled, "in their own Defence, to kill him: which is pro- "bable enough; for he knew well the Animoſity "the Parliament had againſt him, and it cannot be "doubted but that if he had fallen into their hands, "they would not have uſed him better than they "did the Earl of Derby, who had not more Ene- "mies."

The King could provide for no Safety but that of his own Perſon; nor could he have done this without a wonderful Providence. He went out of St. Martin's Gate about Seven at Night in the Duſk, with the Earl of Derby; by whoſe Direction he got to an obſcure Houſe called Whiteladies, twenty five Miles from Worceſter, betwixt Three and Four the next Morning, and there committed himſelf to the Fidelity of the Penderils, two Brothers, who put him immediately into the Habit of a Wood-cutter, and ſent him to work in an adjoining Coppice all Day Sept. 4, and in the Night following Richard Penderil carried him to the Houſe of Mr. Wolſe of Madeley, and there lodg'd him in a Barn, and thence guided him to Boſcobel, where he hid himſelf in an Oak in the Day-time, and ſtole into the Houſe at Nights. Hence John Penderil, ſent hither by the Lord Wilmot, brought him, in the Habit and on the Horſe of a Miller, to Mr. Whitgrave's Houſe at Moſely, and ſo, by the Lord Wilmot's Advice, to Bentley, (a) where Colonel Lane contrived that the King ſhould ride as a Servant before his Siſter Mrs. Jane Lane, to Briſtol. Upon the Road the King was very near Diſcovery upon ſhooing his Horſe at a Forge, but happen'd to paſs free to Eveſham and Cirenceſter, and ſo to the Houſe of Mr. Norton at Leigh within three Miles of Briſtol, where he was diſcovered by the Butler John Pope (a Soldier formerly in his Maje- ſty's Army) who kept the Secret. The King was conducted hence by the Lord Wilmot to the Houſe of Colonel Windham at Trent in Dorſetſhire, where he continued three Weeks, not without the Privity of ſix or ſeven Perſons in the Family, in Expectation of a Paſſage from Lime; but being diſappointed of theſe Hopes, he was forc'd to wander on to Bridport, where an Oſtler claiming Knowledge of him, he haſted away to Broad-Windſor, and hurried back again to Colonel Windham's; thence to the Houſe of Mr. Hide at Heal, and after ſtrange Eſcapes came to Brighthamſtead in Suſſex, where Colonel Gunter and Mr. Maunſel had hired a Ship to carry him over to France. The Maſter, one Tetterſhal, diſcover'd the King, having ſeen him in the Downs, where he had obtained a Releaſe of his Veſſel bound from Newcaſtle; but encourag'd with Money, and Proſpect of Honour, he promiſed to tranſport his Royal Paſſenger: but going home for a Bottle of Strong-water, his Wife became Partaker of the Secret; yet for Loyalty or Lucre ſhe encourag'd her Husband to perform the Contract, and the King landed ſafely at Diep in France on Octob. 21. A ſignal Mercy of God in the miraculous Protection of his Anointed.

The K.'s wonderful Eſcape.

The Royal Oak.

In the Fight at Worceſter, Duke Hamilton, who had charged the Enemy with great Vigour, had his Leg broke with a Shot; and falling into the Enemy's hands, he died the next Day of his Wounds, and thereby prevented the being made a Spectacle as his Brother had been; which the Pride and Animoſity of his Enemies would, no doubt, have cauſed to be, having the ſame Pretence for it, being a Peer of England, as the other was. The Lord Clarendon gives him this Character: "He was in all reſpects "to be much preferred before the other; a much "wiſer, tho' it may be a leſs cunning Man: for he "did not affect Diſſimulation, which was the other's "Maſter-piece. He had unqueſtionable Cou- "rage; he was in truth a very accompliſh'd Per- "ſon, of an excellent Judgment, and clear and "ready Expreſſions; and tho' he had been driven "into ſome unwarrantable Actions, he made it ve- "ry evident he had not been led by any Inclinati- "ons of his own, and paſſionately and heartily "ran to all Opportunities of redeeming it: And, "in the very Article of his Death, he expreſſed a "marvellous Cheerfulneſs, That he had the Honour "to loſe his Life in the King's Service, and thereby to "wipe out the Memory of his former Tranſgreſſions, "which he always profeſſed were odious to himſelf."

1651. 3 Car. II.

Death and Character of Duke Hamilton.

Cromwel, in triumph, order'd the Walls of Worceſter to be levell'd with the Ground, and the Dikes fill'd up; and then march'd up to London, driving his Priſoners like Sheep before him, and making Preſents of them, on occaſion, as of ſo many Slaves; and ſelling the reſt for that purpoſe into the Plantations. He was met beyond Aylesbury by four Members of Parliament, ſent from the Houſe to pay him all the Marks of Favour and Honour. When he came to Acton, he was met by the Speaker and Members, and within the City-Liberties by the Lord-Mayor and Aldermen: and on Septemb. 16, he took his Place in Parliament, and had exceſſive Complements from the Speaker in the Name of the Houſe, and was the ſame Day feaſted in the City of London with all poſſible State and Plenty. And two Acts were drawn up in Honour of him; one for a ſolemn Thankſgiving-Day, and another for a yearly Obſervation of the third Day of September in all the three Kingdoms, with a Narrative of the grounds thereof.

Cromwel triumphs.

In Scotland, the rigid Presbyterians had the Conſcience to impute the Defeat of their Brethren in England to their want of inſiſting upon ſtricter Terms with the King: And divers Scots Miniſters had the Grace to deſire a Permiſſion from General Monk to meet in Edinburgh to keep a Day of Humiliation for this Sin, their too much Compliance with the King. Whatever they thought their Sin, they had certainly a grievous Puniſhment; for Monk, left there by Cromwel with a piece of an Army, ſoon took Sterlin their chief Strength; and not long after ſurprized a Convention of the Scotch Nobility, old General Leſley among them, and went on to the abſolute Reduction of that Kingdom, which Cromwel kept in Subjection as a conquer'd Province.

Scots perfidious and ſtill rebellious.

Humbled by Monk.

Soon after Worceſter Fight, the Iſle of Man generouſly defended by the Counteſs of Derby, and the Iſle of Jerſey bravely maintained by Sir George Carteret, were both reduced under the Power of the Parliament: ſo as the new Commonwealth extended now as far as the late Monarchy.

It muſt be obſerved, that after Worceſter Fight

(a) Father Hudleſton, who aſſiſted King Charles II. in his laſt Scene of dying a Papiſt, now waited on him in his abſcondings, and took the opportunity to perſwade him to be a Papiſt, as he told the World, in his republiſhing a little Treatiſe in 1685, called, A ſhort and plain way to the Faith of the Church; that this Treatiſe had formerly made great Impreſſions upon the Mind of King Charles in the Year 1651, in his Retirement ſoon after the Battle of Worceſter, when he himſelf was ſo great an Inſtrument of his Eſcape; and that upon peruſal of it his Majeſty then declared, that He had not ſeen any thing more plain and clear upon the Subject; and the Arguments drawn from Succeſſion were ſo concluſive, he did not conceive how they could be deny'd. This was an early advance toward Popery. But even the Foundation was laid before this time, at leaſt in the Opinion of him who diſcover'd the Plot of the Papiſts to Andrew ab Habernfeld in Holland, 1640, whoſe expreſs Words are, that King Charles I. was to permit a univerſal Toleration for the free exerciſe of all Religions; to which Si difficiliorem ſeſe exhibuerit, remedium erit in promptu: Adoleſcente enim cumprimùm Regio FILIO (qui à teneris ut Parti Pontificiæ adſueſcat educatur) de Rege actum eſt. Nux quippe Indica acutiſſimo veneno referta in Societate ſervatur, &c.

Order

1651. 3 Car. II. Order was taken for the Trial of the Earl of Derby, and ſuch other notorious Priſoners as they had voted to Deſtruction. The Lord Clarendon gives this Character, and this Account of his Execution. "The "Earl of Derby was a Man of unqueſtionable Loyalty to the late King, and gave clear Teſtimony "of it before he receiv'd any Obligations from the "Court, and when he thought himſelf diſobliged "by it. This King, in his firſt Year, ſent him the "Garter, which in many Reſpects he had expected "from the laſt: And the Senſe of that Honour "made him ſo readily comply with the King's Command in attending him, when he had no Confidence in the Undertaking, nor any Inclination "to the Scots; who, he thought, had too much "Guilt upon them, in having depreſſed the Crown, "to be made Inſtruments of repairing and reſtoring "it. He was a Man of great Honour and clear "Courage; and all his Defects and Miſfortunes, "proceeded from his having liv'd ſo little time "among his Equals, that he knew not how to treat "his Inferiors; which was the Source of all the Ill "that befel him, having thereby drawn ſuch Prejudice againſt him from Perſons of inferior Quality, who yet thought themſelves too good to be "contemn'd, that they purſu'd him to Death."

Character of the Earl of Derby.

His Trial. The King's Army was no ſooner defeated at Worceſter, but the Parliament renewed their old method of Murdering in cold Blood; and ſent a Commiſſion to erect a High Court of Juſtice to Perſons of ordinary Quality, many not being Gentlemen, and all notoriouſly his Enemies, to try the Earl of Derby for his Treaſon and Rebellion; which they eaſily found him guilty of, and put him to Death in a Town of his own, againſt which he had expreſſed a ſevere Diſpleaſure for their obſtinate Rebellion againſt the King, with all the Circumſtances of Rudeneſs and Barbarity they could invent. The ſame Night, one of thoſe who was amongſt his Judges ſent a Trumpet to the Iſle of Man, with a Letter directed to the Counteſs of Derby, by which he required her, To deliver up the Caſtle and Iſland to the Parliament: Nor did their Malice abate, till they had reduced that Lady (a Woman of very high and Princely Extraction, being the Daughter of the D. de Trimouille in France, and of the moſt exemplary Virtue and Piety of her time) and that whole moſt noble Family, to the loweſt Penury and Want, by diſpoſing, giving, and ſelling all the Fortune and Eſtate ſhould ſupport it.

Cromwel propoſes to Reign. The Care of Cromwel was to improve his Victories to his own Intereſt: and for this purpoſe he deſired a Meeting with divers Members of Parliament and ſome chief Officers of the Army, at the Speaker's Houſe. Where (as Whitlock, one of the Number, tells us) he propoſed to them, That now the old King being dead, and his Son being defeated, he held it neceſſary to come to a Settlement of the Nation: and in order thereto he had requeſted this Meeting, that They together might conſider and adviſe what was fit to be done, and to be preſented to the Parliament. When the Speaker and Colonel Harriſon had delivered themſelves in general Words; Whitlock, who knew Cromwel's mind, offer'd a Queſtion, Whether the Settlement deſired ſhould be by way of an abſolute Republick, or with any mixture of Monarchy? Then Cromwel took the hint, and anſwered, My Lord Commiſſioner Whitlock hath put us upon the right Point; and indeed it is my Meaning, that we ſhould conſider whether a Republick or a mixt Monarchical Government will be beſt to be ſettled; and if any thing Monarchical, then in Whom that Power ſhall be placed. When he had heard Colonel Deſborough and Whaley declaring for a ſtrict Republick, and Sir Thomas Widdrington pleading for a mixt Monarchichal Government, to be placed upon Terms in one of the King's Sons; Cromwel replied, That will be a Buſineſs of more than ordinary Difficulty: but really I think, if it may be done with Safety, and Preſervation of our Rights, both as Engliſhmen and as Chriſtians, that a Settlement with ſomewhat of Monarchical Power in it would be very effectual. In Concluſion, after a long Debate, the Company parted without coming to any Reſult at all; only Cromwel diſcovered by this Meeting the Inclinations of the Perſons that ſpake, for which he fiſh'd, and made uſe of what he then diſcerned. 1651. 3 Car. II.

Cromwel weary of the Parliament. Cromwel made one other Step toward his Deſigns, by bringing the Houſe into a Vote Nov. 18. That the time for Continuance of this Parliament, beyond which they reſolve not to Sit, ſhall be the third Day of November 1654. Which help'd much to draw off the Eyes and Hearts of the People from a Parliament near unto Extinction; and fix'd them upon the General and his Army, that were not likely to be diſſolv'd. So that from this time all Petitions and other Applications were to the General and his Officers, not to the Speaker and the Commons; who did little in the remainder of this Year, but appoint a Committee to conſider of the Inconveniences and Delays in the Proceedings of Law: wherein one of the Council to this Committee tells us, "That none of "them was more active in this Buſineſs than Mr. "Hugh Peters the Miniſter, who underſtood little "of the Law, but was very opinionative, and "would frequently mention ſome Proceedings of "Law in Holland, wherein he was altogether miſtaken." This Committee for regulating the Law preſented to a Committee of Parliament, to be reported to the Houſe, the Draughts of ſeveral Acts: 1. For taking away Fines upon Bills, Declarations, and Original Writs. 2. Againſt cuſtomary Oaths of Fealty and Homage to Lords of Mannors. 3. For taking away common Recoveries, and the unneceſſary Charge of Fines, and to paſs and charge Lands entailed, as Lands in Fee-ſimple. 4. For aſcertaining arbitrary Fines upon Deſcent and Alienation of Copyholds of Inheritance. 5. For the more ſpeedy Recovery of Rents. 6. Touching Pleaders, and their Fees. 7. For the more ſpeedy regulating and eaſie Diſcovery of Debts and Damages, not exceeding 4 l. and under. 8. For Marriages to be made before Juſtices of the Peace.

State of Religion. Presbyterians out-witted and over-power'd by the Independents. Nothing obſervable in the State of Religion, (a) but the Decay and approaching Downfall of Presbytery. The Engliſh Presbyterians had been ſtartled at the Murder of the King, and more diſturbed at the Prevalence of an Independent Faction in the Army. Under theſe Grievances and Jealouſies, they leaned much toward Hopes and Help from their Scotch Brethren, and for their ſakes were inclined for the Reſtoration of the King as in Covenant with them. This Zeal for their own Cauſe carried many of the Presbyterian Miniſters in London into a Correſpondence with the Kirk, and ſo into a Plot for the King, diſtinguiſh'd by the Name of the Presbyterian Plot. This was ſoon diſcovered by the Vigilancy of the Government, and by the Forwardneſs of the Men concern'd: So Mr. Love, Mr. Jenkins, Mr. Drake, very eminent Presbyterian Divines, were ſeized by Order of the Council of State, and in order to their Trial, were on May 7, brought before the High Court of Juſtice; and Mr. Love was firſt charged with High-Treaſon againſt the State and Commonwealth of England, for holding Correſpondence with the King and his Party, and ſupplying them with Arms and Money, contrary to an Act of Parliament in that Caſe provided. He at firſt diſputed the Authority of the Court, and then inſiſted upon his own Merits in promoting the Cauſe of the Parliament; and terrified Mr. Jackſon a Miniſter from giving in Evidence againſt him; for which obſtinate Refuſal he was fined by the Court 500 l. Mr Love's Plot.

(a) Except the increaſing Madneſs of Sectaries and Enthuſiaſts incredible. At the Quarter Seſſions at Weſtminſter, on 24, June 1651, there were five Ranters convented before Col. Baxter and other Juſtices, upon ſufficient proof, that they had maintained that one Robins a Glazier was a Prophet, and that his Wife was with Child of the Meſſias, &c. Birchley's Chriſtian Moderator. 4*to.* 1652. p. 51.

1651. 3 Car. II. and committed to the Fleet. At another Appearance June 25, he did at laſt confeſs, That the Conſpirators met at his Houſe for furthering the Scots Deſigns; and that Letters were received, and Anſwers were ſent from thence; but equivocated in Excuſes, that he did not do it Himſelf, and that he did not Perſonally act any thing, &c. In ſhort, tho' he had Mr. Matthew Hale for an Advocate, and the whole Party for Sollicitors, on July 5, he received Sentence to be Beheaded; and the Day of Execution was appointed on the 15th. Before the Day, very fervent Petitions were preſented from himſelf and his Friends, to the Parliament, for Pardon of his Life; which, on long Debate, paſs'd in the Negative. And on the very Day appointed for Execution, ſeveral Miniſters in and about London came with a moſt importunate Petition to the Houſe, praying earneſtly, and in the Bowels of Jeſus Chriſt, who when we were Sinners died for us, if not totally to ſpare the Life of our dear Brother; that yet you would ſay of him, as Solomon of Abiathar, that at this time he ſhall not be put to Death. Upon which the Parliament granted him a Reprieve for one Month. Within this time, all poſſible Sollicitations were uſed to the Men in Power; and particular Application was made to Cromwel, then in Scotland, who ſent back a Letter of his free Conſent to the Pardon of him: but the Poſt-Boy being ſeized by ſome Cavaliers, they ſearch'd his Pacquet, and with ſpecial Indignation tore the Letter relating to Mr. Love, as thinking him not worthy to live who had been ſuch a Firebrand in the Treaty at Uxbridge.

The Council of State and Leaders in the Parliament hearing nothing from Cromwel, and not finding the ingenuous diſcovery and humble Submiſſion which they expected from Mr. Love (after the Condemnation of two other of his Accomplices Mr. Potter and Mr. Gibbons) they vacated his Reprieve, and recommitted him to the High Court of Juſtice, by whoſe Order he was executed on Tower-Hill with Mr. Gibbons on Aug. 22 (a). The Lord Clarendon gives this Character. "This poor Man Love, who had "been guilty of as much Treaſon againſt the King "from the beginning of the Rebellion as the Pulpit "could contain, was ſo much without remorſe for "any Wickedneſs of that kind that he had committed, that he was jealous of nothing ſo much as of "being ſuſpected to repent, or that he was brought "to ſuffer for his Affection to the King. And therefore when he was upon the Scaffold, where he appeared with a marvellous undauntedneſs, he ſeemed ſo much delighted with the Memory of all that "he had done againſt the late King, and againſt the "Biſhops, that he could not even then forbear to "ſpeak with Animoſity and Bitterneſs againſt both, "and expreſſed great Satisfaction in Mind for what "he had done againſt them, and was as much tranſported with the inward Joy of Mind that he felt "in being brought thither to die as a Martyr, and "to give Teſtimony for the Covenant, whatſoever "he had done being in the purſuit of the Ends, he "ſaid, of that ſanctified Obligation to which he was "in, and by his Conſcience engaged. And in this "raving Fit, without ſo much as praying for the "King, otherwiſe than that he might propagate the "Covenant, he laid his Head upon the Block with "as much Courage as the braveſt and honeſteſt Man "could do on the moſt pious occaſion." (b)

Love and Gibbons executed.

This blow help'd to widen the Breach between the Presbyterians and the prevailing Powers: For from this time the Presbyterians were alway ſuſpected of Loyalty to the King, and the Parliament and the Army were alway jealous of them. Aug. 31, was appointed a Day of Thankſgiving for the Succeſs of the Parliament's Forces in Scotland and againſt the Earl of Derby; and we are told, That the Miniſters who were not of the rigid Presbyterian Judgment, were zealous in the Duties of the Day; but ſome of the more rigid Perſons did not think fit to obſerve that Order, but dropt it in publick, and had their private Meetings to pray to God to bleſs their Brethren of the Presbytery and the Cauſe they were engaged in. And Oct. 24, being kept for a ſolemn Rejoycing over the King's defeat at Worceſter, was ſo much ſlighted and ſlovenly obſerved by ſome of them, that they hardly eſcaped a publick Cenſure. Tho' it was the Policy of the governing People to make them eaſy, by granting a Pardon upon humble Acknowledgment and Submiſſion to Mr. Jenkins, Mr. Caſe, Mr. Drake, and others, who had confeſt themſelves guilty of Mr. Love's Conſpiracy. The Petition of Mr. Jenkins for his Life went high, and expreſly owned the Authority of the prevailing Powers to be from God; for which reaſon it is ſaid to have been printed here, and reprinted in Holland by Order and Procurement of the Houſe of Parliament, to ſtop the Mouths of all other Presbyterians, and gain the reputation of a Divine Right to them and their Cauſe. 1651. 3 Car. II.

The poor Church of England being baniſhed from its home, met with another Perſecution abroad, of which this Account is well given by a Witneſs of it, the Lord Clarendon. "There was another inſtance "of the King's extreme low Condition, and of the "higheſt diſreſpect the Court of France could expreſs "towards him, and of which all the Proteſtant Party of the Queen's Family complained very vehemently. From the time of the Queen's being in "France, the late King had appointed a Chaplain "of his own, Dr. Coſins, who was afterwards Biſhop of Durham, to attend upon her Majeſty, for "the conſtant Service of that part of her Houſhold, "the number of her Proteſtant Servants being much "ſuperiour to thoſe who were Roman Catholicks: "And the Queen had always punctually comply'd "with the King's directions, and uſed the Chaplain "very graciouſly, and aſſigned him a competent "Support with the reſt of her Servants. An under "Room in the Louvre, out of any common Paſſage, "had been aſſigned for their Morning and Evening "Devotions, the Key whereof was committed to "the Chaplain, who cauſed the Room to be decently furniſhed and kept, being made uſe of to no "other purpoſe. Here, when the Prince came thither, and afterwards whilſt he ſtaid, he perform'd "his Devotions all the Week, but went Sundays ſtill "to the Reſident's Houſe to hear Sermons. After this "time an Order was ſent from the Queen Regent, "that that Room ſhould be no more apply'd to "that purpoſe, and the French King would not permit the Exerciſe of any other Religion in any of "his Houſes than the Roman Catholick; and the "Queen gave notice to the Chaplain, that ſhe was "no longer able to continue the payment of the "Exhibition ſhe had formerly aſſign'd to him. "The Proteſtants, whereof many were of the beſt "Quality, lamented this alteration to the Chancellor of the Exchequer, and deſired him to interceed "with the Queen, which he had the more Title to "do, becauſe at his going into Spain ſhe had vouchſafed to promiſe him (upon ſome Rumours of "which he took notice) that the ſame Privilege "which had been ſhould ſtill be continued, and enjoy'd by the Proteſtants of her Houſhold; and "that ſhe would provide for the Chaplain's ſubſiſtence. He preſum'd therefore to ſpeak with her "Majeſty upon it; and beſought her to conſider "what ill impreſſion this new Order would make "upon the Proteſtants of all the King's Dominions,

"upon whom he was chiefly to depend for his Reſtauration; and how much prejudice it might be to her ſelf, to be look'd upon to be a greater Enemy to Proteſtants than ſhe had been taken notice of to be; and likewiſe, whether this Order, which had been given ſince the departure of the Duke of York, might not be made uſe of as an excuſe for his not returning, or indeed for his going away at firſt, ſince the preciſe time when it iſſued would not be generally underſtood. The Queen heard him very graciouſly, and acknowledged, That what he ſaid had Reaſon in it; but proteſted that ſhe knew not what Remedy to apply to it; that ſhe had been her ſelf ſurprized with that Order, and was troubled at it; but that the Queen Regent was poſitive in it, and blamed her for want of Zeal in her Religion; and that ſhe cared not to advance it, or to convert any of her Children. She wiſhed him to confer with Mr. Mountague upon it; and imply'd, that his bigotry in his new Religion, had contributed much to the procuring that Order. He had newly taken Orders, and was become Prieſt in that Church, and had greater Power with the Queen Regent, as well for his Animoſity againſt that Religion he had profeſt, as for his vehement Zeal for the Church of which he now was. Upon this occaſion, her Majeſty expreſſed a great ſenſe of the loſs ſhe had ſuſtained by the Death of her old Confeſſor, Father Philips, who ſhe ſaid, was a prudent and diſcreet Man, and would never ſuffer her to be preſſed to any paſſionate Undertakings under pretence of doing good for Catholicks; and always told her, that as ſhe ought to continue firm and conſtant to her own Religion, ſo ſhe was to live well towards the Proteſtants, who deſerved well from her, and to whom ſhe was beholden. She ſaid, it would not be poſſible to have the ſame or any other Room ſet aſide, or allowed to be uſed as a Chappel; but that ſhe would take ſuch courſe, that the Family might meet for the exerciſe of their Devotion in ſome private Room that belonged to their Lodgings; and that tho' her own Exhibition was ſo ill paid that ſhe was indebted to all her Servants, yet ſhe would give Order that Dr. Coſins (againſt whom ſhe had ſome perſonal Exceptions) ſhould receive his Sallary in proportion with the reſt of her Servants. She bid him aſſure the Duke of York, that he ſhould have a free Exerciſe of his Religion as he had before, tho' it muſt not be in the ſame place. (a)

"The Chancellor conferr'd with Mr. Mountague upon the Subject, and offer'd the ſame Reaſons which he had done to the Queen; which he look'd upon as of no Moment, but ſaid, That the King of France was Maſter in his own Houſe, and he was reſolved, tho' the King of England himſelf ſhould come thither again, never to permit any ſolemn Exerciſe of the Proteſtant Religion in any Houſe of his. The Conſideration of what the Proteſtants in England might think on this occaſion was of leaſt moment to him; and it was indeed the common Diſcourſe there, that the Proteſtants of the Church of England could never do the King Service, but that all his hopes muſt be in the Roman Catholicks and the Presbyterians; and that he ought to give all ſatisfaction to both Parties. (b)

Anno 1652, The Scots finding their Army in England ſwallowed up, and their own Country ravaged and reduced to a Conqueſt by the Engliſh Arms, the Deputies of their Shires and Boroughs drew up their Form of Conſent, required from them by the Engliſh Commiſſioners, to an Union with England in one Commonwealth, without a King or Houſe of Lords, and to live peaceably in Submiſſion to the Authority of the Parliament of England. And an Act was ſoon after prepar'd at Weſtminſter, for Incorporating Scotland into one Commonwealth and Free State with England, and for aboliſhing the Kingly Office in Scotland. 1652. 4 Car. II. The Conqueſt of Scotland makes an Union of it with England.

Cromwel had laid a Scheme, that was now to be artfully carried on. Hence May 11, a Committee was reviv'd for ſetting a Period to this Parliament, and providing for the due Qualification of future Repreſentatives. This amus'd the Houſe, and opened the Inclination of the reſpective Members. Policy of Cromwel.

Cromwel had loſt much of his Influence on the Affairs of Ireland by the Death of his Son-in-Law Lieutenant-General Ireton, who died of the Plague in Limerick Nov. 27, 1651, ſucceeded in the Government of that Army by Edmund Ludlow Eſq; who would have thereby aſſumed the Regency of that Kingdom, at leaſt till the coming over of Major-General Lambert, who was named by the Parliament to be Lord Lieutenant. But a Vote of Parliament was obtained June 16, that the Act of Parliament conſtituting Oliver Cromwel Captain-General and Commander in chief of the Armies and Forces raiſed by their Authority within England, ſhall extend to the Forces in Ireland as if Ireland had been therein particularly named. And that the Lord-General be required to appoint ſuch Perſon as he ſhall think fit to command the Forces in Ireland, and to Commiſſionate him accordingly. Whereby to the great offence of Lambert and Ludlow, Lieutenant-General Fleetwood had the Command in chief of the Forces in Ireland, to hold under the Lord-General Cromwel; and under his Conduct that Kingdom was ſoon brought into perfect Subjection. Death of Ireton. Fleetwood placed in Ireland.

This Character is given of Ireton by the Lord Clarendon. "He was of a melancholick, reſerv'd, dark Nature, who communicated his Thoughts to very few; ſo that for the moſt part he reſolved alone, but was never diverted from any Reſolution he had taken; and he was thought often by his obſtinacy to prevail over Cromwel himſelf, and to extort his Concurrence contrary to his own Inclinations. But that proceeded only from his diſſembling leſs; for he was never reſerved in the owning and communicating his worſt and moſt barbarous Purpoſes, which the other always concealed and diſavowed. Hitherto their Concurrence had been very natural, ſince they had the ſame Ends and Deſigns. It was generally conceived by thoſe who had the opportunity to know them both very well, that Ireton was a Man ſo radically averſe from Monarchy, and ſo fixed to a Republick Government, that if he had lived, he would either by his Council and Credit have prevented thoſe exceſſes in Cromwel, or publickly oppoſed and declared againſt them, and carried the greateſt part of the Army with him; and that Cromwel, who beſt knew his Nature and his Temper, had therefore carried him into Ireland and left him there, that he might be without his Counſels or Importunities, when he ſhould find it ne-

(a) James D. of York, under his Mother's greater Influence, was a very early Convert to Popery. The Author of The Myſtery of Iniquity working in the dividing of Proteſtants. 1689. 4*to.* had good authority, to ſay, p. 6. within theſe five Years, there was in the Cuſtody of a very worthy honeſt Gentleman, a Letter written to the late Biſhop of D. by a Doctor of Divinity, then attending upon the Royal Brothers, wherein the Apoſtacy of the Duke of York; and how he abjured the Proteſtant Religion, and was reconciled to the Romiſh Church at St. Germanes in France is particularly related; and an Account given, how much the Dutcheſs of Tremouille, who (without being her ſelf obſerved) had heard the Queen Mother glorying of it, bewailed it as a diſhonour to the Royal Family, &c.

(b) They who ſuſpected K. Charles II. to be a Papiſt, objected, that while he was at Paris, he never came to Sermon at Charenton. To which Monſ. L' Angle anſwers; 'tis well known the King of England had his Exerciſes of his Religion, which is ours, in his Palace, and there had the Word of God preached, and the Sacraments adminiſtred after the manner of Charenton. I ſhould certainly have been glad he had been there, and 'tis to be wiſhed, that thoſe who were then about him, had brought him hither. So great an Example had brought Joy and Conſolation to our Churches, and confuſion to our Enemies, who thereby had been deprived of their moſt ſpecious Pretext, to abuſe the Religion of this Prince. Letter of Monſ. L' Angle. Printed 1660. 4*to*.

"ceſſary to put off his Mask, and to act that part which he foreſaw it would be requiſite to do. Others thought his Parts lay more towards Civil Affairs, and were fitter for the modelling that Government which his Heart was ſet upon (being a Scholar, converſant in the Law, and in all thoſe Authors who had expreſſed the greateſt Animoſity and Malice againſt the Regal Government) than for the Conduct of an Army to ſupport it; his Perſonal Courage being never reckon'd among his other Abilities."

And to render the new Commonwealth more glorious, or rather to make Cromwel more abſolute, the Engliſh Navy under Admiral Blake, Vice-Admiral Pen, and Sir Gerge Aſcue, was this Year proſper'd with very great and repeated Succeſſes againſt the Dutch Fleet commanded firſt by Van Trump, and afterward by De Wit. So that Victories and Conqueſts waiting upon the preſent Powers by Sea and Land, the only Queſtion that ſeem'd now remaining, was how to make this Proſperity ſettle into Peace and eſtabliſhed Government.

Cromwel affects to be King.

Upon this Juncture Cromwel adviſes with Commiſſioner Whitlock how to maintain all things in Order and Obedience; What if a Man ſhould take upon him to be King? Whitlock, "I think that Remedy would be worſe than the Diſeaſe. Cromwel. Why do you think ſo? Whitlock." "As to your own Perſon the Title of King would be of no Advantage, becauſe you have the full Kingly Power in you already concerning the Militia, as you are General. As to the nomination of Civil Officers, thoſe whom you think fitteſt are ſeldom refuſed: and altho' you have no negative Vote in the paſſing of Laws, yet what you diſlike will not eaſily be carried; and the Taxes are already ſettled and in your Power to diſpoſe the Money raiſed. And as to Foreign Affairs, tho' the Ceremonial Application be made to the Parliament, yet the expectation of good or bad Succeſs in it is from your Excellency; and particular Sollicitations of Foreign Miniſters are made to you only. So that I apprehend indeed leſs Envy and Danger and Pomp, but not leſs Power and real opportunities of doing good in your being General, than would be if you had aſſumed the Title of King." Cromwel went on to argue, that Whoever was actually King by Election, the Acts done by him were as lawful and juſtifiable as if done by a King who had the Crown by Inheritance; and that by an Act of Parliament in Henry VII*'s time, it was ſafer for the People to act under a King (let his Title be what it will) than under any other Power. Whitlock* agreed to the Legality, but queſtioned the Expediency of it; and being ask'd what danger he apprehended, anſwered thus, "The danger I think would be this, One of the main Points of Controverſy between us and our Adverſaries is whether the Government of this Nation ſhall be eſtabliſhed in Monarchy or in a free State or a Common-wealth; and moſt of our Friends have engaged with us upon the hopes of having the Government ſettled in a free State; and to effect that, have undergone all their Hazards and Difficulties. They being perſwaded (tho' I think much miſtaken) that under the Government of a Common-wealth they ſhall enjoy more Liberty and Right, both as to their Spiritual and Civil Concernments than they ſhall under Monarchy, the preſſures and diſlikes whereof are ſo freſh in their Memories and Sufferings. Now if your Excellency ſhall take upon you the Title of King, this State of your Cauſe will be thereby wholly determined, and Monarchy eſtabliſhed in your Perſon, and the Queſtion will be no more, Whether our Government ſhall be by a Monarch or by a free State, but whether Cromwel or Stuart ſhall be our King or Monarch? And that Queſtion wherein before ſo great Parties of the Nation were engaged, and which was univerſal, will by this means become in effect a private Controverſy only. Before it was National, What kind of Government we ſhould have? Now it will become particular, Who ſhall be our Governour? Whether of the Family of the Stuarts; or of the Family of the Cromwels? Thus the ſtate of our Controverſy being totally chang'd, all thoſe who were for a Common-wealth (and they are a very great and conſiderable Party) having their Hopes therein fruſtrate, will deſert you: your Hands will be weaken'd, your Intereſt ſtraitned, and your Cauſe in apparent Danger to be ruin'd."

Is diſſuaded by Whitlock.

Cromwel confeſs'd he ſpoke Reaſon, and deſired to know if he could find any other Expedient. Whitlock, after ſuggeſting the Dangers he was in from his own Officers and from the Parliament, who were plotting to bring him down, or to clip his Wings, proceeded thus. "Pardon me, Sir, in the next place, a little to conſider the Condition of the King of Scots. This Prince being now by your Valour, and the Succeſs which God hath given to the Parliament, and to the Army under your Command, reduced to a very low Condition, both he and all about him cannot but be very inclinable to hearken to any Terms, whereby their laſt Hopes may be revived of his being reſtored to the Crown, and they to their Fortunes and native Country. By a private Treaty with him, you may ſecure your ſelf and your Friends, and their Fortunes: You may make your ſelf and Poſterity as great and permanent, to all human Probability, as ever any Subject was, and provide for your Friends: You may put ſuch Limits to Monarchical Power, as will ſecure our ſpiritual and civil Liberties: and, you may ſecure the Cauſe in which we are all engaged. And this may be effectually done, by having the Power of the Militia continued in your ſelf, and whom you ſhall agree upon after you."

Cromwel adjourned the Diſcourſe to ſome farther time, and went off with a Countenance and Carriage of Diſpleaſure. And Whitlock ſays, "That Cromwel's Carriage toward him from that time was altered, and his adviſing with him not ſo frequent and intimate as before; and, that it was not long after, he found an occaſion, by an honourable Employment, to ſend him out of the way, that he might be no Obſtacle or Impediment to his ambitious Deſigns." For certainly Cromwel in his Thoughts and Intentions, was for bringing the Crown upon his own Head; and it was a great Providence that his Friends would not permit him to have his own way. However, to carry it as far as it would bear, he and his Officers were alway complaining of the Grievance of the Long Parliament, and were zealous and loud in recommending to the People the common Pretences of Right and Juſtice, and publick Liberty, to put a Period to their Seſſion; and if they would not ſhortly do it themſelves, the Army and the People muſt do it for them. King Charles in the Court of France.

The King was a Refugee in the Court of France, and was to live there upon Words and Air, tho' he was truly inſtrumental in compoſing the Differences between the French King and the Princes of the Blood; and the Duke of York was actually in the

(a) Harry Nevil who was then one of the Council of State, and lived long after the Reſtauration of the King, uſed to tell it as a Story of his own Knowledge, that Cromwel upon this occaſion ſent for ſome of the chief City Divines, as if he made it a Matter of Conſcience, to be determined by their Advice, among whom was the grave Mr. Calamy, who very boldly oppoſed the Project of Cromwel's ſingle Government, and offer'd to prove it both Unlawful and Impracticable. Cromwel anſwered readily upon the firſt Head of Unlawful, and appeal'd to the Safety of the Nation being the Supreme Law. But, ſays he, Pray Mr. Calamy why Impracticable? Oh! ſays Mr. Calamy, 'tis againſt the Voice of the Nation, there will be Nine in Ten againſt you. Very well, ſays Cromwel, but what if I ſhould diſarm the Nine, and put a Sword in the Tenth's Man's Hand, would not that do the Buſineſs? and ſo in a ſort of Banter, he ſeem'd to thank Mr. Calamy, and to think him a Fool.

French

1652. French Service under the Marſhal de Turenne, who
4 Car. II. gave him a high Character for his Behaviour in the Battle of Eſtampes. For which Obligations the King of France was in himſelf diſpoſed to aſſiſt, and, if poſſible, to reſtore the Royal Family of England: But his commanding Miniſter, the Cardinal Mazarine, was alway averſe to it: So that all that our diſtreſſed Prince could do, was to ſend abroad his Envoys and Agents to ſollicite, in vain, for Juſtice and Relief. He ſent into England the noble Marqueſs of Worceſter, for private Intelligence and Supplies; but he was taken up Priſoner in London, and committed to the Tower in September, where he was threatened with a ſpeedy Trial, and worſe puniſh'd with a long Confinement. The Lord Hopton, a Man of admirable Valour, lay in Proſecution of the Royal Cauſe at Bruges in Flanders, where he died in Affliction about the end of September. The Ld. Wentworth was employed to the King of Denmark, the Ld. Colepepper to Moſco, Mr. Crofts to Poland, Mr. Taylor to the Imperial Court, and the Ld. Wilmot (made E. of Rocheſter) to the Dyet at Ratisbone: But all their Negotiations for a righteous Cauſe, without Men and Money, were made cold and ineffectual. The States of Holland, in War with the People of England, were indeed the more kind and friendly to the King: they granted him the Freedom of Ports for harbouring his Men of War, and ſelling the Prizes they ſhould take; and invited Prince Rupert to Command a Squadron; and talk'd much of committing their whole Fleet to the Command of the King in Perſon, as their ſuperior Admiral; which Honour he had offered to them: nay, he propoſed to have gone Aboard as a private Perſon, to invite and receive the Engliſh Ships that ſhould come over to him. But the States were afraid, and all their good Inclinations were owing to their Enmity to the new Common-wealth, more than to any Love or Reſpect to the King; and therefore went off, in order to prepare and purchaſe a Peace with the Engliſh Republick.

The King tempted to leave the Communion of the Ch. of England.

But the greateſt Trial to which the King was now brought, was, how to ſecure himſelf from the continual Sollicitations to pervert him from the good old Communion of the Church of England. The Relation of this Difficulty is beſt given by a Witneſs of it, the Lord Clarendon, who writes thus:

“ The Lord Jermyn, who in his own Judgment was “ very indifferent in all matters relating to Reli“ gion, was always of ſome Faction that regarded
“ it. He had been much addicted to the Presbyte“ rians from the time that there had been any Trea“ ties with the Scots, in which he had too much “ Privity: And now, upon the King's Return into “ France, he had a great Deſign to perſwade his “ Majeſty to go to the Congregation at Charenton,
“ to the end that he might keep up his Intereſt in
“ the Presbyterian Party: which he had no reaſon
“ to believe would ever be able to do the King Ser“ vice, or willing if they were able, without ſuch
“ odious Conditions as they had hitherto inſiſted “ upon in all their Overtures. The Queen did not,
“ in the leaſt degree, oppoſe this; but rather ſeem'd
“ to countenance it, as the beſt Expedient that might “ incline him, by degrees, to prefer the Religion “ of the Church of Rome. For tho' the Queen had “ never to this time, by her ſelf, or by others with “ her Advice, uſed the leaſt means to perſwade the “ King to change his Religion, as well out of Ob“ ſervation of the Injunction laid upon her by the “ deceaſed King, as out of the Conformity of her “ own Judgment, which could not but perſwade
“ her that the Change of his Religion would infal“ libly make all his hopes of recovering England de“ ſperate; yet it is as true, that from the King's “ Return from Worceſter, ſhe did really deſpair of “ his being reſtored by the Affections of his own “ Subjects, and believed that it could never be “ brought to paſs without a Conjunction of Catho-
“ lick Princes on his Behalf, and by an united Force
“ to reſtore him; and that ſuch a Conjunction 1652.
“ would never be enter'd into, except the King him- 4 Car. II.
“ ſelf became a Roman Catholick. Therefore from
“ this time ſhe was very well content that any At“ tempts ſhould be made upon him to that purpoſe;
“ and, in that regard, wiſhed that he would go to “ Charenton, which ſhe well knew was not the Re“ ligion he affected, but would be a little Diſcoun“ tenance to the Church in which he had been bred,
“ and from which as ſoon as he could be perſwaded
“ in any degree to ſwerve, he would be more expo“ ſed to any other Temptation. The King had not “ poſitively refuſed to gratify the Miniſters of that “ Congregation, who, with great Profeſſions of Du“ ty, had brought him to do them that Honour,
“ before the Chancellor of the Exchequer came to “ him; in which it was believed that they were
“ the more like to prevail by the Death of Doctor
“ Steward, for whoſe Judgment in Matters of Reli“ gion the King had Reverence, by the earneſt Re“ commendation of his Father: and he died after
“ the King's Return within fourteen Days, with “ ſome Trouble upon the Importunity and Artifice
“ he ſaw uſed to prevail with the King to go to “ Charenton, tho' he ſaw no Diſpoſition in his Ma-“ jeſty to yield to it.

“ The Lord Jermyn ſtill preſſed it, as a thing
“ that ought in Policy and Diſcretion to be done,
“ to reconcile that People which was a great Body
“ in France to the King's Service, which would “ draw to him all the foreign Churches, and there-
“ by he might receive conſiderable Aſſiſtance. He “ wondered, he ſaid, why it ſhould be oppoſed by “ any Man, ſince he did not wiſh that his Majeſty “ would diſcontinue his own Devotions according “ to the Courſe he had always obſerved, nor pro“ poſe that he ſhould often repair thither, but on“ ly ſometimes, at leaſt once, to ſhew that he did “ look upon them as of the ſame Religion with “ him, which the Church of England had always ac“ knowledged; and that it had been an Inſtruction
“ to the Engliſh Ambaſſadors, that they ſhould keep
“ a good Correſpondence with thoſe of the Religion,
“ and frequently reſort to Divine Service at Charen-
“ ton, where they had always a Pew kept for them.

“ The Chancellor of the Exchequer diſſwaded
“ his Majeſty from going thither with equal Ear-
“ neſtneſs: told him, That whatever Countenance “ or Favour the Crown or Church of England had “ heretofore ſhewed to thoſe Congregations, it was “ in a time when they carried themſelves with Mo-“ deſty and Duty towards both, and when they “ profeſſed great Duty to the King, and much Re“ verence to that Church; lamenting themſelves,
“ that it was not in their Power, by the Oppoſition
“ of the State, to make their Reformation ſo perfect
“ as it was in England. And by this kind of Beha“ viour they had indeed receiv'd the Protection and “ Countenance from England as if they were of the “ ſame Religion, tho', it may be, the Original of “ that Countenance and Protection proceeded from “ another leſs warrantable Foundation; which he “ was ſure would never find Credit from His Ma-
“ jeſty. But, whatever it was, that People now
“ had undeſerv'd it from the King; for, as ſoon as
“ the Troubles began, the Huguenots of France had “ generally expreſſed great Malice to the late King,
“ and very many of their Preachers and Miniſters
“ had publickly and induſtriouſly juſtified the Re“ bellion, and prayed for the good Succeſs of it:
“ and their Synod it ſelf had in ſuch a manner in“ veigh'd againſt the Church of England, that they,
“ upon the Matter, profeſſed themſelves to be of “ another Religion; and inveigh'd againſt Epiſco-
“ pacy, as if it were inconſiſtent with the Prote“ ſtant Religion: That one of their great Profeſ-“ ſors at their Univerſity of Saumur, who was look“ ed upon as a Man of the moſt moderate Spirit
“ amongſt their Miniſters, had publiſhed an Apo“ logy for the general Inclination of that Party to

“ the Proceedings of the Parliament of England, “ leſt it might give ſome Jealouſy to their own “ King, of their Inclination to Rebellion, and of “ their Opinion that it was lawful for Subjects to “ take up Arms againſt their Prince; which, he “ ſaid, could not be done in France without mani- “ feſt Rebellion, and incurring the Diſpleaſure of “ God for the manifeſt Breach of his Command- “ ments, becauſe the King of France is an abſolute “ King, independent upon any other Authority: “ but that the Conſtitution of the Kingdom of Eng- “ land was of another Nature; becauſe the King “ there is ſubordinate to the Parliament, which hath “ Authority to raiſe Arms for the Reformation of “ Religion, or for the executing the publick Juſtice “ of the Kingdom againſt all thoſe who violate the “ Laws of the Nation: ſo that the War might be “ juſt there, which in no caſe could be warranted in “ France.

“ The Chancellor told the King, That after ſuch “ an Indignity offered to him, and to his Crown, “ and ſince they had now made ſuch a Diſtinction “ between the Epiſcopal and the Presbyterian Go- “ vernment, that they thought the Profeſſors were “ not of the ſame Religion, his going to Charenton “ could not be without this effect; that it would be “ concluded every where, that his Majeſty thought “ the one or the other Profeſſion to be indifferent: “ which would be one of the moſt deadly Wounds “ to the Church of England that it had ever yet ſuf- “ fered. Theſe Reaſons prevailed ſo far with the “ King's own natural Averſion from what had been “ propoſed, that he declared poſitively, He would “ never go to Charenton: which Determination ca- “ ſed him from any farther Application of that “ People. The Reproach of this Reſolution was “ wholly charged upon the Chancellor of the Exche- “ quer, as the implacable Enemy of all Presbyterians, “ and as the only Man who diverted the King from “ having a good Opinion of them; whereas, in “ truth, the daily Information he receiv'd from the “ King himſelf of their barbarous Behaviour in Scot- “ land towards him, and of their inſupportable Pride “ and Pedantry in their Manners, did confirm him “ in the Judgment he had always made of their Pro- “ feſſion: and he was the more grievous to thoſe of “ that Profeſſion, becauſe they could not, as they “ uſed to do all thoſe who oppoſed and croſſed them “ in that manner, accuſe him of being Popiſhly af- “ fected, and governed by the Papiſts, to whom they “ knew he was equally odious: and the Queen know- “ ing him to be moſt diſaffected to her Religion, made “ her willing to appear moſt diſpleaſed for his hin- “ dering the King from going to Charenton.” (a) Sad State of Religion: Socinianiſm prevailing.

The Affairs of Religion (if Faction and multiplied Separation may be ſo called) are not worthy a diſtinct View. Socinianiſm began to make a Sect among the common People; and for that purpoſe the Cracovian Catechiſm was done into the Vulgar-Tongue, for the Inſtruction of Men, Women, and Children. This being repreſented to the Parliament, they could do no leſs than Vote on April 6, that the ſaid Catechiſm did contain Matters that are blaſphemous, erroneous, and ſcandalous; and therefore order, that all the printed Copies of that Book be burned by the common Hangman.

Tithes to be aboliſhed,

The Payment of Tithes was thought a continual Grievance to the Country People, and made the Subject of repeated Petitions to the Parliament, who were forced often to promiſe a Redreſs, even againſt the Judgment and Intention of the majority of Members. And ſo for a Pretence of Eaſe and Quiet, they referr'd it May 4, to a Committee, to conſider how a competent Maintainance for godly Miniſters may be ſettled in lieu of Tithes. And in theſe Debates, there was this Good ariſing out of Evil: The Lay Impropriators in the Houſe would never conſent to extinguiſh their own Intereſt, how indifferent ſoever, for the Inheritance of the Church and Maintenance of the Clergy. As in the Beginnings of our Reformation, Popery was kept out as much by the Tenure of Church-Lands, as by any better Principle.

But ſaved by the Lay Impropriators.

Presbytery declining.

The Presbyterian Worſhip and Diſcipline, tho' by preſent Law eſtabliſhed, began to ſink more and more in the Hearts of the People, and in the Voice of the Parliament, and eſpecially in the Affections of Cromwel and his Army: nay even in Scotland, the Kirk, that had exalted her ſelf againſt Princes, could not ſtand againſt the People, but grew into Contempt and Ridicule. They made their little Efforts of Juriſdiction to end in nothing but Jeſt or Riot. The Synod of Edinburgh drew up a Paper, ſtiled, A Teſtimony againſt the preſent incroaching of the Civil Power upon the Eccleſiaſtical Juriſdiction. And the Synod of Fife made a ſolemn Proteſtation againſt all the Reſolutions and Proceedings of the Civil Power, that were contrary to the Liberties and Authority of the Kirk. And at Perth the Synod ſent out their Letters of Citation to the ſeveral Presbyters and People who had ſhewn their Contempt, or expreſſed their diſlike of the Holy Diſcipline: But on the Day of Appearance, the Men wilfully abſented, and their Wives came to anſwer for them; who, to the Number of above 120 came with Broom-ſticks and Spits, and other Utenſils, and beſieged the Church where the reverend Aſſembly ſat; who on this Alarm, ſent out one of the graveſt Presbyters to treat with the Women: But he taking the wrong way, in threatning to Excommunicate all of them, they firſt beat him ſeverely, and then bound him their cloſe Priſoner, and fell upon the reſt of the Brethren, bruiſing their Bodies, and taking away all their Books and Baggage, and making the Synod-Clerk forſwear his Office. And the only ſatisfaction, as we are told, was this, That 13 of the Presbyters rallied about 4 Miles from the Place, and voted, That this Village ſhould never more have a Synod kept in it, but be accurſed; and, That altho' in the Year 1638 and 1639 the Godly Women were called up for ſtoning the Biſhops, yet the whole Sex ſhould be now eſteemed wicked. Thus the Stool thrown by a Woman's Hand, in the Church of Edinburgh, at the Dean and the Common-Prayer, was now improved into Clubs and Staffs, in the ſame hands, againſt Presbyters and Synods. Cromwel for diſſolving the Parliament.

On April 19, Cromwel invited to his Lodgings in Whitehal the choiceſt of his Friends in the Parliament and Army, and propoſed the Subject of Debate, to find out ſome expedient for the better carrying on the Government of the Common-wealth, and how to put a Period to the preſent Parliament. Some few (among whom were Sir Thomas Widdrington and Commiſſioner Whitlock) repreſented the dangers of diſſolving the Parliament, and the Difficulties of ſetting up any other Form of Government. But the General and his Officers, and ſeveral of the Members let into the Secret, declared their Opinion, that it was neceſſary to take ſome new Meaſures; and that it was not fit the preſent Aſſembly of Parliament ſhould be permitted to prolong their own Power. No concluſion being made, the Junto was adjourn'd to next Morning, when moſt of them met again in the ſame place, and the Queſtion in Debate was, Whether forty Perſons, or about that number of Parliament Men and Officers of the Army, ſhould be nominated by the Parliament, and impower'd for the managing the Affairs of the Commonwealth, till a new Parliament ſhould meet, and ſo the preſent Parliament be forthwith diſſolved? Cromwel had ſent his Intimations to the Houſe then Sitting, that during this Debate at his Lodgings, they ſhould put a Period to themſelves, which would be the moſt honourable Diſſolution for them. Col. Ingoldsby was the chief Member ſent by Cromwel to the Houſe, to ſuggeſt to them this Project of a voluntary Diſſolution: But he came back to Whitehall and informed his General, that the Houſe inſtead of coming to any Reſolutions of diſſolving, were in the Debates of other Buſineſs which muſt be adjourned to farther Meetings, and occaſion their much longer ſitting. Cromwel was ſo enraged at this Demur, that he preſently commanded ſome of the Officers of the Army to fetch a Party of Soldiers, with which he marched directly to Weſtminſter, and placing his Men of Arms ſome at the Door and ſome in the Lobby, and others on the Stairs, he led one File of Musketeers into the Houſe with him, and there looking round with great Fury, he commanded the Speaker to leave his Chair, and told the Houſe, that they had ſate long enough unleſs they had done more good; that ſome of them were Whoremaſters (looking with inſult upon Harry Martin and Sir Peter Wentworth) that others of them were Drunkards, and ſome Corrupt and Unjuſt Men, and Scandalous to the profeſſion of the Goſpel, charging Sir Harry Vane with his breach of Faith and Corruption; and telling them all poſitively, that it was not fit they ſhould ſit as a Parliament any longer, and therefore he muſt deſire them to go away. The Speaker preſuming to ſit ſtill, Col. Harriſon took him by the Arm and forced him to leave the Chair. Some of the Members roſe up to anſwer Cromwel's Speech, but he would ſuffer none to ſpeak but himſelf; which he did with ſo much Arrogance and ſo great Reproach to his Fellow-Members, that ſome of his own Creatures were aſhamed of it. Amongſt all the Parliament Men, of whom many wore Swords, and would often boaſt high of their Valour in defence of Liberty and Property, not one Man offered to draw his Sword, or to make the leaſt reſiſtance, but all of them tamely departed the Houſe. Cromwel bid one of the Soldiers take away the Fool's Bauble the Mace, and ſtaid himſelf to ſee all the Members out of the Houſe, himſelf the laſt of them, and then cauſed the Doors of the Houſe to be ſhut up. When the Members thus ejected and exploded came with confuſion to their own homes, they had leiſure to conſider many things, what an outcry they made when their lawful Sovereign came ſingly and peaceably into that Houſe, to demand the legal Appearance of a few Members to a Charge of Treaſon againſt them: And yet now a fellow Subject, a fellow Member, enters their Houſe with armed Men in a hoſtile manner, and without any ſpecial Accuſation, calls them all Rogues and Sots and Fools, and with the utmoſt Indignity turns them by the Arms and Elbows out of Doors. How zealous had they been for their own indiſſoluble Being, how had they extorted from the King his lawful Prerogative of putting an end to them with their own conſent; and yet now without a Queſtion ask'd, or a Vote put, at a Word and a Blow they are bid to march off by an Officer, who had his Commiſſion from them, and was in proper Subjection to them. How forward they were to have the ſole Sovereignty and Legiſlature, a Parliament of the Commons of England without King or Lords, that they might have no controul nor competition from any other Power; when yet a Commoner of England commiſſion'd to be their Servant becomes a moſt abſolute Maſter of them, bids them go at a Word and they are gone, in the moſt ignominious manner.

Debates in the Matter.

The Parliament not willing to diſſolve themſelves.

Cromwel diſſolves them by force of Arms.

They tamely ſubmit and depart.

And had leiſure to reflect.

The moſt amazing thing is this, that after the Members were thus with the laſt Contempt and Infamy expell'd, they never offer'd to meet in a Body, nor ſo much as in ſeparate Clubs, to think how to reunite themſelves, but crumbled away to their reſpective homes, with a ſilence that confeſt their Guilt and the juſt Puniſhment of it: Nay, and the common People never once interpoſed by any Tumult, or ſo much as by any Petition, but let them drop without a Word or a Wiſh to ſave them. So as they who had commanded the Mob in Routs and Libels, againſt the King, Biſhops, and Nobility, were now deſerted by them in their extream Agonies, and ſuffered to expire without one Sigh or Groan. (a)

The Members all ſilent.

Cromwel and his Council of Officers did not ſo much want a Vindication of what they had done as a quieting Declaration of what they did intend to do. Hence they publiſh'd an Account of their Proceeding and Intention, beginning with ſufficient intimation, that the whole Government was devolv'd upon the General and his Army by right of Conqueſt; then caſting very abundant Reflections upon the Members who had deſigned to perpetuate their own Power; and ſo juſtifying the neceſſity of putting an end to ſuch a ſelf-ſeeking Parliament, promiſing to put the Government into the Hands of Perſons of approved Fidelity and Honeſty; and in the mean time declaring that all Magiſtrates and Officers whatſoever ſhall proceed in their reſpective Places and Offices, and Obedience ſhall be paid to them as fully as when the Parliament was ſitting. Signed in the Name and by the Appointment of his Excellency the Lord-General and his Council of Officers, Whitehall April 22, 1653.

Declaration of Cromwel and his Officers.

Cromwel tho' incouraged by many Congratulations for diſſolving the Parliament, and by many Addreſſes from the Fleet and Army and People to ſtand by him and his Council of Officers, yet thought it not time enough to aſſume the Government to his own Perſon. But he and his Officers reſolved to ſummon ſelect Perſons to be nominated by themſelves out of every County, to make up a new Repreſentative of the whole Nation. And when they had agreed upon their choice Creatures, the ſingular Form of Summons was directed thus to each Perſon.

A new ſort of Parliament.

F*Oraſmuch as upon the diſſolution of the late Parliament, it became neceſſary that the Peace, Safety and good Government of this Commonwealth ſhould be provided for; and in order thereunto divers Perſons fearing God, and of approv'd Fidelity and Honeſty, are by myſelf, with the advice of my Council of Officers nominated, to whom the great Charge and Truſt of ſo weighty Affairs is to be committed: And having good aſſurance of your Love to, and Courage for God and the Intereſt of this Cauſe, and of the good People of this Commonwealth, I* Oliver Cromwel, Captain-General and Commander in chief of all the Armies and Forces raiſed, and to be raiſed, within this Commonwealth, do hereby ſummon and require you —— (being one of the Perſons nominated) perſonally to appear at the Council-Chamber at Whitehall, within the City of Weſtminſter, upon the fourth Day of July next enſuing the date hereof, then and there to take upon you the ſaid Truſt, unto which you are hereby called and appointed to ſerve as a Member of the County of —— and hereof you are not to fail. Given under my Hand this 8th Day of June 1653.

New Form of Summons.

O. Cromwel.

According to this novel Edict on July 4, the ſeveral obſcure Perſons thus ſummon'd, did appear in the Council-Chamber at Whitehall, to the number of about 120, and being ſet round the Table, Cromwel ſtanding with his Officers made a Speech to them, ſhewing the cauſe of their Summons, and telling 'em, they had a clear Call to take on 'em the Supreme Authority of the Commonwealth, quoting abundance of Scripture to admoniſh them them to do their Duties (a). And then he produced an Inſtrument in Writing, under his own Hand and Seal, to conſtitute and acknowledge them, or any forty of them, to be the ſupreme Authority of this Nation. Then he and his Officers withdrew, and the Perſons ſo commiſſion'd to be a Parliament, adjourn'd themſelves to the next Day to meet in the Parliament-Houſe; where they reſolv'd, That Mr. Rous ſhould be their Speaker for one Month, and Mr. Scobel be their Clerk; and in ſubmiſſion to their Lords and Maſters, they gave a nomination to thoſe who had nominated them, ordering that General Cromwel, and his chief Officers Lambert, Harriſon, Desborough, and Tomlinſon, ſhould ſit in the Houſe as Members. The Lord Clarendon gives this Character of the Speaker. "He was an old "Gentleman of Devonſhire, who had been a Member "of the former Parliament, and in that time been "preferr'd and made Provoſt of the College of Eaton, "which Office he then enjoy'd, with an Opinion of "having ſome Knowledge in the Latin and Greek "Tongues, but of a very mean underſtanding, but "throughly engag'd in the Guilt of the Times."

Mr. Rous Speaker.

And thus under the name of a Parliament, they kept a Day of Humiliation and Prayer in the Houſe, and publiſhed a Declaration to ſtir up the godly of the Nation to ſeek God for a Bleſſing upon their Proceedings. But not able to compoſe a diſtracted Nation, and not willing to come up to the ambitious Hopes of Cromwel, it was moved in the Houſe Decemb. 13, That the ſitting of this Parliament any longer would not be for the good of the Commonwealth; and that it would be more fit for them to reſign up their Powers to the Lord-General. The Houſe riſing without a full Reſolution what to do, the Speaker with his Mace, attended by ſome Members, went to Whitehall on Decemb. 12, and gave up their Inſtrument of Commiſſion, and preſented to his Excellency a Reſignation under their Hands of all the Parliamentary Powers lately repoſed in them. This Parliament was afterward called, Praiſe God Barebone's Parliament, from a Leatherſeller of that Name in Fleetſtreet, who was an eminent Speaker in it. They were generally a pack of weak ſenſeleſs Fellows, fit only to bring the Name and Reputation of Parliaments lower than it was yet.

Cromwel conſults for a new Government.

In this new vacancy Cromwel called again his Council of Officers, and adviſed with them, How this great burthen of governing England, Scotland and Ireland, with the Armies therein, and the Navies at Sea ſhould be born, and by whom? They ſpent ſeveral Days in ſeeking of God, as the Phraſe then was, and did at laſt reſolve, That a Council of godly, able and diſcreet Perſons ſhould be named, conſiſting of twenty one; and that the Lord-General ſhould be choſen Lord Protector of the three Nations.

Reſolution to make a Lord Protector.

Upon this arbitrary Reſult an Inſtrument was drawn up, entituled, The Government of the Commonwealth of England, Scotland and Ireland; declaring, that the ſupreme legiſlative Authority of the ſaid Commonwealth and the Dominions thereto belonging, ſhall be and reſide in one Perſon and the People aſſembled in Parliament, the Style of which Perſon ſhall be Lord Protector of the Commonwealth of England, Scotland and Ireland. Then putting the Militia and executive Power into the Hands of the Protector, and providing for a new Parliament to meet on Sept. 3, 1654, and ſucceſſive Parliaments every third Year; the Members to be choſen according to the proportions and numbers hereafter expreſt, that is to ſay, for the County of Bedford ſix, viz. for the Town of Bedford one, for the County of Bedford five, &c. Then conſtituting a ſelect Council of State, and ordaining that the Office of the Lord-Protector ſhall be Elective and not Hereditary, and concluding with a forty ſecond Article in theſe Words, That each Perſon of the Council ſhall before they enter upon their Truſt, take and ſubſcribe an Oath, that they will be true and faithful in their Truſt, according to the beſt of their Knowledge: And that in the Election of every ſucceſſive Lord-Protector, they ſhall proceed therein impartially, and do nothing therein for any Promiſe, Fear, Favour or Reward.

New Model of Parliaments.

Inſtrument of Government.

1653. 5 Car. II.

By this Compact on Decemb. 16, Cromwel was conducted in great Pomp to the Court of Chancery, where a Chair of State was placed for him, and he ſtood by it till the Inſtrument was read, and the Oath adminiſter'd to him, and ſubſcribed by him. Then he put on his Hat as the only enſign of Authority, and took poſſeſſion of the Chair; then the Commiſſioners deliver'd up the Great-Seal to him, and the Lord-Mayor his Sword and Cap, which were immediately return'd to him; then he went back to Whitehall, the Lord-Mayor himſelf uncover'd carrying the Sword before him. And all other Ceremonies and Reſpects were paid to him as to a Sovereign Prince. With ſo much eaſe did a People become enſlav'd to a Fellow-Subject Uſurper, when they had ſpent ſo much Treaſure and Blood in ſhaking off the Yoke of a lawful King.

Cromwel made Protector.

Cromwel was encouraged to be more Abſolute by Addreſſes from all parts of the three Kingdoms; by a magnificent Entertainment in the City of London upon Aſh-Wedneſday, when he Knighted the Lord-Mayor with as much Grace as if he had been the King; and by the application of Foreign States and Kingdoms in as ample a manner as if he had been a Crown'd Head. His Authority was indeed greater, for in this interval of Parliament he and his Council made their Ordinances as if they had been the Acts of a Legiſlature.

Grandour of Cromwel.

The King in Exile at Paris was ſo unfortunate as to be able to take no Advantage of all theſe Convulſions in the Government of England, tho' he had great hopes from the States of Holland and the King of Denmark, then in War with the Engliſh Commonwealth; but the Dutch Fleet was ſo miſerably beat in ſeveral Engagements, that before the end of the Year they were glad to ſue for Peace. The Lord Rocheſter at the Diet of Ratisbon had procured a conſiderable Sum of Money from the German Princes, and a Promiſe from the Emperour to aſſiſt the King as ſoon as his Affairs would permit. The French King was very kind and hoſpitable; but the Policies of Cardinal Mazarine were to be jealous of Monarchy reſtored in England, and for that reaſon inclined to an Amity with all the uſurping Powers; upon which the Intrigues between him and Cromwel grew ſo familiar, that the King, inſtead of hoping for Supplies, could no longer hope for Protection in the French Court. There were ſome little Efforts of Loyalty made in the Highlands of Scotland, where the Earls of Glencarne, Seaforth, and Athol, and others, with Commiſſions and Inſtructions from the King, were raiſing Parties for him; and were recruited by Major General Middleton, who came over from Holland, and join'd with them. But they could form nothing but a flying Camp, and raiſe the vigilant Jealouſies of Cromwel; who, to prevent their Advances, took off Monk from the Navy, and ſent him again his Lieutenant General into Scotland, as he now did his own Son Henry Cromwel into Ireland.

K. Charles unhappy.

The Victories at Sea this Year were not only to the Grandour of Cromwel, but to the Honour of the Engliſh Nation. The Protector made this only good Uſe of Arbitrary Power, That without the Aid of Parliament, he did, without waiting for Money or Advice, cauſe a ſtrong Fleet to be provided againſt this Spring, and committed it to the joint Command of three Admirals, Blake, Monk, and Dean. This Fleet, in the beginning of June, engag'd the Dutch under Van-Trump, about the middle Seas over between Dover and Zealand; and by not diſcharging their Guns till at a very ſmall diſtance, they broke their Squadrons, and forc'd them to fly, and make all the Sail they could to their own Coaſts, leaving eleven of their Ships taken, and ſix ſunk. The Loſs of the Engliſh was only in Admiral Dean, who was kill'd

1653. 5 Car. II. kill'd with a Cannon ſhot: Their Ships were all ſafe, and all able to purſue the Dutch, and block them up in their own Harbours. Yet Admiral Trump, who with ſome of the ſhatter'd Fleet had got into the Wierings, did with great Induſtry ſo far repair and recruit his Loſſes, that by the end of July he came out with a Fleet of 95 Men of War; and being join'd with 25 more from the Texel, he gave the Engliſh another Battle, which continued very hot from Six in the Morning to One in the Afternoon, when Admiral Van-Trump, ſignally performing the Office of a brave and bold Commander, was ſhot with a Musket-bullet into the Heart, of which he fell dead, without ſpeaking a Word. This Blow made the Dutch fly toward the Texel, having loſt between 20 and 30 of their Ships fir'd or ſunk, and above 1000 Priſoners taken. By theſe two ſignal Victories, Cromwel brought the Dutch to accept of ſuch Conditions of Peace as he thought fit to give them; among which, one was, That they ſhould not ſuffer any of the King's Party, or any Enemy to the Commonwealth of England, to reſide within their Dominions; and another, which was contained in a ſecret Article, to which the Great-Seal of the States was affix'd, was, Never to admit the Prince of Orange to be their Stadt-Holder, General, or Admiral: and likewiſe, To deliver up the Iſland of Polerone in the Eaſt-Indies (which they had taken from the Engliſh in the time of King James, and uſurp'd it ever ſince) into the Hands of the Eaſt-India Engliſh Company again; and, To pay a good Sum of Money for the old barbarous Violence exerciſed upon the Engliſh at Amboyna; for which the two laſt Kings could never obtain any Satisfaction. And by the like Terrors of a Conquerour, he forced Portugal to ſend an Ambaſſadour to beg Peace, and to purchaſe it by the Payment of a great Sum of Money; and brought the two Crowns of France and Spain to ſue for his Alliance. Nay, and while the Portugal Ambaſſadour was ſolliciting the Terms of Peace, his own Brother Don Pontaleon Sa, a Knight of Malta, and a Man eminent in many great Actions, making a Riot upon the Exchange, wherein a Man was kill'd, was made to ſubmit (in ſpight of the Pretences of Privilege and Protection) to a Trial, and an Execution on a Scaffold upon Tower-Hill.

Black Face of Religion. The Spirit and the very Face of Religion were cover'd, and in a manner extinguiſh'd: No Mean, but all Enthuſiaſm or Prophaneneſs, and both in perfection. April 5, it was order'd by the Houſe, that a certain number of Miniſters and others be appointed to ſit in every County, to Examine, Judge, and Approve all ſuch Perſons as ſhall be called to Preach the Goſpel. (Court of Triers.) This Court of Triers was more formally eſtabliſh'd by an Ordinance of the Lord Protector, with Conſent of his Council, March 20, wherein the firſt Teſt for Approbation was, to adjudge whether the Grace of God was in the Perſon: Hence this holy Inquiſition was turn'd into a Snare to catch the Men of Probity and Senſe, and ſound Divinity; and to let none eſcape but the Ignorant, Bold, Canting Fellows. For theſe Triers ask'd few or no Queſtions in Knowledge and Learning, but only about Converſion and Grace in the Heart; to which, the readieſt Anſwers would ariſe from Infatuation in ſome, and the Trade of Hypocriſie in others. By which means, the Right of Patronage was at their arbitrary Pleaſure, and the Character and Ability of Divines was whatever they pleas'd to make 'em; and Churches were filled all with little Creatures of the State.

In that illegal and moſt irregular Aſſembly, ſummon'd by Cromwel, and commonly call'd Barebone's Parliament, a Spirit of Confuſion had been working to take away the Maintenance and the very Office of the Miniſtry. Tithes were now at laſt reſolved to be Antichriſtian, and fit to be aboliſhed: in order to which, on July 15, they learnedly debated (Proceedings againſt Tithes.) the Propriety of Tithes, whether the Title and ſtrict Property of 'em was in the State, or in particular Perſons? But that which gave them the greateſt Difficulty was, to find an Expedient for ſatisfying Impropriators, i. e. for ſaving themſelves, and for providing ſome Maintenance for the Miniſtry; i. e. for their own Creatures, who muſt have otherwiſe come upon their own Pariſhes. And on July 22, they referred it to a Committee to conſider of the Laws that hinder the Progreſs of the Goſpel, and to repeal them; i. e. to take away all the few remaining Rules of Decency and Order. The City of London were ſo ſenſible of this Tide, that they endeavoured to ſtem it; and Sept. 2, a Petition was preſented to the Houſe in the Name of the Mayor, Aldermen, and Common-Council, praying, That the precious Truths of the Goſpel may be preſerved in Purity; and the Diſpenſers thereof being approved to be Learned, Godly, and void of Offence, may be ſent forth to preach the Goſpel: That their ſettled Maintenance by Law may be confirmed, and their juſt Properties preſerved; and that the Univerſities may be zealouſly countenanc'd and encourag'd. (The City againſt the Abolition of them.) By whoſe good Example, another Petition was preſented in the Name of the Freeholders and others of Hampſhire, praying for a Support and Encouragement of the Miniſtry, and for the Continuance of Tithes, being above five hundred Years growth, and confirmed by Magna Charta, &c. And ſo at laſt the only Objection againſt Tithes did become the Preſervation of them, i. e. the Intereſt of Impropriators, and the Voice of the People. (a)

This Parliament (for ſo it muſt be called) was made up moſt of the Independent Faction, to whom the Congregational Churches were humble Suitors for Liberty and Protection againſt the Presbyterians; and did obtain a Vote, that there ſhould be a Declaration for giving fit Liberty to all that fear God, and for preventing the Abuſes againſt Magiſtrates, and for Preſervation of ſuch as fear God among themſelves, without impoſing the one upon the other; and for diſcountenancing Blaſphemies, damnable Hereſies, and licentious Practices. (Liberty of Conſcience.) And yet nothing could have been more damnable and licentious than what we are told was under their Deliberation, "That no Courts of Equity or Juſtice, in the common Courſe, ſhould remain, but the Moſaick Law ſhould take place; and that both the Magiſtracy and the Miniſtry ſhould be henceforth aboliſhed, and all Dominion ſhould go according unto Grace, that the Saints of the Earth might rule in all things, &c."

How little Religion was the Concern or ſo much as any longer the Pretence of Cromwel and his Council of Officers, does appear from this, that in the large Inſtrument of the Government of the Commonwealth committed to the Protector, which was the very Magna Charta of the new Conſtitution, in forty two Chapters there is not a word of Churches, or Synods, or Miniſters, nor any thing but the Chriſtian Religion in general, with Liberty to all differing in Judgment from the Doctrine, Worſhip or Diſcipline publickly held forth. (Cromwel's Religion was to Reign.)

Nay, and the Kirk of Scotland was as low and contemptible as the Presbytery in England; for when the General-Aſſembly met at Edinburgh July 25, as ſoon as the Sermon was done, and the Presbyters and Elders gone to the Aſſembly-Houſe, and enter'd upon their Buſineſs, Lieut. Col. Cotterel in his Military Figure went in to them, and ſtanding up on a Bench, told them, that no Judicatory ought to ſit that had not Authority from the Parliament of England, and without giving them leave to plead their Divine Right, he turned them forth into the Street, and then led them Priſoners with a Troop of Horſe and Company of Foot out of the City at the Weſt Gate. He then brought them all into a cloſe Ring, and ſo environing them with his armed Men, he rebuked them ſeverely for their bold Meeting, took in their Commiſſions, charg'd them to quit the City before eight a Clock, and repair every one to his own home, and never to (Kirk of Scotland contemptible.) (Synod diſſolved by a Soldier.)

(a) See, Exceptions many and juſt againſt two injurious Petitions exhibited to the Parliament, the one July 16, the other Aug. 4, 1653, againſt Tithes.—— Dated from Oxford Aug. 9, 1653, and there printed by L. Lichfield, 4to.

meet again ſo much as three of them in a Company. Thus righteouſly were Schiſm and Rebellion chaſtiſed, thoſe Presbyters who would aſſemble and rule in ſpite of their Biſhops and their King, were now diſſolved by an inferiour Layman and Soldier. (a)

1654. 6 Car. II.

Cromwel makes the firſt univerſal Parliament of England, Scotland, and Ireland.

The Lord Protector to confirm himſelf in his new Government, reſolved to unite the three Kingdoms into one Commonwealth, to be the more eaſily manag'd by him the ſole Head. So with Conſent of his Council he made an Ordinance April 12, ſetting forth, "How he had took into conſideration, that the "People of Scotland ought to be united with the People of England into one Commonwealth, and under one Government; and had found that in December 1651, the Parliament then ſitting had ſent "Commiſſioners into Scotland to invite the People of "that Nation unto ſuch a happy Union, who proceeded ſo far therein, that the Shires and Boroughs "did accept of the ſaid Union, and aſſent thereunto; for the compleating and perfecting which Union, he now ordained, that all the People of Scotland, and of all the Dominions and Territories "thereto belonging, ſhould be incorporated into one "Commonwealth with England: And in every Parliament to be held ſucceſſively for the ſaid Commonwealth, thirty Perſons ſhould be called from, "and ſerve for Scotland, &c." And a like Ordinance was ſoon after made for a like diſtribution of thirty Members from Ireland, to ſerve in the Parliament at Weſtminſter. So much greater was the Power of an Uſurper than that of lawful Princes.

He frights all foreign Kingdoms and States.

And to ſtrengthen himſelf the more at home, he made a Peace with Holland, and let Denmark be taken into the Treaty, upon the good Terms of making the States reſponſible for one hundred and forty thouſand Pounds, to repair the damage done by the Danes to the Engliſh. Then by the Negotiations of Ambaſſador Whitlock, he made a firm Alliance with Sweden, and brought the French Court to ſend over a Lord Ambaſſador to propoſe and even to ſue for his Alliance; and terrified the Portugal Ambaſſador into a ready ſigning the Articles of Peace between his Maſter and this Commonwealth and Protector, even on that very Day when his own Brother was Beheaded for a Riot and Murder upon Tower-hill. He had no Enemy abroad but Spain, againſt whom he prepared a Fleet and Army to attack their Weſt-Indies, which gave ſuch an alarm, that the Spaniſh Ambaſſador till then at London applied himſelf to his Excellency, to know whether he had any juſt ground of Complaint againſt the King his Maſter, and if ſo, he was ready to give him all poſſible Satisfaction. Cromwel, as if he were now to give Laws to the old and the new World, demanded no leſs than a Liberty of trading freely to all parts of the Weſt-Indies, and the Court of Inquiſition to be aboliſhed thro' all the Spaniſh Territories. To which the Ambaſſador replied, that his Maſter had but two Eyes, and he muſt not ſuffer them to be both put out at once. So the Expedition went on, the Fleet commanded by Vice-Admiral Pen, and the Army by Colonel Venables; their Deſcent on Hiſpaniola having no Succeſs nor Honour, they took the Iſland of Jamaica; but the General and Admiral had been ſo divided in their Counſels, that after their return they were both put under Confinement by their abſolute Maſter.

Cromwel in effect chuſes his own Parliament.

The Protector's greateſt Game was to manage the approaching Parliament, to this purpoſe he expreſly fixt upon the Set of Members to be ſent out of Scotland and Ireland, where the Shew of Election was made to concur with his expreſs Nomination. And even in England where Liberty was to be a little more pretended, he had ſuch an influence upon the People, and ſuch an awe upon the Sheriffs and Magiſtrates, that very few were returned diſagreeable to his own Deſires. And then to purge out thoſe few, he brought the Trials of Elections into a Committee of his own Council before the opening of the Parliament. So that by the time of ſitting they were to all appearance right and true, except the Lord Grey of Grooby, Mr. John Wildman, Mr. Highland, and one or two other inflexible Republicans, whom therefore by his own Will and Pleaſure he excluded from the Houſe.

Opening of this Parliament.

Sept. 3, (tho' it fell upon a Sunday) Cromwel, who thought it his fortunate Day, would have to be the Opening of the Parliament, and made the Members after hearing a Sermon in the Abby, wait upon him in the Painted-Chamber, where he made a Speech to them of the cauſe of their Summons, and ſo ſent them to their Houſe to adjourn to the next Day (b). On which he had a ſecond Opening in the moſt ſolemn Monarchical manner; he was drawn in a Coach of State (in which his Son Henry and Lambert ſate with him bare) many hundreds of Gentlemen and Officers walking uncovered, and next before the Coach his Pages and Lackeys in ſplendid Liveries; on each ſide of the Coach, Strickland and Howard Captains of his Guards; after the Coach Claypole Maſter of the Horſe with a led Horſe richly trapp'd, then the Commiſſioners of the Seal and of the Treaſury, and all the principal Men of his Council and Army. He alighted at the Abby Door, and had the Purſe carried before him by Whitlock, and the Sword by Lambert, and was placed in a Seat raiſed before the Pulpit, the Members of Parliament being diſpoſed on each ſide of him. After a Sermon preach'd by Mr. Thomas Goodwyn, his Highneſs went in the ſame Equipage to the Painted Chamber, where being ſeated on a Chair of State, with the Members ſitting round upon Benches all bare, he roſe up and made a long Speech to them, telling them firſt of the Danger of the levelling Principles, and of the Fifth Monarchy Opinions, and of the Form of Godlineſs, and the two bad pretenſions, Liberty of the Subject, and Liberty of Conſcience. Then he reminded them of the great Judgments that had fell upon the Nation by the Civil Wars, and by the late Foreign Wars, and gave them to underſtand, that the Remedy and Deliverance was owing to him. Then he reckon'd up his own Merits, how he had reformed the Laws, and put good Men into Seats of Juſtice, and regulated the Chancery, and ſettled a way for the approbation of able Miniſters, and had been inſtrumental to call a free Parliament; had made Peace with Sweden, with the Danes, with the Dutch, with Portugal, and was now in a Treaty with France. Then he bid them take notice of the great Expence of the Forces and the Fleet; and ended thus, I ſhall conclude with my Perſwaſion to you, to have a ſweet, gracious, and holy Underſtanding one of another; and put you in mind of the Counſel you heard this Day in order thereunto. And I deſire you to believe, that I ſpeak not to you, as one that would be a Lord over you, but as one that is reſolved to be a fellow Servant with you to the Intereſt of this great Affair (c).

Pomp of Cromwel.

His Speech.

Lenthal choſen Speaker.

After he had done, the Members went to their Houſe and choſe the old Speaker Mr. Lenthal Maſter of the Rolls, and appointed a Day of Humiliation

(a) In theſe Confuſions the Papiſts gain'd Ground. There came out in 8*vo*, 1653, Legenda Lignea, an Anſwer to Mr. Birchley's Moderator, pleading for a Toleration of Popery (which had been publiſht in two Parts the Year before) and a Character of ſome hopeful Saints revolted to the Church of Rome. A Liſt of fifty three of the chief Revolters printed in red Letters, with Explications of the Character and Condition of them.——

(b) I have by me a MS. Journal of this Parliament written by a Member of it, beginning Sunday, Sept. 3. We met in the Houſe according to our Summons, and there was an appearance of about 300 Members; but we met not there till after Evening Sermon, which was preached in St. Margaret's Weſtminſter by Mr. Marſhall. About 4 or 5 of the Clock, when the Houſe grew pretty full, ſome Diſcourſe was moved (not concerning the Lawfulneſs of our Meeting this Day, but) how far it might be lawful, being met, to act upon that Day by the Word of God? And ſome thro' pretence of ſcruple of Conſcience, other ſome through impatience, would preſently have riſen and adjourn'd. But General Lambert coming into the Houſe, and acquainting them that his Highneſs, the Lord Protector, was in the Painted-Chamber and expected us there, to ſpeak to us, it brake off thoſe little Diſcourſes, and the Houſe (though ſome cried Sit ſtill) went to attend his Highneſs's Pleaſure, &c.

(c) This long Speech was fairly printed 4*to*. 1654, under this Title; His Highneſs the Lord Protector's Speech to the Parliament in the Painted Chamber, delivered on Monday Sept. 4, 1654.

1654. 6 Car. II. for the credit of beginning with Religion. The Ld. Clarendon obſerves, "That their Agreement in chuſing Lenthal to be their Speaker was upon very diſagreeing Principles. Cromwel having deſign'd him for Lucks-ſake, and being well acquainted with his Temper, concluded that he would be made a Property in this as well as he had been in the Long-Parliament, when he always complied with that Party that was moſt powerful. And the other Perſons who meant nothing that Cromwel did, were well pleaſed out of hope, that the ſame Man's being in the Chair might facilitate the renewing and reviving the former Houſe, which they look'd upon as the true legitimate Parliament, ſtrangled by the Tyranny of Cromwel, and yet that it had Life enough left in it."

Their next buſineſs was to take into conſideration the New Articles of Government; but the Protector finding that inſtead of immediate Confirmation they fell into Debating and Reaſoning about them, he ſent for them to the Painted-Chamber Sept. 12, and told them, "That at their firſt meeting he had much more Comfort and Hopes of them than he had now: He was very ſorry to find them falling into Heats and Diviſions; but they muſt remember, that the ſame Government which made them a Parliament made him Protector; and there were ſome things in the Government Fundamental, which could not be altered by them: they were 1. The Government in one Perſon and a Parliament. 2. Parliaments not to be perpetual. 3. The Militia in the Protector as well as in the Parliament. 4. A Liberty of Conſcience in Matters of Religion. That therefore they muſt not meddle with any of theſe fundamental Things: And to prevent their doing ſo, he was neceſſitated to appoint them a Teſt or Recognition of the Government in a Protector and a Common-wealth, which they ſhould all ſign before they went any more into the Houſe."

A new Teſt impoſed on every Member. The Form of the Recognition was this: I A. B. do hereby freely promiſe and engage my ſelf, to be True and Faithful to the Lord Protector and the Common-wealth of England, Scotland and Ireland, and ſhall not (according to the Tenour of the Indenture whereby I am returned to ſerve in this preſent Parliament) propoſe or give any Conſent to alter the Government, as it is ſettled in one ſingle Perſon and a Parliament. This being ingroſs'd in Parchment, was laid on a Table for the Members to ſign, before they ſhould be qualified to ſit. And thoſe who refuſed, were not only excluded the Houſe, but were ſome of them taken into Cuſtody, among whom was the Protector's late greateſt Creature, Major-General Harriſon, now in Cuſtody of a Party of Horſe. This terrified them into this unanimous Vote Sept. 19, That the ſupreme Legiſlative Authority ſhall reſide in a Lord Protector and the People aſſembled in Parliament; and that the preſent Lord Protector ſhall continue during Life; and brought them to a long Debate, Whether the Office of Protector ſhould be Elective or Hereditary? But reſolving it ſhould be Elective, and placing the nomination in a Parliament, and voting, that no Law ſhould be alter'd or repeal'd, nor new Laws made, nor any Tax impoſed, but by Aſſent of Parliament: Theſe and other Claims of Liberty made the Protector weary of them; ſo he required them to attend him in the Painted-Chamber January 22, and diſſolved them with a moſt tedious and intricate Speech, beginning thus.

Gentlemen,

His Speech at diſſolving. I Perceive you are here as the Houſe of Parliament, by your Speaker, whom I ſee here, and by your Faces, which are in a great meaſure known to me.—— There be ſome Trees that will not grow under the ſhadow of other Trees; there be ſome that chuſe (a Man may ſay ſo by way of Alluſion) to thrive under the Shadow of other Trees. I will tell you what hath thriven, I will not ſay what you have cheriſhed, under your Shadow, that were too hard. Inſtead of the Peace and Settlement, inſtead of Mercy and Truth being brought together, Righteouſneſs and Peace kiſſing each other, by reconciling the honeſt People of theſe Nations, and ſettling the woeful Diſtempers that are amongſt us (which had been glorious things, and worthy of Chriſtians to have propoſed) Weeds and Nettles, Briars and Thorns have thriven under your ſhadow, Diſſettlement and Diviſion, Diſcontentment and Diſſatisfaction, together with real Dangers to the whole, have been more multiplied within theſe five Months of your ſitting than in ſome Years before. Foundations have been alſo laid for the future renewing the Troubles of theſe Nations by all the Enemies of it abroad and at home. Let not theſe Words ſeem too ſharp, for they are true, as any Mathematical Demonſtrations are or can be.—— I have troubled you with a long Speech, and I believe it may not have the ſame Reſentment with all that it hath with ſome; but becauſe that is unknown to me, I ſhall leave it to God, and conclude with that, that I think my ſelf bound in my Duty to God, and the People of theſe Nations, to their Safety and Good in every reſpect; I think it my Duty to tell you, that it is not for the profit of theſe Nations, nor for common and publick Good, for you to continue here any longer: and therefore I do declare unto you, that I do diſſolve this Parliament. (a)

This upbraiding and inſulting way of Diſſolution was ſo very unpopular, that the Protector could never have betrayed himſelf into it, if his Pride and Paſſion had not ſunk his Judgment and Experience of the People of England. It gave encouragement to the Royaliſts, and Indignation to the Republicans: So that both Parties for King and Common-wealth were in Rage and Plots and Arms againſt him. Major John Wildman, whom he had expell'd the Houſe at firſt Opening of the Seſſion, as much an Enemy to the King as to this Uſurper, was ſeiz'd with a Paper dictated by him, entituled, The Declaration of the Free and Well-affected People of England, now in Arms againſt the Tyrant Oliver Cromwel, Eſq; "Being ſatisfied in our Judgment and Conſciences of the preſent Neceſſity to take up Arms for the Defence of our Native Rights and Freedoms, which are wholly invaded and ſwallowed up in the Pride and Ambition of Oliver Cromwel, who calls himſelf Lord Protector of England, and hath render'd all Engliſh-men no better than his Vaſſals, &c." Wildman's Declaration.

The Character of John Wildman and the Account of this Intrigue is thus given by the Lord Clarendon. "He had been bred a Scholar in the Univerſity of Cambridge, and being young and of a pregnant Wit, in the beginning of the Rebellion meant to make his Fortune in the War, and choſe to depend upon Cromwel's Countenance and Advice, when he was not above the degree of a Captain of a Troop of Horſe himſelf, and was much eſteem'd and valued by him, and made an Officer, and was ſo active in contriving and fomenting Jealouſies and Diſcontents, and ſo dexterous in compoſing or improving any diſguſts, and ſo inſpired with the Spirit of Praying and Preaching, when thoſe Gifts came into requeſt, and became thriving Arts, that about the time when the King was taken from Holmby, and it was neceſſary that the Army ſhould enter into Conteſts with the Parliament, John Wildman grew to be one of the principal Agitators, and was moſt relied upon by Cromwel to infuſe thoſe things into the Minds of the Soldiers, and to conduct them in the management of their Diſcontents, as might moſt advance thoſe Deſigns he then had; and quickly got the Reputation of a Man of Parts; and having a ſmooth Pen, drew many of the Papers which

(a) The beſt Jeſt in his Speech, was charging the Parliament with their Tyranny over the Conſciences of their Fellow Subjects, and that they were worſe than the Biſhops.——Ye have denied a juſt Liberty to Godly Men——what greater Hypocriſy, than for thoſe who were oppreſſed by the Biſhops, to become the greateſt Oppreſſors themſelves, as ſoon as their Yoak was removed.

1654. 6 Car. II. "firſt kindled the Fire between the Parliament and "the Army, that was not afterwards extinguiſhed "but in the Ruin of both. His Reputation in thoſe "Faculties made him quit the Army, where he was "become a Major, and where he kept ſtill a great "Intereſt, and betake himſelf to Civil Affairs, in "the Sollicitation of Suits depending in the Parlia- "ment, or before Committees, where he had much "Credit with thoſe who had moſt Power to do "Right or Wrong, and ſo made himſelf neceſſary "to thoſe who had need of ſuch Protection from "the Tyranny of the Time. By theſe Arts he thri- "ved, and got much more than he could have done "in the Army, and kept and encreaſed his Credit "there, by the Intereſt he had in other Places. "When Cromwel declined the Ways of eſtabliſhing "the Common-wealth, Wildman, amongſt the reſt, "forſook him; and enter'd, warily, into any Coun- "ſels which were like to deſtroy him: And upon "the Diſſolution of this laſt Parliament, having "leſs of Flegm, and ſo leſs Patience than other "Men, to expect another Opportunity, and in the "mean time to leave him to eſtabliſh his Greatneſs, "he did believe he ſhould be able to make ſuch a "Schiſm in the Army, as would give an Oppor- "tunity to other enraged Perſons to take Venge- "ance upon him."

Cromwel's Arts to ſave himſelf.

But from a univerſal Odium Cromwel ſaved him-ſelf by paying well the Fleet and Army, and diſ-charging all Officers whoſe Fidelity he could ſuſpect; by carrying it very fair with the City of London, gi-ving them the Power of their own Militia, under their own old Leader Major Skippon; treating them, and accepting of Treats from them; by eaſing the common People from ſome cuſtomary Burdens, and ſome part of their Taxes; and by an indefatigable Induſtry and unbounded Expence in procuring In-telligence, and early cruſhing all Deſigns againſt him. So that tho' his Mother (who died this Year) was continually afraid of her Son's Life, and when ſhe heard the Noiſe of any Gun, would cry out that her Son was ſhot, and could not be ſatisfied without ſeeing him to be alive once or twice a Day; and tho' a thouſand of his Enemies did in Conſcience be-lieve, that Killing him would be no Murder; Yet he eſcaped all Dangers, and even that which a mad Frolick of his own expoſed him to: For going to take the Air in his Coach, drawn by a fine Set of ſix gray Frizeland Horſes preſented him by the Duke of Holſtein, he muſt needs get up in the Box to drive the Horſes, which he did ſo furiouſly, that they run away, and could not be ſtopp'd till they had thrown him out of the Box, with a grievous Fall, in which the Piſtol in his Pocket fired and flew off, and yet his Perſon had no harm: Only it provoked to a thou-ſand Wiſhes that he had broke his Neck, and this little Lampoon was ſtuck up in his Sight the next Day:

The K.'s Condition.

King Charles was yet in France attending on the Solemnity of the French King's Coronation at Rheims, and had ſome Overtures for a Match with the Duke of Lorrain's Daughter, with whom he was to have received four Millions in Money, and the Duke's Aſſiſtance for his Reſtoration. But Mazarine falling in with Cromwel to ſet him upon humbling the Spaniards, made the King to be no longer Wel-come or ſafe in the French Court. Nor could he hope for any Refuge in Holland; for the States, in a ſervile Submiſſion to Cromwel, had agreed to give Him no Reception; and had, for the ſake of pre-venting any Aid to him, made an Order, that nei-ther the Prince of Orange, nor any deſcending from the late King of England, ſhould be Admiral of Hol-land, or have Power over the Militia. He had ſome Encouragement to adventure once more into Scot-land, by the encreaſe of his Forces under Glencarne and Middleton; and the common Senſe of Slavery, that the People now lay under. But he had ſo lit-tle Love of the Country, and ſo much Experience of the Kirk, that he left the Armies there to com-plain of his not coming to the Head of them, till they were entirely defeated and ſuppreſs'd by Gene-ral Monk. In theſe Streights the King went to Cologne, rather for a Journey and a Viſit to the Spaw, than for any formed Deſign, unleſs that of ſeeing his Aunt the Queen of Bohemia, and his Siſter the Prin-ceſs of Orange: He waited upon the latter in her Return to Holland, as far as Duſſeldorp, and was there kindly entertained by the Duke of Newburgh. When his Majeſty came back to Cologne, the Marqueſs of Ormond brought to him his younger Brother the Duke of Glouceſter, whom he had honourably taken out from the Jeſuits-College at Paris, where his Queen Mo-ther would have trained him in the Bigotry of the Romiſh Religion (a). All that his Majeſty could do was, to hold a Correſpondence (which he thought ſecret) with his Friends in England: but one of his own Court and Confidents, Mr. Manning, was cor-rupted by Cromwel to betray his Maſter; ſo as the Deſigns were broke before they were perfected. The good Project laid was, to have ſeveral Parties riſe together in ſeveral Parts of the Kingdom in the be-ginning of March, and ſo to make their way into a common Rendezvous; while the King was waiting on the Coaſt of Flanders to come over and command them. But Letters were intercepted, and Perſons apprehended: Sir Henry Slingsby in Yorkſhire, and Captain Penruddock who headed the moſt conſide-rable Party at Salisbury, and proclaimed the King at Blandford, was taken at South-Molton in Devonſhire by Captain Unton Croke, and with Colonel Grove ſoon after Beheaded at Exeter; with a multitude of other Royaliſts hanged, impriſoned, fined, and tranſported: For tho' Cromwel, in purſuit of his ſole Adminiſtration, had ſhewn ſome ſpecial Favours to the Royal Party, yet now he never ſpared them, be-cauſe their Oppoſition was no longer to the Com-mon-wealth, but to his ſingle Perſon.

State of Religion at the Protector his Pleaſure.

Religion was what the Protector pleaſed to make it, or to call it: The Pretenſion of it was to ſerve his Purpoſe. When he concluded a Peace with Hol-land, he appointed a Day of publick Thankſgiving for it. He made ſeveral Ordinances, with Advice of his Council, for the ſeeming End of Reformation of Manners: One to inhibit all Meetings upon Matches made for Cock-fighting, adjudging them to be Riots and unlawful Aſſemblies: Another, to re-ſtrain all Challenges and Duels, upon the ſevereſt Pe-nalties of long Impriſonment for giving or accepting any Challenge, and of Baniſhment and Death in caſe of Fighting and of Blood enſuing. A Third for the more effectual ſuppreſſing of Drunkenneſs, Swearing, and Curſing. A Fourth for the ſpeedy Ejectment of Miniſters and Schoolmaſters, for their Ignorance, Inſufficiency, or Scandal in their Lives and Converſations. A Fifth for the better Mainte-nance of Preaching-Miniſters, and uniting of ſmall Pariſhes. A Sixth for the better Propagation of the Goſpel in Wales. In all which the Political Reaſons were eaſie to be diſtinguiſhed from the Glory of God and the good Lives of Men. As to Aſſemblies and Diſcipline, he kept the Engliſh Presbyterians in a perfect Submiſſion to his Will, and deſpiſed and ſilen-

His Policy his only Piety.

He humbles the Presbyterians.

(a) There was publiſh'd An exact Narrative of the At-tempts made upon the Duke of Glouceſter, being the Extract of divers Letters written out of France to Perſons of Quality in England, and publiſh'd for the ſatisfaction of all true Proteſtants. London 1655, 4to.

One of thoſe Letters is from Paris, Nov. 7, 1654, decla-ring the many Attempts to pervert him by the means of his Mother, and Mr. Mountague, Abbot of Nanteul; and of the noble Reſiſtance he made to them, by help of his Tutor Mr. Lovell, and Mr. Griffin, of his Bed-chamber.

1654. 6 Car. II. ſilenced all their Claims of Divine Right. Thoſe indeed of the Scotch Kirk laboured ſomewhat longer to keep their Pretenſions up; and on October 11, refuſed to obſerve the Faſt-day then ordered by the Protector and his Parliament; declaring it to be a Principle of their Faith and Worſhip, Not to receive any Directions for the keeping of Faſts from the Civil Magiſtrate. But a little military Execution ſeems to have brought them off from this Part of the Holy Diſcipline. (a)

The Parliament little concerned for Religion. The Parliament under the Protector's Guidance, made a general Vote December 11, that the true reformed Proteſtant Chriſtian Religion ſhall be publickly profeſſed and maintained: and, That to Bills touching Liberty of Conſcience, the Protector ſhould have a Negative Voice: and, That without Conſent of the Lord Protector and Parliament, no Laws ſhould be made for the reſtraining of ſuch tender Conſciences as ſhall differ in Doctrine, Worſhip, and Diſcipline, from the publick Profeſſion. And yet a Liberty of Conſcience to be given to thoſe only who ſhall not maintain Atheiſm, Popery, Prelacy, Profaneneſs, or any Hereſy to be enumerated by the Parliament. And yet the Protector, in his parting Speech to them, charged them with a Neglect of giving juſt Liberty to godly Men of different Judgments, Men of the ſame Faith with them that you call the Oxthodox Miniſtry in England, as it is well known the Independents are, and many under the Form of Baptiſm, who are ſound in the Faith, only may perhaps be different in Judgment in ſome leſſer matters, yet as true Chriſtians both looking at Salvation only by Faith in the Blood of Chriſt, then profeſſing the Fear of God, having recourſe to the Name of God as to a ſtrong Tower.

John Biddle. On Decemb. 12, the Parliament, upon a juſt Complaint, voted two Books, written by John Biddle, to contain many impious and blaſphemous Opinions againſt the Deity of the Holy Ghoſt; and condemned the ſaid Books to be burnt by the Hand of the common Hangman: and bringing the Author to the Bar of their Houſe, committed him to Priſon. Thomas Firmin applied to the Protector for his Releaſe, but met with a blunt Reproof, to this effect; Would you have me diſpleaſe the People for ſuch a louſie ſilly Fellow? There let him lie.

King Charles in the Court of France, under the Roof of his Mother, had ſome Trial of his Conſcience and Courage, in reſiſting the little Arguments or rather the Importunities of Popery; while at the ſame time, the Presbyterians, and eſpecially the Scots, were ſolliciting his Majeſty to come into their Communion. Theſe two irreconcileable Factions did unite in a Contrivance of removing Sir Edward Hide from the King, becauſe both Sides thought him the chief Enemy who oppoſed and prevented their Deſigns. The Lord Balcarris, with Dr. Frazier and other Scots, ſet forth in a Petition, That the Presbyterian Party had great Affections to ſerve his Majeſty, and much Power to do it; and, that they had many Propoſitions and Advices to offer, but that they were diſcouraged and hinder'd by reaſon that his Majeſty entruſted his whole Affairs to the Chancellor of the Exchequer, who was an old known and declared Enemy to all their Party: and therefore they beſought his Majeſty that he might be removed, &c.

Another Petition was prepared in the Name of his Roman Catholick Subjects, which ſaid, That all his Majeſty's Party which had adhered to him were now totally ſuppreſs'd, and had for the moſt part compounded with his Enemies, and ſubmitted to their Government: That the Church Lands were all ſold, and the Biſhops dead, except very few who durſt not exerciſe their Function; ſo that he could expect no more Aid from any who were concerned to ſupport the Government of the Church as it had been formerly eſtabliſhed: That by the Defeat of Duke Hamilton's Party firſt, and then by his Majeſty's ill Succeſs at Worceſter, and the total Reduction of the Kingdom of Scotland afterwards by Cromwel, his Majeſty might conclude what greater Aid he was to expect from the Presbyterian Party. Nothing therefore remained to him of Hope for his Reſtoration, but from the Affection of his Roman Catholick Subjects, to whoſe Power and Aſſiſtance only he muſt, under the Bleſſing of God, owe his Reſtitution. But they had great reaſon to fear, that all theſe Hopes would be obſtructed, unleſs the Chancellor of the Exchequer, a known Enemy to the Catholicks, might be removed from his Majeſty, &c.

And above all, the two Queen-Mothers of England and France were more eſpecially diſpleaſed with the ſame Perſon, for the ſame reaſon of prejudicing (as they thought) the King againſt the Catholick Religion. They were continually tempting him upon the Motives of Intereſt, and a more ſpeedy Reſtoration; whereas, had his Majeſty turned Papiſt, it would never have promoted thoſe Hopes; as was frankly owned by a very Cardinal of that Church. The Cardinal de Retz had always expreſs'd great Civilities towards the King, and a Deſire to ſerve him; and upon ſome general Conference between them, the Cardinal ask'd the King, Whether he had made any Attempt to draw any Aſſiſtance from the Pope? and whether he thought that nothing might be done that way to his Advantage? The King told him, Nothing had been attempted that way; and, that He was better able to judge, whether the Pope was like to do any thing for a Man of his Faith: The Cardinal ſmiling ſaid, He had no Thought of ſpeaking of his Faith: Yet in ſhort, he ſpoke to him like a wiſe and honeſt Man, that if any Overtures were made him of the Change of his Religion, he muſt tell his Majeſty, it becomes him as a Cardinal to wiſh his Majeſty a Catholick for the ſaving his Soul: but he muſt declare too, That if he did change his Religion, he would never be reſtored to his Kingdoms. (b)

1655. Fleets at Sea. In the Beginning of this Year, Cromwel ſent two very great Fleets to Sea; the one under Admiral Pen, with a Land Army commanded by General Venables; the other under Blake, without any Land Forces. The firſt Fleet was, by Commiſſion opened at Sea, bound directly to the Barbadoes, where they took in new Men for the Land Army, and ſail'd to Hiſpaniola, coming about the middle of April to Santo Domingo, the chief Port of that Iſland. General Venables landed his Men in an ill Place, different from the Orders that Cromwel had given, and march'd them through ſuch Woods and uneaſie Paſſages, that the Spaniards, with a very unequal Number, beat them back. They advanced again toward the Town, taking Negroes for their Guides, who betrayed them into an Ambuſcade, and they were again ſhamefully repuls'd to the Bay where they landed, with the Loſs of their Major-General, and above ſix hundred Men. They were ſoon compelled to re-imbark themſelves; and then, to recover the Diſgrace, they made another Deſcent on Jamaica, and obtained an eaſie Conqueſt of it: and leaving a good Body of Foot to keep Poſſeſſion, they returned to England. Cromwel was never ſo much diſcompoſed as at this Miſcarriage at Hiſpaniola; and as ſoon as they came on ſhore

(a) The Quakers began to be very troubleſome in the North, where ſober People took them to be the Spawn of Romiſh Prieſts and Jeſuits; as is ſufficiently expreſs'd in a Tract publiſhed within this Year, Entituled, A Declaration of the Miniſters of Newcaſtle, againſt the Quakers in thoſe Parts, or the Perfect Phariſee under Monkiſh Holineſs. Subſcribed by Thomas Weld, Richard Prideaux, Samuel Hammond, William Cole, William Durant, Miniſters in Newcaſtle. Printed at London, 1654, 4*to.*

(b) The King had the leſs Temptation to turn Papiſt, becauſe the Popiſh Party in England gave up his Intereſt and Cauſe for loſt; and made obſequious Applications to Cromwel Dr. Bailey in his Life of Fiſher, p. 260, upon occaſion of a Part of the Arms of P. Innocent X. a Dove with an Olive Branch in her Mouth, he wittingly quibbled upon the Motto, Oliva vera. profoundly applying it to Oliverus; and ſaith a Writer, highly courted the Protector, with his Seraphick Compariſon of the true Olive and Oliver.

See in this ſame Year a Letter from Dr. John Bramhall, Biſhop of Derry, to the Archbiſhop of Armagh Dr. Uſher, giving an Account of many Romiſh Prieſts ſent into England to promote Schiſms and Factions, by acting the Parts of Presbyterians and Independents, and juſtifying the Murder of the King. he committed both Pen and Venables to the Tower, and could never be perſwaded to truſt either of them again; and could not, in a long time, ſpeak temperately of that Affair. The other Fleet, under the Command of Blake, ſailing into the Mediterranean, had better Succeſs, in forcing Algiers to the Terms of Submiſſion and Peace, in entring the Harbour of Tunis, and burning all the Piratical Ships; Actions of the higheſt Conduct and Courage, which made the Name of the Engliſh very terrible and formidable in thoſe Seas. In their Return, a Squadron of our Ships fell in with the Spaniſh Weſt-India Fleet, took the Rear-Admiral, and another Ship very richly laden, fired the Vice-Admiral, and run the Admiral on Shore: And ſo coming back to Portſmouth, the Bullion was there landed, and carried in Carts to London, as a Trophy and Triumph of War.

The Lords Commiſſioners for the Great Seal offend Cromwel.

The Commiſſioners for the Great Seal were, Sir Thomas Widdrington, Whitlock, Lenthal, and Liſle; of which the three former made their Exceptions againſt executing an Ordinance of his Highneſs and his Counſel for the better regulating and limiting the Juriſdiction of the High Court of Chancery. Upon which the Protector not ſuffering his Authority or his Acts to be diſputed, ſent for them to the Council-Chamber June 6, and there commanded them to lay down the Seal and withdraw; the Protector kept it for ſome Days in his own Poſſeſſion, and on June 15, delivered it to Major Liſle (one of the old Commiſſioners obſequious to his Maſter's Will) and Colonel Fienes; and it was indeed proper enough for Military Men to be Chancellors, while Law and Equity were both at the point of the Sword. However to pleaſe the ejected Commiſſioners, the Protector made Widdrington and Whitlock Commiſſioners of the Treaſury, and continued Lenthal in his Favour for old Services.

He turns them out.

Puts the Seal into Military hands.

Libels on the new Government bring on a reſtraint of the Preſs.

State Libels or Reflections on the Tyranny of the Protector and his Miniſters were ſo bold and common, that it was now found expedient to reſtrain that Liberty of the Preſs, which began to turn upon the greateſt Advocates for it: So an Ordinance was made at Whitehal in October, that no Perſon preſume to publiſh in Print any Matter of publick News or Intelligence, without leave and approbation of the Secretary of State: And another Order to enforce the Reſtraint of Printing unlicenſed and ſcandalous Books and Pamphlets, and for regulating of Printing.

The Protector wanted a pretence to increaſe his Standing Army, and therefore improved the Rumours of Plots and Conſpiracies againſt him by the King's Party: So he rais'd more Forces for the double Service of a Terror to reſtrain them, and a Burthen to oppreſs them: For in November he publiſhed his Declaration of the Reaſons for raiſing additional Standing Forces of Horſe in every County, to preſerve the Peace of the Nation from the new Plots and Attempts of the Enemies of the Common-wealth, upon whom he reſolv'd to put the Charge of theſe additional Forces which they themſelves have occaſioned, and not upon the honeſt Party who have already ſo much ſuffered. This Proceeding is ſeverely cenſured by one of his own late Creatures and a fellow Judge, Edmund Ludlow, Eſq; "Tho' (ſays he) he had lately ſo meanly ſtoop'd to court the Cavalier Party, and thereby highly provoked his ancient Friends to a juſt Jealouſie and Indignation, he reſolved now to fall upon them, and to break thro' all their Compoſitions, even the Act of oblivion it ſelf, in the obtaining and paſſing of which he had ſo great a hand. To this end he commanded a tenth part of their Eſtates to be levied, in order, as he pretended, to maintain thoſe extraordinary Forces, which their turbulent and ſeditious Practices obliged him to keep up. In defence of which oppreſſion I could never yet hear one Argument offer'd that carried any weight, either with reſpect to Juſtice or Policy: For having by his Treachery and Uſurpation diſobliged thoſe with whom he firſt engaged, he ſeemed to have no other way left to ſupport himſelf, but by ballancing his new with his old Enemies, whom by this freſh Act of Injuſtice, he render'd deſperate and irreconcileable, they being not able to call any thing their own, whilſt by the ſame Rule that he ſeiz'd one Tenth, he might alſo take away the other Nine Parts at his pleaſure. And to put this deteſtable Project in execution, he divided England into Cantons, over each of which he placed a Baſhaw under the Title of Major-General, who was to have the Inſpection and Government of inferior Commiſſioners in every County, with Orders to ſeize the Perſons, and diſtrain the Eſtates of ſuch as ſhould be refractory, and to put in execution ſuch farther directions as they ſhould receive from him."—— Things ran every Day more and more into confuſion, the Cavaliers being enraged to ſee the Throne uſurp'd, and thoſe who had hazarded all for their Country finding themſelves cheated; Cuſtom and Exciſe raiſed without Authority of Parliament, and Taxes impoſed to no other end than to ſupport the Pride and Inſolence of a ſingle Perſon. Some there were that openly oppoſed theſe Oppreſſions, and amongſt ſome others Mr. George Cony a Merchant, who having refuſed to pay Cuſtom, it was violently taken from him, and he thereupon ſued the Collector at the Common Law. But Cromwel reſolving to put a ſtop to ſuch dangerous Pecedents, cauſed the Council for Mr. Cony, who were Serjeant Maynard, Serjeant Twiſden, and Mr. Wadham Windham, to be ſent to the Tower, where they had not been above three or four Days, when they unworthily petition'd to be ſet at Liberty, acknowledging their Fault, and promiſing to do ſo no more, chuſing rather to ſacrifice the Cauſe of their Client, wherein that of their Country was alſo eminently concerned, than to endure a little Reſtraint with the loſs of the Fees of a few Days. By this means, when the Cauſe came to the next Hearing, Mr. Cony was neceſſitated to Plead for himſelf, which he did in as ſhort a manner as he could, referring it wholly to the Judge, whether that Tax, being not authorized by Parliament, ought to be paid by the Law of the Land; and declaring that he would abide by his Judgment therein. Serjeant Rolls, then Chief Juſtice of the Upper-Bench, tho' a Conſcientious Man, and a lover of Civil Liberty, yet not daring to determine it for him, ſaid That ſomething muſt be allowed to Caſes of Neceſſity. To which Mr. Cony replied, That it was never wont to be a good Plea in Law, for a Man to make Neceſſities and then to plead them. But the Judge wanting Courage would not give Judgment againſt the Uſurper, and being too much an honeſt Man to give it for him, he took time till the next enſuing Term, to conſider what Rule he ſhould give in the Caſe. In the mean time upon conſideration, that his continuance in that Station was like to enſnare him more and more, he deſired by a Letter to Cromwel to have his Quietus, and Serjeant Glyn was appointed to ſucceed him—— who before he came to ſit on the Bench took care to have this Buſineſs accommodated with Cony, who loſt his Reputation by withdrawing himſelf from a Cauſe wherein the Republick was ſo much concern'd. Sir Peter Wentworth a Member of the Long Parliament cauſed alſo a Collector in the Country to be arreſted and proſecuted at his Suit, tho' he could hardly procure an Attorney to appear, or Council to plead for him. Cromwel having received notice of this Proſecution, ſent a Meſſenger with an Order to bring him before the Council; where being examined concerning the Ground of his Proceeding, he told them, that he was moved to it by his conſtant Principle, that by the Law of England no Money ought to be levied upon the People without their Conſent in Parliament. Cromwel then ask'd him, Whether he would withdraw his Action or no? To which he replied, If you will command me I muſt ſubmit; and thereupon Cromwel having commanded it, he withdrew his Action.—— Not contenting himſelf with the Death of many of thoſe who had raiſed Arms againſt him, and ſeizure of Condition of the King.

The King, with no proſpect of Return, continu'd his Reſidence at Cologne; and went thence with the Princeſs Royal, and the Duke of Glouceſter, for the Diverſion of ſeeing the Mart at Frankfort: In their Paſſage through every Prince's Country, the chief Officers of State were ſent to complement them, and they were ſaluted with the great Guns, and other Marks of Honour. The Elector of Mentz entertain'd them for three Days with great Magnificence. The King hearing that Queen Chriſtina of Sweden was coming that way in her Journey to Italy, ſent one of his Lords to ſalute her in his Name, and to expreſs his Deſire to wait upon her Majeſty at what place ſhe would appoint. She named Coningſten, where they met and had private Conference together.

His Majeſty return'd to Cologne about the end of October, where (as the Lord Clarendon obſerves) the Magiſtrates of the City renewed their Civilities and Profeſſions of Reſpect to the King, which they always made good: Nor could his Majeſty have choſen a more convenient Retreat in any place: And he being well refreſh'd with the Divertiſements he had enjoyed, betook himſelf with great Chearfulneſs to compoſe his Mind to his Fortune; and with a marvellous Contentedneſs, preſcribed ſo many Hours in the Day to his retirement in his Cloſet, which he employed in Reading and Studying both the Italian and French Languages; and at other times walked much upon the Walls of the Town, (for he had no Coach, nor would ſuffer his Siſter to leave him one) and ſometimes rid into the Fields; and, in the whole, ſpent his time very well. The Nuncio of the Pope reſided in that City, and perform'd all reſpects to his Majeſty: He was a proper and grave Man, an Italian Biſhop, who never made the leaſt ſcruple at his Majeſty's enjoying the Liberty of his Chapel, and the Exerciſe of his Religion, tho' it was very publick.

The Royaliſts perſecuted.

Upon ſuppreſſion of the Riſing at Saliſbury, at the end of the preceding Year, ſo many of the Royaliſts were Beheaded, Hanged and Tranſported, that no farther Motions of Loyalty could be now made. Of the King's Friends, the noble James Duke of Richmond died of a Quartan Ague, having never had his Health nor his Spirits ſince the deplorable Death of his beloved Maſter: The Lord Willoughby of Parham, and the Lord Newport, upon ſuſpicion of Treaſon, were committed to the Tower; while the Lord Lauderdale and his Brother, by Interceſſion of the King of Sweden, were releaſed from their Impriſonment in Windſor-Caſtle.

Religion order'd for the ſole Intereſt of Cromwel.

Religion was now allow'd to be every thing that did not diſturb the Poſſeſſion of Cromwel. Sectaries were licentious and innumerable; and under that Advantage, Popery made the more conſiderable progreſs. The Protector indeed, for Reaſons of State, did in May publiſh his Proclamation for the better Execution of the Laws againſt Jeſuits and Prieſts, and for Conviction of Popiſh Recuſants (a). But one of his principal Judges, Commiſſioner Whitlock, declared his Opinion to be for no way of penal Proceeding againſt them; becauſe, ſays he, there was not a fixed Settlement, and, ſo, great Pretences of Liberty of Conſcience. And well might the Papiſts hope for Indempnity, when the Jews were treating for purchaſe of the ſame Privilege.

Papiſts and Jews encouraged.

Manaſſeh Ben Iſrael made his ſtated Propoſals, and had a Conference upon them, for admitting the Jewiſh Nation to exerciſe Trade and Worſhip in England. The Protector, to ſhew a regard to Chriſtianity, ſent for divers Miniſters of the Goſpel, and laid thoſe Propoſals before them, and referred the Matter, as a Caſe of Conſcience, to their Conſideration (b).

Death of Biſhop Goodman.

At the latter end of this Year died Dr. Godfrey Goodman, Biſhop of Glouceſter, and with great ſcandal declared himſelf, in his laſt Will, to die in the Faith and Communion of the Mother Church of Rome. He had before given many Cauſes of ſuſpicion; for on the fifth Sunday in Lent, 1626, in a Sermon before the King, he aſſerted the Real Preſence in ſuch a groſs way, as gave very great Offence to all the judicious Auditors: and on March 29, it occaſion'd a juſt Complaint and Debate in the Convocation. The King referred it to a Committee of Archbiſhops and Biſhops, who made a very tender Report; "That "ſome things were therein ſpoken leſs cautiouſly, "but nothing falſely; nor was any thing innovated "by him in the Doctrine of the Church of England: "however, it was beſt the Biſhop ſhould preach "the Sermon again at ſome time to be choſen by "himſelf, and ſhould then ſhew how and wherein "he was miſunderſtood by his Auditors." Whatever Salvo this was to cover up Scandal, yet wiſer People thought him then preparing his Faith for Tranſubſtantiation. He again betray'd himſelf in the Convocation of 1640, when he was the only Member who refuſed to ſubſcribe the Canons; for which ſingle Diſſent, the Archbiſhop told him, He muſt be either a Papiſt, or Socinian, or Puritan: He did at laſt comply, but with ſo much Reluctancy, that he confirmed himſelf in the Character of a reputed Papiſt. It is no Scandal to the Church of England, that this Man was the only Biſhop who made his Addreſſes to Cromwel, and dedicated a Book to his Excellence, (A Diſcourſe concerning the Trinity and Incarnation, London 1653, 4*to*.) with Flattery, and a ſervile Petition for hearing his Cauſe, and for doing Juſtice to him. It is farther remarkable, that as this was the only Apoſtate Biſhop of our Church ſince the Reformation, ſo he was the only one who left Children to beg their Bread: I ſaw the Example at my own Doors; where an old Woman, a common travelling Beggar, uſed this Argument to incite my Charity, that ſhe was the Daughter of Biſhop Goodman: and tho' at firſt I ſuſpected the Truth, yet upon Enquiry from her after the Perſon, Fortune, and even Writings of Biſhop Goodman, I found ſhe might well bear that near Relation to him.

The Endeavours of the Queen-Mother to pervert the Duke of Glouceſter, were a great Trouble to the King in the midſt of his other Sufferings. This young Prince, with his Siſter Elizabeth, had been committed in 1648, to the Counteſs of Leiceſter, and entertain'd by her with little Ceremony at Penſhurſt in Kent; but for fear of a Reſpect paid to them, they were ſoon after ſent away into the Iſle of Wight to Cariſbrook-Caſtle, to be under the Cuſtody of Captain Mildmay, who was ſtrictly commanded, that no Perſon ſhould be permitted to kiſs their Hands, and that they ſhould not be otherwiſe treated than as the Children of a Gentleman: which Mildmay obſerved very exactly; and the Duke of Glouceſter was not called by any other Stile than Maſter Harry. The Princeſs died in this Place; and at laſt Mr. Lovel, the Duke's Tutor, procured from Cromwel an Order and Warrant to Tranſport the Duke into any Parts beyond the Seas. By which means the Duke was brought ſafe to his Siſter the Princeſs of Orange in Holland, at the latter end of 1652. The Queen very earneſtly deſired he might be preſently ſent for to Paris, ſhe having not ſeen him ſince he was about a Year old. The King could not refuſe to ſatisfie his Mother in ſo reaſonable a Deſire; tho' he did ſuſpect that there might be a farther Purpoſe in that Deſign of ſeeing him than was then own'd. When the King left Paris in June 1654, to retire into Germany, the 1655. 7 Car. II. Queen aſk'd, with great importunity, that he would leave the Duke of Glouceſter with her, and offer'd ſuch Arguments as would have eaſily prevailed, had it not been for the fear that the Purpoſe was to pervert him in his Religion; which when the Queen had aſſured the King was not in her Thought, and that ſhe would not permit any ſuch Attempt to be made, his Majeſty conſented to it. But for all this Faith given, the Queen's Zeal did exceed and diſpenſe with the Obligation of it: For (as the Lord Clarendon relates) Within a ſhort time after his Majeſty's Return to Cologne, he received News that exceedingly afflicted him, and the more, that he knew not what Remedy to apply to the Miſchief which he ſaw was likely to befal him upon it. From Paris, his Majeſty heard that the Queen had put away the Tutor he had left to attend his Brother the Duke of Glouceſter; who remain'd at Paris upon her Majeſty's deſire, that he might learn his Exerciſes. The Queen had conferr'd with him upon the deſperateneſs of his Condition, in reſpect of the King his Brother's Fortune, and the little Hope that appeared that his Majeſty could ever be reſtor'd, at leaſt if he did not himſelf become Roman Catholick, whereby the Pope, and other Princes of that Religion, might be united in his Quarrel; which they would never undertake upon any other Obligation: That it was therefore fit that the Duke, who had nothing to ſupport him, nor could expect any thing from the King, ſhould be inſtructed in the Roman Catholick Religion; that ſo, becoming a good Catholick, he might be capable of thoſe Advantages which her Majeſty ſhould be able to procure for him: That the Queen of France would hereupon confer Abbies and Benefices upon him to ſuch a Value as would maintain him in that Splendor as was ſuitable to his Birth: That in a little time the Pope would make him a Cardinal; by which he might be able to do the King his Brother much Service, and contribute to his Recovery; whereas, without this, he muſt be expoſed to great Neceſſity and Miſery, for that ſhe was not able any longer to give him Maintenance. She found the Duke more reſolute than ſhe expected from his Age: He was ſo well inſtructed in his Religion, that he diſputed againſt the Change, urg'd the Precepts he had received from the King his Father, and his dying in the Faith he had preſcribed to him; put her Majeſty in mind of the Promiſe ſhe had made to the King his Brother at parting; and acknowledg'd that he had obliged himſelf to his Majeſty, that he would never change his Religion; and therefore beſought her Majeſty that ſhe would not farther preſs him, at leaſt till he ſhould inform the King of it. The Queen well enough knew the King's mind, and thought it more excuſable to proceed in that Affair without imparting it to him; and therefore took upon her the Authority of a Mother, and removed his Tutor from him, and committed the Duke to the Care of Abbot Mountague, her Almoner; who having the pleaſant Abby of Pontoiſe, entertained his Highneſs there, ſequeſtred him from all Reſort of ſuch Perſons as might confirm him in his Averſeneſs from being Converted.

Queen

1656. Cromwel was more in Power and Dread, abroad and at home, than perhaps ever any Engliſh Monarch was: He wanted nothing but a Name; and he was ſenſible he could not have the Name of a King without a Parliament. He wanted no Forces to be raiſed; for he had augmented them at his own Pleaſure. Nor did he want Money to ſupply his great occaſions; for he had Ways and Means alway in his own Hands. Nor had he any Love to ſee a Parliament ſitting; for he had parted with two former Aſſemblies in the moſt rough and odious manner. So that really he could have no Inclinations and no occaſions for a new Seſſion, but only to make a Party for a Crown. To this purpoſe, he was to get an Awe and a Rule upon Elections: So beſide his ſtanding Force of Major Generals in every County and chief Corporation, he ſet up a new Office of Purgatory, called, A Committee for Inſpection of Charters; of which Mr. Gabriel Beck, Sollicitor to his Highneſs, was Chairman; and their Conſults were all to be reported to the Protector and his Council: By which means the Thinks of a new Parliament.

Boroughs and Corporations were influenced or modelled as his Highneſs and his Court pleaſed. This 1656. 8 Car. II. Menage for a new Parliament is thus delivered by an old Aſſociate of Cromwel's. The Uſurper having governed, as he thought, long enough by Virtue of the Inſtrument of Government, which, tho' drawn up by himſelf and his Creatures, was now thought to lay too great a Reſtraint upon his ambitious Spirit; and reſolving to reſt ſatisfied with nothing leſs than the Succeſſion of his Family to the Crown, he attempted to make himſelf King. To this end, he thought it neceſſary to call a Parliament: and that he might engage the Army to aſſiſt him in all Parts to procure ſuch Men to be choſen as would be fit for his purpoſe; he pretended that this Aſſembly was called only in order to raiſe Money for the Payment of the Army and Fleet, to confirm the Authority of the Major Generals, and that of the Inſtrument of Government. By this means he obtained his Deſires in a great meaſure, eſpecially in Scotland and Ireland, where all kinds of Artifice, and in many Places the moſt irregular Courſes were taken, to get ſuch Men returned as were propoſed by the Court. But knowing the People of England not to be of ſo mercenary a Spirit, and that as they were better inſtructed in the Principles of Civil Liberty, ſo they were not wanting in Courage to aſſert it; he uſed his utmoſt Endeavours to diſable and incapacitate ſuch Men from being choſen, whom he thought moſt likely to obſtruct his Deſigns. In order to this, he ſummoned the Lord Preſident Bradſhaw, Sir Henry Vane, Col. Rich, and my ſelf (Col. Ludlow) to appear before him in Council. ——Col. Rich was ſent Priſoner to Windſor-Caſtle.—— Col. Ludlow was ordered to be taken into Cuſtody.—— Sir Henry Vane was ſent Priſoner to Cariſbrook-Caſtle.—— And Bradſhaw, tho' ſuffered to go his Circuit as Chief Juſtice of Cheſter, had Letters ſent after him to deter People from giving their Voices for him.

On Sept. 16, this Party of a Parliament met the Lord Protector in the Abby Church at Weſtminſter, where they heard a Sermon preached by a prime Creature and very Confeſſor of Cromwel, Dr. John Owen, Dean of Chriſt-Church, and Vice-Chancellour of Oxford, on Iſa. 14. 32. What ſhall one then anſwer the Meſſengers of the Nation? That the Lord hath founded Zion, and the Poor of his People ſhall truſt in it. A Sermon calculated for the new Monarchy projected. After this, his Highneſs and the Members went into the Painted Chamber, where he made a dark Speech to them, and ſent them away to their Houſe for Admiſſion or Excluſion, according as he and his Council had thought meet: for, at the Doors of the Houſe they found a Guard, and an Officer ſtanding with a Liſt in his Hand, and demanding the Names of every Perſon: Such as were mark'd for Non-admittance were turned back, and ſuch as had been approved for right truſty Men, took a Ticket to introduce them, in this form; Theſe are to certifie, that A. B. is returned by Indenture one of the —— to ſerve in this preſent Parliament for the ſaid—— and is approved by his Highneſs's Council. Nath. Tayler Clerk of the Commonwealth in Chancery. 17 Sept. 1656. Old Ludlow repreſents the Matter right: "The Court finding by the Liſts they had received, "that notwithſtanding all their Menaces, Promiſes, "and other Artifices, divers Perſons were choſen "whom they knew to be no Favourers of the Uſur-"pation, reſolved to clear their Hands of them at "once. And to that end, under colour of a Clauſe "in the Inſtrument of Government, that none ſhould "be admitted to Places of Power and Truſt, but "ſuch as were Men of Sincerity and Integrity, they "gave an Excluſion to Sir Arthur Haſlerig and Mr. "Scot, with as many more as they thought fit. By "this means, and the Refuſal of others to take out "their Permiſſions to ſit from Cromwel and his "Council, as was required, leſt they ſhould ſeem "to countenance ſuch a deteſtable Impoſition, and "open Breach of Privilege; it came to paſs, that "about a hundred of thoſe who were elected by "the Country, were excluded from the Diſcharge "of their Truſt; whilſt thoſe for Ireland and Scot-"land, who were choſen by and for the Sword, were "admitted without any ſcruple. Thoſe that were "excluded preſented a Petition to the ſitting Members, acquainting them, that being choſen by the "Country to ſerve with them, they were ready to "diſcharge their Duty, but were prevented from "doing the ſame by the Power of the Sword, and "refuſed Admittance into the Houſe by a Guard "of Soldiers. After the Petition had been read, a "Committee was ſent to enquire of Cromwel and "his Council concerning the Reaſons of that Pro- "ceeding; who returned with this Anſwer, That "if the Perſons complaining would addreſs them- "ſelves to them, they ſhould be relieved if there "was cauſe. With this Anſwer, theſe Men who "would be accounted an Engliſh Parliament acqui- "eſced, leaving their Privileges unvindicated, and "the Merit of Elections to Parliament to be ad- "judged by Men without Doors." The Lord Clarendon repreſents it thus: "When upon the Re- "turns Cromwel found, that tho' in ſome places he "had ſucceeded according to his Wiſh, it was in "others quite the contrary, and that very many "Members were return'd, who were Men of the "moſt notorious Malignity againſt him; he there- "fore reſorted to his old Security, to keep all man- "ner of Perſons from entring into the Houſe, who "did not firſt ſubſcribe, that they would act nothing "prejudicial to the Government, as it was eſtabliſhed "under a Protector; which being tender'd, many "Members utterly refuſed, and returned into their "Countries, where they were not for the moſt part "the worſe welcome for inſiſting upon their Pri- "vileges and Freedom of Parliament."

The Excluded Members ſeeing no Redreſs appeal'd to the People in a Remonſtrance or Proteſtation, ſetting forth, that "The Lord Protector had by force "of Arms invaded their fundamental Right and "Liberty, and violently prevented the meeting of "the Peoples choſen Deputies in Parliament; and "concluding with an appeal unto God and all the "good People of England for Aſſiſtance and Prote- "ction in their Service, —— and pouring out their "ſad Complaints before the Lord againſt our power- "ful Oppreſſors, humbly hoping that he will come "forth ſpeedily, to redeem his People out of the "hands of wicked and deceitful Men." But all this to no effect, becauſe moſt of the Subſcribers, Haſlerig, Scot, Jones, Goodwyn, &c. had been violent Rebels to the juſt Prerogatives of the King, and were the more fit and worthy to fall a juſt Sacrifice to an Arbitrary Power in an Accomplice and late Equal of their own.

The ſitting Members with Sir Thomas Widdrington their Speaker, being all diſpoſed to follow Inſtructions, began the firſt Day of Buſineſs Sept. 18, with reſolving upon a Declaration for a general Faſt throughout the three Nations; and with reading a Bill for renouncing and diſanulling the pretended Title of Charles Stuart. This was to make the Throne more expreſly vacant for the reception of Cromwel, who was to carry his Point chiefly by his Major Generals and other Military Officers; but when he ſaw them fall ſhort in their Intereſt or Zeal, he dropped them and Sacrificed them in the moſt ungrateful manner. "It "was ſuppoſed that Cromwel who had erected their "Authority, and engaged them in thoſe Actions, "for which they were now become odious, would "ſupport them againſt all Attempts, becauſe there "appeared now no way ſo probable to maintain his "own Power, as by keeping the Army firmly united "to him. But Ambition had corrupted his Under- "ſtanding to that degree, that he made no ſcruple "to ſacrifice theſe Men, who, to ſay no worſe, had "enlarged their Conſciences to an extraordinary ſize "in the execution of his Orders, to thoſe who in re- "quital of the Favour had promiſed to make him "King. Hitherto he had given good Words to the "Major Generals; but when their Power came to "be debated, Mr. Cleypole his Son-in-Law firſt ſtood "up, which was unuſual for him to do at all, and "told the Houſe, that he could but ſtart the Game, "and leave thoſe who had more Experience to fol- "low the Chace; and therefore ſhould only ſay, "that he had formerly thought it neceſſary, in reſ- "pect to the Condition in which the Nation had "been, that the Major Generals ſhould be entruſted "with the Authority which they had exerciſed; but "in the preſent ſtate of Affairs, he conceived it in- "conſiſtent with the Laws of England, and Liberties "of the People, to continue their Power any lon- "ger. This Motion was a clear Direction to the "Sycophants of the Court, who being fully perſua- "ded that Cleypole had delivered the Senſe, if not "the very Words of Cromwel in this Matter, joined "as one Man in oppoſing the Major Generals, and "ſo their Authority was abrogated." Soon after Colonel William Jephſon, one of the Members that ſerved for Ireland, moved in the Houſe, That Cromwel might be made King; but matters not being throughly concerted, it had no other effect than to ſound the Inclinations of the Aſſembly.

Proceedings of this Parliament.

Motion for Cromwel to be King.

The Parliament did every thing elſe to gratifie the Protector. They reſolv'd Oct. 1, that the War againſt the Spaniard was undertaken upon juſt and neceſſary Grounds, and for the good of the People of the Commonwealth, and that the Parliament doth approve thereof, and will by God's bleſſing aſſiſt his Highneſs therein. And immediately after this Vote, came the News of Captain Stayner's Engagement with the Weſt-India Spaniſh Fleet, and taking two Millions of Silver, which were brought home and delivered into the Mint, and a Day of ſolemn Thankſgiving appointed for this Joy to Cromwel, who ſeemed now to borrow from one Crown a ſufficient Fund to purchaſe another.

Acts paſſed by Cromwel.

Novem. 27, the Protector came in State to the Painted-Chamber, and like a Sovereign paſſed theſe Bills. 1. An Act that paſſing of Bills ſhall not determine this preſent Seſſion of Parliament. 2. An Act for renouncing and diſannulling the pretended Title of Charles Stuart. 3. An Act for the ſecurity of his Highneſs the Lord Protector his Perſon, and continuance of the Nation in Peace and Safety. 4. An Act for taking away the Court of Wards and Liveries. 5. An Act for the Exportation of ſeveral Commodities of the Breed, Growth and Manufacture of this Commonwealth (a).

Syndercomb's Plot.

A Plot againſt the Life of Cromwel was another good advantage to him: Miles Syndercomb a Leveller, caſhier'd in Scotland, combined with one Cecil and one Troop of Cromwel's Life-guard (who betrayed him) to kill the Protector by ſome one of ſeveral ways propoſed. Syndercomb denied the Plot, but was condemned upon the Stat. 25 E. 3. which the Chief Juſtice Glynne declared to be Treaſon in caſe of a Protector as much as of a King, ſince by the word King any chief Magiſtrate was underſtood. The Priſoner was found dead in the Morning appointed for his Execution; ſo his Body was tied with his Head forward to a Horſe's Tail, and dragged naked to the Scaffold on Tower-hill, and under that Buried with a Stake driven thro' him, covered with Iron at the top, to ſtand the more durable Mark of Infamy. And Feb. 20, was appointed for a Day of publick Thankſgiving for this great Mercy and Deliverance; when after a Sermon at St. Margaret's, the Protector treated the Speaker and all the Members in the Banquetting-Houſe at Whitehall, with ſo much Endearment, that on the very next Day Alderman Pack moved again in the Houſe, that to prevent the like Dangers, and to compoſe the Minds of Men, the Pro-

(a) The Quakers had been ſo extravagantly Mad that the other Parties were highly incenſed againſt them. He recites the Sentence of this Parliament againſt James Naylor for his Blaſphemy on Wedneſday December 16, 1656, with the Protector's Letter to the Speaker on that occaſion, Dated 25, December 1656, declaring, that he deteſted and abhorred either giving or occaſioning the leaſt Countenance to Perſons of ſuch Opinions and Practices.

tector might be deſired to aſſume the Title and Authority of King, as the moſt known and moſt agreeable Government. But the Major Generals and Military Members, who now thought themſelves deſerted and highly affronted, out of Revenge on the Protector fell in with the Commonwealth Party, "And turn'd "(ſays Ludlow) ſo furiouſly upon Pack, for his "great Preſumption in bringing a buſineſs of that "Nature into the Houſe in ſuch an unparliamentary "way, that they bore him down from the Speaker's "Chair to the Bar of the Houſe of Commons. But "this Heat being ſoon over, the Lord Broghil, Serjeant Glyn, and others, who were acquainted with "Cromwel's Deſign, endeavoured to perſwade the "Houſe to debate the new Form, telling them, that "being Maſters of their own Reſolutions, they "might retain as much of it as was good, and reject what was not ſo. By this means they brought "it to be debated; and tho' they received ſome oppoſition therein, yet when it came to be put to the "Queſtion, they carried all before them, and grew "ſo hardy to move, that the Blank left for the Inſertion of the Title of the Chief Magiſtrate might "be filled up with the name of King. This motion "though earneſtly oppoſed by Lieutenant-General "Fleetwood, was carried alſo, and the Name voted, "together with the filling up the two Blanks left "for the two Houſes, with the words Houſe of "Commons and other Houſe."

The King kept his Court at Bruges in Flanders, and had many Conſultations with the Governor Don John how to make the Spaniſh Intereſt and his own ſubſervient to each other. But all his Majeſty was enabled to do, was to Liſt ſome Regiments of his own Native Subjects into Service and Pay, to be quarter'd in Flanders for ſome opportune Expedition which did not yet offer.

State of Religion.

The Church was nothing but the Remnant of Preſbytery old and weak, with no Power in Effect but what came from the Protector and the Parliament; who now would allow no Aſſembly of Divines, nor indeed any Doctrine or Diſcipline but what ſhould occaſionally depend on their Votes and Orders. Under many Effuſions of Religious Phrenſie, the Quakers were extremely Mad, one diſturbed the Preacher in Whitechappel Church with ſuch an impulſe, that a Complaint was made to the Protector, who order'd him to be carried to a Juſtice of Peace, and proceeded againſt according to Law. Another pretending to an immediate Meſſage from God, went about the Streets denouncing his Judgments againſt the Protector and his Council. A third infatuated Quaker in Colcheſter ſtarved himſelf to Death, upon claim of a Commiſſion from the Spirit that he muſt faſt 40 Days (a). But the moſt impudent of all Mortals was James Naylor, a late Soldier under Lambert, who propoſing to outdo Ignatius Loyola, ſet up to be Jeſus himſelf in Perſon, and ſo with Garb, Hair and Looks, exactly in reſemblance of the Pictures of our Bleſſed Saviour, he went about with Diſciples and Women miniſtring unto him: And ſo enter'd Briſtol with Women and Mob crying Hoſanna, Bleſſed, &c. and giving no other Anſwer to any Queſtion but thou haſt ſaid it. The Magiſtrates of that City ſent him up to Weſtminſter, where the Houſe reſolv'd Decemb. 8, that James Naylor was guilty of horrid Blaſphemy, and was a grand Impoſtor, and a great Seducer of the People; and ordered the Speaker to pronounce this Judgment againſt him; To ſtand in the Pillory two Hours at Weſtminſter; to be whipped by the Hangman through the Streets from Weſtminſter to the Old Exchange, and there to ſtand in the Pillory two Hours more: his Tongue bored thro' with a hot Iron, and his Forehead ſtigmatized with the Letter B; to be afterward ſent to Briſtol, and conveyed thro' the City on a Horſe bare backed, and his Face backward, and his Body whipped in the Market-place. Thence to be brought back to London, and committed to Priſon in Bridewel, and there to be reſtrained from all Company, and to have no Relief but what he earns from hard Labour; and being debarred from the uſe of Pen, Ink and Paper, ſhall be kept to continual work, till he ſhall be releaſed by the Parliament. It was ſome reproach to humane Nature, that this wretched Fellow under all his Sufferings had ſome of his Followers to admire him and to adore him; to lick his Wounds, to kiſs his Feet, to lean in his Boſom, to do all that was prodigiouſly Impious and Silly. When he came firſt to Bridewel, to act on the Impoſture, he faſted three Days; but then Fleſh and Blood beginning to quarrel with the Spirit, he begged for Victuals, and fell to Work: At the return of the Rump he obtained his Liberty, and died ſoon after with no Fruits, nor ſo much as Signs, of Repentance (b)."

Polyglot Bibles.

Upon diſcourſe of the Polyglot Bibles now ready to be publiſhed in ſix Volumes Folio, by the immenſe Labour of Dr. Brian Walton, and a great Treaſure raiſed for the Expence by the Contributions of the Nobility and Gentry, moſt of 'em Members of the perſecuted Church; a Propoſal was made to the Parliament for a new Tranſlation of the Scriptures into the Engliſh Tongue: Upon this, at the grand Committee for Religion Jan. 16, it was order'd, that it be referred to a Subcommittee, to ſend for and adviſe with Dr. Walton, Mr. Hughes, Mr. Caſtle, Mr. Clerk, Mr. Poulk, Dr. Cudworth, and ſuch others as they ſhall think fit, and to conſider of the Tranſlations and Impreſſions of the Bible, and to offer their Opinions therein to this Committee, and that it be eſpecially commended to the Ld Commiſſioner Whitlock to take care of this Buſineſs. "This Committee (as Whitlock ſays) often met in his Houſe at "Chelſea, and they had the moſt learned Men in "the Oriental Tongues to conſult with in this great "Buſineſs; and divers excellent and learned Obſervations were made of ſome Miſtakes in the Tranſlations of the Bible in Engliſh, which yet was "agreed to be the beſt of any Tranſlation in the "World. Great Pains was taken in it, but it became fruitleſs by the Parliaments diſſolution."

The grand Queſtion whether Cromwel ſhould be King.

The Queſtion of the Times was, Whether Cromwel ſhould aſſume the Title and Office of King? The difficulty upon himſelf was, that he did paſſionately deſire it, and yet moſt artfully decline it. The majority of the Members were by this time drawn into the Plot, and preſented him a Writing which they ſtiled, The Humble Petition and Advice of the Parliament of England, Scotland and Ireland to his Highneſs, with a Speech from Sir Thomas Widdrington their Speaker, recommending the Title and Office of a King as ſettled here with Chriſtianity it ſelf, approved and retained by our Anceſtors, and every way fitted to the Laws and Temper of the People of England. Had the Protector immediately comply'd with their Zeal and his own Heart's deſire, he might have gone to Crown and Scepter without any other oppoſition. But whether it was to diſſemble greater Modeſty and be at laſt made a King by the very force of the People; or whether it was to obviate all Dangers by more deliberating on the Matter, Cromwel inſtead of a ready Aſſent, devoutly demurred and told them, "That it was a weighty Matter, and therefore deſired ſpace to ſeek God; for the Charge laid upon him was too great to bear without the Divine "Aſſiſtance; that the Engliſh were the beſt People "in the World, and required therefore all Tenderneſs and Conſideration of their Liberties; he muſt "therefore deſire that a Committee might be appointed to confer with him, and to offer him better knowledge and ſatisfaction in this great Cauſe." Such a Committee did accordingly attend his High-1657. 9 Car. II. cels, where the Chairman Whitlock, and all the chief Members, were to argue for Monarchy in Cromwel, and he who reached at it was to be the only Man that ſhould ſpeak againſt it.

Ludlow's Memoirs, Vol. II. p. 585. Amongſt others the Lord Broghil much preſſed that Paſſage brought by the Apoſtle in the Diſpute concerning the Abolition of the Jewiſh Worſhip, by the new and living way revealed in Jeſus Chriſt, illuſtrated by the Wife that was put away, who yet might be retaken by her former Huſband, if ſhe was not married to another; applying this Similitude to the preſent occaſion, as if there was no other way to keep out Charles Stuart, but by filling his place with another King. Mr. Lenthal's Argument was very Parliamentary and Rational had it been rightly applied: For he preſs'd him to accept of it, becauſe it was propoſed to him by the Parliament, as he was pleaſed to call it, whom, he ſaid, he ought not to deny.

The Chairman ſumm'd up all their Arguments in this remarkable Speech.

Whitlock's Speech. SIR,

I Have very little to trouble your Highneſs with: So much hath been already ſpoken and ſo well, that it will be hard for me, or any other to undertake to add to it; only the Duty of my Employment, and ſomething due to your Highneſs occaſions me to ſpeak a few Words, to acknowledge with very humble Thanks the Honour and Right which you have done this Committee, by the clear and free Diſcourſes and Conferences which they have had with your Highneſs, and for your frequent Expreſſions and Teſtimonies of Affection and Reſpect to the Parliament, whoſe Senſe in this I may preſume to ſpeak, that never any Perſons met their ſupreme Magiſtrate with more Love, Duty, and Honour, than the Parliament have met your Highneſs with in their preſent Addreſſes; which Argument of Love deſerves the Eſteem and Force which I doubt not but your Highneſs will put upon it. I am fearful to be too tedious at any time, eſpecially at ſo late an hour, and therefore ſhall ſpeak but ſhort, to ſome things which I remember not to have been mentioned. Your Highneſs was pleaſed, at the laſt Meeting, to ſay, That the original Inſtitution of the Title King was by common Conſent, and that the ſame common Conſent might inſtitute any other Title, and make it as effectual as that of King. This muſt be acknowledged; but withall you may be pleaſed to obſerve, that the Title of King is not only by an original common Conſent, but that Conſent alſo approved and confirmed, and the Law fitted thereunto, and that fitted to the Laws, by the Experience and Induſtry of many Ages, and many hundreds of Years together: whereas any other Title will be only by preſent common Conſent, without that Experience and Approbation. For that Experience which your Highneſs mentioned to have been of other Titles, and the due Adminiſtration of Juſtice under them; this Experience is far ſhort of the other: and for the Courſe of Juſtice, we have cauſe to thank that Care which placed ſo good Judges and Officers over us. Yet give me leave to ſay, that in private Cauſes between Party and Party, and in publick Matters in nominal Cauſes, it was not eaſie to find Juſtice to be done by ſome Jurors; and many Queſtions have ariſen upon occaſion of theſe new Titles, concerning that tender point of good Mens ſatisfaction. I think it requires a very great Regard from us, and I doubt not but thoſe good People will be fully ſatisfied, if they conſider the Covenants, Promiſes, and Precepts, which in the Scriptures are annexed to the Name of King: and although ſome have alledged, that they belong to any chief Magiſtrate as well as to King, yet no Man did ever read the original Word tranſlated otherwiſe than King: neither do I find the preſent Title once mentioned in the Holy Text.

If the preſent Authority be a lawful Authority, which I hope none of us will deny; ſurely thoſe good Men who are ſo well principled in Godlineſs will not forget that Precept of Submiſſion to Authority, and to be ſatisfied with that which lawful Authority ſhall ordain. Their Rights and Liberties are the ſame with ours, and the Parliament cannot adviſe any thing for the Preſervation of the People's Rights, but theſe good Men are included; which I hope will be no diſſatisfaction to them. In all the Changes which we have ſeen, there hath been a diſſatisfaction to ſome; yet ſtill the Bleſſing of God hath gone along thro' all theſe Changes, with thoſe who carried on his Intereſt: and the Cauſe being the ſame, the ſame Mercies have been continued. And I doubt not, if the intended Change, or rather Reſtitution be made (as I hope it will) the ſame God will continue his Bleſſings to that good Old Cauſe wherein we are engaged; and that good Men will receive Satisfaction by it. 1657. 9 Car. II.

Your Highneſs hath been told, that the Title of King is upon the Foundation of Law, and that a new Title muſt have a Conſtitution to make the Laws relate unto it, and that to the Laws. I ſhall only add this, that a Title by Relation is not ſo certain and ſafe as a Title upon the old Foundation of the Law; and that a Title upon a preſent ſingle Conſtitution (as any new Title muſt be) cannot be ſo firm as a Title both upon the preſent Conſtitution, and upon the old Foundation of the Law likewiſe, which the Title of King will be. If any Inconvenience ſhould enſue upon your Acceptance of this Title which the Parliament adviſeth; your Highneſs's Satisfaction will be, that they did adviſe it.

On the contrary part, if any Inconvenience ſhould ariſe upon your Highneſs's Refuſal of this Title, which the Parliament hath adviſed, your Burden will be the greater: And therefore whatſoever may fall out, will be better anſwered by your Highneſs's complying with your Parliament than otherwiſe.

This Queſtion is not altogether new, ſome Inſtances have been given of the like; to which I ſhall add two or three. The Title of the Kings of England in the Realm of Ireland, was Lord of Ireland; and the Parliament in 33 Hen. VIII. reciting that Inconveniencies did ariſe there by reaſon of that Title, did enact, That Hen. VIII. ſhould aſſume the Stile and Title of King of Ireland; which, in the Judgment of this Parliament, was preferred before the other.

In the State of Rome, new Titles proved fatal to their Liberties. Their Caſe was not much unlike ours: They were wearied with a Civil War, and coming to a Settlement, Cuncta diſcordiis civilibus feſſa, ſub nomine Principis Imperium accepit. Some would not admit the Title Rex to be uſed, but were contented to give the Titles of Cæſar, Perpetuus Dictator, Princeps Senatus, Imperator. Non ſum Rex ſed Cæſar came at laſt to this; Voluntas Cæſaris pro Lege habebatur.

The Northern People were more happy among themſelves: A private Gentleman of a noble Family took up Arms with his Countrymen againſt a Tyrant, and by the Bleſſing of God reſcued their native Liberties, and Rights of their Country, from the Oppreſſion of that Tyrant. This Gentleman had the Title of Marſhal given to him, which continued for ſome Years: Afterwards their Parliament (judging it beſt to reſume the old Title) elected this Gentleman King, and with him was brought in the Liberty of the Proteſtant Religion, and the Eſtabliſhment of the Civil Rights of that People; which have continued in a proſperous Condition ever ſince unto this Day.

Sir, I ſhall make no other Application but in my Prayers to God, to direct your Highneſs and the Parliament (as I hope he will) to do that which will be moſt for his Honour and the Good of his People.

Thus ended the Speech of Whitlock: and it gives ſome Reputation to the Form of Engliſh Monarchy, to ſee that thoſe very Men who had perſecuted and murdered one King, and had baniſhed and renounc'd another, and aboliſhed all Kingly Government, and ſworn themſelves into a Commonwealth, without King or Lords; that thoſe Men ſhould at laſt turn back to the good old Conſtitution, and find no Reſt or Peace but under a new Monarch. If they did this from their Opinion of the Excellence and Neceſſity of a Sovereign Power in one ſingle Perſon; it was a ſingular Teſtimony given unto that Government which they had wickedly deſtroy'd, and would now induſtriouſly reſtore: But if all this was againſt their own Conſcience, and they were terrified into A Credit to Monarchy, tho' a Scandal to those who deſired it.

1657. 9 Car. II. the Deſire of a King, when they ſtill hated the Name and the Office in their Heart; this was ſuch a Token of an abject Spirit, as could have nothing leſs than Divine Vengeance in it; that they who rebell'd for Liberty under a lawful and merciful Prince, ſhould be now ſo dead to all ſenſe of Liberty, as to proſtitute their Judgment and their Necks to a Yoke more ſervile and more heavy than what they had before ſhaken off, on a Pretence that they were not then able to bear it. And if this were the Caſe of giving themſelves up to Captivity in ſpight of their own Conſcience; it was the finer Riddle, that thoſe who abhorred a Monarchy were forc'd to petition and to plead for it, while he who vehemently was ambitious of it was likewiſe forced to decline and to deny it. For whatever this Junto of a kind of Parliament pretended, this Project was entirely againſt the Senſe of the main Body of the Nation, and (what was of more conſideration to Cromwel) it was againſt the Humours of the Army, and the chief Officers of it. One who knew the Intrigues of the Court and the Camp, gives this Account of them.

Ludlow's Account of theſe Matters.

" Cromwel endeavour'd, by all poſſible means, to " prevail with the Officers of the Army to approve " his Deſign; and knowing that Lieutenant-General Fleetwood and Colonel Deſborough were particularly averſe to it, he invited himſelf to dine " perſonally with the Colonel, and carried the " Lieutenant-General with him, where he began to " droll with them about Monarchy; and ſpeaking " ſlightingly of it, ſaid, It was but a Feather in a Man's Cap, and therefore wonder'd that Men " would not pleaſe the Children, and permit them " to enjoy their Rattle. But he received from them, " as Colonel Deſborough ſince told me, ſuch an Anſwer, as was not at all ſuitable to his Expectations or Deſires: for they aſſured him, there was " more in this matter than he perceived; that thoſe " who put him upon it were no Enemies to Charles Stuart; and that if he accepted of it, he would " infallibly draw Ruin on himſelf and Friends. " The next Day he ſent a Meſſage to the Houſe, to " require their Attendance in the Painted Chamber " the next Morning, deſigning, as all Men believed, " there to declare his Acceptation of the Crown. " But in the mean time meeting with Colonel Deſborough in the great Walk in the Park, and acquainting him with his Reſolution, the Colonel " made Anſwer, that he then gave the Cauſe and " Cromwel's Family alſo for loſt. After ſome other " Diſcourſe, Deſborough went home, and there found " Colonel Pride, whom Cromwel had Knighted with " a Faggot-ſtick: And having imparted to him the " Deſign of Cromwel to accept the Crown, Pride ſaid " He ſhall not. Why, ſaid the Colonel, how wilt thou hinder it? To which Pride replied, Get me a Petition drawn, and I will prevent it. Whereupon they " both went to Dr. Owen, and having acquainted " him with what had happen'd, they perſwaded " him to draw a Petition according to their Deſires. " Whilſt this was doing, Cromwel having reflected " on his Diſcourſe with Colonel Deſborough, and " being informed that Lambert and divers other Officers were diſſatisfied with his Deſign, ſent a " Meſſage to put off the Meeting in the Painted " Chamber, and to deſire that the Houſe would " ſend a Committee to confer with him about the " great Buſineſs that was then depending, intending thereby to gain time in which he might be " fitting the Officers for his Deſign.——One Morning the Houſe being in great Expectation of a " Meſſage to appoint the Time and Place for the " Acceptance of what they had prepared; ſome Officers of the Army coming to the Parliament-doors, ſent in a Meſſage to Colonel Deſborough, to " acquaint him, that they had a Petition, which " they deſired him to preſent to the Houſe. But " he knowing the Contents of it, and conceiving it " unfit for him to take publick notice of it before " it was preſented, acquainted the Houſe, that certain Officers of the Army had a Petition to preſent to them. Which having done, and every " one ſuppoſing that the Deſires of the Officers were " conformable to their own, Cromwel's Party concluding that no Part of the Army durſt appear for " the croſſing his Deſign, it was generally agreed " that they ſhould be called in, and have Leave to " preſent it with their own Hands. Lieutenant " Colonel Maſon was choſen by the reſt of the Officers to deliver the Petition; which when he had " done, and the Officers withdrawn, it was read. " The Contents of it were to this purpoſe: That they had hazarded their Lives againſt Monarchy, and were ſtill ready ſo to do in Defence of the Liberties of the Nation. That having obſerved in ſome Men great Endeavours to bring the Nation again under their old Servitude, by preſſing their General to take upon him the Title and Government of a King, in order to deſtroy him, and weaken the Hands of thoſe who were faithful to the Publick. They therefore humbly deſired, that they would diſcountenance all ſuch Perſons and Endeavours, and continue ſtedfaſt to the Old " Cauſe; for the Preſervation of which, they, for their Parts, were moſt ready to lay down their Lives. This " Petition was Subſcribed by two Colonels, ſeven " Lieutenant-Colonels, eight Majors, and ſixteen " Captains, the Majority of the Army then quartering about the Town. It's difficult to determine " whether the Houſe or Cromwel was more ſurpriſed at this unexpected Addreſs: but certainly both " were infinitely diſturbed at it. As ſoon as the " Notice of it was brought to Cromwel, he ſent for " Lieutenant-General Fleetwood, and told him, that " he wonder'd he would ſuffer ſuch a Petition to " proceed ſo far, which he might have hinder'd, " ſince he knew it to be his Reſolution, not to accept the Crown without the Conſent of the Army: " and therefore deſired him to haſten to the Houſe, " and to put them off from doing any thing farther " therein. The Lieutenant-General immediately " went thither, and told them, that the Petition " ought not to be debated, much leſs to be anſwered at this time, the Contents of it being to deſire " him not to preſs the Protector to be King, whereas the preſent Buſineſs was, to receive his Anſwer " to what had been formerly offer'd to him; and " therefore deſired that the Debate of it might be put " off till they had received his Anſwer. To this the " Houſe having conſented, they received a Meſſage " from Cromwel, that inſtead of meeting him in the " Painted Chamber, which was the Place where he " uſed to give his Conſent; they would meet him " in the Banqueting-Houſe. So the Members came to " Whitehall, and Cromwel with great Oſtentation of " his Self-denial, refuſed the Title of King."

Petition of the Army againſt Cromwel's being King.

This Refuſal was made on May 8, in a Speech to the Parliament Members; concluding thus: I have truly thought, and do ſtill think, that if I ſhould (at the beſt) do any thing on this Account to anſwer your Expectation, it would be at the beſt Doubtingly; and certainly what is ſo is not of Faith; and whatſoever is not of Faith is Sin to him that doth it; whether it be with relation to the Subſtance of the Action about which the Conſideration is converſant, or whether to Circumſtances about it, which make all indifferent Actions good or evil to him that doth them. I lying under this Conſideration, think it my Duty; only I could have wiſhed I had done it ſooner, for the ſake of the Houſe, who have laid ſo infinite Obligations on me: I wiſh alſo I had done it ſooner for your ſake, for ſaving Time and Trouble; and indeed for the Committee's ſake, to whom I muſt acknowledge publickly, I have been unſeaſonably troubleſome: I ſay, I could have wiſhed I had given it ſooner; but truly this is my Anſwer, That although I think the Government doth conſiſt of very excellent Parts in all but in that one thing, the Title; as to me, I ſhould not be an honeſt Man, if I ſhould not tell you, that I cannot accept of the Government, nor undertake the Trouble and Charge of it, which I have a little more experiment than every Man, as to what Troubles and 1657. 9 Car. II. and Difficulties do befal Men under ſuch Truſts, and in ſuch Undertakings. I ſay, I am perſwaded to return this Anſwer to you, that I cannot undertake this Government with this Title of a King: And that is mine Anſwer to this great and weighty Buſineſs.

He renounced the Name only of a King.

It is plain enough by this Anſwer, that he would renounce nothing but the Name and Stile of King; as to Soveraign Power in a ſingle Perſon he reſolved to exerciſe it in more ample manner, than had been yet done by any one of the preceding Monarchs: So he would have his old Title of Protector confirmed to him in a new Inſtrument of Government called, The Humble Petition and Advice of the Knights, Citizens and Burgeſſes now aſſembled in the Parliament of this Commonwealth, preſented to him May 25, and deſiring in Duty, 1. That his Highneſs will be pleaſed by, and under the Name and Stile of Lord Protector of the Commonwealth of England, Scotland, and, Ireland, to hold and exerciſe the Office of Chief Magiſtrate of theſe three Nations. 2. That his Highneſs will for the future be pleaſed to call Parliaments conſiſting of two Houſes: And ſo inveſting him in a Power more than Regal; he acting as a Supream Soveraign in the acceptance of that Truſt, ordering his Anſwer to be read by the Clerk of the Parliament in theſe Words, The Lord Protector doth conſent. And ſoon after taking occaſion to paſs ſome Bills, he did it in the Royal manner, with a Speech of Thanks for their Supplies. "I perceive that among theſe many Acts of Parliament, there hath "been a very great care had by the Parliament, to "provide for the juſt and neceſſary ſupport of the "Commonwealth, by theſe Bills for levying Mo- "ney now brought to me, which I have given my "Conſent unto; and underſtanding it hath been the "practice of thoſe who have been chief Governors, "to acknowledge with Thanks to the Commons, "their Care and regard of the Publick, I do very "heartily and thankfully acknowledge their Kind- "neſs herein." with Ermine, telling him, It was an Emblem of Magiſtracy and imported Righteouſneſs and Juſtice. Then he delivered him a Bible richly Gilt and Boſſed with Gold, and told him, It was a Book that contained the Holy Scriptures, in which he had the Happineſs to be well vers'd. Then he put in his Hand a Sceptre of maſſy Gold, ſaying, Here is a Sceptre not unlike a Staff: for you are to be a Staff to the Poor. Laſtly, he gave him a very rich Sword, with this Comment, The laſt thing is a Sword, not a Military but a Civil Sword; it is a Sword rather of Defence than Offence, not to defend your ſelf only but your People alſo. If I might preſume to fix a Motto upon this Sword, as the valiant Lord Talbot had upon his, it ſhould be this, Ego ſum Domini Protectoris ad protegendum Populum meum, I am the Protector's to protect my People.

Riſing of the Parliament.

After all poſſible Ceremonies and Enſigns of Authority (nothing wanting but Oil and Crown) Mr. Manton prayed, and the People ſhouted, and the Trumpets ſounded, and the Parliament roſe after many Acts were paſſed, among which one for the Adjournment of this preſent Parliament from the 26th of June 1657, unto the 20th of January next enſuing.

Succeſs at Sea.

All things went proſperous abroad to promote and confirm the Advancements of Cromwel. Admiral Blake on April 20, ſet upon the Spaniſh Weſt-India Fleet, in the Bay of Sancta Cruz on the Iſland of Teneriff, and with invincible Courage broke thro' the Barricado, beat the Enemy out of all their Forts and Caſtles, ſunk two Ships, and fired all the reſt, to the inſufferable Loſs and Shame of the Spaniards. And to diſturb them at Land as well as at Sea, the Protector ſent over ſix thouſand Men under command of Colonel John Reynolds and Major General Morgan to aſſiſt the French in their Attempts upon Flanders; and to do them the Service of helping them to take St. Venant and Mardike: And yet the Commanders in both theſe fortunate Expeditions loſt their own Lives; Colonel Reynolds being recalled upon ſuſpi- 1657. 9 Car. II. cion for having a Conference with the Duke of York, was caſt away on the Goodwin-Sands Decemb. 12, And Admiral Blake returning home in Glory died on Ship-board in Plimouth Sound at the beginning of Auguſt: A Man of admirable Courage and equal Succeſs.

Another Houſe.

Before the meeting of the Parliament, there was to be a new Conſtitution of it, by adding another Houſe, to bring back the Form of a King, Lords and Commons. The Protector ſent out his Writs in the ſame Form with thoſe formerly ſent to ſummon the Peers to Parliament; their number was ſixty, of which the two firſt, like Princes of the Blood, were his own Sons, the Lord Richard and Lord Henry Cromwel, then Nathaniel Fiennes and John Liſle Lords Commiſſioners of the Great-Seal, Henry Lawrence Ld. Preſident of his Highneſſes Council, the Lord Charles Fleetwood, Robert Earl of Warwick, Edmund Earl of Mulgrave, and other Noblemen, and chief Officers Military and Civil; who in Rights and Privileges ſhould differ nothing from a Houſe of Peers, only as the Head muſt not have the Name of a King ſo theſe Members were not to have the Title of Houſe of Peers but of the other Houſe of Parliament.

Meeting of a new Parliament conſiſting of two Houſes.

On Jan. 20, both theſe Houſes met, and the Protector came as Sovereign to the Houſe of Lords, and ſent for the Speaker and Houſe of Commons by the Black-Rod, and then ſpoke in ſhort to them, beginning his Speech in the old Stile, My Lords, and you the Knights, Citizens and Burgeſſs of the Houſe of Commons, and then diſcourſed ſome Particulars which he recommended to them; thank'd them for their fair Correſpondence the laſt Seſſion, and aſſured them, if they would continue to proſecute his Deſigns, they ſhould be called the bleſſed of the Lord, and Generations to come ſhould bleſs them: And ſo he left his Lord Keeper Fiennes to make a large Speech to them, with all the ſtate of our ancient Monarchs. When the two Houſes fell upon Buſineſs, they could by no means agree; the Commons had Envy and Indignation to ſee a Houſe pretending to be ſuperior to them without the claim of Birthright, or any old legal Creation; and the other Houſe knew it was their Commiſſion to be a Houſe of Peers in every thing but Name, and therefore inſiſted upon all the ancient Rights and Privileges belonging to the place where they ſate. The Protector ſeeing their Diſputes growing higher every Day, reſolved upon their Diſſolution; the manner of which is thus delivered by a Witneſs of it.

Diſcord between the two Houſes.

"Cromwel was not a little ſtartled at theſe Proceed- "ings, ſuſpecting that part of the Army, eſpecially "thoſe that were Quartered about St. James's were "engaged therein; therefore to prevent that which "he feared, and which his Conſcience told him he "had deſerved, he took the inſpection of the Watch "at Whitehall for ſeveral Nights ſucceſſively in his "own Perſon. And the Alarm from abroad encrea- "ſing daily, he reſolved upon the Diſſolution of this "Aſſembly, intending as ſoon as they were diſmiſ- "ſed, and the Power devolved upon him again, to "curb that Spirit of Liberty that had lately appear'd, "and to remove ſuch Officers from their Commands "in the Army, whom he ſuſpected to have any "hand in their late Counſels. Whilſt he was deli- "berating about the beſt means of effecting this de- "ſign, freſh Informations were brought him con- "cerning the diligence of his Adverſaries in all "Parts, which quickened him to that degree, that "he would not ſtay for one of his own Coaches, but "taking the firſt that was at hand, with Guards as "he could preſently get together, he hurried to the "other Houſe; whither being come, he imparted "his Intentions to diſſolve that Aſſembly to Lieu- "tenant General Fleetwood, who earneſtly endea- "vouring to diſſwade him from it, he clapp'd his "Hand upon his Breaſt, and ſwore by the Living "God he would do it. Then he ſent for the Judges;

1657. 9 Car. II.

" and they being come, diſpatched another Meſſage " to the Aſſembly to attend him preſently. Many " of them declined to come, and thoſe that appear- " ed were very ill treated by him for obſtructing " that Work, which he ſaid was ſo well begun in " order to the Settlement of the Nation. On the " other hand, he aſſured thoſe whom he had called " to his other Houſe, that notwithſtanding all the " practices that had been uſed againſt them, they " ſhould continue to be Lords, and ſo diſmiſſed both " the Aſſemblies to follow their own private Af- " fairs."

He is ſaid in his Speech to have declared ſeveral urgent and weighty Reaſons, that made it neceſſary for him, in order to the publick Peace and Safety, to proceed to an immediate Diſſolution of this Parliament; and to have concluded with theſe or ſuch Words, By the Living God I do and muſt diſſolve you. This impetuous act of Cromwel was cenſur'd and condemn'd by his beſt Friends; yet it was indeed a Maſter-ſtroke of Policy: For a Faction between the two Houſes would have broke all his Intereſts aſunder; and if he had made himſelf a Party on either Side, it had but more inflam'd the Quarrel. (a)

Hopes of the King.

The King had reaſons to hope that theſe diſtractions in the Engliſh State, would by degrees bring a People to caſt back their Eyes and Hearts upon their lawful Prince. This encouraged the Spaniards to protect his Perſon and accept his Arms in Flanders, where his loyal Subjects the Marqueſs of Ormond, the Lord Rocheſter, the Lords Gerrard and Wentworth, the Lord Taaf and General Middleton had their ſeveral Regiments quarter'd along the Sea-Coaſts, under Command of the Dukes of York and Glouceſter; wiſely to ſerve a double Deſign, to aſſiſt the King of Spain againſt his Enemies the French, who were ſupported by Cromwel, and to be in a readineſs to tranſport themſelves into England, if any favourable Juncture ſhould invite them. For the Royaliſts in England, tho' weak and poor, were continually forming ſome Hopes and Deſigns for recalling the King. But their moſt ſecret Counſels were betray'd, and therefore their wiſeſt Projects could ſeldom grow ſo far as an Attempt to give Life and Succeſs to them. However, a general Inſurrection was at this time deſign'd; and for a preparation to it, there was now publiſhed and induſtriouſly diſperſed a very ſmart and ſurprizing Paper under the Title of Killing no Murder, wherein it was proved to be not only lawful, but honourable, to kill the Tyrant as a common Enemy of his Country. This waked the Protector into a dreadful fright, and made him very vigilant to apprehend the Author, who was happily then conceal'd, not only in his Perſon but in the very ſuſpicion of his Name, tho' ſince commonly taken to be Colonel Titus, a Man of great figure in many of the Parliaments after the King's Return. After this Alarm given, (which ſerv'd not ſo much to put the King's Party into a Preparation as it did to put Cromwel upon his Guard) the Marqueſs of Ormond ſlip'd over from Flanders and lay privately in London, to ripen the Deſign, and to ſend for his Troops to puſh on the execution of it. But Cromwel, who well knew that Money could be at any time the Price of a Traitor, had corrupted Sir Richard Willis, and one Corker an ejected Miniſter, who then practiſed Phyſick; and by their perfidious Intelligence, he ſet out a Proclamation for the Plotters before they could get into a Body; many of them were ſeiz'd, and ſome furiouſly Executed; the Marqueſs of Ormond luckily eſcaped into Suſſex, and there by diſguiſe and Shifts preſerv'd himſelf, till by the Aſſiſtance of Mr. Graves a worthy Gentleman of that County, he got away in a ſmall Boat, and was by Providence kept for better Times.

Marqueſs of Ormond ſent into England.

Hardly eſcapes.

Death of Admiral Blake.

This Year, as before hinted, died the Valiant and Victorious Admiral Blake, who wanted nothing but a better Maſter and a better Cauſe to have made him the Glory of England, and the wonder of the World. And yet he did not ſo much eſpouſe the Intereſt of the Long Parliament, or the new Service of Cromwel, as he did the Honour of his Country, and the Engliſh Dominion of the Seas. It was his Argument for Peace and Unity among his Seamen, that they ſhould not liſten to any News from Land, nor mind the Changes in the Government; but remember that the Fleet was Engliſh, and that their Enemies were Foreigners and Strangers, and therefore they muſt fight for the Honour of the Engliſh Nation. By this Principle he had been alway Safe and Succeſsful; and had in this very Summer inſulted the Spaniſh Coaſts, and ſailed thence to intercept their Weſt-India Fleet, which got into the Bay of Sancta Cruz, in one of the Canary Iſlands, where Don Diego Diagues the Spaniſh Admiral had ſo well barricado'd the Entrance, and ſo well fortified and planted the Caſtle and Forts upon the Shore, that he ſent Word by a Dutch Merchant, Let Blake come if he dares. But Blake wanted no Challenge; he ſent a Squadron under Command of Captain Steiner, in the Speaker Frigot, who forced their Paſſage into the Mouth of the Bay, and were preſently ſupported by the whole Engliſh Fleet, and an abſolute Victory was by degrees obtained; and yet it was impracticable to carry off the Prizes, and therefore they were to a ſingle Veſſel burnt and ſunk on Monday April 20, for which noble Service the Parliament (at Cromwel's imparting the News) ordered a Day of Thankſgiving, and voted 500 l. for a Jewel to be preſented to the Admiral, as a Teſtimony of his Countries Gratitude and Reſpect to him. After this great Exploit he ſailed back to the Coaſts of Spain, and having triumphantly kept all their Ships and Ports in awe, he was bringing home the Fleet, while falling ſick of the Marine Diſtemper a Scorbutick Fever, he died juſt as the Fleet was entering into Plimouth-Sound, where he paſſionately enquired for the Land, but found his own Element to be the more proper Bed of Honour. He had a publick Funeral ſolemnly and juſtly beſtowed upon him, with the Honour of Interment in the Chappel of Henry VII. of whom the Lord Clarendon gives this Character. " He " was a Man of a private Extraction, yet had enough " left him by his Father to give him a good Educa- " tion; which his own Inclination diſpoſed him to " receive in the Univerſity of Oxford, where he took " the Degree of a Maſter of Arts; and was enough " vers'd in Books for a Man who intended not to be " of any Profeſſion, having ſufficient of his own to " maintain him in the Plenty he affected, and having " then no appearance of Ambition to be a greater " Man than he was. He was the firſt Man that brought the Ships to contemn Caſtles on Shore, which had been thought ever very formidable, and were diſcovered by him to make a noiſe only, and to fright thoſe who could rarely be hurt by them. He was the firſt that infuſed that proportion of Courage into the Seamen, by making them ſee by Experience what mighty things they could do if they were reſolved; and taught them to fight in Fire as well as upon the Water: and though he had been very well imitated and followed, he was the firſt that gave the Example of that kind of Naval Courage and bold and reſolute Atchievements."

State of Religion. The unhappy State of Religion in this Year is not worth mentioning. The Plan was to reverſe Presbytery, as adapted only to a Commonwealth, and to form a new Syſtem of Doctrine and Diſcipline more agreeable to the new Model of Government in a ſingle Perſon. But that the Alteration might be rather kept in Reſerve, than be too ſuddenly introduced; it was only provided in the Inſtrument of Conſtituting a Protector, Article XI.

Article in the Inſtrument of Government. "That the true Proteſtant Chriſtian Religion, as it is contained in the Holy Scriptures of the Old and New Teſtament, and no other, be held forth and aſſerted for the publick Profeſſion of theſe Nations: And that a Confeſſion of Faith to be agreed by your Highneſs and the Parliament, according to the Rule and Warrant of the Scriptures, be aſſerted, held forth, and recommended to the People of theſe Nations: That none may be ſuffered or permitted, by opprobrious Words, or writing maliciouſly or contemptuouſly, to revile or reproach the Confeſſion of Faith to be agreed on as aforeſaid. And ſuch who profeſs Faith in God the Father, and in Jeſus Chriſt his eternal Son the true God, and in the Holy Spirit God coequal with the Father and the Son, one God bleſſed for ever; and do acknowledge the holy Scriptures of the Old and New Teſtament to be the revealed Will and Word of God; and ſhall in other Things differ in Doctrine, Worſhip, or Diſcipline, from the publick Profeſſion held forth; Endeavours ſhall be uſed to convince them by ſound Doctrine, and the Example of a good Converſation: But, that they may not be compelled thereto by Penalties, nor reſtrained from their Profeſſion, but protected from all Injury and Moleſtation in the Profeſſion of the Faith, and Exerciſe of their Religion, whilſt they abuſe not this Liberty to the Civil Injury of others, or the Diſturbance of the Publick Peace. So that this Liberty be not extended to Popery or Prelacy, or to the countenancing ſuch who publiſh horrible Blaſphemies, or practiſe or hold forth Licentiouſneſs or Prophaneneſs under the Profeſſion of Chriſt. And that thoſe Miniſters or publick Preachers who ſhall agree with the publick Profeſſion aforeſaid in Matters of Faith, although in their Judgment and Practice they differ in Matters of Worſhip and Diſcipline, ſhall not only have Protection in the way of their Churches and Worſhip reſpectively, but be eſteemed fit and capable, notwithſtanding ſuch Difference (being otherwiſe duly qualified and duly approved) of any Truſt, Promotion, or Employment whatſoever in theſe Nations, that any Miniſters who agree in Doctrine, Worſhip, and Diſcipline with the publick Profeſſion aforeſaid are capable of. And all others who agree with the publick Profeſſion in Matters of Faith, although they differ in Matters of Worſhip and Diſcipline as aforeſaid; ſhall not only have Protection as aforeſaid, but be eſteemed fit and capable (notwithſtanding ſuch Difference, being otherwiſe duly qualified) of any Civil Truſt, Employment, or Promotion in theſe Nations. But for ſuch Perſons who agree not in Matters of Faith with the publick Profeſſion aforeſaid, they ſhall not be capable of receiving the publick Maintenance appointed for the Miniſtry."

1657. 9 Car. II. Presbytery, with a Toleration to deſtroy it. The meaning of all this Proviſion, was only to diſpenſe for a while with continuing the Eſtabliſhment of Presbytery, and yet to give an abſolute Toleration and a capacity of Preferment to the Independents; and ſo to hold the Scales between each Party till the Protector and his Council ſhould determine any other way.

It is not improbable, that if Cromwel had been King he would have been for reſtoring Epiſcopacy, tho' not upon a Principle of Conſcience. The Lord Clarendon ſays, "He uſed to ſpeak much, that it was pity the Nobility ſhould be totally ſuppreſt, and that the Government would be better if it paſſed another Conſultation beſides that of the Houſe of Commons." In matter of Religion, he would often ſpeak, that there was much of Good in the Order of Biſhops, if the Droſs were ſcoured off. But indeed Enthuſiaſm was the Protector's Talent, which he was glad to hide from the uſe of any others; and if he had reign'd long, would have made it his own Prerogative: For by getting among the People, it put him and his Government into perpetual Trouble and Danger. But of all the Spirits, that of the Fifth-Monarchy Men was the moſt turbulent, and the moſt likely to deſtroy his new Empire. Major-General Harriſon had put himſelf into the Counſels and Deſigns of theſe furious Men, and the Plot was laid for an Inſurrection (in their Cant) to ſet up King Jeſus. Their chief Cabal was held in a Houſe in Shoreditch, where Secretary Thurlo (who ſpared no Pains or Money for his Maſter's Safety) had a Spy among them, and diſcovered the Intrigues time enough to prevent the Execution of them: He ſeized their Arms and Ammunition, with a Standard of a Lion Couchant (as of the Tribe of Judah) with this Motto, Who ſhall rouze him up? and ſeveral Copies of a printed Declaration, with this Title, The Principle of the Remnant, &c. The Conſpirators taken were Thomas Venner, Gray, Gowler, Hopkins, Aſhton, and others, who were ſpared to create Diſturbance and their own Deſtruction at another Time. — Plot of the Fifth-Monarchy Men.

Cromwel for Liberty of Conſcience as he pleas'd. It is certain, the Protector was not himſelf of any one Religion, and therefore was for Liberty and utmoſt Latitude to all Parties, ſo far as conſiſted with the Peace and Safety of his Perſon and Government. And therefore he was never jealous of any Cauſe or Sect, on the Account of Hereſie or Falſehood; but on his wiſer accounts of political Peace and Quiet. As he mortally hated the Fifth-Monarchy Men, becauſe by their Notion he was to be dethroned; and had no Charity for the Anabaptiſts becauſe of their ſingular Opinions about the Civil Magiſtrate; ſo he had alway a ſuſpicious Eye upon the Presbyterians, becauſe he thought their Principles to be Republican: and even the Prejudice he had to the Epiſcopal Party, was more for their being Royaliſts, than for being of the good Old Church; as appeared upon the occaſion of their keeping up the Solemnity of Chriſtmas this Year. On Decemb. 25, ſeveral Aſſemblies met to obſerve the Day, and eſpecially Dr. Gunning's Congregation at Exeter-Houſe in the Strand: Notice of theſe Meetings was immediately carried to the Protector, and by ſome Zealots he was earneſtly moved to ſend Soldiers and ſuppreſs them: He at firſt denied the Motion, and argued againſt it, ſaying, that to diſturb them, was contrary to the Liberty of Conſcience which he and his Friends had alway acknowledged and pleaded for. But when it was objected, that the keeping of Chriſtmas was a Contempt of the publick Acts and Ordinances; and that under that Pretence there might be a Concourſe of People to Riſe, or at leaſt to conſpire for the King: then he ſent away a Detachment of Soldiers, who broke into Dr. Gunning's Meeting, plundered and — He hated Parties as his Enemies only. — Meetings of the Old Churchmen.

ſtript ſome of the People, and carried off others to Impriſonment and Fine. And, as the Lord Clarendon obſerves, "All Priſons, as well in the Country as "the City, were filled with thoſe who had been of "the King's Party, or he believed would be; and "he thought this a neceſſary Seaſon to terrify his "Enemies, of all Conditions, within the Kingdom, "with Spectacles which might mortify them." Plot of the Royaliſts diſcovered by Cromwel,

This Year began with proſecuting the Diſcovery of a reaſonable Plot of the Royaliſts to reſtore their Maſter and their own Rights. Cromwel had Advice of all their Steps and Meaſures, both by Intelligence from abroad, and by correſponding with ſome of the very Actors here at home. He knew well how to turn the Diſcovery into an Act of Popularity and Gain: And therefore (for want of a Parliament) he ſent for the Lord-Mayor and Aldermen of London, and in a very aggravating Strain informed them of the whole Story; and then profeſſing a greater Paſſion for their Safety than for his own, he deſired their Care to put the City into a poſture of Defence. They took the Bait, and went home with great Indignation againſt the Royaliſts, for attempting to plunder their Houſes, and cut their Throats; and took mighty care of the Gates and Guards; and drew up a humble Repreſentation and Addreſs to his Highneſs, promiſing the Faith of the City and the Purſe of it, in faithfully adhering to him againſt all his Enemies. A like Hint was given to the Army, and Addreſſes of the ſame ſtrain were ſent up from ſeveral Regiments, and brought over from the Engliſh Forces in Flanders; the Protector begging the Complement by imparting to them, that the Deſigns and Preparations of the Enemy were very formidable, that Commiſſioners were ſent over hither from the King of Scots, and that he had 4000 Men in Flanders ready to be embarked to join with his Party here, and Ships ready to tranſport them; and therefore it behoved all honeſt Men to provide for a Defence, and to join heartily together. When he had thus fortified his Intereſt, he reſolved to proceed againſt the Conſpirators whom he had laid faſt in Priſon: But in what Method to proceed he could not ſo eaſily determine: His Council adviſed him to the ancient way of Indicting them in the Upper Bench for Treaſon, and ſo going on in the ordinary Courſe of Trials at the Common Law: But he did not care for truſting to the ordinary Practice of Judges and Juries, tho' they might have been all Creatures of his own making. His Head and Heart lay rather for a High Court of Juſtice: he had had Experience of it, as the ſhorteſt way with Offenders; and therefore he had ſuch a new Court erected, and under the Seal nominated the Commiſſioners of the Seal and of the Treaſury, the Judges, and ſome other Confidents, to be in this Commiſſion; though ſome of them would have been glad to have waſhed their hands of Blood: and Whitlock does in particular confeſs, that though He was one of them, yet he never ſate with them, it being againſt his Judgment. This High Court of Juſtice was founded on a Law of the late Parliament for Security of his Highneſs's Perſon, and had Power to try all ſuch (and ſuch only) as ſhould be named to them by him or his Council. Before this Court were firſt brought Sir Henry Slingsby, an Officer for the King at Worceſter Fight, there taken Priſoner, and ſent to the Garriſon of Hull; where ſome of the Officers, Major Waterhouſe, Capt. Overton, and Lieut. Thompſon, wheedled him into procuring a Commiſſion from the King, and then betrayed him, and ſent him up Priſoner to the Tower. At his Trial he pleaded, that all the Diſcourſes he had held with thoſe Perſons who trepan'd him, were all in Jeſt, and for Diſcourſe ſake; and that the Fact was impoſſible, that he, being a ſingle Perſon and a Priſoner, could have any Hopes of putting that Garriſon into the King's Hands: but he was adjudged to Death by a Plurality of Voices (b). Dr. John Hewit, Preacher of St. Gregory's near Paul's, was brought at the ſame time, and charged with the like horrible Conſpiracy. He ſtoutly denied the Juriſdiction of the Court, and pleaded ſeveral Caſes againſt the Legality of it; and ſo for Contempt was adjudged guilty of the Charge: and when he did afterward offer to Plead, he was told, It was now too late. Theſe two were Beheaded on Tower-Hill on June 8, one dying with the Bravery of a Chriſtian Soldier, the other with the Devoutneſs of a Chriſtian Divine; and both proving that the Goodneſs of a Cauſe is the only Argument to dare to die. Their Characters are thus given by the inimitable Pen of the Lord Clarendon.

Their Death and Characters.

"Sir Henry Slingsby was in the firſt Rank of the "Gentlemen of Yorkſhire, and was returned to ſerve "as a Member in the Parliament that continued ſo "many Years, where he ſate till the Troubles began; and having no Relation to, or Dependance "upon the Court, he was ſwayed only by his Conſcience to deteſt the violent and undutiful Behaviour of that Parliament. He was a Gentleman of "a good Underſtanding, but of a very melancholick "Nature, and of very few Words: and when he "could ſtay no longer with a good Conſcience in their "Councils, in which he never concurred, he went "into his Country, and joined with the firſt who took "up Arms for the King. And when the War was "ended, he remained ſtill in his own Houſe, prepared "and diſpoſed to run the Fortune of the Crown in "any other Attempt. And having a good Fortune "and a general Reputation, had a greater Influence "upon the People than they who talked more and "louder, and was known to be irreconcileable to the "new Government, and therefore was cut off, notwithſtanding very great Interceſſion to preſerve "him: For he was Uncle to the Lord Falconbridge, "who engaged his Wife and all his new Allies to intercede for him, without effect. When he was brought "to die, he ſpent very little time in Diſcourſe; but "told them, He was to die for being an honeſt Man, of which he was very glad. Dr. Hewet was born a Gentleman, and bred a Scholar, and was a Divine before "the Beginning of the Troubles. He lived in Oxford, "and in the Army till the End of the War, and continued afterwards to preach with great Applauſe "in a little Church in London; where, by the Affection "of the Pariſh he was admitted, ſince he was enough "known to lie notoriouſly under the Brand of Malignity. When the Lord Falconbridge married Cromwel's "Daughter (who had uſed ſecretly to frequent his "Church) after the Ceremony of the Time, he was "made choice of to marry them according to the Order "of the Church; which engaged both that Ld. and "Lady to uſe their utmoſt Credit with the Protector "to preſerve his Life: but he was inexorable, and deſirous that the Churchmen, upon whom he look'd "as his mortal Enemies, ſhould ſee what they were "to truſt to, if they ſtood in need of his Mercy." How artfully they encouraged Enthuſiaſm and Myſtical Divinity does appear by the Book Sancta Sophia, compiled by Mr. Creſſy out of the Writings of Father Auguſtine Baker, ſet forth in 1657, with a Deſign as the Title tells us, to give Directions for the Prayer of Contemplation. And the Preface ſays, the only proper Diſpoſition towards the receiving of Supernatural Irradiations from God's Holy Spirit is an Abſtraction of Life, a Sequeſtration from all buſineſs that concerns others, and an attendance to God alone in the Depth of the Spirit, &c. Mr. Mallory having made his Eſcape, is ſuppoſed to have made his Peace, and then to have ſurrendered himſelf; for upon his Trial he pleaded Guilty, and had a Pardon. Sir Humphry Bennet had great Friends to make Application for him to the Commiſſioners, who ſaved his Life. Mr. Carent a Citizen (in whoſe Warehouſe Arms were found) was delivered by the Generoſity of Mr. Pits, who was produced to give the expected Evidence againſt him; but he utterly refuſed, and choſe rather to ſuffer Impriſonment, and a Fine of 500 l. to be laid upon him. Mr. Stacy, Mr. Bettſly, Mr. Aſhton, Mr. Alten, Mr. Summers, and Mr. Fryar, were all Condemned; and the three former Executed on July 6.

The Cruelty of Cromwel incenſed his Enemies and his very Friends.

This drawing of cool Blood made the Royaliſts more exaſperated, and the Protector more odious; eſpecially becauſe he refuſed his Mercy upon the greateſt Importunity from his neareſt Friends and Relations. The Lord Falconbridge, who on Nov. 18, 1657, had married Mary his third Daughter, and was now ſent his Ambaſſadour to France, made earneſt Suit for the Life of his Uncle Sir Henry Slingsby; but all his own Intereſt, and his Wife's, could not obtain that Favour. His beloved Daughter, the Lady Elizabeth Cleypole, interceded for the pious Dr. Hewit, and yet in that only Inſtance had a Denial from her fond Father; which ſhe ſo grievouſly reſented, that this is ſaid to have been the occaſion of her laſt Sickneſs, wherein ſhe raved againſt Cruelty and Blood, and died at Hampton-Court on the 6th of Auguſt, leaving her Father to follow her within a Month from the very ſame Place. Her Body was carried by Water to Weſtm. and being laid in State in the Painted-Chamber, was ſolemnly interred in the Chapel of Henry VII. The old Earl of Warwick (ſoon after the marrying his Grandſon Mr. Rich to Frances youngeſt Daughter of Cromwel) died April 18, and the Earl of Mulgrave, one of his Highneſſes Council died on the Road to London Aug. 28 (a). John Maynard Eſq; was by Patent made the Protector's Serjeant at Law on May 1, and Sir Thomas Widdrington made Lord Chief Baron of the Exchequer June 26.

The Siege of Dunkirk.

The great Action abroad was the Siege and Battle of Dunkirk. The French King in Perſon, and the Cardinal his prime Miniſter, had a good Army on the edge of Flanders; and being joined by a great Body of the Engliſh, under the Command of General Lockhart, it was concluded to beſiege Dunkirk, and if taken to be put into the Hands of the Engliſh. The Spaniſh General Don John of Auſtria well knowing the importance of that Place, reſolved to raiſe the Siege, and advancing with 15000 Men, offered to relieve it, but in a deſperate Fight was entirely routed, and the Town ſoon after ſurrendered. There was ſomething in this Management that very much ſhews the Perfidiouſneſs of the French, and the Policy and Power of Cromwel. There was an Article in the Treaty between France and the Protector, that if Dunkirk came to be taken, it ſhould be immediately delivered up to the Engliſh, and his Ambaſſador and General Lockhart had Orders to take poſſeſſion of it. When the French Army being joined with the Engliſh Auxiliaries, was in its March to inveſt the Town, Cromwel ſent one Morning for the French Ambaſſador to Whitehal, and upbraided him publickly for his Maſter's deſigned breach of Promiſe, in giving ſecret Orders to the French General to keep Poſſeſſion of Dunkirk, in caſe it was taken, contrary to the Treaty between them. The Ambaſſador proteſted he knew nothing of the matter, as indeed he did not, and begged leave to aſſure him, that there was no ſuch thing thought of. Upon which, Cromwel pulling a Paper out of his Pocket, Here, ſays he, is the Copy of the Cardinal's Order; and I deſire you to diſpatch immediately an Expreſs, to let him know, that I am not to be impoſed upon; and that if he deliver not up the Keys of the Town of Dunkirk to Lockhart within an Hour after it ſhall be taken, tell him, I'll come in Perſon, and demand them at the Gates of Paris. There were but four Perſons ſaid to be privy to this Order, the Queen-Mother, the Cardinal, the Marſhal de Turenne, and a Secretary. The Cardinal for a long time blamed the Queen, as if ſhe might poſſibly have blabbed it out to ſome of her Women: Whereas it was found after the Secretary's Death, that he had kept a ſecret Correſpondence with Cromwel for ſeveral Years, and therefore it was not doubted but he had ſent him the Copy of the Order above mentioned. The Meſſage had its due effect; for Dunkirk was put into the Poſſeſſion of the Engliſh: And to palliate the Matter, the Duke and Marſhal of Crequy was diſpatched into England Ambaſſador Extraordinary to complement Cromwel, attended with a numerous and ſplendid Train of Perſons of Quality; among whom was a Prince of the Blood, and Moncini Mazarine's Nephew, who brought a Letter from his Unkle to the Protector, full of the higheſt Expreſſions of Reſpect; and aſſuring his Highneſs, that being within view of the Engliſh Shore, nothing but the King's Indiſpoſition (who lay then ill of the Small-Pox at Calais) could have hinder'd him from coming over to England, that he might enjoy the Honour of waiting upon one of the greateſt Men that ever was; and whom, next to his Maſter, his greateſt Ambition was to ſerve. But being deprived of ſo great a Happineſs, he had ſent the Perſon that was neareſt to him in Blood, to aſſure him of the profound Veneration he had for his Perſon, and how much he was reſolved to the utmoſt of his Power to cultivate a perpetual Amity and Friendſhip betwixt his Maſter and him.

French perfidiouſneſs yields to Cromwel's Glory.

Dunkirk put into poſſeſſion of the Engliſh.

A good inſtance of the Grandeur of Cromwel.

Few Princes ever bore their Character higher upon all Occaſions than Oliver Cromwel, eſpecially in his Treaties with Crowned Heads. And it's a thing without Example, that is mentioned by one of the beſt informed Hiſtorians of the Age, Puffendorf, in the Life of the late Elector of Brandenburgh, that in Cromwel's League with France againſt Spain, he would not allow the French King to call himſelf King of France, but of the French; whereas he took to himſelf not only the Title of Protector of England, but likewiſe of France. And which is yet more ſurprizing, and can hardly be believed, but for Authority of the Author, whoſe own * Words are in the Margin, in the Inſtrument of the Treaty, the Protector's Name was put before the French King's. It is true, France was then under a Minority, and was not arrived at that Greatneſs to which it has ſince attained: Towards which Cromwel contributed not a little by that League with France againſt Spain; being the falſeſt ſtep he ever made, with reſpect to the tranquillity of Europe.

The French King not the King of France.

It ought to be here obſerved, that in the publick Inſtruments of Correſpondence between States and Kingdoms, little Words and Phraſes are of great Importance, ſo far as they relate to Claims and Titles, whoſe loſs or preſervation may hereafter in great meaſure depend upon the ways of former Expreſſion of 'em. This diſtinction of the King of France and of the French King, thus nicely made by Cromwel, ought to be ſtudiouſly kept up to aſſert the Dignity and Stile of our Engliſh Princes: And I remember it obſerved by an accurate Perſon, that in our Engliſh Gazettes, that Monarch was continually called the French King, till the writing of thoſe publick Papers falling into the hands of Perſons unskilful or inadvertent, he had been now of late ſometimes called the King of France.

Coaſts of Flanders to have relieved the Expectation of his Friends in England by bringing over an Army under the Conduct of the Count of Marſini, General to the Prince of Conde, newly diſtinguiſhed with the Garter, to engage him with more Spirit and Honour in the Service of the King. But the diſcovery of that Deſign in England, and the execution of ſeveral Agents in it, and the clapping up moſt of the King's Friends, and the defeat of the Spaniſh before Dunkirk, where the Dukes of York and Glouceſter were engaged and forced to fly; and the ſurrendry of Dunkirk, and a ſtrong Garriſon put into it by Cromwel, and a Fleet and Harbour for a Guard on all thoſe Coaſts; it was impoſſible for the King to do any thing but to acquieſce under the Baſeneſs of France and the Grandeur of Cromwel.

And yet a favourable Juncture by the Death of Cromwel.

And yet a Revolution was now coming, that ſeemed to promiſe the moſt favourable Juncture in the World for reſtoring the King, that was the Death of the Uſurper: The Relation of it is thus given by one of his Fellow Regicides.

Ludlow's Account of it.

“After the Death of Mrs. Cleypole, it was obſerved that Cromwel grew Melancholy, and alſo diſtempered with divers Infirmities, particularly a malignant Humour in his Foot, which hindred him from the Exerciſes of walking or riding abroad: He obliged his Phyſicians to endeavour to diſperſe it, which they endeavouring to do, drove it upwards to his Heart. By this means he became deſperately Sick; and as ſome about him had for a long time deceived others, ſo they now endeavoured to impoſe upon God himſelf: For Dr. Goodwin his Creature and Trencher Chaplain, uſed this Expreſſion in his Prayer, during the time of his Sickneſs: Lord, we beg not for his Recovery, for that thou haſt already granted and aſſured us of, but for his ſpeedy Recovery. (a) —— At Whitehal they were unwilling to have it known that he was ſo dangerouſly ill; yet by reaſon of a Clauſe in the Humble Petition and Advice (which was the Rule of Government they pretended to act by) that the Protector ſhall have Power to nominate his Succeſſor, the Commiſſioners of the Great-Seal attended for ſigning the Declaration of the Perſon to be appointed to ſucceed him. But whether he was unwilling to diſcover his Intentions to leave the Succeſſion to his Son, leſt thereby he ſhould in caſe of Recovery diſoblige others, whom he had put in expectation of that Power; or whether he was ſo diſcompoſed in Body and Mind, that he could not attend that matter; or laſtly, whether he would have named, or did name any other, is to me uncertain. But certain it is, that the Commiſſioners were not admitted till the Friday following, when the Symptoms of Death were apparent upon him; and many Miniſters and others, aſſembled in a Chamber at Whitehall praying for him, whilſt he manifeſted ſo little Remorſe of Conſcience for his betraying the publick Cauſe, and ſacrificing it to the Idol of his own Ambition, that ſome of his laſt Words were rather becoming a Mediator than a Sinner, recommending to God the condition of the Nation that he had ſo infamouſly cheated, and expreſſing a great Care of the People whom he had ſo manifeſtly deſpiſed. But he ſeemed above all concerned for the Reproaches he ſaid Men would caſt upon his Name, in trampling on his Aſhes when dead. In this temper of Mind he departed this Life about two in the Afternoon; and the News of his Death being brought to thoſe who were met together to pray for him, Mr. Sterry ſtood up and deſired them not to be troubled: For (ſaid he) this is good News; becauſe if he was of great uſe to the People of God, when he was amongſt us, now he will be much more ſo, being aſcended to Heaven, to ſit at the Right-hand of Jeſus Chriſt, there to intercede for us, and to be mindful of us on all occaſions.” (b)

Sir Philip Warwick's Account.

Sir Philip Warwick tells us, “That ſome time before his Death he ſeemed diſpirited; and by the Acquaintance (ſays he) I had with an old Gentlewoman, who made his Broths and Jellies, and other ſuch cockering Meats, I learnt, that for one while he frequently uſed theſe, and for another he took large draughts of Wine; and he ſeldom awaked, even in the Night, but with one or other of theſe he muſt be repleniſhed: So as at laſt falling into a Feaver, he ſoon fell into a Delirium; and one of his Phyſicians, whom I was intimately acquainted with, aſſured me, that during all his Sickneſs, he was never Maſter of ſo much Reaſon as to determine any thing of his Succeſſor or Matters of State: And yet his fulſome flattering Divines and Friends all gave themſelves aſſurance of his Recovery; inſomuch, as Thomas Goodwin in his ſaucy Expoſtulations with God in Prayer, would tell God, that they asked not for his Life; for they were aſſured he had too great Things for this Man to do to remove him yet; but they prayed for his ſpeedy Recovery, becauſe his Life and Preſence were ſo neceſſary to divers things then of great Moment to be diſpatched. But all this while this poor Gentleman lay diſturbed in his Head, and as it was thought, reflecting upon a then Meeting of the Independent Miniſters, that were aſſembled at the Savoy, to ſet forth their Articles of Faith: For the moſt that he ſaid was, They muſt be ſatisfied, they muſt be ſatisfied, or elſe we all run into Blood again. And tho' it was pretended at that time by Thurlo the Secretary and Goodwin the Miniſter, that he gave particular Directions to them, that his Son Richard ſhould be his Succeſſor, and they brought in others afterward to teſtifie the ſame; yet his Phyſician aſſured me, he never was in any ſuch Condition as diſtinctly to know what he did. And thus on his beloved and victorious Day, Sept. 3, 1658, he expired ſiccâ morte, ten Years after he had ſpilt the innocent Blood of the King; and tho' he had run thro' ſo many Dangers, and had ſo many Plots againſt his Life, and committed ſo many wicked and flagitious Acts, yet he breathed out his laſt in his Bed.” But as if the Elements as well as Men had waited for this Day; “It was very memorable (ſays a late Hiſtorian) for the greateſt Storm of Wind that had been ever known, for ſome Hours before and after his Death, which overthrew Trees, Houſes, and made great Wrecks at Sea: And the Tempeſt was ſo univerſal that the effects of it were terrible both in France and Flanders, where all People trembled at it; for beſides the Wrecks all along the Sea-Coaſts, many Boats were caſt away in the very Rivers; and within few Days after, the Circumſtance of his Death that accompanied the Storm was univerſally known.”

Rejoicing at his Death.

His Death was generally the moſt welcome News in the World at home and abroad, he having been every where feared and hated. The Royal Party had moſt reaſon to be forward in their Joys: for amidſt the diſtraction of Intereſts ariſing from the ſucceſs of the great Rebellion, nothing could have hindered the Return of a lawful Prince, but ſuch a ſingle Uſurper ſetting up himſelf, and re-eſtabliſhing Monarchy without the King: And they had reaſon to hope, that this great

(a) I heard one relate it as a Story from Dr. Goodwin's own Mouth, that Oliver's great Enquiry upon his ſick Bed, was, Whether a Man could fall from Grace? I hope not, ſays he, for I am ſure I was once in a State of Grace, &c.

(b) Major General Butler was preſent in the Protector's Chamber the Day before his Death, and took his laſt Prayer in Writing under his own hand, which original Paper I have ſeen, and I took this Copy of it:

His Highneſs's Prayer Thurſday in the Afternoon, being 2, September 1658.

I am a poor fooliſh Fellow, O Lord, and thy People would fain have me live, and they think it beſt for them I ſhould live, and they think if I live it will redound much to thy Glory; and all the Stir is about this. And ſome would fain have me dead; Lord, pardon them; and pardon thy fooliſh People, and forgive their Sin, and do not forſake them, but love them and bleſs them; and give them Reſt, and bring them to a Conſiſtency. And give me Reſt for Jeſus Chriſt his ſake, to whom with thee and thy Holy Spirit be Glory and Praiſe for evermore. And now, Lord, forgive me the Sin of this little fooliſh Prayer of mine.——I am a Conquerour, and more than a Conquerour, through Jeſus Chriſt that ſtrengthens me.

After theſe Words (ſaith Major Butler) he had little Senſe, but after ſome Hours toſſings, about three on Friday Morning he lay ſtill, and ſo continued till he expired at three in the Afternoon.

1658. 10 Car. II.

Obſtructor being now taken away, he could not leave a Succeſſor of equal Genius with himſelf, but Feuds and Diviſions muſt be at laſt compoſed by the only way, that of reſtoring the Legal Government. The Commonwealth's Men were, if poſſible, more exceeding glad to be rid of him, for they thought him a Traitor to the People of England; and if their Power had ſerved, would have brought him to the ſame Puniſhment to which he had ſo villainouſly brought his Maſter: Even Desborough his Brother-in-law, and Fleetwood his Son-in-law, were in Confederacy with Pickering and Sydenham, and others of his Privy-Council (whom he thought ſecureſt to him) to bring back a beloved Commonwealth. And even all the Parties in Religion thought his Death would bring advantage to their ſeveral Cauſes: for he properly eſpouſed none, and kept all under. The Foreign States and Kingdoms did likewiſe all rejoice as in a common Deliverance. The Dutch had loſt Glory to him at Sea, and had found him more imperious in his Treaties and Terms than any Engliſh Monarch. The Portugueſe had been filled with Indignation at him; becauſe he had ſolemnly carried their Ambaſſador's Brother to be executed for a Tumult in London, notwithſtanding his Plea of being a Publick Miniſter. The Spaniards above all other Nations were diſpoſed to curſe his Memory, becauſe of their dreadful Suffering by his Arms at Sea and Land: And even the French Court, who by his aſſiſtance laid the Foundation of their ſucceeding Greatneſs, envied him as a Friend, and ſuſpected he might one Day prove their Enemy: And it was ſaid, that Cardinal Mazarine would change Countenance whenever he heard him named; ſo that it paſſed into a Proverb in France, that The Cardinal was not ſo much afraid of the Devil as he was of Oliver Cromwel.

The Character of Oliver Cromwel.

His Character is thus given by a generous Enemy the Lord Clarendon. "He was one of thoſe Men, quos " vituperare ne inimici quidem poſſent, niſi ut ſimul laudent; " whom his very Enemies could not condemn with- " out commending him at the ſame time: For he could " never have done half that Miſchief without great " parts of Courage, Induſtry, and Judgment. He " muſt have had a wonderful Underſtanding in the " Natures and Humours of Men, and as great a dex- " terity in applying them, who, from a private and " obſcure Birth (tho' of a good Family) without In- " tereſt or Eſtate, Alliance or Friendſhip, could raiſe " himſelf to ſuch a Height, and compound and knead " ſuch oppoſite and contradictory Tempers, Humours " and Intereſts into a Conſiſtence that contributed to " his Deſigns and to their own Deſtruction; whilſt " himſelf grew inſenſibly powerful enough to cut off " thoſe by whom he had climbed, in the inſtant " that they projected to demoliſh their own Build- " ing. What was ſaid of Cinna may very juſtly be " ſaid of him, auſum eum, quæ nemo auderet bonus; " perfeciſſe quæ à nullo, niſi fortiſſimo, perfici poſſent, he " attempted thoſe things which no good Man durſt " have ventured on, and atchieved thoſe in which " none but a valiant and great Man could have ſuc- " ceeded. Without doubt no Man with more wick- " edneſs ever attempted any thing, or brought to " paſs what he deſired more wickedly, more in the " Face and Contempt of Religion and Moral Honeſty; " yet wickedneſs as great as his could never have " accompliſhed thoſe Deſigns, without the aſſiſtance " of a great Spirit, an admirable Circumſpection and " Sagacity, and a moſt magnanimous Reſolution.

" When he appeared firſt in the Parliament, he " ſeemed to have a Perſon in no degree Gracious, no " ornament of Diſcourſe; none of thoſe Talents " which uſe to conciliate the Affections of the Stan- " der-by: Yet as he grew into Place and Authority, " his Parts ſeemed to be raiſed, as if he had con- " cealed Faculties till he had occaſion to uſe them; " and when he was to act the part of a great Man, " he did it without any indecency, notwithſtanding " the want of Cuſtom.

" After he was confirmed and inveſted Protector " by the Humble Petition and Advice, he conſulted with " very few upon any Action of Importance, nor com- " municated any Enterprize he reſolved upon with " more than thoſe who were to have principal Parts " in the execution of it; nor with them ſooner than " was abſolutely neceſſary. What he once reſolved, " in which he was not raſh, he would not be diſſwa- " ded from, nor endure any contradiction of his " Power and Authority; but extorted Obedience " from them who were not willing to yield it.

1658. 10 Car. II.

" One time when he had laid ſome very extraor- " dinary Tax upon the City, one Cony an eminent Fa- " natick, and one who had heretofore ſerved him very " notably, poſitively refuſed to pay his part; and " loudly diſſwaded others from ſubmitting to it, as an " Impoſition notoriouſly againſt the Law, and the Property " of the Subject, which all honeſt Men were bound to de- " fend. Cromwel ſent for him, and cajoled him with " the Memory of the old Kindneſs and Friendſhip " that had been between them; and that of all Men " he did not expect this oppoſition from him, in a " Matter that was ſo neceſſary for the good of the Com- " monwealth. It had been always his fortune to meet " with the moſt rude and obſtinate Behaviour from " thoſe who had formerly been abſolutely governed " by him, and they commonly put him in mind of " ſome Expreſſions and Sayings of his own in caſes " of the like Nature: So this Man remember'd him, " how great an Enemy he had expreſſed himſelf to " ſuch Grievances, and had declared, that all who ſub- " mitted to them, and paid illegal Taxes, were more to " blame, and greater Enemies to their Country, than they " who had impoſed them; and that the Tyranny of Princes " could never be grievous but by the Tameneſs and Stupi- " dity of the People. When Cromwel ſaw that he could " not convert him, he told him, that he had a Will as " ſtubborn as his, and he would try which of them two " ſhould be Maſter. Thereupon, with ſome Expreſſions " of Reproach and Contempt, he committed the Man " to Priſon, whoſe Courage was nothing abated by " it; but as ſoon as the Term came, he brought his " Habeas Corpus in the King's-Bench, which they then " called the Upper-Bench. Maynard who was of Coun- " cil with the Priſoner, demanded his Liberty with " great Confidence, both upon the illegality of the " Commitment, and the illegality of the Impoſition, " as being laid without any lawful Authority. The " Judges could not maintain or defend either, and " enough declared what their Sentence would be; " and therefore the Protector's Attorney required a " farther Day to anſwer what had been urged. Be- " fore that Day, Maynard was committed to the " Tower, for preſuming to Queſtion or make doubt " of his Authority; and the Judges were ſent for, " and ſeverely reprehended for ſuffering that Li- " cence: When they with all Humility mentioned " the Law and Magna Charta, Cromwel told them " with Terms of Contempt and Deriſion, their Mag- " na F——— ſhould not controul his Actions, which he " knew were for the ſafety of the Commonwealth. He " asked them, Who made them Judges? Whether they " had any Authority to ſit there but what he gave them? " And if his Authority were at an end, they knew well " enough what would become of themſelves; and therefore " adviſed them to be more tender of that which could on- " ly preſerve them; and ſo diſmiſſed them with cau- " tion, that they ſhould not ſuffer the Lawyers to prate " what it would not become them to hear.

" Thus he ſubdued a Spirit that had been often " troubleſome to the moſt Soveraign Power, and " made Weſtminſter-hall as obedient and ſubſervient " to his Commands as any of the reſt of his Quarters. " In all other Matters, which did not concern the " Life of his Juriſdiction, he ſeemed to have great " reverence for the Law, rarely interpoſing between " Party and Party. As he proceeded with this kind " of Indignation and Haughtineſs, with thoſe who " were refractory and durſt contend with his great- " neſs, ſo towards all who complied with his good " Pleaſure and courted his Protection, he uſed great " Civility, Generoſity, and Bounty.

1658. 10 Car. II.

"To reduce three Nations which perfectly hated "him to an entire Obedience to all his Dictates; "to awe and govern thoſe Nations by an Army that "was indevoted to him, and wiſhed his Ruin, was "an Inſtance of a very prodigious Addreſs. But his "Greatneſs at home was but a ſhadow of the Glory "he had abroad. It was hard to diſcover which "feared him moſt, France, Spain, or the Low Countries, "where his Friendſhip was current at the Value he "put upon it. As they did all ſacrifice their Ho-"nour and their Intereſt to his Pleaſure, ſo there is "nothing he could have demanded that either of them "would have denied him. To manifeſt which, there "needs only two Inſtances: The firſt is when thoſe of "the Valley of Lucern had unwarily riſen in Arms "againſt the Duke of Savoy, which gave occaſion to "the Pope and the Neighbour Princes of Italy, to call "and ſollicit for their extirpation, and their Prince "poſitively reſolved upon it, Cromwel ſent his Agent "to the Duke of Savoy, a Prince with whom he had no "Correſpondence or Commerce, and ſo engaged the "Cardinal, and even terrified the Pope himſelf, with-"out ſo much as doing any Grace to the Engliſh Roman "Catholicks (nothing being more uſual than his ſay-"ing, that his Ships in the Mediterranean ſhould viſit "Civita Vecchia; and that the ſound of his Cannon ſhould "be heard in Rome) that the Duke of Savoy thought it "neceſſary to reſtore all that he had taken from "them, and did renew all thoſe Privileges they had "formerly enjoyed and newly forfeited.

"The other Inſtance of his Authority was yet "greater and more incredible. In the City of Niſmes, "which is one of the faireſt in the Province of Lan-"guedoc, and where thoſe of the Religion do moſt "abound, there was a great Faction at that Seaſon "when the Conſuls (who are the chief Magiſtrates) "were to be choſen. Thoſe of the Reformed Religion "had the confidence to ſet up one of themſelves for "that Magiſtracy, which they of the Roman Religion "reſolved to oppoſe with all their Power. The Diſſen-"tion between them made ſo much noiſe, that the "Intendant of the Province, who is the ſupreme Mi-"niſter in all Civil Affairs throughout the whole "Province, went thither to prevent any Diſorder "that might happen. When the Day of Election came, "thoſe of the Religion poſſeſſed themſelves, with "many armed Men, of the Town-Houſe where the "Election was to be made. The Magiſtrates ſent to "know what their meaning was; to which they an-"ſwered, They were there to give their Voices for the "choice of the new Conſuls, and to be ſure that the Election "ſhould be fairly made. The Biſhop of the City, the In-"tendant of the Province, with all the Officers of "the Church, and the preſent Magiſtrates of the "Town, went together in their Robes to be preſent "at the Election, without any ſuſpicion that there "would be any force uſed. When they came near "the Gate of the Town-Houſe, which was ſhut, and "they ſuppoſed would be opened when they came, "they within poured out a Volley of Muſket-ſhot "upon them, by which the Dean of the Church, and "two or three of the Magiſtrates of the Town were "killed upon the place, and very many others woun-"ded; whereof ſome died ſhortly after. In this "confuſion the Magiſtrates put themſelves into as "good a Poſture to defend themſelves as they could, "without any purpoſe of offending the other, till "they ſhould be better provided; in order to which, "they ſent an Expreſs to the Court, with a plain re-"lation of the whole Matter of Fact; and that there "appeared to be no manner of Combination with thoſe "of the Religion in other places of the Province; but "that it was an Inſolence of thoſe in the place, upon the "preſumption of their great Numbers, which were little "inferior to thoſe of the Catholicks. The Court was "glad of the occaſion, and reſolved that this Pro-"vocation, in which other Places were not involved, "and which no body could excuſe, ſhould warrant "all kind of Severity in that City, even to the pul-"ling down their Temples, and expelling many of "them for ever out of the City; which, with the "Execution and Forfeiture of many of the princi-"pal Perſons, would be a general Mortification to "all of the Religion in France, with whom they "were heartily offended, and a part of the Army "was forthwith ordered to march towards Niſmes to "ſee this executed with the utmoſt rigour.

"Thoſe of the Religion in the Town were quickly "ſenſible into what condition they had brought them-"ſelves, and ſent with all poſſible ſubmiſſion to the "Magiſtrates to excuſe themſelves, and to impute "what had been done to the raſhneſs of particular "Men, who had no order for what they did. The Ma-"giſtrates anſwered, That they were glad they were ſen- "ſible of their Miſcarriage; but they could ſay nothing "upon the Subject till the King's pleaſure ſhould be known, "to whom they had ſent a full Relation of all that had "paſſed. The others very well knew what the King's "Pleaſure would be, and forthwith ſent an Expreſs, "one Moulins, who had lived many Years in that "Place and in Montpellier, to Cromwel to deſire his "Protection and Interpoſition. The Expreſs made ſo "much haſte, and found ſo good a reception the "firſt Hour he came, that Cromwel after he had re-"ceived the whole Account, bid him refreſh himſelf "after ſo long a Journey, and he would take ſuch care of "his Buſineſs, that by the time he came to Paris he ſhould "find it diſpatched, and that Night ſent away ano-"ther Meſſenger to his Ambaſſador Lockhart; who "by the time Moulins came thither, had ſo far pre-"vailed with the Cardinal, that Orders were ſent "to ſtop the Troops which were upon their March "towards Niſmes; and within few Days after, Mou-"lins returned with a full Pardon and Amneſty from "the King, under the Great-Seal of France, ſo fully "confirmed with all Circumſtances, that there was "never farther mention made of it, but all things "paſſed as if there had never been any ſuch thing. "So that no body can wonder that his Memory re-"mains ſtill in thoſe Parts, and with thoſe People "in great Veneration.

"He would never ſuffer himſelf to be denied any "thing he ever asked of the Cardinal, alledging, that "the People would not be otherwiſe ſatisfied, which the "Cardinal bore very heavily, and complained of to "thoſe with whom he would be free. One Day he "viſited Madam Turenne, and when he took his leave "of her, ſhe, according to her Cuſtom, beſought him "to continue gracious to the Churches. Whereupon "the Cardinal told her, That he knew not how to be- "have himſelf; if he adviſed the King to puniſh and ſup- "preſs their Inſolence, Cromwel threatned him to join "with the Spaniards; and if he ſhewed any Favour to "them, at Rome they accounted him an Heretick.

"To conclude his Character, Cromwel was not ſo "far a Man of Blood as to follow Machiavel's Method, "which preſcribes, upon a total alteration of Go-"vernment, as a thing abſolutely neceſſary, to cut off "all the Heads of thoſe, and extirpate their Fami-"lies who are Friends to the old one. It was con-"fidently reported, that in the Council of Officers "it was more than once propoſed, that there might "be a general Maſſacre of all the Royal Party, as the on- "ly Expedient to ſecure the Government, but that Crom- "wel would never conſent to it; it may be out of "too great a contempt of his Enemies. In a word, "as he was guilty of many Crimes againſt which "Damnation is denounced, and for which Hell-fire "is prepared, ſo he had ſome good Qualities, which "have cauſed the Memory of ſome Men in all Ages "to be celebrated; and he will be looked upon by "Poſterity as a brave wicked Man."

The Conſequence of his Death was, that immediately the Council aſſembled and declared his Son Richard to be his Succeſſor by this notable Proclamation. Richard made Protector.

WHereas it hath pleaſed the moſt wiſe God in his Providence to take out of this World the moſt Serene and Renowned Oliver, late Ld. Protector of this Commonwealth: And his Highneſs having in his Life-time, according to the Humble Petition and Advice declared and appoint-

God ſave his Highneſs Richard Lord Protector.

Proceedings of the new Protector. Then the Council proceeded to give the Oath of Government to the new Protector, who publiſhed a Proclamation for all Officers to continue in their Places; and the Maſter of the Ceremonies was ordered to acquaint all Foreign Miniſters with the Death of the late Protector, and the Succeſſion of his Son Richard; which ſoon brought over many new Ambaſſadors and Envoys from the neighbour Princes and States, all admitted with due Ceremony to a ſolemn Audience given by his Highneſs, to condole the Death of his Father, and to congratulate his Succeſſion to the Government; while infinite Addreſſes came up from all Parts of the three Kingdoms, to complement the new Protector with mighty Profeſſions of publick Joy and Satisfaction, and with ſolemn Reſolutions and Promiſes of adhering to him againſt all his Enemies. And indeed the general Exultation of the People and Armies was ſo very great upon this new Succeſſion, that it muſt be imputed more to the common Senſe of Deliverance from one Tyrant, than to their Hopes or Expectations from this other Protector; who was Richard a mean Man. raiſed to the Government without any Reſpect or good Opinion in the Minds of the People or the Soldiers. For he had been neither a Military Man, nor a Stateſman; rather an honeſt Country Gentleman, bred to Privacy and Sports, and willing to ſerve his Neighbours, and even the Cavaliers, by the little Intereſt he had in his Father's Court. His own Father ſeemed to have the leaſt Affection and the loweſt Opinion of this Son, among all his other Children: He never truſted him in any Command, nor employed him in any true Buſineſs: He made him indeed Chancellor of Oxford, and put him at the Top of the other Houſe in Parliament: but this was rather for the Honour of his Family, than for the Love of his Son. He never let him into any Secrets of Policy nor any Arts of War; and therefore it is plain, he never deſigned him for his Succeſſor, becauſe he never trained him up to it. 1658. 10 Car. II.

Cromwel's Funeral. One of the firſt Acts of the new Government, was to order the Funeral of the late Uſurper; and the Council having reſolved that it ſhould be very magnificent, the Care of it was referred to a Committee of them, who ſending for Mr. Kinnerſley, Maſter of the Wardrobe, deſired him to find out ſome Precedent by which they might govern themſelves in this important Affair. After Examination of his Books and Papers, Mr. Kinnerſly, who was ſuſpected to be inclined to Popery, recommended to them the Solemnities uſed upon the like occaſion for Philip II, King of Spain, who had been repreſented to be in Purgatory for about two Months. In the like manner was the Body of this great Reformer laid in Somerſet-houſe. The Apartment was hung with Black, the Day-light was excluded, and no other but that of Wax-Tapers to be ſeen. This Scene of Purgatory continued till the firſt of November, which being the Day preceding that commonly called All Souls, he was removed into the Great Hall of the ſaid Houſe, and repreſented in Effigie, as lying on a Bed of Crimſon Velvet, covered with a Gown of the like coloured Velvet, a Sceptre in his Hand, and a Crown on his Head. That part of the Hall wherein the Bed ſtood was railed in, and the Rails and Ground within them covered with Crimſon Velvet: Four or five hundred Candles ſet in flat ſhining Candleſticks, were ſo placed round near the Roof of the Hall, that the Light they gave ſeemed like the Rays of the Sun. By all which he was repreſented to be now in a State of Glory. This Folly and Profuſion ſo far provoked the People, that they threw Dirt in the Night on his Eſcutcheon, that was placed over the great Gate of Somerſet-Houſe. I purpoſely omit the reſt of the Pageantry, the great Number of Perſons that attended on the Body, the Proceſſion to Weſtminſter, the vaſt Expence in Mourning, the State and Magnificence of the Monument erected for him, with many other things that I care not to remember. To this Account may be added, That this pompous Funeral of Cromwel was celebrated on Nov. 23, and the exceſſive Charges of it never half paid, as if the very dead Body was to uſurp upon the Rights and Properties of the People (a). It was Interred in the moſt ſacred and ſolemn Place of the (b) Abbey, above the High Altar, with a Monument excelling that of any Crowned Head: But (a) See, The Relation given in Foxes and Firebrands, 8vo. p. 95. of Dr. Peter Talbot the Popiſh titular Archbiſhop of Dublin, very intimate with Cromwel, and a ſtrict Mourner at his Funeral.

(b) There remains a Queſtion where his Body was really buried: It was in appearance at Weſtminſter Abby: It was more truly in Naſeby Field; and poſſibly in neither Place, but as others report, it was carried below Bridge and thrown into the Thames. Moſt agree, that he had dealt deceitfully with the Body of K. Charles I. and was the more inclined to prevent any Indignities that might be offered to his own Body in a Change of Times. * One Gentleman gave me this Note in Writing. "Soon after the Reſtoration, the then Serjeant of the Houſe of Commons was ordered by the Houſe to go with his Officers to St. Peter's Weſtminſter, and demand the Body of Oliver Cromwel buried there, to be taken up in order to be diſpoſed of in the manner the Houſe ſhould adjudge fitting. Whereupon the ſaid Serjeant went, and in the middle Iſle of Henry the VIIth's Chapel at the Eaſt-End, upon taking up the Pavement, in a Vault was found his Corps, in the inſide of whoſe Coffin, and upon the breaſt of the Corps was laid a Copper-Plate finely gilt, incloſed in a thin Caſe of Lead, on the one ſide whereof were engraved the Arms of England, impaled with the Arms of Oliver, and on the Reverſe this following Legenda:

OLIVERIUS Protector Reipublicæ Angliæ, Scotiæ, & Hiberniæ. Natus 25° Aprilis, 1599. Inauguratus 16° Decembris, 1653. Mortuus 3tio Septembris, Anno 1658. Hic ſitus eſt.

within leſs than two Years the Pile was broken down, and the Body carried to a more proper Place.

A new Parliament called.

On Dec. 4, the Protector, by Advice of his Council, reſolved to call a Parliament to meet on the 27th Day of January next (a): And in order to it, theſe three Queſtions were debated,

"1. Whether the Elections ſhould be made by the "Counties, Cities, and chief Towns, according to the "Diſtribution agreed on by the Long Parliament, "and practiſed by Cromwel: Or whether they ſhould "be made by the Counties, Cities, and Boroughs, ac-"cording to the ancient Law of the Land?" It was determined for the latter way; which broke the Meaſures of the Court, and ſet the People upon Hopes of a Free Parliament, and gave many of the Commonwealth's Men an Opportunity to be elected in private Boroughs, who dared not yet to have appeared in the open Counties and Cities.

"2. How the other Houſe ſhould be ſummoned, "whether by a new general Form, or by particular "Writs of Summons, as anciently uſed to the Peers?" It was carried for the latter, under the ſame Pretence of bringing all things back to the ancient Courſe of Law. But this too was a Diſadvantage to the new Government; for when the Houſes met, they quarrelled upon the Forms of Meeting, and the Commons would not treat with thoſe new Nobles without ſaving the Rights of ancient Peerage.

"3. Concerning the thirty Members to ſerve for "Scotland, and thirty for Ireland, whether or how "they ſhould be choſen? There having been as "yet no diſtribution of Powers to Elect, as it was "ordered there ſhould be in the humble Petition "and Advice." It was at laſt concluded, that Members ſhould be choſen for Scotland and Ireland, as had been practiſed in the time of Cromwel, with this Proviſo, that they ſhould not be admitted to ſit, till the Conſent of thoſe choſen for England was firſt obtained. And this again occaſioned a fierce Contention in the Houſe about admitting or rejecting the Scotch and Iriſh Members. —— So as the way of projecting and modelling this Parliament made the very Conſtitution of it to be Strife and Diviſion.

Meeting of the Parliament.

When the Parliament met Jan. 27, Mr. Challoner Chute was choſen Speaker of the Commons, who was ſo much indiſpoſed with the Heats and Tumults of the Houſe, that in the beginning of March Sir Lillibone Long was choſen to ſupply his Place, in which he ſoon after died, and Mr. Bamfield was appointed Speaker pro tempore; then Mr. Chute died, and Bamfield was voted to keep his Poſſeſſion: A fatal Parliament, that killed two Speakers before it diſpatched any Buſineſs. An Oath was required of any ſitting Member, not to act or contrive any thing againſt the Lord Protector: but ſome of the old Republicans declined the Oath, and had Intereſt enough in the Houſe to ſit and vote without it. The only two Parties were thoſe for the preſent Government or new Protector, and thoſe for a Commonwealth. All that were ſuſpected to have been Royaliſts, on which ſide ſoever they voted, were expelled the Houſe by the Complaint and Clamours of the other ſide. Mr. Secretary Thurlo, Leader of the Court Party, preſented a Declaration ready drawn, as a Bill for the Recognition of Richard Cromwel to be lawful Lord Protector, and the former Petition and Advice to be ſtill the Rule of Government for theſe Nations. Sir Henry Vane and his Commonwealth Party oppoſed this Declaration with great vehemence, urging, that the Protector's Right ought to be founded on the Conſent of the People; and therefore the Word Recogniſing ought at leaſt to be altered into that of Agniſing, to make his Authority ſtand upon the true bottom. And yet the Court-Party did at laſt carry their Queſtion, but by ſo ſmall a majority, that the other Party quickly grew upon them; till the Officers and Army formed themſelves into a third Party, and ſwallowed up both the other.

State of Religion.

Religion had been ſo proſtituted to the moſt vile and wicked Ends, that the Face of it began to be aſhamed. The Presbyterians appeared to be the moſt ſedate and ſober Party, but Cromwel thought 'em all Hypocrites toward Heaven, and diſaffected toward his Perſon and Government. The Independents were the Faction by whoſe Intereſt he had raiſed himſelf; and therefore for Gratitude he was expreſly for them, or, rather out of Policy, knowing their Tenets to have been born and bred in a Camp, and well ſuited to his Military arbitrary Power, and equally averſe to the old legal Monarchy, and to the new-invented Commonwealth. But the World did not yet know what the Religion of the Independents was; for it had not been drawn into any publick Confeſſion; nor had the Leaders met in any one General Aſſembly. To make up this defect, Cromwel reſolved upon a Convention or Aſſembly of the Independent Miniſters, whom he called to meet at the Savoy, there to treat with the Presbyterians, and come, if poſſible, to ſome Accommodation with them. They were here Sitting and Debating at the time of Cromwel's Death, and gave him ſome Diſtraction to hear of their Diſputes and Quarrels. After his Death, they publiſhed a Declaration of the Faith and Order owned and practiſed in the Congregational Churches in England, agreed upon and conſented unto by their Elders and Meſſengers in their Meeting at the Savoy, Octob. 12, 1658.

The Independents the prevailing Party.

Aſſembly of them.

Declaration of their Faith and Order.

But it was now too late to paſs their Scheme into a National Religion: for the new Protector not being Heir to his Father's Politicks nor Conſcience, was more inclinable to the Presbyterians, by whom he was ſervilely courted, and eſpecially by Mr. Baxter (b). This Presbyterian Spirit was got much into the new Houſe of Commons, and ſhewed it ſelf in their Declaration for a Faſt, wherein they had this Expreſſion, that they ought to take Shame unto themſelves for neglecting to ſettle the Government of the Church, and for having permitted ſo many erroneous and heretical Opinions to be divulged: Tho' Richard, for want of the Arts of Diſſembling, was no Bigot to any of the Ways which they called the Ways of Godlineſs, and therefore was the leſs able to work upon any Party. A Member of his Parliament tells us, That a certain inferiour Officer having publickly murmured at the Advancement of ſome that had been Cavaliers, to Commands in the Army, he was carried to Whitehall to anſwer for the ſame: Richard Cromwel, beſides other reproachful Language, asks him in a deriding manner, whether he would have him prefer none but thoſe that were godly? Here, continued he, is Dick Ingoldsby, who can neither Pray nor Preach, and yet I will truſt him before you all. Thoſe imprudent as well as irreligious Words, ſo clearly diſcovering the Frame and Temper of his Mind, were ſoon publiſhed in the Army and City of London, to his great Prejudice. And from this time, all Men among them, who made but the leaſt Pretences to Religion and Sobriety, began to think themſelves unſafe whilſt he governed; and thereupon ſoon formed a Reſolution to uſe their utmoſt Endeavours to divide the Military from the Civil Power, and to place the Command

The new Protector inclinable to the Presbyterians.

Richard not a Bigot, nor enough a Hypocrite.

"Herſe, and being come to the Field, they there found about "the midſt of it, a Grave dug about nine Feet deep, with the "green Sod carefully laid on one ſide, and the Mould on the "other, in which the Coffin being ſoon put, the Grave was "inſtantly filled up, and the green Sod laid exactly flat upon it. "Care being taken that the ſurplus Mould was clean taken "away. Soon after like Care was taken, that the ſaid Field "was entirely ploughed up, and ſown 3 or 4 Years ſucceſſively "with Corn. Several other material Circumſtances the ſaid "Mr. Barkſtead (who now frequents Richard's Coffee-houſe "within Temple-Bar) relates, (too long to be here inſerted) and "particularly after the Reſtoration, his Conference with the "late witty Duke of Buckingham."

1659. 11 Car. II. of the Army in Lieutenant General Fleetwood.

The Army againſt the Protector and the Parliament. While the Sitting Parliament was miſerably divided between the Governing Party and the old Commonwealth's Men; the chief Officers in the Army formed themſelves into a third Party more formidable than both the others, becauſe they had the Sword in their Hand, and wanted Money. Theſe met and conſulted frequently at Wallingford-Houſe, the Dwelling of Fleetwood: and having drawn over ſeveral of the Republican Commoners, Vane, Ludlow, Haſlerig, and others; they at firſt kept fair with the Protector, and upon the Tumults in the two Houſes they wheedled him into an Opinion of the Neceſſity of calling a General Council of Officers, in order to preſent ſomething to the Parliament for the Regulation and Maintenance of the Army. He not ſuſpecting their Deſign, conſented to the Propoſition: and having iſſued out an Order to that purpoſe, this Military General Council met, and quickly aſſumed ſo much Power to themſelves, that on Apr. 20, they preſented a Remonſtrance to the Protector, againſt the Proceedings of the Parliament; who, to be even with them, voted, 1. That during the Sitting of this Parliament, there ſhall be no General Council, or Meeting of the Officers of the Army, without Direction and Authority of his Highneſs the Lord Protector, and both Houſes of Parliament. 2. That no Perſon ſhall have or continue any Command or Truſt in the Army, who ſhall refuſe to Subſcribe, That he will not diſturb or interrupt the free Meetings in Parliament of any the Members of either Houſe of Parliament, or their Freedom in their Debates or Counſels. The Protector, a dubious and unſkilful Manager, endeavoured to execute the Parliamentary Votes, and forbid the General Meeting: But the Officers were now too ſtrong to obey. On April 22, Friday Morning, Fleetwood the Protector's Brother, Desborough his Uncle, and other Leaders, brought up their Forces to Whitehall, and forced him, poor Man, to conſent to a Commiſſion and Proclamation ready drawn for Diſſolving the Parliament; which they took care to execute by locking up the Doors, and guarding of them.

Richard terrified into Diſſolving the Parliament.

When the Army had thus delivered themſelves from the Parliament, their remaining Grievance was the Protector himſelf, whom they reſolved to lay aſide, and to declare for the Good Old Cauſe, a Commonwealth without a ſingle Perſon or a Houſe of Peers. To purſue this Deſign, they drew up an Inſtrument, intitled, A Declaration of the Officers of the Army, inviting the Members of the Long Parliament, who continued Sitting till the 20th of April 1653, to return to the Exerciſe and Diſcharge of their Truſts. Signed May 6, by the Direction of the Lord Fleetwood, and the Council of Officers of the Army. Delivered to the old Speaker by Lambert and a Train of other Officers. Upon this, many ſecluded Members of the Rump Parliament paid a Viſit to their Speaker, and ſignified to him (as was concerted) their Willingneſs to return to the Diſcharge of their Truſt.

The Rump reſtored. This Rump, violently thruſt out by Cromwel, and now as illegally thruſt in by the Army, met on Saturday May 7, and ſoon agreed on a Declaration, That they were reſolved to ſettle the Commonwealth upon ſuch a Foundation as ſhall aſſert, eſtabliſh, and ſecure the Properties and Liberties of the People in reference to all, both as Men and Chriſtians, and that without a ſingle Perſon, Kingſhip, or Houſe of Peers: and they will vigorouſly endeavour carrying on of the Reformation ſo much deſired and ſo often declared for, to the end there may be a godly and faithful Magiſtracy and Miniſtry upheld and maintained in the Nation, to the Glory and Praiſe of the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, and to the reviving and making glad the Hearts of the Upright in the Land. But theſe Gentlemen were to remember, that they were but new Tools in the Hands of the Army, and were to be managed by them.

The Army preſcribe a Commonwealth. Hence the Army brought them their humble Petition and Addreſs, deſiring, that is, preſcribing, 1. The Government of a Free State and Commonwealth, without a ſingle Perſon, Kingſhip, or Houſe of Peers. 2. A juſt and due Regulation of Law, and Courts of Juſtice and Equity. 3. An Act of Oblivion for All that had acted ſince the 9th of April 1653. 4. The Diſcharge of all publick Debts contracted ſince the 20th of April 1653. 5. Liberty of Conſcience not extending to Popery or Prelacy. 6. A godly, faithful, and painful Goſpel-preaching Miniſtry to be countenanced and maintained. 7. All Perſons adhering to the late King, or to Charles Stuart his Son, to be removed from all Places of Truſt. 8. To prevent the long Sitting of Parliaments, and to provide for a due Succeſſion of them. 9. To own and acknowledge the Ld. Charles Fleetwood to be General of the Land Forces of this Commonwealth. 10. To put the Adminiſtration of all executive Power of Government in a Council of State. 11. To diſcharge all Debts contracted by his Highneſs or his Father ſince the 15th of Dec. 1653. To ſettle 10000 l. per Annum upon Richard Cromwel and his Heirs, and 10000 l. more upon him during Life, and 8000 l. a Year upon his Mother during her Life.

This Inſtrument was delivered in the Houſe on the 12th of May by Lambert at the Head of ſeveral Officers, with this Speech:

Mr. Speaker,

Lambert's Speech. WE are commanded, by the Officers of the Army, to preſent before you their humble Petition and Addreſs. There are ſeveral things contained in it, which have been a long time upon their hands; but now finding, to their great Joy and Satisfaction, that you are returned, in diſcharge of their Truſt they thought it unfit to neglect this Opportunity, but have commanded us to preſent this Petition.

Then they withdrew; and the Houſe, upon debating the Matter, ordered their Speaker to return them this Anſwer:

Speaker's Anſwer. I Am commanded by the Houſe to tell you, they have read the Petition and Addreſs, and that as they found your Affection before they came hither, ſo they find that Affection continuing. The things contained in your Petition are of great weight, and many more things of great weight are laying before the Houſe. And it is concerning the Settlement for which the Divine Providence of God hath brought us hither, who we hope ſhall never depart from us. The Houſe finds in your Advice much of Love and Affection, and have commanded me to acknowledge that Love and Affection you have ſhewn, and to give you Thanks, very hearty Thanks, for your Love and Expreſſions of it; and accordingly, in their Name, I do give you very hearty Thanks.

The Houſe, upon firſt Debate of the Articles, agreed to all of them, excepting that in favour of Richard and his Family; having, as 'tis thought, ſecret Inſtructions from the Army to put ſome Slight and Indignity upon that Cypher of Government. And therefore they appointed a Committee to receive his Submiſſion to their Authority, and to take a ſtate of his Debts before they would do any thing for him. He was full of Compliance, and gave in his formal Submiſſion, with a Schedule of his Debts annexed. What was contracted for his Father's Funeral (in deſpite to his Memory) they abſolutely rejected, and declined the Settlement of any Revenue upon him or his Mother; only gave him a ſmall Sum to diſcharge part of his private Debts, and required him and all his Dependents to remove from Whitehall in ſix Days time. The next thing they did was to call home Henry Cromwel from his Government in Ireland, where he had been very popular, and had an Army under good Diſcipline: but ſeeing the Tide turn ſtrongly, he would not offer to oppoſe it.

There is a pleaſant Story told by the Lord Clarendon, which may here be inſerted. Says he, It may not prove ungrateful to the Reader, in this place, to entertain him with a very pleaſant Story that related to this miſerable Richard, tho' it happened long afterwards; becauſe there will be ſcarce again any occaſion ſo much as to mention him during the continuance of this Relation. Shortly after the King's Return, and the manifeſt Joy that poſſeſſed the whole Kingdom thereupon, this poor Creature found it neceſſary to tranſport himſelf into France, more for fear of his Debts than of the King; who thought it not neceſſary to enquire after a Man ſo long forgotten. After he had lived ſome Years in Paris untaken notice of, and indeed unknown, living in a moſt obſcure Condition and Diſguiſe, nor

1659. 11 Car. II. not owning his own Name, nor having above one Servant to attend him; he thought it neceſſary, upon the firſt Rumour and Apprehenſion that there was like to be a War between England and France, to quit that Kingdom, and to remove to ſome place that would be neutral to either Party; and pitched upon Geneva. Making his way thither by Bourdeaux, and thro' the Province of Languedoc, he paſſed thro' Pezenas, a very pleaſant Town belonging to the Prince of Conti, who hath a fair Palace there, and, being then Governour of Languedoc, made his Reſidence in it.

In this Place Richard made ſome ſtay; and walking abroad to entertain himſelf with the View of the Situation, and of many things worth the ſeeing, he met with a Perſon who well knew him, and was well known by him, the other having always been of his Father's and of his Party; ſo that they were glad enough to find themſelves together. The other told him, That all Strangers who came to that Town uſed to wait upon the Prince of Conti, the Governour of the Province, who expected it, and always treated Strangers, and particularly the Engliſh, with much Civility: that he need not be known, but that he himſelf would firſt go to the Prince and inform him, that another Engliſh Gentleman was paſſing thro' that Town towards Italy, who would be glad to have the Honour to kiſs his Hand. The Prince received him with great Civility and Grace, according to his natural Cuſtom, and after few Words, began to diſcourſe of the Affairs of England, and asked many Queſtions concerning the King, and whether all Men were quiet, and ſubmitted obediently to him? Which the other anſwered briefly, according to the Truth. Well, ſaid the Prince, Oliver, tho' he was a Traytor and a Villain, was a brave Fellow, had great Parts, great Courage, and was worthy to Command; but that Richard, that Coxcomb, Coquin, Poltron, was ſurely the baſeſt Fellow alive: What is become of that Fool? How was it poſſible he could be ſuch a Sot? He anſwered, That he was betrayed by thoſe whom he moſt truſted, and who had been moſt obliged by his Father. So being weary of his Viſit, quickly took his Leave, and the next Morning left the Town, out of fear that the Prince might know that he was the very Fool and Coxcomb he had mentioned ſo kindly. And within two Days after, the Prince did come to know who it was whom he had treated ſo well, and whom before, by his behaviour, he had believed to be a Man not very glad of the King's Reſtoration.

The Royaliſts hope for ſome Advantage. The Royaliſts could not forbear attempting to make ſome advantage of theſe Confuſions, and therefore were now ready to riſe in all parts of the Kingdom; and a Declaration was publiſhed in the Names of the Lords, Gentlemen and Citizens, Freeholders and Yeomen of this once happy Nation; ſome little Efforts were made to no purpoſe in the South, and Weſt parts of England (a); but the moſt conſiderable Body that was together was in Cheſhire, under the command of Sir George Booth, who with the Earl of Derby, the Lord Kilmurry, and Major General Egerton, met at Warrington in a ſmall Party, and had ſoon an acceſſion of great numbers of the Gentry (b). Col. Roger Whitley brought a Meſſage to Sir George Booth from his Majeſty, with an account of his Majeſty's Preparations beyond Sea, and that he was ready to come over when the firſt opportunity ſhould call him. This being a great ſatisfaction to the Party now encreaſed to 500 Men, they reſolved to march to Cheſter, and by the Intereſt of Col. Worden had the Gates opened to them; then Egerton was ſent with a Party to Chirk-Caſtle, where Sir Thomas Middleton hearing of his approach opened the Gates and joyfully received him. Col. Whitley put a Garriſon into Harding-Caſtle in Flintſhire, then belonging to Judge Glynne: Col. Ireton declared for them in Liverpool, and Mr. Brooks and Mr. Dunch, two of the Members of the Houſe, to atone for their former Diſloyalties joined alſo with them.

Riſing in Cheſhire.

Lambert ſent againſt them. Upon the noiſe of this Riſing on Aug. 5, Lambert was immediately diſpatched with a good Body of Forces. Sir George Booth hearing that Lambert was drawing near, was retiring into Lancaſhire to gain time, and encreaſe his Numbers; and for better amuſement, he ſends a Trumpeter to Lambert with two Miniſters, to ſhew the cauſe of their appearing in Arms, and to deſire a Treaty for ſaving the effuſion of Engliſh Blood. Lambert would agree to nothing, without firſt laying down their Arms and ſurrendring all their Garriſons. Having no reply, he preſſed hard upon them at Winnington-bridge near Northwich in Cheſhire, and gave them an entire Rout. Capt. Morris a gallant Gentleman was killed; the Lord Kilmory, Brooks, Egerton, O Neale and others were taken Priſoners: Sir George Booth and Sir Thomas Middleton made their Eſcapes; but Sir George was afterward taken in Diſguiſe at Newport-Paynel in Buckinghamſhire, by the Treachery of one Carter his Hoſt at the George-Inn; and ſoon after the Earl of Derby, Col. Shawcroſs and others were taken. Routs them. Sir George Booth taken.

Lambert was ſo fluſhed with this Victory, that at Derby he conſults with his chief Officers how to reſtore the Military Power to its former Grandeur, and to reform all Miſcarriages in the Civil Adminiſtration; and concluded to draw up their Intentions in the Form of A Petition to the Parliament to redreſs their Grievances. Upon the News of this Project Sir Arthur Haſterigge in the Houſe exclaimed againſt it, as a deſign for altering the Government and ſetting up another ſingle Perſon. Under this Jealouſie the Houſe ordered Sept. 22, that Aſhfield, Cobbet, and Duckingfield (in whoſe hands it was) ſhould bring the original Paper into the Houſe that Afternoon; and next Day to check the Ambition of Lambert, whom they ſuſpected to be riding over the Head of Fleetwood, they paſſed a Vote, That to have any more General Officers in the Army than are already ſettled by the Parliament, is Uſeleſs, Chargeable, and Dangerous to the Commonwealth; and ſoon after paſt An Act againſt raiſing any Money without conſent of Parliament; and made Application to General Fleetwood to protect them from his Rival Lambert, and got a Declaration from his part of the Army for adhering to the Parliament. And then the Houſe thought themſelves able to make an Order Octob. 12, that the Commiſſions of Lambert, Desborough, Kelſey, Aſhfield, Cobbet, Packer, and Berry ſhould be all void, and they ſhould be ſucceeded by the next Officers in their ſeveral degrees. But then again afraid to truſt themſelves with Fleetwood or any ſingle General, they paſt an Act for putting out Fleetwood from being Lieutenant General of the Army, and to conſtitute him and Ludlow, Monk, Haſterigge, Walton, Morley, and Overton, Commiſſioners to govern all the Forces; and then ordered two Regiments to be their Guard, who took their Station in the Palace-Yard and Weſtminſter-Hall. Lambert exalted with his Victory. Is turned out of his Commiſſion.

Lambert ſcorning to be turned out by the Fellows he had ſo lately put in, reſolved to ſtrike an early blow upon them; and therefore Oct. 13, meeting Evelyn marching his Troop to guard the Parliament, he commanded him to diſmount, and tho' Lambert was on Foot and none with him, yet Evelyn at the Head of his Troop tamely diſmounted at the Word of Command, while Lambert commanded the Troop to follow him, and drawing ſome other Forces together he marched into King-ſtreet, and poſſeſſed all the Avenues to the Parliament-Houſe. Next Morning the Speaker came in his Coach toward the Houſe, but was ſtopped at his entry into the Palace-Yard by Col. Duckenfield, and after ſome Expoſtulation was forced to return. The Soldiers on both ſides kept their Stations in a poſture of Hoſtility, till the Council of State meeting at Whitehall ordered them all to draw off to their Quarters, which they agreed to do, upon condition the Parliament ſhould ſit no longer, and the Government ſhould be ſettled by a Council of Officers. Makes a bold ſtroke upon the Parliament. A new Council of Officers.

This new Military Council diſſolved the Council of State, and appointed ten Perſons to be a ſelect Committee for Adminiſtration of the Government till fur-ther Who diſſolve the Council of State.

(a) It was upon this proſpect, that the King began a Correſpondence with General Monk in Scotland, upon advice of Sir John Granville Neighbour to the General's Brother Mr. Nich. Monk. The Letter is dated July 21, 1659. Sir, I cannot think you wiſh me ill, for you have no reaſon to do ſo; and the Good I expect from you, will bring ſo great a Benefit to your Country and to your ſelf, that I cannot think you will decline my Intereſt, &c.

1659. 11 Car. II. ther Order. Theſe were Fleetwood (whom they had declared to be again General of all the Forces) Lambert (whom they had declared Major General) Desborough, Whitlock, Sir Henry Vane, Sir James Harrington, Major Salway, Berry, Sidenham and Archibald Johnſton. But within few Days the General Council of Officers lay aſide the Council of Ten, and ſet up another Committee of 23 Perſons, who ſhould have the Adminiſtration of the Government, and the ſame Powers with the late Council of State, and ſhould be called the Committee of Safety; theſe were Fleetwood, Lambert, Desborough, Whitlock, Steel, Sir Henry Vane, Ludlow, Sydenham, Salway, Strickland, Berry, Lawrence, Sir James Harrington, Johnſton, Ireton, Tichburn, Hughſon, Clerk, Bennet, Lilburn, Cornelius Holland, Henry Bandriff, and Robert Thompſon.

And ſettle a Committee of Safety.

Their Declaration.

This new Pack of Governours publiſhed a Declaration to acquaint the World, That it was upon their Hearts to ſettle a due Liberty upon the Freeborn People of this Nation, to make a thorough Reformation of the Law, and to eſtabliſh a Painful, Godly, Faithful, Goſpel-preaching Miniſtry, and to provide them a Maintenance leſs troubleſome to them, and leſs vexatious to the People than that of Tythes; and to prepare ſuch a Form of Government as ſhould beſt ſuit with a Free-State and Commonwealth, without a ſingle Perſon, Kingſhip or Houſe of Lords. They doubted not, but ſuch who ſaw the many Temptations beſetting them on every ſide, and the great Difficulties they laboured under, and knew not what farther Streights a Day may bring forth, would ſay on their behalfs, Who is ſufficient for theſe things? And out of former Experiences being taught, that the Lord is a preſent help in time of Trouble, will cry aloud for them before the Throne of Grace, that the Lord himſelf may appear, and carry on his own Work in their Hands: And if it ſhall pleaſe him by his Spirit to ſtir up thoſe that fear his Name to be inſtant on their behalf, they ſhall not fear what Evil Man can do unto them.

A ſtop put to them by Monk.

This Committee of Safety were going on in this mad Canting Vein, when they met with a providential Rebuke from General Monk in Scotland, in a Letter to Fleetwood and Lambert, which came to their Hands Oct. 29, wherein he upbraided them with the violation of their Faith to the Parliament, and declared his Reſolution to reſtore the Parliament to a freedom of Sitting and Acting againſt all oppoſition.

The ſteps of General Monk.

And this brings us to conſider the Counſels and Steps of General Monk, by which he brought about the happy Reſtoration of the King. It is hard to know how and when this great Man was brought over to the King's Intereſt: It is certain that upon the Abdication of Richard Cromwel, he and his chief Officers in Scotland ſent an Addreſs to the Engliſh Parliament, promiſing all Duty to them, and deſiring them to aſſert the native Rights and Liberties of theſe Nations, in and by the Government of a Free-State and Commonwealth, and to vindicate their Authority againſt the oppoſition of all arbitrary Powers whatſoever. But when he heard of that Parliament curbed and corrected by the Engliſh Army, he was then prepared to think of interpoſing in the dubious Affairs of England.

Mr. Nich. Monk ſent to his Brother.

Under this diſpoſition Mr. Nicholas Monk, a Reverend Divine of continual Loyalty, only Brother to the General, was ſent up from the Weſt by Sir Hugh Pollard, and other Royaliſts, to London, to conſult with Mr. Thomas Clarges, whoſe Siſter was his Brother's Wife, and thence to proceed to Scotland, to engage his Brother in the King's Service. He accordingly took his Inſtructions from Mr. Clarges, how to manage his Negotiations with great Secrecy and Caution, and to communicate his Deſigns to none except Dr. Samuel Barrow Phyſician, and Mr. John Price, Chaplain to General Monk. By their aſſiſtance he made a due advantage of the Report of Sir George Booth's Riſing, and by degrees brought his Brother to a Reſolution of marching into England, in purſuance of Booth's Declaration for a free Parliament. But when all things were ready for his March, he received Intelligence from his Agent Mr. Clarges of Booth's Defeat; at which he was ſo much concerned, that he ſent a Letter to Lenthal the Speaker to be communicated to the Parliament, deſiring to be diſmiſt from his Command, pretending he was infirm in his Health, and had long continued in that remote Country; but now ſince all Inſurrections were appeaſed, that threatened Diſturbances to the Peace of the Nation, he hoped he might be permitted to return into his own Country, and to end his Days in Quiet. This Letter whether wrote in earneſt, or for a Blind, is ſaid to have been delivered by Clarges to the Speaker, under an obligation to ſuppreſs the reading of it for ten Days, before which time lapſed, the Parliament was turned out of Doors. 1659. 11 Car. II.

General Monk's eſcape from a Plot to turn him out.

The ſucceeding Committee of Safety were reſolved to ſecure Monk, who kept his ordinary Reſidence at Dalkeith, ſome four Miles on this ſide Edinburgh, the London Packet being there conſtantly opened, that the Gen. might have his Letters before any were delivered at Edinburgh. The Committee diſpatched their ſecret Orders to Scotland by the ordinary Packet, leſt an Expreſs might give Suſpicion; and inſtead of directing the Label for Dalkeith, as was uſual, it was ordered ſtrait for Edinburgh. It happened that one of Monk's Life-guard met accidentally the Poſt turning out of the Road that led to Dalkeith, and finding he had not touched there, he brought him back, notwithſtanding the Direction of the Label. Monk ſuſpecting a trick opened all the Letters that he found directed to the Officers of the Army, among which there was one from the Committee of Safety to Col. Tho. Wilks, ordering him To uſe the moſt effectual, ſpeedy and ſecret way to ſecure the Perſon of Gen. Monk, and to ſend him up to London under a ſtrong Guard, in a Frigot that lay in Leith Road, and then to take upon him the Command of the Army till further Order. Having taken out this Letter; and what others he thought fit, together with his own from the ſame Committee, full of high Complements and Expreſſions of Truſt, he ſent away the Packet as it was directed. And then communicating the Matter to ſome of his particular Friends, he gave Orders for a General Review of the Army to be made next Morning at Edinburgh, where he arreſted Col. Wilks, and ſome other Officers he had reaſon to ſuſpect, and ſent them Priſoners to the Caſtle, filling up their Places with thoſe in whom he could confide.

Mr. Nich. Monk ſent back from Scotland.

At the ſame time The Petition and Propoſals of the Army to the Parliament were ſent into Scotland to be ſigned by Monk and his Officers; but he would not ſuffer it to be handed about: and knowing it was no time to dally, he ſent back his Brother Mr. Nich. Monk to London, with Advice to Mr. Clarges, that he was reſolved, if the Parliament would be reſolute in aſſerting their own Authority againſt the Army, he would aſſiſt them in it; and if required would march into England in their Defence. Upon advice of this Reſolution communicated by Mr. Clarges to Walton, Haſlerig and Scot, they were encouraged in the Houſe to order the removal of Lambert and his aſſociated Officers, but they proved too hard for the Parliament and turned them out of Doors, as before related. But Monk not afraid to proſecute his Deſign, ſent upbraiding Letters to Fleetwood and Lambert, as before mentioned, which they receiving Oct. 20, they met at Whitehall in great conſternation about twelve at Night, and ſent Major Haines to deſire Mr. Clarges to come to them; and when he came, they preſſed him with great importunity to go into Scotland with Col. Talbot, to prevail with General Monk to come to a right Underſtanding with them: Mr. Clarges undertook the Journey, and it ſeems they did not ſuſpect his Fidelity to them.

Mr. Clarges ſent into Scotland.

General Monk ſecures his own Army.

In the mean time General Monk had diſmiſt the Anabaptiſt Officers, ſecured Berwick, and regulated his Army, and then made a Speech to them, That the Army in England had broke up the Parliament, for not humouring them in their Extravagancies, and that he was reſolved to make the Military Power, as it ought to be, ſubordinate to the Civil: And ſince they had their Protection and Maintenance from the Parliament, he had no reaſon to queſtion their joining with him in reſtoring them to the exerciſe of their Truſt: But if any were diſſatisfied with theſe his Intentions, he deſired they would declare it, and they ſhould have free Liberty, without Reflection to leave the Service, and have Paſſports to return home. Upon which the Officers unanimouſly declared, That they would live and die with him.

Conſerence between Mr. Clarges and General Monk.

Col. Talbot and Mr. Clarges came to Edinburgh Sept. 2, and were well received by the General, eſpecially Clarges, with whom he had a private Conference that Night, at which Clarges frankly asked him, What was the true End he aimed at in this Enterprize? The General, who was one of the moſt reſerved Men living, only anſwered, that he reſolved to free his Native Country from the Slavery it was now under, and to that end would reſtore the Parliament; but in their admiſſion to it he would make no difference between them, but would let in the ſecluded Members as well as others. But, ſays he, I muſt conjure you to ſecrecy, for the Army are jealous of me, that a King is in the bottom of this Deſign, and therefore all I can contrive will be little enough to beget a Confidence even in my own Party to engage heartily with me.

Lambert ſent with an Army to meet Monk.

The General Council of Officers in London not truſting to their Endeavours of pacifying Gen. Monk, ſent away Lambert with an Army of 12000 Men, to meet Gen. Monk who had not above half that number (a). When Lambert was advanced as far as York, he found there Major Gen. Morgan, who kept fair with him, and offered to uſe the Credit he had with Monk, to bring him to an Accommodation, and was thereupon ſent on that Errand into Scotland where his Regiment then was. He came to Edinburgh Nov. 8, and upon his firſt acceſs to the General, asked him in a loud merry way, If he would lay down his Arms and be Friends with Fleetwood and Lambert? The General anſwered, If they would reſtore the Parliament, he had little more to ſay; and if he pleaſed he might let them know it. Morgan replyed, I promiſed to ask you the Queſtion, but not to return to them that ſent me if you denied it. I am glad I am here to aſſiſt you, and to follow your Fortunes in all your Undertakings. You know I am no Stateſman; but I am ſure you are a lover of your Country, and therefore I join with you and ſubmit to your Conduct. This generous Friendſhip was kindly accepted by the General, and had a great influence in raiſing the Spirits of his Army.

Morgan joins with Monk.

Lord Fairfax willing to follow that Example.

In the Evening Morgan was in private with the General, and delivered him a Letter from Mr. Bowles a Miniſter in York, a conſiderable Man in thoſe parts, and in great reputation with the Lord Fairfax, and many other Perſons of good Quality in that Country: the Letter imported, That the Lord Fairfax, and many others of good Intereſt were willing to join with the General, but diſapproved his Declaration, which was reſtrained to that part of the Parliament only, which ſate after the reſt were Secluded, and was filled with Proteſtations for aſſerting no other Government but a Commonwealth. To this the General anſwered, That Clarges could witneſs with him his Intentions in thoſe Particulars; that what was printed in his Name, as Affairs then ſtood, was not to be regarded as the reſult of his own Reaſon, and till he had got more Strength it would be unſeaſonable and indiſcreet to do otherwiſe.

With this Apology Clarges was ſent to the Lord Fairfax, but firſt to diſcourſe Mr. Bowles, who deſired Mr. Clarges to continue private in York, while he for fear of diſcovery tranſacted the Affair with the Lord Fairfax; which he did ſo effectually, that at his return he acquainted Clarges, that the Lord Fairfax, Bethel, and Smithſon would riſe in January and join with Monk.

Gen. Monk received Letters daily from the Commiſſioners of the Militia of London, and from the Officers of the Fleet, and from the Forces in Ireland, all to perſwade him to come to an Accommodation with the General Council of Officers in London. And therefore to ſeem willing to ſatisfie them, and to keep all Parties in Amuſement, he entered into a Treaty with Fleetwood to be managed by Commiſſioners. In the mean time he marches on to Berwick, and Lambert was advanced to Newcaſtle, and both Armies ſeemed preparing to meet and fight: But the Garriſon of Portſmouth and Admiral Lawſon with his Fleet declaring for a reſtitution of the Parliament, Lambert thought it more adviſeable to march back to aſſiſt his Friends in the South, rather than to hazard a Battle with Monk.

Lambert runs away from General Monk's Army.

1659. 11 Car. II.

Fleetwood comes into the Cry of a free Parliament.

Fleetwood and the reſt of the Committee of Safety when they could not evade it, came into the general Cry for reſtoring the Parliament, and ſent to the Speaker, deſiring him to bring the reſt of the Members to re-aſſemble for the exerciſe of their Truſt, acknowledging in the moſt abject manner, that the Lord had blaſted their Counſels and had ſpit in their Faces (b).

The Parliament meets.

Dec. 26, the Speaker and Members of Parliament then in Town met at Whitehall, and from thence walked together to the Parliament Houſe in the Evening. The next Morning, the Speaker ſent a Letter to Gen. Monk, by order of the Houſe, with Thanks for his good Service, and with acknowledgment that the Reſtitution of their Authority was owing to his Fidelity, Care and Courage. Soon after they appointed Commiſſioners to order the Military Affairs, and ſent to Lambert to diſperſe his Forces. But to let the World know that they meant nothing of Monarchy; they provided that none ſhould ſit but ſuch as would take this Oath of Abjuration.

Oath of Abjuration.

I Do hereby ſwear, that I do renounce the pretended Title of Charles Stuart, and the whole Line of the late King James, and of every other Perſon as a ſingle Perſon, pretending, or which ſhall pretend to the Crown or Government of theſe Nations of England, Scotland, or Ireland, or any of them, and the Dominions and Territories belonging to them, or any of them. And that I will by the Grace and Aſſiſtance of Almighty God be true, faithful and conſtant to the Parliament and Commonwealth, and will oppoſe the bringing in or ſetting up any ſingle Perſon or Houſe of Lords, and every of them, in this Commonwealth.

The Parliament ſend two Members to meet General Monk.

This Oath carried by a Majority was yet refuſed by at leaſt a third part of the Members, who were therefore compelled to leave the Houſe: And two of the moſt zealous for it, Scot and Robinſon, were ſent to meet the General upon the Road, to congratulate his coming, but with private directions to engage him to take the Oath. When the General came to Nottingham, his Brother Clarges met him, and in a private Conference acquainted him with the State of Affairs, and the trueſt way to do his Country Service. At Leiceſter he was met by Scot and Robinſon, who told him, that the Parliament had ordered 1000 l. a Year to be ſettled on him for ever; that they were ſenſible of his Services, were providing Money for his Soldiers, and were glad to hear of his Marching towards London. He then expected to be attacked about the Oath of Abjuration, and was much troubled to think how to divert it. Clarges told him, he had a plain and full Anſwer to make them, which was, that he heard many Men of undoubted Integrity had refuſed it, and till he came to London to hear the Reaſons on both ſides, he could not in prudence reſolve upon it. This Advice he followed and ſucceeded in it.

Commiſſioners of the City meet Monk.

At Harborough Alderman Fowke, Alderman Vincent, and Mr. Bromfield met him as Commiſſioners from the Lord-Mayor, Aldermen and Common-Council of London; who, after ſome Reſpects and Civilities, fell upon Particulars, and Mr. Bromfield in a ſet Speech, after enumerating the Calamities the Nation lay under, propoſed the Re-admiſſion of the ſecluded Members, that the Parliament might be full and free. To the ſame purpoſe were the Addreſſes from the Gentlemen of Northamptonſhire, Buckinghamſhire, Oxfordſhire, Norfolk, and many other Counties, all which he received in a decent and reſpectful manner, but gave only dubious and ſuſpending Anſwers. By which Policy he merited this Character given of him. He was a Man of deep Thoughts and few Words; and what he wanted in Elocution he had in Judgment; and he had a natural Secrecy in him, prevalent upon all theſe Qualifications of a Soldier, which made him ſo fit an Inſtrument in the hand of Divine Providence to work his Majeſty's Reſtoration. Hence he carried it all ſo cloſely that I believe no Man to this Day can poſitively ſay, that he deſign-

Character of General Monk given by Sir Philip Warwick.

(a) The Author of Foxes and Firebrands, 8vo. affirms, that when General Lambert advanced to oppoſe the March and Deſigns of Monk, there went in company with him Peter Talbot a leading Papiſt, ſoon after titular Archbiſhop of Dublin.

General Monk writes to the Parliament. From St. Albans the General ſent a wiſe Letter to the Parliament, to remove all the Regiments out of London and Weſtminſter, except Col. Fag's, for he thought it not for their Service, that thoſe Soldiers now in and about London, and lately in Rebellion againſt them, ſhould mingle with thoſe who had approved themſelves faithful to them. The Parliament readily complied with this Advice, but the Soldiers took it for ſuch a hardſhip to be turned out of Town, that they fell into a Mutiny, and made a Garriſon at Somerſet-houſe, but by the aſſurance of a Month's pay, and many fine Words, they were brought over, and marched away on Saturday Morning Feb. 4, and in the ſame Afternoon the General entered the City at the head of three Regiments of Horſe, attended by his principal Officers, and many Perſons of Honour and Quality to Whitehall, provided for his Reception. (Comes to Whitehall.)

Goes to the Parliament Houſe. On Monday Morning Feb. 6, he was invited to the Parliament-Houſe, introduced by a Serjeant at Arms, and attended by his late Companions and Spies upon him, Scot and Robinſon. A Chair of Velvet was ſet for him on the left hand within the Bar, and the Speaker deſired him to ſit down; but he excuſed himſelf and ſtood behind the Chair. Whilſt the Speaker in a ſet Speech magnified his Services and Merits, and gave him the Thanks of the Houſe. The General ſedately anſwered, "That he could not but extol the Mercy of "their Reſtitution, and acknowledge the goodneſs of "God in making him Inſtrumental therein, which "was but his Duty, and deſerved not the Honour "they had done to him. That he had received many "Addreſſes in his Journey for a full and free Parliament, and that this Parliament would determine "their Sitting: that he had anſwered them, that as "to the ſecluded Members, this Parliament had already given their Judgment, in which all ought to "acquieſce; and that no Parliament had admitted "new Members to ſit without a previous Oath or "Engagement: but he muſt needs ſay to this Aſſembly, that the leſs Oaths and Engagements are "impoſed, the Settlement will be the ſooner attained. "He hoped the Parliament would be careful that "neither the Cavalier nor Phanatick Party have yet "a ſhare in the Civil or Military Power. He concluded with ſpeaking of Ireland and Scotland, who "feared nothing more than to be over-run with "Phanatick Notions; he deſired a Settlement there, "and their Favour to that Nation." (Monk's Speech to the Parliament.)

The Speech amuſes the Houſe. This Speech had the influence intended by him that ſpoke it, which was to amuſe the Houſe, and to cover his own Deſigns: But a leading Party ſuſpected him, and reſolved to try him on this following occaſion. The City in Common-Council reſolved to pay no publick Taxes, till the Houſe was filled up with all legal Repreſentatives: For they might indeed well think it unreaſonable to be taxed by a Parliament, wherein they had then no Members ſitting. The Council of State were ſo apprehenſive of this beginning of a Rebellion againſt them, that they came to a Reſolution, and ſent it to the Houſe, who paſt it into a Vote, "That the Commiſſioners for Government of the Army, do appoint Forces to be "in London for preſerving the Peace thereof, and of "the Commonwealth, and for reducing of the City "to their Obedience to Parliament." For executing this Vote, the General was ordered to enter the City next Morning with a ſufficient part of the Army; to ſeize eleven of the moſt active Common-Council Men and commit them to the Tower; to pull down the City Poſts and Chains, take down the Gates and Portcullices, and Quarter his Soldiers in the City till it was reduced to due Obedience. This ſevere Command was very ſurprizing to the General and his chief Officers, who were very unwilling to make themſelves ſo odious to the City; and therefore Monk writes to the Houſe to mitigate his Orders, or to let him ſuſpend the execution of them; but they the more inflamed make their Directions the more poſitive. Upon this he adviſed with ſome of the moſt eminent Citizens, and giving ſecret Aſſurance that he would protect the City while he ſeemed to diſpoil it, he did literally execute the Order, but wiſely turned the Odium of it upon the Parliament that ſo commanded. And to atone for this Action, he preſently after writes a Letter to the Houſe, and boldly complained of a Faction in it managed by Lambert, Vane, and Ludlow; that they excluded many honeſt Men from ſerving the Publick, by tendering them Oaths which they could not take, and were guilty of many other Irregularities; and therefore he deſired them by Friday next to iſſue out Writs to fill up their Houſe, and then to riſe at an appointed time May 6, to give place to a full and free Parliament. (Monk is ordered to chaſtiſe the City.) (1659. 11 Car. II.) (Executes the Order very wiſely.) (Sends to the Parliament to riſe.)

The Parliament angry. The Houſe diſſembled their reſentment of this Letter, and ſent Scot to aſſure him of their high Opinion of his Services, and to recall him to his Lodgings at Whitehall. But he was now reſolved to throw himſelf upon the City, and not yet to truſt his Perſon near Weſtminſter. This ſo enraged the Houſe that they made an Act to put the Government of the Army into the Hands of new Commiſſioners, Monk, Haſlerigge, Walton, Morley and Alvred, making three a Quorum, but denying a Motion that Monk ſhould be of that Quorum. Upon this the next Day Feb. 12, Monk drew up all his Forces in Finsbury Fields, met the Lord-Mayor and Common-Council at Guild-hall, went with them to hear a Sermon at Paul's, and dined with them at the Bull-head in Cheapſide, the City giving all the Demonſtrations of Joy in Bells and Bonfires.

Monk reſtores the ſecluded Members. On Feb. 18, the General appointed a Conference to be held in his Quarters of the ſitting and ſecluded Members to agree upon the Re-admiſſion of the latter. But it being much oppoſed by a majority of the ſitting Party, the General reſolved to do it by his own Strength, which he began now to underſtand: And therefore on the Tueſday following Feb. 21, he gave the ſecluded Members a meeting at Whitehall; and in a ſhort Speech recommended to them the Settlement of the Nation, and promiſed to impoſe nothing upon them, and then had them conducted to take their Places in the Houſe. The ſitting Members knew nothing of this, till they ſaw the Secluded Members enter in and ſit down among them; upon which, being much ſurprized, they demurred among themſelves, whether they ſhould quit the Houſe or keep their Seats. After ſome hurry and confuſion, the ſticklers for a Commonwealth knowing their Cauſe would be now over-powered, immediately departed in Spleen and Murmurs, while the more Moderate kept their Seats among the new admitted Members.

The Parliament thus filled up agree with Monk. This new modelled Parliament paſſed ſeveral Votes to expunge out of their Journals all Votes and Orders that diſabled them from ſitting; to releaſe Mr. Vincent, Mr. Bromſield, and other Citizens who had been lately impriſoned; to conſtitute Monk General of all the Forces in England, Scotland and Ireland; to diſſolve the Council of State, and erect a new one conſiſting of one and thirty Perſons; to repeal the Oath of Abjuration; to reſtore the Common-Council of London; to releaſe the impriſoned Apprentices, and to ſet up again the Poſts, Chains, Gates and Portcullices of the City: and finally to take off the File, and make void to all Intents and Purpoſes the Engagement to be true to the Commonwealth of England without a King or Houſe of Lords; And a new Parliament to be ſummoned to meet on April 25, 1660.

Haſlerig, Scot and other fierce Republicans, knowing well that theſe Proceedings tended to the Reſtoration of the King, had one part more of Hypocriſy and

(a) Yet in the MS. Life of Dr. John Barwick Dean of Paul's, written in Latin, there is mention of a Letter from Chancellor Hyde to Dr. John Barwick (an Agent for the King in London) dated Bruſſels 12, January 1659, with two Letters incloſed from the King to Clobury and Otway, wherein the Chancellor complains that Monk would not receive any Letter from the King, and that his Majeſty could hardly hope for any Good from him.

Monk now courted to be the ſingle Perſon in a new Government.

and Villainy to Act, that was, to court the General (whom they mortally hated) to take upon himſelf the Dominion of the three Kingdoms; telling him, that the Parliament's Actions tended to ruin him and all the good People of England: Your deſtruction, ſay they, muſt needs ſucceed the King's Admiſſion; for a Merit too great to be rewarded can have no Recompence but Death. Remember Stanley, who ſet the Crown upon Henry VII's Head, he had his own ſtruck off upon frivolous Pretences, when the true Reaſon was exceſs of Merit. Nay, and they had drawn in the French Ambaſſador into this Intrigue, who in a moſt perfidious manner (as Sir Philip Warwick tells us) “Having winded this Propoſition, finds “means for a Conference with Clarges, and to deſire “by him to aſſure the General, that if he had any “Aim to aſſume the Government himſelf, his Maſter “would be a very ſteddy Friend to him. But tho' “this wiſe General admitted a reſpectful Conference “with him; yet he made him ſoon perceive he was “not ſuſceptible of French Counſels.” To all theſe Sollicitations the General made Anſwer, That the Parliament were beſt Judges of their own Proceedings; and as to taking the Government upon himſelf, he ſaid, The Experience of Cromwel's Fate gave him ſufficient Reaſons to ſhun that Rock on which that Family was Shipwracked. They replyed, That Oliver uſurped the Government againſt the Suffrage of the Army, and the Conſent of the People, whereas he ſhould have it by an unanimous Submiſſion, and under what Name or Title he would pleaſe to accept it: But he had the Honour and the Wit to overcome all Temptation.

So tempted by the French Ambaſſador.

But he overcame all Temptations.

The poor King could have no aſſiſtance

From Spain or France.

And now tho' all things ſeemed thus to concur toward the Reſtoration of the King, yet the Name of an Engliſh Parliament was ſo terrible abroad, that neither France nor Spain durſt venture to give K. Charles the leaſt Aſſiſtance to regain his Throne; but on the contrary were obliged to treat him in a manner altogether unworthy of a crowned Head, as appears in the following Inſtances at the Treaty of the Pyrenees. The King after having in vain ſought a Sanctuary in France, was neceſſitated to throw himſelf upon the Friendſhip of Spain: He was at Bruſſels when he received the News of the Diſpoſition that was in England, juſt at the time the Conferences were to begin between Cardinal Mazarine and Don Lewis de Haro, the two Plenipotentiaries of France and Spain. This determined King Charles to take poſt from Bruſſels thro' France to the place of Treaty, that he might in Perſon repreſent his Intereſts to theſe two Miniſters. He judged the Spaniards had reaſon to be Enemies to the then Government in England, for not only having taken Dunkirk and Jamaica from them, and entered into a League with Portugal againſt them, but for endeavouring all that was poſſible to perſwade the French to continue the War. Upon the other hand it was but reaſonable to think, that France could not be well pleaſed to ſee the Engliſh Maſter of ſuch a Frontier Town as Dunkirk, or that Mazarine, the moſt ambitious Man upon Earth, would not be willing to raiſe his own Glory, by eſpouſing the Cauſe of an exiled Prince, eſpecially when there was ſo great probability of Succeſs. But notwithſtanding all theſe plauſible appearances, King Charles made this long Journey to no purpoſe; it's true Don Lewis de Haro received him with all poſſible Marks of Reſpect; but the Cardinal poſitively denyed him Acceſs. All he could be brought to after ſeveral Meſſages from the King, was to allow the Duke of Ormond to talk to him upon the Road from St. Jean de Luz to the place of Treaty, as if it had been but an accidental Rencounter. Ormond obtained nothing of the Cardinal but general and ambiguous Anſwers, till being preſſed, he told Ormond plainly, That all his Maſter could do for his Couſin the King of England, was to compaſſionate his Misfortunes, as not being in a Condition himſelf to break with the Government of England, with which his Affairs obliged him to keep a good Correſpondence. Over and above this neglect of Mazarine's, King Charles had the Mortification to ſee Ambaſſador Lockhart received at the ſame time with the greateſt Pomp and Splendor, having the Cardinal's Coaches and Guards ſent a Day's Journey to receive him, and the Cardinal giving him the Right-hand, which was a Reſpect he denied the Ambaſſadors of crowned Heads: Nor was Don Lewis kinder upon the matter to K. Charles, notwithſtanding all his Civilities; for having asked the Command of the Army in Flanders, which the Prince of Conde was by the Treaty obliged to quit, Don Lewis refuſed it: All which will be a laſting Example to Poſterity, how little truſt is to be repoſed in Foreign Aid when a Prince comes to need it, for recovering his Throne. But indeed it ſeems probable, that all theſe Sleights put upon King Charles, were a Political Feint to hide the ſecret Intrigue of their mutual Aſſiſtance to be lent to him for Recovery of his Kingdoms, upon Conditions very prejudicial to the Intereſt of the Reformation, as we ſhall have occaſion to obſerve in the view of Religion this Year.

Pyrenean Treaty.

In the mean time it ought to be farther obſerved, that this famous Pyrenean Treaty of a Peace between France and Spain, was concluded in a Match between the young French King and the eldeſt Daughter or Infanta of Spain, the younger Siſter being afterward married to Leopold Emperor of Germany, both ſo diſpoſed before the Birth of their Brother, who lived to be the poor weak King of Spain. But as this Treaty was made in the deepeſt Diſſimulation and Treachery, ſo almoſt every Article of it was violated by the French; in reſpect to Portugal, to the Prince of Conde, to the Duke of Lorrain, and in all likelihood in reſpect to England, and with a reference to moſt other Things and Perſons. Even the main Article of all, and without which the Spaniards would never have endured the Match, was for the Infanta, before and after Marriage, to diſclaim for herſelf and her Heirs, all manner of Right and Title to the Kingdom of Spain, or any of its Dominions. And yet this that was the Cement of all the other Articles, has been now at laſt moſt ſhamefully broken. Under ſuch a ſcene of perfidiouſneſs it was the leſs wonder, that Mazarine ſhould deal ſo inhumanly by King Charles, and ſhould even inſtruct the French Ambaſſador Bourdeaux in England to hinder the King's return, and even to ſet up another Uſurper againſt him: But French Politicks have been alway falſe and fatal to the true Intereſt of our Engliſh Monarchy. Another Inference is, that the good Providence of God ſo contrived to repair the Honour of this Nation, as to make the King's return be entirely owing to the Hearts of his People, and not at all to any Foreign Aid.

The King ſends Sir John Granville to Monk.

Affairs at home looking favourably upon the King's Intereſt, he ſent Sir John Granville to General Monk, who knowing his wary Temper, made uſe of his Neighbour Mr. William Morris to introduce him; Mr. Morris acquainted the General with it, who made Anſwer, that unleſs he would ſend him Information of his Buſineſs by him, he could not admit of any Interview between them. Mr. Morris told him, he had already propoſed that to him, but he refuſed it. The General approving this Reſervedneſs in Sir John, ordered him to come to him at St. James's by nine in the Evening. Accordingly Granville came, and begging Pardon for his Importunity, deſired leave to deliver a Meſſage to him from the King. The General ſeemed ſurprized at this; but being alone, bid him ſay what he pleaſed. Then Sir John preſented a Letter to him from the King, and told him, that his Majeſty had great Confidence in him; and ſince he had ſo far complyed with the Deſires of the Kingdom, for the admiſſion of the Secluded Members, in order to a free Parliament, the Conſequences of it could be no leſs than the Reſtoration of his Majeſty, if he concurred with their Councils. The General replyed, “That he “had long lamented the Miſeries of his Country, and “waited an opportunity to redeem them from Vaſſalage: And as to the King's Majeſty, none wiſhed “him greater Felicity than he did, or with greater “Paſſion deſired his Reſtoration; but if it were not “cautiouſly attempted, it would be out of his Power to “ſerve him in it: And therefore he muſt conjure him “to acquaint no Perſon with it but the King, and de-

"ſire his Majeſty alſo to conceal it. But above all, he muſt intreat him to deſire the King to remove out of the King of Spain's Dominions to Breda; for he had certain Intelligence he would otherwiſe be detained by the King of Spain's Miniſters." Sir John returned with this kind Meſſage and good Advice to the King, who accordingly retired to Breda.

State of Religion.

Under all theſe Convulſions in the State, the Affairs of Religion were ſubject to the ſame Diſtemper. The Independents were all zealous for a Commonwealth; (a) but the Presbyterians who had been outwitted and overpowered by thoſe younger Brethren, were for the Parliament in oppoſition to the Army, and for the Reſtitution of the Secluded Members; and had ſhewn themſelves generally inclined to the Riſing of Sir George Booth, and to all the Meaſures of General Monk, even to the Reſtoration of the King. When the Members of the Long Parliament were reſtored, the Enthuſiaſtick People preferred a Petition to them againſt Tithes; but the Houſe calmly voted June 27, That for the Encouragement of a godly Preaching Learned Miniſtry throughout the Nation, the payment of Tithes ſhall continue as now they are, unleſs this Parliament ſhall find out ſome other more equal and comfortable Maintenance, both for the Miniſtry and for the Satisfaction of the People. The Independents to ingratiate themſelves with this Parliament and their Council of State, in the name of the Congregational Churches, deſired leave to raiſe three Regiments for the Parliament againſt Sir George Booth and the Royaliſts then in Arms, and had their willing conſent to it. For which they got a Vote of the Houſe Oct. 10, for Liberty of Conſcience(b). After the Secluded Members were reſtored by Monk, all things ran on the Presbyterian ſide. On March 2, the Confeſſion of Faith of the Aſſembly of Divines was agreed unto by the Houſe, except the 30th and 31ſt Chapters, which are touching Church-Cenſures and Synods; and an Act paſt for the eſtabliſhing that Confeſſion on March 5, and the ſame Day an Order was granted for printing and ſetting up in Churches the Solemn League and Covenant, which did now really conduce to the bringing in the Son, as it had formerly done for driving out the Father: And yet the Act for the Militia was not ſuffered to paſs March 10, without a Clauſe for every Commiſſioner to acknowledge and declare, that the War undertaken by both Houſes of Parliament, in their Defence againſt the Forces raiſed in the name of the late King, was juſt and lawful; and that Magiſtracy and Miniſtry are the Ordinances of God. And to ſhew their diſpleaſure againſt Dr. John Owen, the beloved Chaplain of Cromwel, the Trumpet of his Uſurpation, and the Head of the Independent Party, there was a Vote of the Houſe March 13, to diſcharge the ſaid Dr. Owen from being any longer Dean of Chriſt-Church in Oxford(c), and for putting Dr. Edward Reynolds a Presbyterian into that good place. For the Independents were known to be ſo averſe to Monarchy, and even to a Free Parliament, that they loſt all manner of Intereſt in General Monk, who had the more Experience of their Jealouſies of him, by what he found in Scotland upon his firſt deſign of Marching into England. For then the Army-Party ſent their Commiſſioners to him; and, in the words of Sir Phil. Warwick, "The Men of God who had decried and outed the Biſhops for meddling with any thing that was Secular, Civil, or Military, from the very Beginning of theſe Revolutions, are the active Inſtruments in all important Secular or Military Affairs. And therefore now Mr. Caryl (a great Independent Miniſter) is principally to manage this Affair with Monk; and he is to let him know how fatal ſuch a Breach as was like to be, would prove to the People of God; that the Independent Churches would not interpoſe, or juſtify the Right of either Party; but they thought fit to lay before Monk, that his Province was only to keep Scotland quiet, and not to engage in the Differences of England; and therefore ſince he could not have any true Information of the State of Affairs, and had not any Call thereto, it became him not to interpoſe."

Presbyterians beſt diſpoſed to the King.

Independents the greater Rebels.

Presbytery revives.

Dr. Owen turned out.

Independent Preachers great Incendiaries.

Great Attempts to pervert the King to Popery.

There were, undoubtedly, great Endeavours to pervert the K. to the Popiſh Religion: And it is much feared, that in the great Treaty this Year between the two Crowns of France and Spain, the King was drawn into ſome Articles and Meaſures which were happily broken.

Secret Intrigue in the Pyrenean Treaty.

The K.'s Negotiation in this Treaty was kept a Secret; but there is too much Suſpicion of the Intrigues of it. My Lord Clarendon would let fall no other Intimation than what he gave in theſe Words: It is believed by wiſe Men, that in that Treaty ſomewhat was agreed to the Prejudice of the Proteſtant Intereſt. Which could hardly be leſs than a Promiſe of the King to eſtabliſh or at leaſt to tolerate Popery in England, and to ſet the Example of it in his own Perſon, upon condition he ſhould be reſtored to his Crowns by the united Powers of France and Spain. The way of my Lord Clarendon's introducing and ſupporting his foreſaid Belief of Wiſe Men, is ſome Key to underſtand the Meaning of what he intended to conceal. Speaking of the King's Journey to the Place of Treaty, where Sir Harry Bennet was preparing Terms for him; he ſays, "When the Marqueſs of Ormond diſcovered, by the Information he received at Toulouſe, that the Treaty was ſo near an end, he made all poſſible haſte to the Place the King had appointed to meet at, that his Majeſty might loſe no more time. When he came thither he found no body; which he imputed to the uſual delays in their Journey, and ſtayed one whole Day in expectation of them; but then concluded, that they were gone forward ſome other way, and ſo thought it his Buſineſs to haſten to Fuentarabia, where he heard nothing of the King. Sir Harry Bennet was in great perplexity, and complained very reaſonably, that the King neglected his own Buſineſs in ſuch a Conjuncture; the Benefit whereof was loſt by his not coming. Don Lewis ſeem'd to wonder that the King had not come thither, whilſt the Cardinal and he were together. The Treaty was now concluded; and tho' the Cardinal remained ſtill at his old Quarters on the French ſide, under ſome Indiſpoſition of the Gout, yet he and Don Lewis were to meet no more: But Don Lewis was the leſs troubled that the King had not come ſooner, becauſe he had found the Cardinal, as often as he had taken occaſion to ſpeak of the King, very cold and reſerved; and he had magnifyed the Power of the Parliament, and ſeemed to think his Majeſty's Hopes deſperate; and adviſed Don Lewis, to be wary how he embarked himſelf in an Affair that had no Foundation; and, that it was rather time for all Catholicks to unite to the breaking the Power and Intereſt of the Heretical Party, where-ever it was, than to ſtrengthen it by reſtoring the King, except he would become Catholick. And it is believed by wiſe Men, that in that Treaty ſomewhat was agreed to the Prejudice of the Proteſtant Intereſt (d); and that in a ſhort time

(d) The Writer of Plain Engliſh in 1690, is bold to ſay, that Sir Allen Brodrick, who was with K. Charles II. beyond Sea at the time of his firſt profeſſing the Popiſh Religion has been often heard to lament the burning of his Journal, wherein the very Day and Circumſtances of it were entred. And I am aſſured that one of his preſent Majeſty's Chaplains (Miniſter of the Place where Sir Allen died [meaning Dr. Resborough] can give an Account of his Death-bed Declaration of what he knew in it: With this additional Circumſtance, that it was done in the abſence of the old Lord Culpeper, who knowing of it at his Return fell into a great Paſſion, and told the King, he muſt never expect to ſee England again if it ſhould be known there.

" there

1659. 11 Car. II. "there would have been much done againſt it both in "France and Germany, if the Meaſures they had there "taken had not been ſhortly broke, chiefly by the "ſurprizing Revolution in England (which happened "the next Year) and alſo by the Death of the two "great Favourites of the two Crowns, Don Lewis de "Haro, and Cardinal Mazarin, who both died not ve- "ry long after it; the Cardinal probably ſtruck with "the Wonder, if not with the Agony of that un- "dreamed of Proſperity of our King's Affairs; as if "he had taken it ill, and laid it to heart, that God "Almighty would bring ſuch a Work to paſs in Eu- "rope without his Concurrence, and even againſt all "his Machinations." From this Relation thus cau- tiouſly given on purpoſe to cover an invidious Truth, I think it is too plain, that what was agreed to the pre- judice of the Proteſtant Religion, was for King Charles to become a Profeſſor, or at leaſt a ſworn Favourer of Po- pery. That nothing could have broke theſe Meaſures, but the ſurprizing Revolution in England; and that ſuch a providential Reſtoration of the King without the propoſed Terms of bringing in Popery with him, was the great Diſappointment, and almoſt the very Death of Cardinal Mazarin, the ſame Author does a little more explain himſelf, when he ſoon after adds, "That "ſome about the King began to think of providing "a Religion, as well as other Conveniences, that "might be grateful to thoſe People and Places, where "and with whom they were like to reſide. The Pro- "teſtant Religion was found to be very unagreeable "to their Fortune, and they exerciſed their Thoughts "moſt how to get handſomly from it; and if it had "not been for the King's own Steadineſs, of which "he gave great Indications, Men would have been "more out of Countenance to have owned the Faith "they were of; and many made little doubt, but "that it would ſhortly be very manifeſt to the King, "that his Reſtoration depended wholly upon a Con- "junction of Catholick Princes, who could never be "united but on the behalf of Catholick Religion." It is Matter of Fact, that upon this Peace between France and Spain, both thoſe Crowns did immediately begin to encourage and aſſiſt the King with Money and Men, and advanced great Promiſes to him, which ſeems to have been done upon the Foot of ſecret Ar- ticles. It is farther certain, that the Earl of Briſtol, who was the K.'s Companion and Guide to the Place of this Treaty, and Sir Harry Bennet, who was the prime Agent for the King, did both of them turn Papiſts about this time; as if they did it upon a Com- pact then made. And there is a Story to confirm all, which I have reaſon to think true. Sir Harry Bennet was ſoon after ſeen to wait upon the King from Maſs; at which ſight the Lord Culpeper had ſo much Indigna- tion, that he went up to Bennet, and ſpoke to this ef- fect: I ſee what you are at: Is this the way to bring our Maſter home to his three Kingdoms? Well, Sir, if ever you and I live to ſee England together, I will have your Head, or you ſhall have mine. Which Words ſtruck ſuch a Ter- ror upon Sir Harry Bennet, that he never dared to ſet Foot in England till after the Death of the Lord Cul- peper, who met with a very abrupt Death within few Months after the King's Return. When he was taken out of the way, Sir Harry Bennet came to Court, and ſoon aroſe into Honours and Preferments, and was in Diſguiſe a meer Creature of the Papiſts, and had the dying Courage to take off that Diſguiſe (a).

1660. Lambert, upon the Complaint made againſt him by General Monk, had for ſome time abſconded; but finding no Hopes in ſtanding out, he ſurrendered him- ſelf to the new Council of State: and upon his Reſu- ſal to give Security for his quiet Deportment, he was by them committed to the Tower; from whence he made his Eſcape, and in the beginning of April got into Northamptonſhire, and picked up all the diſcon- tented Officers and Soldiers, till he had got together about ſeven Troops of Horſe and a Company of Foot. General Monk, upon Intelligence of his intended Ren- dezvous at Edgehill, was preparing to march out a- gainſt him: but when he heard that his Party was but inconſiderable, he ſent Col. Ingoldsby and Streater to Northampton to watch his Motions, and with due caution to fall upon him. They hearing that Lambert was at Daventry, marched thither; and there being informed that he lay two Miles off, they haſtened after him, and came up to him in a plain Field, where a little Brook parted them. The two Parties faced one another near 4 Hours: When they came to advance, and were beginning to charge, Lambert's Men held the Muzzles of their Piſtols toward the Ground, and the Troops of Hazlerig and Nelthorp came over to Ingoldsby. Lambert deſired a Parley, and moved that Richard might be reſtored to the Protectorſhip: But he was anſwered, that He himſelf was one of thoſe who pulled down Richard, and therefore he was the more unfit to ſet him up again; however, that they had no Commiſſion to diſpute, but to reduce him and his Party. Then Ingoldsby rode up to Lambert, and told him he was his Priſoner; whereupon Major Creed and other Officers intreated him to do what he pleaſed with them, but to let Lambert eſcape: which Ingoldsby abſolutely refuſing, Lambert turned his Horſe, and attempted to eſcape: but Ingoldsby purſued him ſo cloſe, that he quickly came up with him, vowing to piſtol him if he did not yield immediately. Lambert, in great dejection of Mind, twice begged him to let him eſcape: but when he ſaw he could not prevail, he ſubmitted, as all the reſt did except Col. Okey, Col. Axtel, and Capt. Clare, who made their Eſcapes.

This Defeat was ſeconded with the good News of the Submiſſion of the Fleet, brought about by Moun- tague, who by Monk's Advice had been made one of the Generals at Sea, who wrote an Account to the Council of State, "That Vice-Admiral Lawſon and "the whole Navy had received him with great Sa- "tisfaction, and were all peaceably inclined, and "reſolved to ſubmit to the Determination of the "next Parliament." There was ſuch a general Diſ- poſition to the King, as the only Deliverer from Feuds and Wars, that many of the profeſſed Roy- aliſts were choſen Members of the Houſe of Com- mons; and the Lords, who had been long denyed a fundamental Right, met now with a full Senſe that they had not been themſelves reſtored without a pro- ſpect of the King's Reſtoration. And at this ſame juncture there was publiſhed, A Declaration of the Nobility and Gentry that had adhered to the late King; mildly and affectionately worded for compoſing all Differences, and burying all former Animoſities.

Letters from the King.

Charles R.

Right-truſty and well-beloved Couſins, We greet you well. We cannot have a better Reaſon to promiſe Ourſelf an End of our common Sufferings and Calamities, and that our own juſt Power and Authority will, with God's Bleſſing, be reſtored to us; than that we hear you are again acknowledged to have that Authority and Juriſdiction which hath always belonged unto you by your Births, and the fundamental Laws of the Land. And we have thought it very fit and ſafe for Us to call to you for your Help in composing the Diſtempers and Diſtractions of the Kingdom, in which your Sufferings are next to thoſe we have undergone Ourſelves; and therefore you cannot but be the moſt proper Counſellors for removing theſe Miſchiefs, and for preventing the like for the future. How great a Truſt We repoſe in you, for the Reſtoring and Eſtabliſhing a bleſſed Peace and Security in the Kingdom, will appear to you by our encloſed Declaration; which Truſt, we are moſt confident you will diſcharge with Juſtice and Wiſdom that becomes you, and muſt always be expected from you: And that upon experience, how one Violation ſucceeds another when the known Relations and Rules of Juſtice are once tranſgreſſed, you will be as zealous for the Rights of the Crown, and for the Honour of your King, as for Yourſelves. And then you cannot but diſcharge with good Succeſs, and provide for and eſtabliſh the Peace, Happineſs, and Honour of King, Lords, and Commons, upon that Foundation which only can ſupport it; and we ſhall all be happy in each other. And as the whole Nation will bleſs God for you all, ſo We ſhall hold Ourſelves obliged, in an eſpecial manner, to thank you in particular, according to the Affection you ſhall expreſs towards us. We need the leſs to enlarge upon this Subject, becauſe We have likewiſe writ to the Houſe of Commons, which we ſuppoſe they will communicate to you. And we pray God to bleſs your joint Endeavours, for the Good of us all; and ſo We bid you very heartily farewel.

Given at our Court of Breda this 14th of April 1660. in the 12th Year of our Reign.

The Declaration encloſed was under this Title and Form.

His Majeſty's gracious Declaration to all his Loving Subjects.

Charles R.

His Majeſty's Declaration.

Charles, by the Grace of God King of England, Scotland, France, and Ireland, Defender of the Faith, &c. To all our loving Subjects of what Degree or Quality ſoever, greeting. If the general Diſtraction and Confuſion which is ſpread over the whole Kingdom, doth not awaken all Men to a Deſire and Longing that thoſe Wounds which have for ſo many Years together been kept bleeding, may be bound up; all we can ſay will be to no purpoſe. However, after this long Silence, we have thought it our Duty to declare, how much we deſire to contribute thereunto: And that, as we can never give over the Hope in good time to obtain the Poſſeſſion of that Right which God and Nature hath made our due; ſo we do make it our daily Suit to the Divine Providence, that he will, in Compaſſion to us and our Subjects, after ſo long Miſery and Sufferings, remit and put us into a quiet and peaceable Poſſeſſion of that our Right with as little Blood and Damage to our People as is poſſible. Nor do we deſire more to enjoy what is ours, than that all our Subjects may enjoy what by Law is theirs, by a full and entire Adminiſtration of Juſtice throughout the Land, and by extending our Mercy where it is wanted and deſerved.

And to the end that the fear of Puniſhment may not engage any conſcious to themſelves of what is paſt, to a Perſeverance in Guilt for the future, by oppoſing the Quiet and Happineſs of their Country, in the Reſtoration both of King, Peers, and People, to their juſt, ancient, and fundamental Rights: We do by theſe Preſents declare, that We do grant a free and general Pardon, which We are ready upon Demand to paſs under our Great-Seal of England, to all our Subjects of what Degree or Quality ſoever, who within forty Days after the publiſhing hereof, ſhall lay hold upon this our Grace and Favour, and ſhall by any publick Act declare their doing ſo, and that they return to the Loyalty and Obedience of good Subjects, excepting only ſuch Perſons as ſhall hereafter be excepted by Parliament: thoſe only excepted, let all our Subjects, how faulty ſoever, rely upon the Word of a King, ſolemnly given by this preſent Declaration, that no Crime whatſoever, committed againſt us, or our Royal Father, before the Publication of this, ſhall ever riſe in Judgment, or be brought in Queſtion againſt any of them, to the leaſt endamagement of them, either in their Lives, Liberties or Eſtates, or as far forth as lies in our Power, ſo much as to the prejudice of their Reputations, by any Reproach or term of Diſtinction from the reſt of our beſt Subjects: We Deſiring and Ordaining, that henceforward all Notes of Diſcord, Separation and Difference of Parties, be utterly aboliſhed among all our Subjects; whom we invite and conjure to a perfect Union among themſelves, under our Protection, for the Reſettlement of our juſt Rights and theirs in a free Parliament, by which, upon the Word of a King, we will be adviſed.

And becauſe the Paſſion and Uncharitableneſs of the Times have produced ſeveral Opinions in Religion, by which Men are engaged in Parties and Animoſities againſt each other, which when they ſhall hereafter unite in a freedom of Converſation, will be compoſed or better underſtood: We do declare a Liberty to tender Conſciences, and that no Man ſhall be diſquieted or called in Queſtion for Differences of Opinion in matter of Religion, which do not diſturb the Peace of the Kingdom; and that we ſhall be ready to conſent to ſuch an Act of Parliament, as upon mature Deliberation ſhall be offered to us, for the full granting that Indulgence.

And becauſe in the continued Diſtractions of ſo many Years, and ſo many and great Revolutions, many Grants and Purchaſes of Eſtates have been made to and by many Officers, Soldiers, and others, who are now poſſeſſed of the ſame, and who may be liable to Actions at Law upon ſeveral Titles; we are likewiſe willing that all ſuch Differences, and all things relating to ſuch Grants, Sales and Purchaſes, ſhall be determined in Parliament, which can beſt provide for the juſt Satisfaction of all Men who are concerned.

And we do farther declare, that we will be ready to conſent to any Act or Acts of Parliament to the purpoſes aforeſaid, and for the full Satisfaction of all Arrears due to the Officers and Soldiers of the Army under the Command of General Monk, and that they ſhall be received into our Service, upon as good Pay and Conditions as they now enjoy. Given under our Sign Manual and Privy Signet, at our Court of Breda this 4/14 Day of April, 1660, in the 12th Year of our Reign.

The Letter and Declaration being read, the Lords ordered Thanks to be given to Sir John Granville for bringing of them, and reſolved by Vote, that they do own and declare, that according to the ancient and fundamental Laws of this Kingdom, the Government is, and ought to be by King, Lords and Commons: And therefore they deſired, that ſome way be conſidered how to make up the Breaches, and to obtain the K.'s return again unto his People.

Votes of the Lords.

Then Sir John Granville went to the Houſe of Commons, and upon notice of his attending at the Door, was called in, and preſented a Letter with a Duplicate of the ſame Declaration encloſed, and ſuperſcribed

King's Letter to the Commons.

To our Truſty and Well-beloved the Speaker of the Houſe of Commons.

Charles R.

"Truſty and well-beloved we Greet you well. In "theſe great and inſupportable Afflictions and "Calamities under which the poor Nation hath been "ſo long exerciſed, and by which it is ſo near exhauſted, we cannot think of a more natural and proper "Remedy, than to reſort to thoſe for Counſel and "Advice, who have ſeen and obſerved the firſt beginning of our Miſeries, the progreſs from bad to worſe, "and

1660. 12 Car. II.

“and the Miſtakes and Miſunderſtandings which have produced and contributed to Inconveniencies which were not intended: And after ſo many Revolutions, and the obſervation of what hath attended them, are now truſted by our good Subjects to repair the Breaches which are made, and to provide proper Remedies for thoſe Evils, and for the laſting Peace, Happineſs and Security of the Kingdom. We do aſſure you upon our Royal Word, that none of our Predeceſſors have had a greater Eſteem of Parliaments than we have, in our Judgment as well as from our Obligation. We do believe them to be ſo vital a part of the Conſtitution of the Kingdom, and ſo neceſſary for the government of it, that we well know, neither Prince nor People can be in any tolerable degree happy without them: And therefore you may be confident that we ſhall always look upon their Counſels as the beſt we can receive; and ſhall be as tender of their Privileges, and as careful to preſerve and protect them, as of that which is moſt near to our ſelf, and moſt neceſſary for our own Preſervation.

“And as this is our Opinion of Parliaments, that their Authority is moſt neceſſary for the Government of the Kingdom, ſo we are moſt confident that you believe and find, that the preſervation of the King's Authority is as neceſſary for the preſervation of Parliaments; and that it is not the Name but the right Conſtitution of them which can prepare and apply proper Remedies for thoſe Evils, which are grievous to the People, and which can thereby eſtabliſh their Peace and Security. And therefore we have not the leaſt doubt, but that you will be as tender in, and as zealous of, any thing that may infringe our Honour, or impair our Authority, as of your own Liberty and Property, which is beſt preſerved by preſerving the other.

“How far we have truſted you in this great Affair, and how much it is in your Power to reſtore the Nation to all that it hath loſt, and to redeem it from any Infamy it hath undergone, and to make King and People as Happy as they ought to be, you will find by our encloſed Declaration (a Copy of which we have likewiſe ſent to the Houſe of Peers) and you will eaſily believe, that we would not voluntarily, and of our ſelf, have repoſed ſo great a Truſt in you but upon an entire confidence that you will not abuſe it; and that you will proceed in ſuch a manner, and with ſuch due conſideration of us who have truſted you, that we ſhall not be aſhamed of declining other Aſſiſtance (which we have aſſurance of) and repairing to you for the more natural and proper Remedies, for the Evils we would be freed from; nor ſorry that we have bound up our own Intereſt ſo intirely with that of our Subjects, as that we refer it to the ſame Perſons to take care of us who are truſted to provide for them.

“We look upon you as Wiſe and Diſpaſſionate Men, and good Patriots, who will raiſe up thoſe Banks and Fences which have been caſt down, and we will moſt reaſonably hope the ſame Proſperity will again ſpring from thoſe Roots from which it hath heretofore and always grown. Nor can we apprehend that you will propoſe any thing to us, or expect any thing from us, but what we are as ready to give as you to receive. If you deſire the advancement and propagation of the Proteſtant Religion, we have by our conſtant Profeſſion and Practice of it, given ſufficient teſtimony to the World, that neither the unkindneſs of thoſe of the ſame Faith towards us, nor the Civilities and Obligations of thoſe of a contrary Profeſſion (of both which we have had abundant Evidence) could in the leaſt degree ſtartle us, or make us ſwerve from it: And nothing can be propoſed to manifeſt our Zeal and Affection for it, to which we will not readily conſent. And we hope in due time ourſelf to propoſe ſomewhat to you for the propagation of it, that will ſatisfie the World that we have always made it both our Care and our Study, and have enough obſerved, what is moſt like to bring diſadvantage to it.

1660. 12 Car. II.

“If you deſire ſecurity for thoſe, who in theſe calamitous times, either wilfully or weakly have tranſgreſſed thoſe bounds which were preſcribed, and have invaded each others Rights; we have left to you to provide for their Security and Indemnity, and in ſuch a way as you ſhall think juſt and reaſonable, and by a juſt computation of what Men have done and ſuffered, as near as is poſſible, to take care that all Men be ſatisfied, which is the ſureſt way to ſuppreſs and extirpate all ſuch Uncharitableneſs and Animoſity, as might hereafter ſhake and threaten that Peace, which for the preſent might ſeem eſtabliſhed. If there be a crying Sin, for which the Nation may be involved in the Infamy that attends it; we cannot doubt but that you will be as ſollicitous to redeem and vindicate the Nation from that Guilt and Infamy as we can be.

“If you deſire that Reverence and Obedience may be paid to the fundamental Laws of the Land, and that Juſtice may be equally and impartially adminiſtered to all Men; it is that which we deſire to be ſworn to ourſelf, and that all Perſons in Power and Authority ſhould be ſo too.

“In a word, there is nothing that you can propoſe, that may make the Kingdom Happy, which we will not contend with you to compaſs; and upon this Confidence and Aſſurance, we have thought fit to ſend you this Declaration, that you may, as much as is poſſible, at this diſtance, ſee our Heart, which when God ſhall bring us nearer together (as we hope he will do ſhortly) will appear to you very agreeable to what we have profeſſed; and we hope that we have made that right Chriſtian uſe of our Affliction, and that the Obſervation and Experience we have had in other Countries, hath been ſuch as that we, and we hope all our Subjects, ſhall be the better for what we have ſeen and ſuffered.

“We ſhall add no more but our Prayers to Almighty God, that he will ſo bleſs your Counſels and direct your Endeavours, that his Glory and Worſhip may be provided for, and the Peace, Honour and Happineſs of the Nation may be eſtabliſhed upon thoſe Foundations which can beſt ſupport it: And ſo we bid you farewel. Given at our Court at Breda this $\frac{4}{14}$ Day of April 1660, in the twelfth Year of our Reign.”

After the Reading his Majeſty's Letter and Declaration in the Houſe of Commons Tueſday May 1, they immediately reſolved, Nemine contradicente, that a Committee be appointed to prepare an Anſwer to his Majeſty's Letter, expreſſing the great and joyful ſenſe of this Houſe of his gracious Offers, and their humble and hearty Thanks to his Majeſty for the ſame; and with profeſſions of their Loyalty and Duty to his Majeſty; and that this Houſe will give a ſpeedy Anſwer to his Majeſty's gracious Propoſals (a). Then the Houſe took into conſideration, that the King being long deprived of his Revenue, might be in want of Money, and therefore ordered that fifty thouſand Pounds ſhould be ſpeedily raiſed and preſented to his Majeſty, with ten thouſand to the Duke of York, and five thouſand to the Duke of Glouceſter.

Votes of the Commons.

Money given.

The Lords and Commons appointed their ſeveral Committees to draw up their reſpective Anſwers to his Majeſty's Letters, and reſolved that the Superſcription ſhould be, To the King's moſt excellent Majeſty; and ordered that all the Acts and Orders ſhould be razed out of the Journals, that were inconſiſtent with the Government of King, Lords and Commons. Both Houſes having drawn up their Anſwers, 6 Lords and 12 Commoners were appointed to attend his Majeſty with them, and to deſire his Majeſty to make a ſpeedy Return to his Parliament, and to his Kingly Office. On Monday May 7, it was reſolved by both Houſes that the King be Proclaimed to Morrow, which was done by this Form of Proclamation.

Form of Proclaiming the K.

*A*LTHO' it can no way be doubted, but that his Majeſty's Right and Title to theſe Crowns and Kingdoms is and was every way compleat by the Death of his moſt Royal Father of glorious Memory, without the Ceremony or Solemnity of a Proclamation: Yet ſince Proclamations in ſuch Caſes have been always uſed, to the end that all good Subjects might upon this occaſion teſtify their Duty and Reſpect; and ſince the armed Violence, and other the Calamities of many Years laſt paſt, have hitherto depriv'd us of any opportunity, wherein we might expreſs our Loyalty and Allegiance to his Majeſty: We therefore the Lords and Commons now aſſembled in Parliament, together with the Lord Mayor, Aldermen and Common-Council of the City of London, and other Freemen of this Kingdom now preſent, do according to our Duty and Allegiance heartily, joyfully and unanimouſly acknowledge and proclaim, that immediately upon the Deceaſe of our late Sovereign King Charles I. the Imperial Crown of the Realm of England, and of all the Kingdoms, Dominions and Rights belonging to the ſame, did by inherent Birthright and lawful undoubted Succeſſion deſcend and come to his moſt excellent Majeſty King Charles II. as being lineally, juſtly and lawfully next Heir of the Blood Royal of this Realm; and that by the Goodneſs and Providence of Almighty God, he is of England, Scotland and Ireland, the moſt Potent, Mighty and Undoubted King. And thereunto we moſt humbly and faithfully do ſubmit and oblige our ſelves our Heirs and Poſterities for ever.

The King leaves Holland.

The King having been thus proclaimed with great Solemnity and inexpreſſible Joy, took his leave of the States of Holland on Tueſday, May 22. and after a noble Entertainment, a very endearing Speech, and magnificent Preſents received from them, he took Ship under the Convoy of Mountague on Wedneſday, May 23. and on Friday about one landed at the Beach near Dover-Pier, where General Monk ſtood ready to receive him on his Knees, and was raiſed, kiſs'd and embrac'd by his Majeſty. (Lands at Dover.) They all walked toward the Town, and were ſoon met by the Mayor and Jurates, and the Miniſter Mr. John Reading, who preſented the King with a Bible, and made a proper Speech at the delivery of it [a]. Then the King took Coach, the Duke of York ſitting next to him; at the other End ſate the Duke of Glouceſter and the General, and the Duke of Buckingham in the Boot. About two Miles from Dover the King took Horſe, his Brothers riding on his Right-Hand, and the General on the Left, follow'd by a gallant Equipage into Canterbury, (Comes to Canterbury.) where he ſtaid on Saturday and Sunday, making there the General Knight of the noble Order of the Garter, and Maſter of his Majeſty's Horſe. On Monday May 28. the King came to Rocheſter, and early next Day went on to Black-Heath, where the Army was drawn up, and his Majeſty having taken a moſt pleaſing view of them, advanced toward London with infinite Crowds and incredible Acclamations: About one he was met at St. George's Fields (Enters London.) by the Lord Mayor and Aldermen waiting there in a glorious Tent, the Mayor with a profound Reverence delivered the Sword to his Majeſty, and received it again with great Reſpect and the Honour of being Knighted Sir Thomas Alleyn. From thence the King was conducted thro' London in a very ſplendid manner to his Royal Palace at Whitehall; where he paid his Devotions and Thanks to God on this Day of his Birth and Return in the Preſence-Chamber, becauſe the Chapel was not yet in order.

Privy-Council conſtituted.

His Majeſty's firſt Care was to conſtitute his Privy Council, of which were General Monk, the Duke of Bucks, and Sir Anthony Aſhley Cooper; and to fill up the Offices of State, (Offices and Honours.) the Duke of Ormond being made Lord High-Steward, the Earl of Southampton Lord High-Treaſurer, and the Earl of Mancheſter Lord Chamberlain, Sir Frederick Cornwallis Treaſurer of the Houſhold, and Sir John Berkley Comptroller: And then to confer ſuitable Honours on his principal Servants, [b] General Monk made Duke of Albemarle and Earl of Torrington, Admiral Mountague Earl of Sandwich and Viſcount Hinckinbrook, &c.

The great Affair that took up the Debates of the two Houſes was A Bill for a general Pardon. The Lords would have excepted all that ſate and acted in (Bill for general Pardon.) any High-Court of Juſtice; the Commons were more tender, and the King was inclin'd to extend his Mercy to all but his Father's Murderers. And therefore on July 13. the King went to the Houſe of Lords, and commanded the Commons to be called up. He made a very prudent and pathetick Speech to adviſe (The K.'s Clemency.) their Agreement to a Bill, without too much Limitation of his Royal Clemency and Mercy. And on Aug. 29. he came and paſſed the Act for a general Pardon, that had excepted no Perſon from the Favour of it, but thoſe that acted or ſate as the King's Judges, and Sir Henry Vane, Col. Lambert and Hugh Peters, with the two unknown Perſons diſguiſed on the Scaffold; and even in the number of the King's Judges, thoſe who did not ſit in the Day of Sentence, nor ſign the Warrant for Execution, had their Lives ſpared. After paſſing ſome other Acts for disbanding the Army; for making the 29th of May a perpetual Anniverſary, &c. the two Houſes adjourned themſelves to Nov. 6. following.

In the mean time the King was perpetually en- (Addreſſes and Congratulations.) tertained with the Loyal Addreſſes of his People, and with the ſolemn Congratulations of Foreign Princes and States, who ſeemed all to vie in Haſte and Zeal for ſending over their Ambaſſadors and Agents to complement his Majeſty upon his happy Reſtoration to his Royal Dignity and Government. In the paying of theſe Ceremonies a dreadful Rencounter happen'd on Tower-Hill, in a diſpute of Precedence between the Coaches of the Spaniſh and French Ambaſſadors.

A little after this time the Princeſs Dowager of (The Princeſs of Orange comes into Engl.) Orange, having recommended the Intereſt of her young Son the Prince (born after his Father's Death) to the care of the States-General, who had now at length agreed to inveſt the young Prince with the Dignity and Truſt which his Anceſtors formerly held in that Commonwealth, came into England to viſit her Royal Brother, and once again to ſee her native Country: But the Joy of ſeeing her eldeſt Brother (Death of the Duke of Glouceſter.) peaceably enthron'd was much allay'd, and in a manner prevented by her Sorrow for the Loſs of her youngeſt Brother, Henry of Oatland's Duke of Glouceſter, who juſt before her Landing dy'd of the Small-Pox on Sept. 13. in the twentieth Year of his Age, much lamented by the King, and much beloved by all that knew him, as a Prince excellently qualified, Religious, Learned, Valiant and Wiſe above his Years, an affectionate Brother, a good Maſter and a true Friend.

On October 10. the Commiſſioners of Oyer and (Regicides tried.) Terminer for Trial of the Regicides, met at the Seſſions-Houſe in the Old-Bailey, Sir Orlando Bridgman Lord Chief Baron, ſate as principal Judge, the King's Council were Sir Jeffery Palmer Attorney-General, Sir Heneage Finch Sollicitor General, Sir Edward Turner the Duke of York's Attorney, Serjeant Keeling, Windham, &c. The Priſoners having been this Day brought from the Tower to Newgate, were thence brought to the Bar, Sir Hardreſs Waller, William Heveningham, Col. Harriſon, Iſaac Pennington, Henry Marten, Gilbert Millingham, Robert Tichburn, Owen Roe, Robert Lilburn, Adrian Scroop, John Carew, John Jones, Thomas Scot, Gregory Clement, John Cook, Edmund Harvey, Henry Smith, John Downs, Vincent Potter, Auguſtine Garland, George Fleetwood, Simon Meyn, James Temple, Peter Temple, Thomas Wait, Hugh Peters, Francis Hacker and Daniel Axtel. Two only pleaded guilty, Sir Hardreſs Waller and Mr. George Fleetwood. Harry Marten pleaded, "He was not excepted out of the "Act of Indemnpity, the Perſon there mentioned "being Henry Martin, not Marten, till the Court informed him a Miſnomer in this caſe was not pleadable. Carew put himſelf upon his Trial, with this canting Salvo, Saving to our Lord Jeſus Chriſt his Right to the Government of theſe Nations. Peters would be tried by the Law of God only, which he of all Men had moſt wickedly abuſed. Axtel ſtood long mute, and the Court had much ado to convince him of the danger of it. The Crimes were ſo very odious, and the Proofs ſo clear, that the Jurors without any Heſitation found them all Guilty: But ten only were executed, Harriſon, Carew, Scot, Clement, Jones, Scroop, Cook and Peters at Charing-Croſs; Hacker and Axtel at Tyburn. All the reſt were reſpited till the King and Parliament ſhould order their Execution, according to the Tenor of the Act of Indempnity. One William Hewlet was Indicted for being the Man that in a Frock and Vizard cut off the King's Head, and three ſeveral Witneſſes averr'd it was his own Confeſſion; upon which he was found Guilty, and yet had the Favour of the Court to be Repriev'd, and not to ſuffer. Of theſe wretched Criminals ſome pleaded Ignorance, but none betray'd a Repentance. Moſt of them gloried in the Villany, and juſtified the Cauſe and the Authority by which they acted: And ſome of their ſurviving Friends were ſo very inſolent, that they publiſh'd their Pleadings and Prayers and Speeches, to all the Advantage that the Spirit of Hell could invent, with an inſufferable Inſult upon the Civil Government and all Morality and Religion.

General Monk received him with becoming Duty; the King embrac'd him, and kiſs'd him. This Relator had the Honour to be at the General's Back, and the third Perſon that kiſs'd the Hem of his Majeſty's Garment after he ſet foot in England: He ſet himſelf to obſerve his Majeſty's Countenance at the firſt Landing, where he did ſee a mixture of other Paſſions with Joy in his Face, &c.

Their odd Behaviour.

Ten only executed.

Without Repentance.

The Queen-Mother viſits Engl.

The Queen-Mother came over from France to congratulate her Son, and to bring over her fair Daughter Henrietta Maria, and to adviſe of a Match between her and Monſieur, Brother to the French King; and as generally ſuſpected to draw her Son the King into a Match with Portugal, and a League with France, and a Surrendry of Dunkirk.

Acts of Parliament.

Both Houſes of Parliament met on Nov. 6. and being adviſed to expedite their Buſineſs, an Act was paſſed for ſettling the Exciſe upon Beer and Ale, and other Liquors. Another for taking away the Court of Wards and Liveries; which had been long complained of as an Oppreſſion to the Subject, and accepting the Exciſe in lieu of it, as an Hereditary Duty to the Crown of England for ever. And ſo this Parliament (to which the King from his own Mouth had given the Epithet of the Healing Parliament) was diſſolved on Decemb. 29. the ſame Day with the Funeral of the excellent Princeſs of Orange, Mary eldeſt Siſter of the King, and Mother of William III. King of England, whom ſhe left with the Title of Prince of Orange, in Minority of ten Years and one Month.

Inſurrection of the Fifth-Monarchy-Men.

Immediately after this Calamity, the Government was alarm'd with a deſperate Inſurrection of the Fifth-Monarchy-Men, who being the moſt bold and bloody of all ſort of Enthuſiaſts, had given ſo much Jealouſie of their Madneſs, that Colonel Overton, Cornet Day, Major Allen, and ſome other leading Men of that Party, had been ſeized and impriſoned. Yet the Congregation of them meeting by the King's Indulgence in Coleman-ſtreet, did on Sunday Evening Jan. 6. break into open Rebellion, under the Conduct of their Preacher Thomas Venner, a Cooper. They were not above ſixty in number when they firſt ſallied out of their Meeting-houſe well arm'd, marching to St. Thomas Apoſtles to call in more of their Party, thence into Whitecroſs-ſtreet, coming into the City again at Cripplegate, and going out again at Alderſgate, declaring for King Jeſus, and killing ſeveral People. Sir Richard Brown, then Lord Mayor, having notice of their deſperate Deſign, got together ſome Files of the Train'd-Bands, who were at firſt repuls'd by Venner's Party, who fought with an incredible Impulſe of Infatuation, as making themſelves to believe that One ſhould chaſe a thouſand, and no Weapon form'd againſt them ſhould proſper. But finding themſelves harder preſs'd, and being told the Life-guards were coming down upon them, they retired, and under Cover of the dark Evening got into Cane-wood betwixt Highgate and Hampſtead: and a Party of Horſe and Foot being ſent thither to hunt them out, on Wedneſday Morning very early this villainous Crew return'd again to London, dividing themſelves into two Parties, one whereof appear'd about Leaden-hall, and from thence march'd into Little Eaſtcheap, where they fought obſtinately, but were diſpers'd by the Train'd-Bands. Venner, with another Party, came to the Lord Mayor's Houſe, thinking to have ſurpriz'd him; but miſſing their aim, they march'd into Wood-ſtreet, where they were met by Colonel Corbet and about 20 Horſe. Corbet and 9 only of his Horſe-men charg'd through the Rebels, and broke them; and the Train'd-Band Foot fell in and purſued them. They fought with a Courage more brutiſh and deviliſh than ever was ſeen in Men: and if their Numbers had been equal to their Spirits, they would have overturn'd the City, and the Nation, and the World. Venner (who was much wounded before he could be taken) was ſoon after, with about 16 of his Crew, arraign'd in the Old Bailey; and being all found Guilty, they were executed in ſeveral Places in London, moſt of them raving, and threatning Judgment, and calling down Vengeance upon the King, the Judges and the City.

Their horrid Enthuſiaſm.

Defeated.

Condemned, and executed.

Church reſtor'd.

Upon a View of the King's Return, there began to be a brighter Proſpect of Religion, which for 20 Years together had run into ſuch a variety of Forms and Figures, as to be well aſhamed to appear longer without reaſſuming the good old Habit of a Church of England, as formerly by Law eſtabliſhed: And yet Prejudices were ſo deep, and Parties ſo powerful, that it was the King's Prudence to ſmooth and ſoften the way by his many Expreſſions of Indulgence and Condeſcenſion mention'd in his Letters and Declaration from Breda [a]; and after his Return by this remarkable Declaration to all his loving Subjects of his Kingdom of England and Dominion of Wales, concerning Eccleſiaſtical Affairs.

His Declaration.

"HOW much the Peace of the State is concerned in the Peace of the Church, and how "difficult a thing it is to preſerve Order and Government in Civil, whilſt there is no Order or "Government in Eccleſiaſtical Affairs, is evident "to the World: And this little part of the World, "our own Dominions, hath had ſo late Experience "of it, that we may very well acquieſce in the "Concluſion, without enlarging Ourſelf in Diſcourſe upon it, it being a Subject we have had "frequent occaſion to contemplate upon, and to "lament abroad as well as at home.

"Commons

1660. 12 Car. II. “Commons from Breda, we declared how much we deſired the Advancement and Propagation of the Proteſtant Religion; that neither the Unkindneſs of thoſe of the ſame Faith towards us, nor the Civilities and Obligations from thoſe of a contrary Profeſſion (of both which we have had abundant Evidence) could in the leaſt Degree ſtartle us, or make us ſwerve from it; and that nothing can be propoſed to manifeſt our Zeal and Affection for it, to which we will not readily conſent. And we ſaid then, that we did hope in due time, ourſelf to propoſe ſomewhat for the Propagation of it, that will ſatisfy the World that we have always made it both our Care and our Study, and have enough obſerved what is moſt like to bring Diſadvantage to it. And the truth is, we do think ourſelf more competent to propoſe, and with God's Aſſiſtance to determine many things now in difference, from the Time we have ſpent, and the Experience we have had, in moſt of the Reformed Churches abroad, in France, in the Low Countries, and in Germany, where we have had frequent Conferences with the moſt Learned Men, who have unanimouſly lamented the great Reproach the Proteſtant Religion undergoes from the Diſtempers and too notorious Schiſms in Matters of Religion in England. And as the moſt Learned amongſt them have always with great Submiſſion and Reverence acknowledged and magnified the eſtabliſhed Government of the Church of England, and the great Countenance and Shelter the Proteſtant Religion received from it before theſe unhappy times: ſo many of them have with great Ingenuity and Sorrow confeſs'd, that they were too eaſily miſled by Miſinformation and Prejudice into ſome Diſeſteem of it, as if it had too much complied with the Church of Rome; whereas they now acknowledge it to be the beſt Fence God hath yet raiſed againſt Popery in the World: And we are perſuaded they do with great Zeal wiſh it reſtored to its old Dignity and Veneration.

“When we were in Holland, we were attended by many grave and learned Miniſters from hence, who were look'd upon as the moſt able and principal Aſſertors of the Presbyterian Opinions; with whom we had as much Conference as the Multitude of Affairs which were then upon us would permit us to have; and, to our great Satisfaction and Comfort, found them Perſons full of Affection to us, of Zeal for the Peace of the Church and State, and neither Enemies (as they have been given out to be) to Epiſcopacy or Liturgy, but modeſtly to deſire ſuch Alterations in either, as, without ſhaking Foundations, might beſt allay the preſent Diſtempers which the Indiſpoſition of the Time and the Tenderneſs of ſome Mens Conſciences had contracted. For the better doing whereof, we did intend, upon our firſt Arrival in this Kingdom, to call a Synod of Divines, as the moſt proper Expedient to provide a proper Remedy for all thoſe Differences and Diſſatisfactions which had or ſhould ariſe in Matters of Religion. And in the mean time, we publiſhed in our Declarations from Breda, a Liberty to tender Conſciences, and that no Man ſhould be diſquieted, or called in queſtion for Differences of Opinion in Matters of Religion, which do not diſturb the Peace of the Kingdom, and that we ſhall be ready to conſent to ſuch an Act of Parliament as upon mature Deliberation ſhall be offer'd to us, for the full granting that Indulgence.

“Whilſt we continued in this Temper of Mind, and Reſolution, and have ſo far complied with the Perſuaſion of particular Perſons, and the Diſtemper of the Time, as to be contented with the Exerciſe of our Religion in our own Chapel, according to the conſtant Practice and Laws eſtabliſhed, without enjoining that Practice, and the Obſervation of thoſe Laws in the Churches of the Kingdom; in which we have undergone the Cenſure of many, as if we were without that Zeal for the Church which we ought to have, and which, by God's Grace, we ſhall always retain: We have found ourſelf not ſo candidly dealt with as we have deſerved, and that there are unquiet and reſtleſs Spirits, who, without abating any of their own Diſtemper in recompence of the Moderation they find in us, continue their Bitterneſs againſt the Church, and endeavour to raiſe Jealouſies of us, and to leſſen our Reputation by their Reproaches, as if we were not true to the Profeſſions we have made: And in order thereunto, they have very unſeaſonably cauſed to be printed, publiſhed, and diſperſed, throughout the Kingdom, a Declaration heretofore printed in our Name in Scotland, of which we ſhall ſay no more, than that the Circumſtances by which we were enforced to ſign that Declaration, are enough known to the World; and that the worthieſt and greateſt part of that Nation did even then deteſt and abhor the ill Uſage of us in that Particular, when the ſame Tyranny was exerciſed there by the Power of a few ill Men, which at that time had ſpread itſelf over this Kingdom, and therefore we had no reaſon to expect that we ſhould at this Seaſon, when we are doing all we can to wipe out the Memory of all that hath been done amiſs by other Men, and we thank God have wiped it out of our own Remembrance, have been ourſelf aſſaulted with thoſe Reproaches, which we will likewiſe forget. 1660. 12 Car. II.

“Since the Printing this Declaration, ſeveral ſeditious Pamphlets and Queries have been publiſh'd and ſcatter'd abroad to infuſe Diſlike and Jealouſies into the Hearts of the People, and of the Army: and ſome, who ought rather to have repented the former Miſchief they have wrought, than to have endeavoured to improve it, have had the Hardineſs to publiſh, That the Doctrine of the Church, againſt which no Man with whom we have conferred hath excepted, ought to be reformed as well as the Diſcipline.

“This over-paſſionate and turbulent way of Proceeding, and the impatience we find in many for ſome ſpeedy Determination in theſe Matters, whereby the Minds of Men may be compoſed, and the Peace of the Church eſtabliſhed, hath prevailed with us to invert the Method we had propoſed to our ſelf, and even in order to the better calling and compoſing a Synod (which the preſent Jealouſies will hardly agree upon) by the Aſſiſtance of God's bleſſed Spirit, which we daily invoke and ſupplicate to give ſome Determination ourſelf to the Matters in Difference, until ſuch a Synod may be called, as may without Paſſion or Prejudice give us ſuch farther Aſſiſtance towards a perfect Union of Affections as well as Submiſſion to Authority, as is neceſſary. And we are the rather induced to take this upon us, by finding upon the full Conference we have had with the Learned Men of ſeveral Perſuaſions, that the Miſchiefs under which the Church and State do at preſent ſuffer, do not reſult from any formed Doctrine or Concluſion which either Party maintains or avows; but from the Paſſion and Appetite, and Intereſt of particular Perſons, who contract greater Prejudice to each other from thoſe Affections, than would naturally riſe from their Opinions; and thoſe Diſtempers muſt be in ſome degree allay'd, before the Meeting in a Synod can be attended with better Succeſs than their Meeting in other Places, and their Diſcourſes in Pulpits, have hitherto been: and till all Thoughts of Victory are laid aſide, the humble and neceſſary Thoughts for the Vindication of Truth cannot be enough entertained.

1660. 12 Car. II.

“We muſt, for the Honour of all thoſe of either Perſuaſion with whom we have conferr'd, declare, That the Profeſſions and Deſires of All, for the Advancement of Piety and true Godlineſs, are the ſame; their Profeſſions of Zeal for the Peace of the Church, the ſame; of Affection and Duty to us, the ſame: They All approve Epiſcopacy; they All approve a ſet Form of Liturgy; and they All diſprove and diſlike the Sin of Sacrilege, and the Alienation of the Revenue of the Church. And if, upon theſe excellent Foundations, in Submiſſion to which there is ſuch a Harmony of Affections, any Superſtructures ſhould be raiſed, to the ſhaking thoſe Foundations, and to the contracting and leſſening the bleſſed Gift of Charity, which is a vital part of Chriſtian Religion, we ſhall think ourſelf very unfortunate, and even ſuſpect that we are defective in that Adminiſtration of Government with which God hath intruſted us.

“We need not profeſs the high Affection and Eſteem we have for the Church of England, as it is eſtabliſhed by Law; the Reverence to which hath ſupported us, by God's Bleſſing, againſt many Temptations: Nor do we think that Reverence in the leaſt degree diminiſhed by our Condeſcenſions, not peremptorily to inſiſt on ſome Particulars of Ceremony, which however introduced by the Piety, and Devotion, and Order of former Times, may not be ſo agreeable to the preſent, but may even leſſen that Piety and Devotion for the Improvement whereof they might happily be firſt introduced, and conſequently may well be diſpenſed with. And we hope this charitable Compliance of ours will diſpoſe the Minds of all Men to a chearful Submiſſion to that Authority, the Preſervation whereof is ſo neceſſary for the Unity and Peace of the Church; and that they will acknowledge the Support of the Epiſcopal Authority to be the beſt Support of Religion, by being the beſt means to contain the Minds of Men within the Rules of Government. And they who would reſtrain the Exerciſe of that holy Function within the Rules which were obſerved in the primitive Times, muſt remember and conſider, that the Eccleſiaſtical Power being in thoſe bleſſed Times always ſubordinate and ſubject to the Civil; it was likewiſe proportion'd to ſuch an Extent of Juriſdiction, as was moſt agreeable to that. And as the Sanctity, and Simplicity, and Reſignation of that Age did then refer many things to the Biſhops, which the Policy of ſucceeding Ages would not admit, at leaſt did otherwiſe provide for; ſo it can be no Reproach to primitive Epiſcopacy, if where there have been great Alterations in the Civil Government from what was then, there have been likewiſe ſome Difference and Alteration in the Eccleſiaſtical, the Eſſence and Foundation being ſtill preſerved.

“And upon this Ground, without taking upon us to cenſure the Government of the Church in other Countries, where the Government of the State is different from what it is here; or enlarging Ourſelf upon the Reaſons why, whilſt there was an Imagination of erecting a Democratical Government here in the State, they ſhould be willing to continue an Ariſtocratical Government in the Church: It ſhall ſuffice to ſay, that ſince by the wonderful Bleſſing of God, the Hearts of this whole Nation are return'd to an Obedience to Monarchick Government in the State, it muſt be very reaſonable to ſupport that Government in the Church which is eſtabliſh'd by Law, and with which the Monarchy hath flouriſhed through ſo many Ages, and which is, in truth, as ancient in this Iſland as the Chriſtian Monarchy thereof; and which hath always, in ſome Reſpects or Degrees, been enlarged or reſtrained, as hath been thought moſt conducing to the Peace and Happineſs of the Kingdom. And therefore we have not the leaſt doubt, but that the preſent Biſhops will think the preſent Conceſſions now made by us to allay the preſent Diſtempers, very juſt and reaſonable, and will very cheerfully conform themſelves thereunto.

1. “We do in the firſt place declare our Purpoſe and Reſolution is, and ſhall be, to promote the Power of Godlineſs, to encourage the Exerciſes of Religion both publick and private, and to take care that the Lord's-Day be applied to holy Exerciſes, without unneceſſary Divertiſements; and that inſufficient, negligent and ſcandalous Miniſters be not permitted in the Church. And that as the preſent Biſhops are known to be Men of great and exemplary Piety in their Lives, which they have manifeſted in their notorious and unexampled Sufferings during theſe late Diſtempers, and of great and known ſufficiency of Learning: So we ſhall take eſpecial Care to prefer no Man to that Office and Charge, but Men of Learning, Virtue and Piety, who may be themſelves the beſt Examples to thoſe who are to be govern'd by 'em. And we ſhall expect and provide the beſt we can, that the Biſhops be frequent Preachers, and that they do very often Preach themſelves in ſome Church of their Dioceſs, except they be hinder'd by Sickneſs or other bodily Infirmities, or ſome other juſtifiable Occaſion, which ſhall not be thought juſtifiable if it be frequent.

2. “Becauſe the Dioceſſes, eſpecially ſome of them, are thought to be of too large Extent, we will appoint ſuch a number of Suffragan Biſhops in every Dioceſs, as ſhall be ſufficient for the due performance of their Work.

3. “No Biſhop ſhall Ordain or Exerciſe any part of Juriſdiction which appertains to the Cenſures of the Church, without the Advice and Aſſiſtance of the Presbyters: And no Chancellors, Commiſſaries or Officials, as ſuch, ſhall execute any Act of Spiritual Juriſdiction in theſe Caſes, viz. Excommunication, Abſolution, or wherein any of the Miniſtry are concerned with reference to their Paſtoral Charge. However our Intent and meaning is to uphold and maintain the Profeſſion of the Civil Law, ſo far and in ſuch matters, as it hath been of Uſe and Practice within our Kingdoms and Dominions: Albeit, as to Excommunication our Will and Pleaſure is, that no Chancellor, Commiſſary or Official ſhall decree any Sentence of Excommunication or Abſolution, or be Judges in thoſe things wherein any of the Miniſtry are concerned as is aforeſaid: Nor ſhall the Archdeacon exerciſe any Juriſdiction without the Advice and Aſſiſtance of ſix Miniſters of his Archdeaconry, whereof three to be nominated by the Biſhop, and three by the Election of the major part of the Presbyters within the Archdeaconry.

4. “To the end that the Deans and Chapters may be the better fitted to afford Counſel and Aſſiſtance to the Biſhops, both in Ordination and the other Offices mention'd before, we will take care that thoſe Preferments be given to the moſt Learned and Pious Presbyters of the Dioceſe. And moreover, that an equal number to thoſe of the Chapter, of the moſt Learned, Pious and Diſcreet Presbyters of the ſame Dioceſe, annually choſen by the major Vote of all the Presbyters of that Dioceſe preſent at ſuch Elections, ſhall be always adviſing and aſſiſting together with thoſe of the Chapter, in all Ordinations, and in every part of Juriſdiction, which appertains to the Cenſures of the Church, and at all other ſolemn and important Actions in the Exerciſe of the Eccleſiaſtical Juriſdiction, wherein any of the Miniſtry are concerned; provided that at all ſuch Meetings the number of the Miniſters ſo elected, and thoſe preſent of the Chapter, ſhall be equal, and not exceed one the other, and that to make the 1660. 12Car.II. “Numbers equal, the juniors of the exceeding number be withdrawn, that the moſt ancient may take place. Nor ſhall any Suffragan Biſhop Ordain or Exerciſe the foremention'd Offices and Acts of Spiritual Juriſdiction, but with the Advice and Aſſiſtance of a ſufficient number of the moſt Judicious and Pious Presbyters annually choſen as aforeſaid within his Precincts. And our Will is, that the great Work of Ordination be conſtantly and ſolemnly perform'd by the Biſhop and his aforeſaid Presbytery, at the four ſet Times and Seaſons appointed by the Church for that purpoſe.

5. “We will take care that Confirmation be rightly and ſolemnly perform'd, by the Information and with the Conſent of the Miniſter of the Place, who ſhall admit none to the Lord's Supper, till they have made a credible Profeſſion of their Faith, and promiſed Obedience to the Will of God, according as is expreſſed in the Conſiderations of the Rubrick before the Catechiſm: And that all poſſible Diligence be uſed for the Inſtruction and Reformation of Scandalous Offenders, whom the Miniſter ſhall not ſuffer to partake of the Lord's-Table, until they have openly declared themſelves to have truly repented and amended their former naughty Lives, as is partly expreſſed in the Rubrick and more fully in the Canons; provided there be place for due Appeals to Superior Power. But beſides the Suffragans and their Presbytery, every Rural Dean (thoſe Deans, as heretofore, to be nominated by the Biſhop of the Dioceſe) together with three or four Miniſters of that Deanery, choſen by the major part of all the Miniſters within the ſame, ſhall meet once in every Month, to receive ſuch Complaints as ſhall be preſented to them by the Miniſters or Church-Wardens of the reſpective Pariſhes; and alſo to compoſe all ſuch Differences betwixt Party and Party, as ſhall be offer'd to them by way of Arbitration, and to convince Offenders, and reform all ſuch things as they ſhall find amiſs by their Paſtoral Reproofs and Admonitions, if they may be ſo reformed: And ſuch matters as they cannot by this Paſtoral and Perſuaſive way compoſe and reform, are by them to be prepared for, and preſented to the Biſhop; at which meeting any other Miniſters of that Deanery may, if they pleaſe, be preſent. Moreover, the Rural Dean and his Aſſiſtants are in their reſpective Diviſions to ſee that the Children and the younger ſort be carefully inſtructed by the reſpective Miniſters of every Pariſh in the Grounds of Chriſtian Religion, and be able to give a good Account of their Faith and Knowledge, and alſo of their Chriſtian Converſation conformable thereunto, before they be confirmed by the Biſhop, or admitted to the Sacrament of the Lord's-Supper.

6. “No Biſhop ſhall exerciſe any Arbitrary Power, or do or impoſe any thing upon the Clergy or the People, but what is according to the known Law of the Land.

7. “We are very glad to find, that all with whom we have conferr'd, do in their Judgments approve a Liturgy, or Set-form of Publick Worſhip to be Lawful; which in our Judgment, for the preſervation of Unity and Uniformity, we conceive to be very neceſſary. And though we do conceive the Liturgy of the Church of England, contained in the Book of Common-Prayer, and by Law eſtabliſhed to be the beſt we have ſeen; and we believe, that we have ſeen all that are extant, and uſed in this part of the World, and well know what Reverence moſt of the Reformed Churches, or at leaſt the moſt Learned Men in thoſe Churches have for it; yet ſince we find ſome Exceptions made againſt ſeveral things therein, we will appoint an equal number of Learned Divines of both Perſuaſions to review the ſame, and to make ſuch Alterations as ſhall be thought moſt neceſſary; and ſome additional Forms (in the Scripture Phraſe as near as may be) ſuited unto the ſeveral parts of Worſhip, and that it be left to the Miniſter's choice to uſe one or other at his diſcretion. In the mean time, and until this be done, altho' we do heartily wiſh and deſire, that the Miniſters in their ſeveral Churches, becauſe they diſlike ſome Clauſes and Expreſſions, would not totally lay aſide the uſe of the Book of Common Prayer, but read thoſe Parts againſt which there can be no exception, which would be the beſt Inſtance of declining thoſe marks of diſtinction which we ſo much labour and deſire to remove: yet in compaſſion to divers of our good Subjects, who ſcruple the uſe of it as now it is, our Will and Pleaſure is, that none be puniſhed or troubled for not uſing it, until it be review'd and effectually reformed as aforeſaid. 1660. 12Car.II.

8. “Laſtly, concerning Ceremonies which have adminiſter'd ſo much matter of Difference and Contention, and which have been introduced by the Wiſdom and Authority of the Church, for Edification and the Improvement of Piety: We ſhall ſay no more, than that we have the more Eſteem of all, and Reverence for many of them, by having been preſent in many of thoſe Churches, where they are moſt Aboliſh'd or Diſcountenanc'd, and it cannot be doubted, but that, as the Univerſal Church cannot introduce one Ceremony in the Worſhip of God, that is contrary to God's Word expreſſed in the Scripture; ſo every National Church with the Approbation and Conſent of the Sovereign Power, may, and hath always introduc'd ſuch particular Ceremonies, as in that conjuncture of Time are thought moſt proper for Edification and the neceſſary improvement of Piety and Devotion in the People, tho' the neceſſary practice thereof cannot be deduced from Scripture; and that which before was, and is in it ſelf indifferent, ceaſes to be indifferent, after it is eſtabliſhed by Law. And therefore our preſent Conſideration and Work is, to gratifie the private Conſciences of thoſe who are grieved with the uſe of ſome Ceremonies, by indulging to and diſpenſing with their omitting thoſe Ceremonies; not utterly to aboliſh any which are eſtabliſhed by Law, (if any are practiſed contrary to Law the ſame ſhall ceaſe) which ſhould be unjuſt and of ill Example, and to impoſe upon the Conſcience of ſome, for the ſatisfaction of the Conſcience of others, which is otherwiſe provided for. As it could not be reaſonable that ſuch Men ſhould expect, that we ſhould our ſelf decline, or enjoin others to do ſo, to receive the bleſſed Sacrament on our Knees, which in our Conſcience is the moſt humble, moſt devout and moſt agreeable Poſture for that holy Duty, becauſe ſome other Men upon reaſons beſt, if not only, known to themſelves, chooſe rather to do it ſitting or ſtanding: We ſhall leave all Deciſions and Determinations of that kind, if they ſhall be thought neceſſary for a perfect and entire Unity and Uniformity throughout the Nation, to the Advice of a National Synod, which ſhall be duly called after a little time, and a mutual Converſation between Perſons of different Perſuaſions, hath mollified thoſe Diſtempers, abated thoſe Sharpneſſes, and extinguiſhed thoſe Jealouſies which make us unfit for thoſe Conſultations. And upon ſuch Advice, we ſhall uſe our utmoſt Endeavour, that ſuch Laws may be eſtabliſhed, as may beſt provide for the Peace of the Church and State; provided that none ſhall be denied the Sacrament of the Lord's-Supper, though they do not uſe the Geſture of kneeling in the act of receiving.

“In the mean time, out of Compaſſion and Compliance towards thoſe who would forbear the Croſs in Baptiſm. We are content that no Man ſhall be

1660. 12 Car. II.

“ compell'd to uſe the ſame, or ſuffer for not doing it. But if any Parent deſire to have his Child chriſten'd according to the Form uſed, and the Miniſter will not uſe the Sign, it ſhall be lawful for that Parent to procure another Miniſter to do it: And if the proper Miniſter ſhall refuſe to omit that Ceremony of the Croſs, it ſhall be lawful for the Parent, who would not have his Child ſo Baptiz'd, to procure another Miniſter to do it, who will do it according to his Deſire.

“ No Man ſhall be compelled to bow at the name of Jeſus, or ſuffer in any degree for not doing it, without reproaching thoſe who out of their Devotion continue that ancient Ceremony of the Church.
